came in their way, sparing neither Turks nor Christians: insomuch, that they hearing, how that the Zecklers with a good conuoy were bringing a number of waggons laden with victuals, and a great many of Oxen and other cattell to Claudianople, although they were of the same party, Beleefe, and Nation, yet they lay in wait for them to surprise them: against whom the Zecklers seeking to defend themselues, were by them cruelly massacred, and their waggons, with their Beeues and other Cattell, all carried quite away. But what should wee say? Hunger breaketh euen the stone wals, and forceth men vnto all extremities, and now the famine in that Prouince was such, as that the people were for the most part glad to liue by feeding vpon the roots of herbs and weeds, and such other vnwholesome things, whereof great mortalite afterward ensued amongst them: Which was the cause that Horwat, Captaine of these Haiduckes, being reproued for the outrages by them committed, and charged to take order, that no more such like should afterward be done; answered, That it was not possible to keep souldiers in any order amidst the extremitie of famine; for that the belly was an inexorable vsurer, which tooke pity vpon nothing, but with great rage exacting that which it thought due for the nourishment of it selfe.

Amidst these troubles of Transyluania and Hungary, there were two of the Turks spies of Buda discouered and taken; who at Vienna had obserued all the actions and proceedings of the Christians, and to the vtmost of their power had informed themselues of their designes, as also of their preparations and forces to be raised and leuied for this yeres warres: of which two spyes, the one was empayled, and the other kept in close and streit prison, vntill that further matter might be drawne out from him.

The forces of the Christians were now beginning to gather themselues together and to make an head in Hungary; a rife report at that time going, That they would forthwith take the field: whereof the Bassa of Buda vnderstanding, and desirous in what he might to hinder that their forwardnesse (whereof he doubted the effects) thought it best to betake himselfe to his old and cunning practise, for the treaty and concluding of a peace with the Christians, whereof he now made shew himselfe, together with the rest of the Turks, to be very desirous: so by putting the Christians in hope thereof, to make them the more remisse and negligent in their doings, and to gaine time of them, vntill that the Turks great army (then in preparing) might be brought downe into Hungary. To which purpose he in most friendly manner thus writ vnto the Gouernour of Strigonium.

The Bassa of Buda, to the Gouernor of Strigonium sendeth Greeting.

Letters of the Bassa of Buda to the gouernor of Strigonium.

WE know right well (noble Gouernour) that you are not ignorant, how that your brother the Gouernor of Strigonium before you, hath most earnestly embraced the negotiation of peace, in such sort, as that we cannot so much yeeld vnto our ordinary quarrels and dissentions, but that we must giue you to vnderstand the causes which haue crossed and hindered the concluding of so great a good the last year now passed. The first let came by reason of the time, chosen too late to bee imployed in that Treaty of peace, when as now both the Armies were already on foot, and euen in readinesse to joyn battell, and could not be then staied by that intreaty, nor sent back again without some exploit doing: Each part had resolued vpon their proper designes, and euen chosen their ground for battell, and were then hardly to bee turned from that whereupon they were before resolued. And albeit that during this last Winter the treaty for the peace was again begun, and that the men of warre on both sides in hope thereof, rested vnarmed and free from all hostility, (a most fit time to haue begun and ended this treaty of peace, which hath beene so much wished for of our soueraigne Emperour, desired of his subiects, and requested by those of your Emperours, with whom my dread Soueraigne would confirme and contract a firme and continuall peace) yet for all that, since the departure of the Gouernour from Strigonium, we see three months to haue been passed, without any Letters at all, or message by word of mouth brought vnto vs concerning this matter. So that we haue not any thing whereof to certifie our soueraigne Emperour. And forasmuch as the course of time hath brought these two contrary Armies euen vnto the point of battell, and that they are marching one of them to incounter with the other, and so to enter into the lists of honour; wee haue thought good before, to desire to know of you what we are to expect concerning the peace. We therfore request you, as our very good brother and friend, in what you may, to stay the comming of our armies into this Kingdom; and to attend to that which may produce the conclusion of this Treaty, being on our part most ready to lend both our ear and desire to whatsoeuer shall be iust and meet in this Treaty, and necessary for the Common good: beseeching you to beleeue vs in this businesse, and not to doubt of our good will, more affected to your good, than is yours to our welfare. Wherof we in good time aduertise you, for that our army which is now before Belgrade, being once arriued here, and marching in field, we canot possibly cause it to return without somthing doing, considering the great harm, which vnder the assurance of your faith giuen, we haue receiued from your people during the time of the truce, which they haue many waies violated. Which their euill dealing hath greatly insenced vs against your men in captiuitie with vs, and caused our soldiers to shew great rigor against their slaues. We therfore attend your answer, and the return of your brother; to the end we may together resolue according vnto equitie and reason, of that which shall be needfull to bee done for the common good and welfare.

Now for all this fair glosing, it was no hard matter to gheſſe at the Bassa's secret meaning: for how desirous soeuer he seemed to be of peace, and willing to the furtherance thereof, yet neuertheleſſe most true it is, that during the time of all these faire shewes, the Turkes hauing assembled the garrison souldiers on all sides, had by night surprised the Castle of Simnin vpon the Christians, slaine part of the soldiers therein, carried away the rest prisoners, and most cruelly afterwards burnt the place: so manifesting by their foule deeds the euill meaning of their faire and deceitfull words.

But now leauing the Bassa for a while vnto his crafty deuices, and passing ouer many smal skirmishes which hapned in Hungary and Transylvania, as not beseeming the grauitie of an history; let vs now out of Europ look ouer into Asia, to see how the great Turks affairs there in the mean time went.

Ths rebellion in Asia was by the comming ouer of Zellaly and his followers for a time somwhat pacified, but not suppressed; that pestilent humor of disloyaltie hauing before infected the minds of so many, as that in short time after the Rebels were much stronger, and the Rebellion much more dangerous than before. For the appeasing and suppressing whereof, Cicala Bassa the old Renegate, and a man of great experience and seruice, was sent by the Graund Sultan as Generall, with a great and mighty Army into Asia; where hee needed not long to looke for his enemies, they being as ready as he, either to giue or to accept of battel: so that for men so on both sides resolued, it was no hard matter to bring them to the triall of a battel. Which they with like desire and equall minde joyning, there made a great and terrible fight, the Bassa fighting for his honour, and the Rebell for his life: howbeit that at length, the Bassa after much bloud-shed and a great number on both sides slaine, being put to the worse, fled with his Army altogether disordered and in rout, hauing in that so dangerous a confusion of his people much ado to saue himselfe. With which so shamefull an ouerthrow giuen him by the Rebell, the Bassa was more ashamed than discouraged; who again repaired his Army, ioyning thereunto great and mighty supplies, and so strengthned, came now again the second time, to reuenge himselfe of the great dishonour which he had before receiued, and vtterly to suppresse the Rebels. Who now finding themselues too weake to incounter with so great and mighty a power, wisely betimes retyred, praying aid of the Persian King, who sent vnto them his owne sonne with a great Army of good and valiant souldiers. The which might haue giuen the Bassa cause enough to haue stayed his haste, and to haue beene well aduised, how he joined battell with such desperate and resolute enemies, and now backt with such strong supplies. But he being blinded with the fury of his former losse, and too much desirous to be thereof reuenged, with more hast than good speed came on, and joined battel with these his enemies, who were now in readinesse, and well prouided to receiue him. The two Armies were in number equall; but the Rebels of the two more resolute and carefull of themselues and of their welfare, as they which had reposed all their hope and confidence in their owne armes and valour; so that the battel was with great outcries and fury begun both on the one one side and the other: in the beginning wherof the Turks right furiously charged the rebels, and seemed somewhat to preuaile vpon them; vntill that the Persian Kings son with certaine troups of his most braue horsmen charging them in the rereward, & some other of the rebels with like fury assailing them vpon their flanks, their whole army was so disordred, that Cicala doing what he could to put his men again in order, and so to haue restored the battel, nothing therin preuailed, but was glad together with the rest of his army, now all in rout, to betake himself to flight. In this battel were forty thousand men slain on both sides, whereof thirty thousand were of the Bassa's Army, and the rest of the Rebels; who by this so great a victorie gained no lesse honour and reputation, than had the Sultans Generall got contempt and disgrace.

Cicala Bassa ouerthrowne by the Asian Rebels.

Cicala againe ouerthrown.

The Persian King after this great discomfiture of the Turkes, continuing his conquests, took in the Countrey of Sirvan, (a matter of great importance) beeing now destitute of all reliefe, by the ouerthrow of Cicala Bassa; who had he preuailed against the Rebells, should haue marched thither against the Persian King, to haue stayed the course of his victories: who now victorious and out of fear, made head toward Arusta, a very great and strong towne, neer whereunto the riuer Tygris discharged it selfe into the great riuer of Euphrates; the which City he at last won, with all the places and countries thereunto adioyning; and hath since as a most happy and victorious Prince againe recouered from the Turkes, whatsoeuer they had since Sultan Solymans time by force of armes taken from the Persian Kings his predecessors, two or three strong places only excepted. Of which most notable Wars betwixt these two the most mighty Princes of the East, that is to say, the Great Turke and the Persian King, I can rather wish than hope to be better informed; and that not so much for curiosity, (although that the knowledge of such matters yeeld vnto such as bee desirous thereof great pleasure, with no lesse contentment) as for that they (though very farre off) in some sort much concern the good and quiet of the Christian Commonweale; the Persian wars beeing the only means whereby the fury of the great Turkish Sultan hath been, and yet is for a time auerted from the Christians in Europe, vpon the Persians in Asia; as it is greatly to be feared, that some one or other, if not more, of the Christian Princes neerest vnto him, shall to their great cost and harm feel, so soon as these two Mahometane Princes shall be at peace amongst themselues.

Achmat sick of the small pox.

But leaue we the Bassa a while to grieue at his ouerthrowes, and the Persian King to triumph of these victories, and see what the great Sultan himself in the mean time doth.

This yong Prince Achmat (now one of the greatest Monarchs in the world) had not many months reigned, but that he fel sick of the smal pox, wherwith he hauing a grosse & ful body, was so fouly tormented for a fortnights space, that oftentimes fainting, it was generally supposed he would therof haue died: Yea, diuers of the great Bassa's were in speech concerning his yonger brother to be taken out of the Seraglio to succeed him: which was thought would haue cost him his life, after that the Sultan his elder brother was again recouered. And no doubt it had, but that he was the onely Heir then left of the Othoman Family, if that his brother the Sultan should haue failed. But he againe recouering of his foul and childish disease, to shew vnto the Ianizaries and others who doubted thereof, that he was so recouered, most proudly mounted vpon a goodly horse sumptuously furnished, and in great state and magnificence rid ap and down thorow most of the chiefe streets of the Imperial city of Constantinople; the people (as their accustomed manner is) in euery place as he went rejoycing to see him, and prosecuting him with their most joyfull acclamations, wishing vnto him a long and happy reigne. Neither is it any maruell, seeing the almighty God hath euen in the faces and countenances of Princes ingrauen some resemblance of his owne, if they become respectiue and admirable in the eies and sight of the common people, who cannot but honor them with their voyces, whom God hath blessed with his power, and other his extraordinarie worldly blessings.

This yong prince so recouered of his sickness and hauing shewed himself to his subiects, began forthwith to giue himselfe (according to the heat of his youthfull spirit) immoderatly vnto the pleasures of the field, and other such violent exercises, being in their moderate vse wholsome, but in their violences much hurtfull; but especially vpon the new recouery of his late late ſickneſſe, the grieſes whereof came in haſt, but were to leaue him at leiſure. Whereupon C two of his Baſſaes careſull of his health, were ſo bold, as out of their loue to reproue him for ſuch his violent and immoderate exerciſes (the day not being long enough for them) and by effectuall reaſons to diſſuade him from the ſame. But ſo far off was he from hearkening vnto their wholſome perſuaſions, as that to the contrary he therwith inraged, thruſt them both out of their places. So dangerous a thing it is, euen in zeale and loue to preſume to controll great Princes in their moſt vain pleaſures; others in the mean time not louing them at all, but only for their owne profit attending vpon their idle appetites, injoying the preferments due vnto their more faithfull and loyall ſubiects, and yet ſecretly in themſelues, ſmiling at the vanitie of ſuch as by whom they be ſo vnworthily honoured and promoted.

Good counſell taken in euill part by Sultan Achmat.

But as in the immoderate vſe of all things there is a ſatietie which breedeth a diſliking and H diſtaſte of them (pleaſures being not by any meanes more commended, than by their nouelties and ſeldome vſe) ſo this young Sultan Achmat hauing glutted himſelfe with his pleaſures, began now to caſt his eyes vpon his other more neceſſarie affaires of State, but eſpecially vpon his warres both with the Chriſtian Emperour and the Mahometane Perſian King. Now hee was not ignorant of the great valour and ſufficiencie of Haſſan the Viſier Baſſa, for the mannaging of his warres in Hungarie, wherein hee had of long time been exerciſed, and ſo therein beſt experienced. This old Captaine pleaſed him beſt, whom as an old, expert, and politicke Generall, hee reſolued to continue in his charge as Lieutenant Generall of his warres in Hungarie, and by the continuation of him in ſo great and honourable a place, to binde him to all loyall ſeruices in thoſe warres, euen to the vttermoſt of his power. This I Great Baſſa was then at Belgrade, vpon the frontier of his gouernment in doubtfull ſuſpence expecting the reſolution of his Prince concerning this buſineſſe, and yet in hope longing after a ſecond charge: Whoſe longing deſire Achmat quickly ſatisfied, by ſending vnto him both a commiſſion for the continuation of his charge and dignitie, and certaine honourable Preſents in token of his extraordinarie fauor towards him; which were a Generals Enſigne, with an Hungarian Mace of pure gold. Now whether theſe Preſents, joyned vnto the continuation of his charge, were welcome vnto him or not, ambitious minds (ſuch as was his) can eaſily tell: and hee to ſhew his contentment therewith, gaue thereof good teſtimonie by the publicke actions of joy, cauſing all the great Ordnance of the place in thundring wiſe to be oftentimes diſcharged, and the Trumpets and Drummes to be moſt joyfully K ſounded.

Haſſan Baſſa appointed lieutenant General of the Turks wars in Hungary.

In the meane time newes was brought to Conſtantinople, how that the Perſian King hauing muſtred his men, was in the field with aboue an hundred thouſand good ſouldiers, and that Bagages Baſſa, one of the great Rebels in Aſia, had confederated himſelfe with him, to the further troubling of the Turks eſtate. Whereupon Achmat, although he had before giuen order vnto Haſſan the Viſier Baſſa his Lieutenant in Hungary, for the beſieging and taking of Veradinum, a ſtrong City in the vpper Hungary; now by a meſſenger ſent in haſt, commanded the ſame Baſſa, all other buſineſſes ſet apart, with all the power that he could make, forthwith to returne to Conſtantinople, there with him and the reſt of the Baſſa's to conſult and reſolue vpon the moſt neceſſarie warre, and of the readieſt meanes for the continuing of the ſame. For L albeit that the Turks were moſt deſirous to haue warres with the Chriſtians, and ſo (if it were poſſible) to haue conquered the remainders of Hungary; yet the danger of the Perſian warres, and of the rebellion in Aſia daily more and more increaſing, ſuffered them not wholly to attend vnto the warres againſt the Chriſtians in Hungary, but drew them now into a doubtfull conſultation, which way firſt to turne their forces. But being come to Conſtantinople, the Grand Seigniour tooke the paines and did him the honour to come vnto his houſe; whither the Councell for the State being aſſembled, it was there moſt proudly reſolued vpon, euen forthwith at one and the ſelfe ſame time with equall forces to make warre both vpon the Chriſtian Emperour in Hungary, and the Perſian King in Aſia, accounting themſelues ſtrong enough to ſubdue and bring vnder foot both the one and the other, no power vpon M earth being in their proud conceit of themſelues able to encounter or withſtand theirs. So for the mannaging of theſe warres, and of their ſo proud a reſolution to be performed in ſo remote parts of the world, Haſſan Baſſa was continued in his charge, as Generall of the army

in

A in Hungary; and Cicala Bassa was appointed to haue the command of the army to be sent against the Persian: Two most expert Captains, being to fight against their heredetarie enemies; Hassan against the Christians, and Cicala against the Persians, by whom he had not long before bin euil vsed. An ordinary policy of the Othoman Emperors, not to commit the charge of their armies against the Christians, vnto Renegates; for feare lest they, touched with some remorse of conscience, might betray the same, or otherwise deale vnfaithfully in their charge: but still to imploy them against the Persians, of whom they haue no further knowledge, but as of their enemies in the field. But Cicala Bassa well acquainted both with the difficulty and the danger of the Persian war, (the scarres whereof he yet bare about with him) made shew as if he had been vnwilling to take vpon him the charge thereof; and so begun to excuse himB selfe, vntill that at length vpon promise made vnto him, for the furnishing of him with a sufficient army, and all things els necessary for so great a war, with a large and most honourable entertainment for himselfe, and all the Persian prisoners being also giuen vnto him in reward; he therewith contented, accepted of the honourable charge, whereof in his ambitious mind he was indeed most desirous. And so receiuing the Generals Ensigne, with the other marks and cognisances of his honour, causing the Drums to be strucken vp, and the Trumpets to bee joyfully sounded, he cheerfully prepared himselfe for that his so great an expedition; expecting but the comming of his sonne, who at the request of the Venetians was gon forth with a fleet of gallies to scoure the Leuant seas of the Pyrats, who then exceedingly troubled the traffieke of the Venetian Merchants.

C Amiddest which the Turks so great designes, the Tartar Cham, bound for his pay to serue the Great Turke in his warres against the Christians; by his Embassadour excused himselfe vnto the Great Sultan, for that he could not himselfe in person come this yeare with his forces into Hungary, by reason that he was otherwise necessarily busied with the most vrgent affaires of his owne Estate: yet promising withall, in stead of himselfe, to send his sun with a good power of men. Now whereas many men maruell, why the Tartar Cham, being so great a Prince, and not much in danger vnto the Turke (being separated from him by the Blacke or Euxine sea) should be still so ready at the Turks call, to do him seruice in his warres: The causes whereof are diuers, and those not far to seeke. First, their neere affinitie (as both descended from the same beginning, by often marriages still confirmed: Then, D Their likenesse of manners and condition, no smal bonds of loue and friendship: And thirdly, For that the Turkish Empire for want of heires males of the Othoman Family, is assured, and as it were entailen vnto the Tartar Cham: But most of all, For the yearely pention and great pay which he, being a bare Prince, receiueth from the Turks; his rude and needie people being also euer ready, in hope of the spoyle, to follow him into those warres. But this his excuse for not comming himselfe this yeare into Hungary, being by the Great Sultan accepted of, Hassan Bassa resolued vpon his expedition for Hungary, made great preparation for the good successe of the warre there, gaue great hope thereof vnto the Great Sultan, and caused himselfe to be proclaimed Lieutenant Generall of all the Great Sultans Forces against the Christians: euery man affourding vnto these good hopes a thousand wiE shes for his health and welfare: but especially the Mahometane Priests assured him of their helpe, so that hee would not faile to do the vttermost of his endeauour against the Christians their enemies. For why, the Turks doe account him the best and most zealous man, which can do the Christians most harme. And so with these great acclamations of joy and honour, Hassan the great Bassa set forward with his army from Constantinople, towards Hungary.

The reasons why the Tartar Cham is so ready to serue the great Turk in his wars against the Christians.

The Christian Emperor ignorant of all these the Turks great preparations and haughty designes, sought by all meanes how to resist them, sparing nothing that might any way serue or stand him in stead to that purpose. Experience had assured him of the Popes readinesse in contributing to this action, what in his power was; hauing before receiued so many testimoF nies of his good wil. Which caused him now to dispatch also his brother Maximilian the archduke, a good and a deuout Prince, to him, with expresse charge in the Emperors name to yeeld all submission to his Holines, to moue him to relieue the wofull estate of his distressed affairs. Maximilian setting forward about this busines, arriued at Venice, where he was by that State right right honorably entertained. From Venice he trauelling toward Rome, and with a great Retinue approching the city, was there met by a great number of Noblemen with their Followers, ſent from the Pope; and ſo by them with great honour was brought into the Vatican Palace, to the intent that ſo he might the oftner and with more eaſe haue acceſſe vnto the Pope, who then lay there ſick of the gout. The next day he being brought vnto the Popes preſence, & after vſual reuerence don hauing audience giuen him, in the preſence of the cardinals he began to deliuer vnto him the cauſes of his comming, which (as he ſaid) were two: firſt, To put his Holineſſe in remembrance of the manifeſt peril and danger which hung ouer the heads of the Chriſtians in general, from the Turk, but eſpecially ouer them of Italy, being ſo neer the Turkiſh Empire, and a great gap laid open for the Turks therinto to enter, by the way of Caniſia the key of Stiria. And then in the Emperors behalfe to requeſt him to ſtretch forth his helping hand againſt this his mortal enemy; who was now drawing al his power together into one head, to deſtroy him: hauing certaine vnderſtanding of his great preparation made thorowout all his dominions, to thruſt him out of his, if in theſe extremities hee were not reliued by ſuch Princes as could not in the end themſelues auoid the laſt violence of theſe harms whereof he felt the firſt aſſaults. Which his Holineſſe conſidering in the zeal of his deuotion, and by the increaſing of the danger, he was in hope to find of it the like aſſiſtance in this his ſecond need, that he had before receiued in his former affairs; the pretious balme of his deuout charitie being of greater vertue than to ſerue but for one time, but being of ſufficient power to ſerue for all ages, and all times of neceſſity. And that therefore he beſought his Holineſſe, to apply the ſame vpon the preſent wound, ſeeing that without his help hee was more like to periſh than to liue. Whereunto the Pope anſwered, That his former actions alreadie paſſed ſpake enough for him in this action, to manifeſt his deuout meaning, ſo that it was needleſſe for him to vſe further words to expreſſe the ſame. That the great ſupplies both of men and money which he had ſent forth for the good of the Chriſtian commonweale, were the ſure teſtimonies of his carefulneſſe for the ſame. And albeit that theſe euill haps had ſo far preuailed in Hungary, yet that he for his part had neuertheleſſe ſtill done what hee might for the remedying of thoſe ſo great euils. And that now by the aduice of his honorable councellors there preſent, he had appointed an hundred and fifty thouſand crownes to be paid towards the maintenance of the Chriſtian army in Hungary this yeare; in hope to do more than that afterward for the Emperor in his wars againſt the Turks: whom God (as he ſaid) ſuffered to preuaile vpon the Chriſtians, not for any goodneſſe that was in them, but for the chaſtiſing of the wickedneſſe of the Chriſtians themſelues.

Maximilian the Archduke sent Embassadour from the Emperour vnto the Pope, to craue his ayd against the Turke.

Which ſumme of an hundred and fifty thouſand crowns was afterward according to a decree made by the Pope and Cardinals, leuied and paid of the tenths of the clergy throughout all Italy. And ſo Maximilian the Archduke moſt magnificently entertained and feaſted by the Pope, and by him rewarded with foure thouſand crownes, hauing well diſpatched the buſineſſe he came for, returned againe vnto the Emperor his brother.

Valachia ſpoiled by the Tartars.

But as the Chriſtian Emperor was thus carefull about his prouiſions for the withſtanding of the Turks, they were not any whit behind him in augmenting of their forces for the inuading of him, And now the Tartars in great number being about to come vnto their aid into Hungary, being denied paſſage by the Polonians, had turned head towards Valachia, with a purpoſe by force and ſtrong hand to get that of theſe weake people, with the power of the ſtronger had embarred them of. And ſo preſuming vpon their number, they entred into the ſame Prouince, which they all ouer rifled and ſpoiled at their pleaſure. Where ſuch of the countrey people as could eſcape their fury, fled into the townes, leauing their goods behinde them vnto their mercileſſe rage, not with any thing to be ſatisfied. Rodolph the Vayuod himſelfe as a man with fury diſmaied, fled to Cronſtat to George Baſta: where he conſidering the danger he was now in, and that he was ſtill to expect the like ſo often as the Tartars were for the ſeruice of the Turke to come into Hungary; before Baſta tooke a new oath of alleagance vnto the Emperor, ſolemnely proteſting to die and liue in his ſeruice; neceſſity now inforcing him to acknowledge his duty, and to ſeeke for the remedy of his harmes, which he had before oftentimes moſt proudly reiected. Vpon which his ſo humble ſubmiſſion, Baſta receiued him and his countrey into his protection.

In

A In the meane time two traitours were brought to Claudinople, who hauing by wonderful craft ſurpriſed a ſtrong caſtle belonging vnto a certaine great Ladie a widow, neere vnto a burrough called Caraſebe, and rifled and ſacked the ſame, traiterouſly afterward ſold it vnto the Turks, to the great hurt of the Emperors ſubiects neer vnto the place, and the no leſſe aduantage of the Turks. Whereof the Haiducks hauing gotten vnderſtanding, and cunning in ſuch matters, vpon the ſudden ſurpriſed the Turks by the way as they were comming to haue taken poſſeſſion of the place: who ſeeing themſelues too weake to withſtand their enemies, & out of hope to ſaue themſelues by flight, were there as men diſmaied and appointed to be ſlaine, moſt of them by the Haiducks cut in pieces, and the reſt taken priſoners. The two traitors being according to their deſerts, for their ſhamefull treaſon moſt cruelly put to death, to the ter-
B ror of others.

The Turks ſurpriſed by the Haiducks.

The Haiducks hauing no houſes but the fields, nor other trade but their armes (ſpoyled of the one by the Turks, and armed with the other by neceſſitie) are alwaies in readineſſe for ſeruice. In hope of profit, it is to them a pleaſure to paſſe ouer the mountaines of ice, to trauell thorow the ſtorms of thunder and lightning, to ſwim ouer the deep riuers, and to thruſt themſelues into a thouſand dangers; which as it is no commendable kinde of life, ſo is the practiſe of it vniuſt. For as in this, ſo in other their actions they ſpare neither friend nor foe, all that comes in their way being ſubiect and as it were appointed to their fury: but eſpecially when they want their pay, which affordeth vnto them a thouſand excuſes for the robbing and ſpoyling of all men without reſpect. With which maner of fury they were euen at this time inra-
C ged for want of their pay, in ſuch ſort, as that if their right hands ſpoiled the Turkes, their left hands robbed the Chriſtians: as vpon one and the ſelfe ſame day they took from the Turkes of Agria a number of beaſts and cattel, and rifled diuers villages of the Chriſtians. And not content with theſe outrages, meeting with an hundred or ſix ſcore waggons, laden with great ſtore of victuals going toward Alba-Iulia, conducted by the Zeclers, ſet vpon them, ſlew them that droue them, and carried away the Wagons with them. But theſe wrongs by Chriſtians don vnto Chriſtians, euen the mortal enemies of the Chriſtians, the Turks themſelues reuenged. For the Turks of Temeſwar hauing bin abroad toward Lippa, and found good ſtore of booty, meeting with theſe ſharks, were by them charged, not ſo much for that they were their enemies, or for the zeal of Chriſtianitie, or for deſire of honour, as for to get from them their D prey and booty. But the Turkes being in number twice as many as they, and withall well acquainted with ſuch buſines, were not ſo eaſily ſpoiled; but knowing their own ſtrength, with their number oppreſſed their enemies, moſt of whom they ſlew, and tooke the reſt priſoners: God being as iuſt in his puniſhments, as he is in his works powerfull, puniſhing the Wicked by the weapons of others as wicked or rather worſe than they.

The Turks in the mean time while things thus paſſed, began again to fall to their old practiſe, for the ſoliciting of a peace. But ſuch phanſies were too ſtale and common, any more to deceiue the Chriſtians withall: howbeit they yet gaue ſome ear thereunto, to diſcouer in their policie the commodities and inconueniences of the peace by them in ſhew offred, with a thouſand proteſtations in their words, but far differing from their thoughts and deeds; who
E during the time of the parley, laboured in what they might to benefit themſelnes and to hurt vs. For euen in that ſame very time they fortified their Townes and Caſtles with men and victuals: but eſpecially the City of Buda, whereinto by a Conuoy of three thouſand Turks come from Belgrade, they put an exceeding quantitie of all ſorts of neceſſary prouiſion, ſufficient to ſerue the ſame for an whole yeare. Beſides that, it was certainly knowne by certaine Turks taken priſoners and brought to Poſſonium, That all this parley and treaty of peace was but of purpoſe feigned to put the Chriſtians in ſecuritie; for that the Baſſa of Buda, who was the chiefe publiſher of the ſame, had no ſuch Commiſſion from the great Sultan for the concluding of any peace in the abſence of the Viſier Baſſa; vnto whom the Graund Seigniour had giuen charge, not to make any peace with the Emperour, but vpon condition, That hee
F ſhould firſt deliuer vnto him the City of Strigonium; which if hee would not yeeld, that then he ſhould beſiege it, and by force take it from him; and after the winning thereof, to refuſe all other treaty of peace, it being the only cauſe for which the Turkes deſired peace. Of all which their double dealing and crafty deſignes the Emperour vnderſtanding, and wholely

ly reſolued for war, preſently ſent County Sultze with commiſſion to Vienna, and appointed C George Baſta Lieutenant General of his army into Hungary; aduiſing them carefully to looke vnto their charge, and not too much to truſt vnto the gloſing and flattering ſpeeches of the Turks.

Reouin ſurpri-ſed by the Hai-ducks.

The Haiducks in the mean time alwaies in armes, as hauing no other inheritance whereon to liue, ceaſed not ſtill to looke abroad to finde that which was neuer loſt. Now it fortuned them in roaming abroad toward Belgrade, to light vpon Reouin a ſtrong and fair Caſtle of the Turks, wherein eight hundred of the Turkes ſouldiers and other of their countrey people had their abode, together with the greateſt part of their ſubſtance. In the ſtrength of which caſtle the Turks truſting, and there lying in ſecurity, without further care of their ſafety, were vpon the ſudden before they were aware, by theſe aduenturous men ſurpriſed; who H for haſt thruſting one another forward, at length caried the place, ſlew the greateſt part of the Turks, and taking the reſt priſoners, with a great and rich booty returned to Lippa. The like exploit they of the gariſon of Caniſia attempted vpon the caſtle and borough of Lambac; which they took and ſpoiled, and afterward ſet it on fire: the flame wherof ſerued for a ſignal vnto the troups of County Serin, which paſſing that way, and lighting vpon the Turkes ouerloded with the ſpoils they had there taken, cut them in pieces, and ſo recouered from them their booty.

Petrikia in danger to be betrayed to the Turkes.

About this time, certaine of the garriſon ſouldiers of Petrinia, hauing ſecretly conſpired with the Turks (by whom they were before corrupted) to deliuer vnto them that ſtrong Caſtle; and being about to haue betrayed the ſame by a Mine which they were in making vnI der a ſtable neer vnto a ſtore-houſe wherein the pouder for the ſtore of the Caſtle lay; with a purpoſe by firing of the ſame, to haue giuen the Turks entrance by the ruines thereof, who lay cloſe hidden in a wood neer vnto the place; it fortuned this their wicked purpoſe to bee perceiued by certain offenders then kept priſoners in the ſtable neer vnto the mine. Who hauing diſcouered the Traitours whole purpoſe, and in feare to be burned or blowne vp by the fury of the Mine ſo neere vnto them, diſcouered it vnto the Gaoler, who made the Gouernour therewith acquainted; by whoſe commandement they were forthwith apprehended, and beeing conuicted of that their ſo foule and heinous a treaſon, were with exemplary puniſhment executed.

Now as the Turks had oftentimes made ſhew as if they had bin deſirous of peace, ſo ceaſed K they not yet with great earneſtneſſe to ſolicit the ſame: ſo that the Emperour, although hee knew it to be a thing rather to be wiſhed than hoped for; yet leſt he ſhould ſeem careleſſe of the common quiet of his ſubiects and people, and to refuſe ſo great a good ſo oftentimes offered him, now once again appointed certain perſonages of great place and authority, to attend the propoſitions of peace to be on the Turks behalf propounded. Of which commiſſioners Cæſar Gallen Sherif of Strigonium, an Italian, and a man of great experience in matters of ſtate, was one. Whom the gouernor of Strigonium had of purpoſe ſent to Peſth, to conſider of ſome good means for the concluding of a peace, wherof he himſelf had laid the firſt foundation; and vnderſtood that the Turks demands and pretenſions not much diffred from thoſe which they had many times before demanded. Whereof the firſt was, That the Emperour L ſhould for the time to come wel and truly pay vnto the great Sultan & his ſucceſſors, all ſuch tribute as he was wont to pay to the Turkiſh Sultans his predeceſſors, during the time of his leagues with them, and that without any demand to be therof made. The ſecond, That the Emperor ſhould alwaies haue his Embaſſador lieger at the great Sultans court, with honourable preſents, there to ſolicit the continuation of his loue and friendſhip toward the Emperor his maſter. The third, That the Emperor ſhould deliuer vnto the Turks all the towns and Caſtles which he had taken from them either by force or by ſurpriſe, during the time of this war, together with the countries of Tranſylvania and Valachia. Vpon which demands granted, they promiſed to ſend a meſſenger vnto the great Sultan, in their names intreating him to ſurrender Caniſia vnto the Emperor, but not Agria, which they ſaid they might in no wiſe M deliuer, except they were thereunto by force of arms conſtrained.

Vnto which their ſo proud and vnreaſonable demands the Commiſſioners for the Emperor anſwered, That the Emperour long before this time had made peace with Sultan Selymus the

A the ſecond,and with Sultan Amurath the third,this Sultan Achmat his predeceſſors. An aſſured peace,ſworn vnto and confirmed by all the iuſt and ſolemn oathes that could haue beene by any man deſired: and for the more aſſurance thereof conceiued into writing, and with the moſt authentique ſeals of their Majeſties confirmed. Whereby both parties were moſt ſeuerely and ſtreitly forbidden, one of them to attempt any thing againſt the other, or to encroch the one of them vpon the other,during the time of ſuch their League. And if ſo bee that contrary to the tenor thereof, either part ſhould vndertake to ſurpriſe any place belonging to the other, and ſo become maſters thereof; that vpon the leaſt requeſt of the party ſo wronged,the places ſurpriſed ſhould be again forthwith reſtored, as vſurped vpon contrary to the publique faith,and the vſurpers to be ſeuerely for the ſame puniſhed. And yet that the
B Turkes notwithſtanding thruſting by heapes beyond the barres of this ſo ſtrong and holy a League,had violated and broken the ſame, by ſurpriſing a number of places both in the high and lower countries of Hungary,neither giuing eare vnto any ſpeech or requeſt that could bee made vnto them for reſtitution therof.

And yet not ſo contentented,had alſo taken a number of places from the Emperor in Sclavonia,between the riuers of Culp and Vnna: which places he had oftentimes by as iuſt right redemanded,as they were by vniuſt forces vſurped before the beginning of theſe wars. Demands eſteemed iuſt and reaſonable euen by the Turks themſelues, and yet for all that, altogether reiected by the great Sultans. Of which their ſo great injuſtice the Emperor had oftentimes moſt iuſtly complained, and ſo did euen at this day, at the feeling of ſuch his hurts
C and harmes. And that the Emperour hauing by ſo many perfidious dealings made proof of the vntruſtineſſe of the Grand Seigniour his predeceſſors, what aſſurance then can hee conceiue of his fidelitie? or vpon what foundation of faith can hee build the ſure building of peace,ſo much deſired of him? And yet if he might hope ſo much of the faith of another man, as he is aſſured of his owne iuſt meaning, differing much from that of the grand Seigniours, (which he knew to be neuer anſwerable vnto his) that he for his part could be well contented to embrace the peace; prouided alwaies, that he might haue Caniſia and Agria yeelded vnto him. Or that if they would needs ſtill hold thoſe places, that he might likewiſe in peace hold the places that he had before won in that war,the reaſons being on both ſides alike. And that as concerning Tranſylvania,he could not deliuer that without betraying his owne right,
D and the welfare of that prouince; hauing obtained the ſame as well by agreements and couenants between him and the ſon of the laſt Duke Iohn, as by the free and voluntary releaſment which Sigiſmund Bathor the laſt and immediat prince thereof,had not long before made vnto him. For the defence of which his rights,hee had ſpent many men and great ſummes of money, and all for the keeping of that prouince by force of arms, which by ſo good right belonged vnto him.

And that for Valachia, he could be content to yeeld ſome part of his right vnto that prouince, ſo that the Turkes ſhould ceaſe from thenceforth to demand of him any more tributes; or that he ſhould as of ordinary duty ſend his Embaſſadors with yearely preſents to the great Sultan,not being able without need to conſent vnto ſuch a needleſſe ſeruitude;ſeeing that all
E Princes ought to be at liberty,at their own choice to ſend their Embaſſadors, and not at another mans appointment.

Which anſwer of the Emperours Commiſſioners ſerued to no other purpoſe but for the Turks to laugh and ſport at, how iuſt and reaſonable ſoeuer they were;ſtill preſſing them to yeeld vnto their vnreaſonable demands, or elſe threatning to aduertiſe the great Sultan thereof,who by force would take that from them,to their further loſſe,which they refuſed to grant him by fair means,to their own good. And ſo the Treaty was for that time broken off without any thing concluded. Which cauſed the Gouernour of Strigonium to retyre himſelfe backe againe vnto his Charge: yet for all that,leauing Cæſar Gallen behind him,to entertaine it in ſo ſmall hope as was thereof yet left. Who afterwards ſeeing it almoſt deſperate, ma-
F king a great feaſt vnto certaine of the chiefe of the Turkes of Buda,and hauing in that merriment drawne from them a promiſe to liue as friends with them of the garriſon of Peſth,and of other places which lay neere vnto that Towne, he retyred himſelf afterwards vnto Strigonium alſo.

Shortly

The base cowardise of the Gouernour of Pesth.

Shortly after whose departure, Iagenreuter Gouernour of Pesth, notwithstanding the late promises of the Turks at Buda, for their liuing by him in peace & amity; and the assured promise of Cæsar Gallen, at his last departure, for the speedy furnishing of the town both with men and all things necessary for the defence thereof, which he ought with great assurance to haue expected; yet dismaied with the report of the comming of Hassan Bassa the Turkes Generall with his great army, and that by the streit commandement of the great Sultan, he was to begin his conquests in Hungary with the winning of Pesth; as a man afraid of his own shadow, thought good betime to prouide for himselfe: and vpon that resolution, hauing yet seen no enemy at all to force him, trussing vp his baggage, the fift of September forsooke the Towne, with fiue Companies of footmen and six Troupes of horsemen following him: a sufficient number to haue for a time defended the Towne, and endured a siege, especially in so strong a place, and so well prouided both of victuals and munition. All which, this cowardly Gouernour (but most vnworthy of that name) left together with his honour for a prey vnto his Enemies; hauing yet before his departure out of the Towne, caused the principal buildings thereof to be vndermined, and barrels of gun pouder to be layd vnder them, where they were shortly after all ouerthrown, and most part of the towne burnt. But being gone not past half a league from the place, he met with four hundred Haiducks, all well armed, whom the Gouernour of Strigonium had sent for the reliefe of Pesth, with a number of boats loded with corn, munition, and other necessaries of all sorts, for the better assurance of the place, and the performing of the promise before to the same end made by the Gouernor of Strigonium. Which Hungarian Haiducks meeting with these dismayed Cowards vpon the way, thought it not the best way to go any further, as thinking themselues not able to doe that with their so small a number, which the other durst not vndertake with their far greater: wherefore ioyning themselues with the other fearfull Fugitiues, they with them returned to Strigonium; leauing their Vessels and munition vnto their enemies, who immediately after seised vpon them.

The next day after, the mines hauing taken their effect, the Turks wondring to see so great and terrible a fire in Pesth, which stil more and more increased, there being none that went about to quench it, aduentured to come ouer the riuer from Buda, and to draw neer to the town now all on a light fire, which finding abandoned & forsaken by the Christians, they diligently quenched, and repaired the ruines of the wall, and so without any losse became Masters of the same.

Iagenreuter the cowardly late gouernor, with his fearful troups in the mean time comming to Strigonium, and by the Gouernor examined of the causes of his flight, & of the so shamefull leauing of his charge; and beeing able to alledge no other cause or reason, but the great bruit or report of the Visier Bassa's comming with his army to besiege the towne: was therefore committed to prison, and there reserued to be afterward iustly punished for his disloyaltie and cowardise.

The Bassa of Buda by the Gouernors cowardise thus possessed of Pesth, by letters excused himself to the gouernor of Strigonium for the taking therof, the treaty of peace being not as yet quite broken off: alledging for himself (as the truth was) that he had taken it as a place by the Christians vpon a vain fear forsaken and desperatly set on fire, without any such cause giuen them by him or any of the Turks. And further, offered vnto the gouernor, if he so pleased, to deal with him for the exchange of prisoners on both sides taken, offering to exchange one for another. And as for the concluding of the peace, so oftentimes intreated of, and euen yet in hand, that he for his part was wonderfull desirous it might be fully concluded and ended, before the arriuall of Hassan with his Army in Hungarie: for that he being once come, there would then be no time amidst the noise of so many weapons, and so many men of Warre, to talke of peace.

Hassan comes into Hungary.

Hassan the Visier Bassa was now for all that already entered into Hungary, drawing after after him a world of men, and was come towards Sexart. For the viewing of which army the Gouernor of Palantwar going forth with an hundred horsemen, by euill hap chanced before hee was aware, vpon the sudden to meet with fiue hundred Turkes, by the Bassa himselfe likewise sent forth to discouer the Countrey and the passages therof; by whom hee charged, and with the multitude of his enemies oppreſſed, was himſelf taken priſoner, moſt of his men being in that conflict ſlaine, ſome few of them that were left aliue by ſpeedy flight hardly eſcaping. Which euill hap on the Chriſtians ſide, was forthwith recompenced with the better ſucceſſe of the County Serin, who falling vpon three hundred Turks neere vnto Sigeth, being in number ſcarce halfe ſo many as them, yet ſet vpon them with ſuch courage, that giuing them no leiſure to conſider of the weakeneſſe of his forces, they were by them ouerthrowne and cut in pieces, before they were well aware of him.

and

But together with the time of the yeare, to come vnto the maine point of theſe preſent warres in Hungary: the Turks finding themſelues out of hope by any capitulations or treaties of peace, to regaine the ſtrong towne of Strigonium out of the hands of the Chriſtians, were now reſolued to employ the vttermoſt of their forces for the obtaining of the ſame; with a thouſand proteſtations, That if by force of armes and ſtrong hand they ſhould gaine the place, they would neuer more haue peace with the Chriſtians. At which their vain threats and ſpeeches, the Chriſtians before reſolutely ſet downe for the defending of the place by them ſo much deſired, and well acquainted with their great brags, could not but with ſcorne ſmile, as men nothing therewith diſmaied, nor ſo to be remoued. Neuertheleſſe the Baſſa conſtant in his reſolution for the regaining of Strigonium, with all his forces came the eighteenth day of September and laied ſiege vnto it. Now vnto this ſiege the Turks, in hope of ſpoyle and booty, came flocking from all places, as it had beene to ſome great Mart; and the fields in all the Country thereabout were couered and ſwarmed with armes, men, horſes, and tents. They encamped neere vnto Charles his hill, taking vp with their tents halfe a league of the Country round about: and at their firſt comming moſt brauely aduanced their Enſignes with their halfe Moones, the arms of their ſtil encreaſing Empire. Whom the beſieged in this action imitated, brauely aduancing their Enſignes vpon their walls, as did the Turks in the fields; and further brauing and prouoking them with a thouſand thundering ſhot, diſcharged out of the Towne amongſt them. All the wall round about the Towne gliſtered with armes and flames of fire, out of which the deadly bullets flew, carrying with them death and terrour into the middeſt of theſe new come enemies, for their welcome. The Turks neuertheleſſe came ſtill reſolutely on, and as men prodigall of their liues euen in the middeſt of ſo many dangers, began to make their approches. Vpon whom the Chriſtians with great courage ſallied forth, to diſturbe them in their works, and ſo for the ſpace of certaine houres hauing had with them an hot and ſharpe skirmiſh, without any great hurt receiued, retired againe into the towne, leauing vnto their enemies by that they had done, a good teſtimony of their valor and reſolution. The Turks for all that lodged themſelues, made their trenches, and ſo encamped before the mount of Saint Thomas, where by the placing of their cannon, they well declared their meaning for the battering of that fort.

Strigonium beſieged by the Turks.

The Chriſtians ſally forth vpon the Turks.

Againſt which their deſignes, George Baſta, Lieutenant General of the Imperial army, right reſolutely oppoſed himſelfe, hauing neere vnto Strigonium caſt vp a ſtrong fort, well furniſhed with men and great artillery, from which he greatly annoied the Turks with his great ordnance, and with the fury thereof enforced them to remoue farther off with their approches: his army vpon the riuer of Danubius in the meane time lying betwixt the Iſle of Strigonium, and the old towne of the Raſcians, to keep the enemy from entering either into the one place or the other.

The carefull endeuors of Baſta the Emperours Lieutenant Generall, for the preſeruation of Strigonium.

County Sultze Gouernour of the place alſo hauing taken a generall muſter of his men, and with comfortable and cheerefull ſpeeches encouraged his ſouldiers, putting them in minde of their duty, and of the honourableneſſe of the action now in hand, as vndertaken for the maintenance of the Chriſtian Religion, for the ſeruice of the Emperour, and the ſafegard of their owne liues: perſuading them withall, not to put any truſt or confidence in the Turks faith, or faire promiſes, conſidering that their weapons were euen yet wet with the bloud of their Chriſtian brethren, moſt perfidiouſly by them of late maſſacred and ſlaine at the taking of Alba Regalis: encouraging them alſo with the goodneſſe of their cauſe, with the carefulneſſe of their friends abroad for their reliefe, with the regard of their owne valour, and cowardiſe of their barbarous enemies, whoſe onely hope and truſt was in their multitude: and withall comforting them, that holding out but ſome few moneths, the very elements themſelues

The comfortable ſpeech of County Sultze Gouernour of Strigonium, to his garriſon.

ſelues and the time of the yeare, would as it were fight for them, and affoord them aid, their enemies being not able with their great army, in the extremity of Winter weather, without their irreparable loſſes to hold the field. And that as for himſelfe, his honour together with his life, were ſo bound vnto his graue and ſepulchre, at the foot of the wals of that place, as that they could not be from the ſame ſeparated; hauing propoſed the glory of the preſeruation of that place, or elſe of an honourable death, as the end of all his actions, and conſummation of all his hopes. And that therefore he moſt earneſtly beſought them to follow his ſo honourable a purpoſe, in aſſiſting him in that action, ſo much concerning their liues and honour, and wholly depending of their courage and reſolution. And that for teſtimony of his earneſt deſire to the furthering of this ſeruice, he was willing to depart with a good part of his ſubſtance and treaſure, to be beſtowed vpon them, amiddeſt theſe the trophies of his honour; hauing commanded them to haue certaine moneths pay payed before hand vnto them, which was accordingly done.

A notable ſally of the Chriſtiãs out of the fort of S. Thomas.

Now the Turks hauing a purpoſe eaſily to begin the conqueſt of Strigonium by the taking of the ſtrong fort of Saint Thomas, came the foure and twentieth day of September to aſſault and batter the ſame: vpon whom fiue hundred horſemen, and two thouſand footmen ſallying out of the fort, cauſed them, after a ſharpe and bloudy conflict, and not without ſome loſſe on both ſides, to retyre backe againe, and to forſake the mount whereupon they were encamped. But in purſuing of them too farre, they fell into a great ambuſh, before by the Turkes for that purpoſe layed to entrap them; where betwixt them was fought a moſt ſharpe and bloudy fight; the Turks preſuming vpon their multitude, and the Chriſtians ſtanding vpon their valour and honour. Vntill that in fine, valour by number being oppreſſed, ſeuen hundred of the Turks being ſlaine, the Chriſtians were enforced to retire, hauing loſt about an hundred of their men, and amongſt them the valiant County Caſimir of Hohenloth, for whoſe dead body there was a notable fight betwixt the Chriſtians and the Tutks; not much vnlike vnto that which the Poet Homer deſcribeth, to haue been fought betwixt the Trojanes and the Greekes, for the body of Patroclus. Howbeit that at length the Chriſtians being ouercharged with the comming on of the whole army of the Turks, were glad (as I ſaid) to retire, and ſo to leaue the dead body of the County Caſimir in the power of their mercileſſe enemies; who as dogs which reuenge themſelues vpon the ſtones which are caſt at them, being not able to bite the hands of them that threw them, ſo did they vpon the body of this gentle Knight, by cutting off his noſe and eares, and afterwards his head. But within ſome few daies after, this body ſo disfigured was againe deliuered vnto the Chriſtians for a Turke of good account, who was about that time by them taken priſoner. At which time the Turks ſeemed to be very deſirous of peace, moſt earneſtly requeſting County Fredericke of Hohenloth (the ſlaine Counties brother) not to be an hinderer thereof. Howbeit that this was but one of their old practiſes, depending ſtill vpon vnreaſonable conditions, whereof the yeelding vp of Strigonium was one of the chiefeſt, as the place by them moſt deſired.

But if this ſiege of the Turks auailed them not againſt the place beſieged, yet was it profitable for them againſt another place by them not artempted, which was the ſtrong Towne of Hatwan, more ſubject vnto feare, without any danger, than was Strigonium vnto the bullets and battery of the Turks, with juſt cauſe of diſtruſt. For the ſouldiers which lay there in garriſon, terrified with the ſiege of Strigonium, and doubting leſt the Turks leauing that ſiege, ſhould come and beſiege them, truſſing vp their bag and baggage, the nineteenth of September abandoned the place, and carrying away with them the beſt of the great ordnance, left the reſt altogether with the place, and great ſtore of prouiſion, vnto the enemy, not in hope of any ſuch matter.

Hatwan moſt ſhamefully forſaken by the Chriſtians

The bruit of the ſiege of Strigonium had called thither all the forces of both parties in Hungary, and the Countries thereabouts, on the one ſide for the winning thereof, and on the other for the defence of the ſame. Amongſt others, the County of Tambier, Gouernour of Lippa, was about to haue gone thither with certaine of his troups to haue aided the Generall, for the preſeruation of the place. But in the meane time Bethlem Habor, chiefe of the rebels in Tranſyluania, aſſiſted by Beckheres Baſſa with foure thouſand Turks enterd into the Prouince, to haue made himſelfe maſter thereof vnder the protection of the Turke. Whereof the

County

County hauing got knowledge, reſolued to go and meet him, and to encounter him at the very firſt enterance of him into the Prouince. This old Rebell knowing that George Baſta was by the Emperours appointment gone out of the country with the beſt troups of his horſemen, the greateſt ſtrength of the Prouince, came on in great ſecurity, thinking of nothing but of victory, and of performing his intended exploit, without feare of any to let him: ſo that caſting no further perill, he was ſurpriſed by the County, before he was aware, and put to flight. Neither was the fight long betwxti men accuſtomed to vanquiſh, reſolutely ſet downe, and well armed, againſt men daſmaied, halfe naked, and ſurpriſed. In which conflict aboue a thouſand of them being ſlaine, and a thouſand of horſes of ſeruice taken, the reſt fled; amongſt whom Bethlin himſelfe with the Baſſa flying, were glad by ſwimming to ſaue themſelues amiddeſt a thouſand chances and dangers of their liues.

Bethlem Habor the Rebell ſurpriſed & ouerthrowne by the County Tambier.

The Baſſa of Temeſwar aduertiſed of this ouerthrow by one of them that was fled from the ſame, preſently he ſent forth his Lieutenant with a good number of men, to relieue the vanquiſhed Turkes: Who by the way vnderſtanding of the generall ouerthrow of them whom hee was ſent forth to relieue, as alſo of the ſtrength of his enemies, and that hee was come too late to the relieſe of his friends, retired as faſt as he could with his men backe againe homeward toward Temeſwar. But being in their retreat diſcouered, and hotly purſued by theſe men imbrued with the bloud of their enemies, and yet breathing with victory, they were by them ouertaken euen almoſt at the gates of their City, and there (as men before ouercome with feare, and ouerwhelmed with deſpaire) cut in pieces, without any fight or reſiſtance by them made, beſeeming men of their ſort; the Lieutenant himſelfe being there ſlaine alſo.

Succors ſent to the rebels by the Baſſa or Temeſwar, defeated by the County Tambier.

After which exploits done, the County turning towards Iula, chanced to light vpon certaine companies of Turks loaded with booty, which they had got in roaming abroad into the Countrey thereabout, whom he purſued euen vnto the gates of the towne, which they found ſhut againſt them; for that they within the towne ſeeing the Chriſtians euen at the heeles of their companions, had ſhut their gates, neither durſt now open the ſame, for feare leſt the Chriſtians ſhould together with them enter the towne, and ſo become maſters thereof. Who ſo ſhut out by their owne friends, were there all by the Chriſtians ſlaine, euen in the ſight of their companions, not daring to let them in, nor able to relieue them. After which maſſacre done, the Chriſtians not yet ſo contented, burnt the ſuburbs of the towne, and ſo loaded with the ſpoiles of their enemies, departed. The County after ſo many honourable exploits in a ſmall time performed, returned to Lippa, where he arriued the 25 of September, and from thence afterward aduertiſing Baſta the Emperours Lieutenant Generall, of theſe his exploits don, cauſed ten of the Turks Enſignes, all ſtained with their owne bloud, to be preſented vnto him, as the ſure tokens of his good ſeruice done.

But to returne againe vnto the ſiege of Strigonium, the greateſt exploit by the Turks entended for this yeare, from which we haue from the occurrent of the ſame time a little ſtrayed. The Viſier Baſſa perceiuing by the valiant and reſolute defence of our men, how little hee preuailed in this ſiege, and that it was like enough to tend at length to his diſhonour, thought it good once againe to prooue, if hee might by compoſition gaine that which hee was now almoſt out of hope by force to obtaine. And to that purpoſe cauſed a motion to be made vnto the beſieged, for a treaty to be had concerning a peace, and a day appointed for the ſame. Vnto which motion for peace the Imperials (although they had no hope at all, of any peace to be concluded) eaſily yeelded, leſt they might bee thought obſtinately to haue rejected the ſame. Whereupon Commiſſioners were on both ſides appointed, to meet together, to conferre of the matter. And ſo for the Emperour Althem himſelfe, with Ferdinand Collonitz, and Fredericke of Hohenlo, County of Rhene, were appointed neere vnto the Raſcian Towne to meet with the Turks Commiſſioners, to heare what they would ſay. Howbeit the Commiſſioners on both ſides beeing met at the place aforeſaid, all their conference was but vaine and to no purpoſe; the Turkes ſtill vrging the yeelding vp of Strigonium, and the Imperials as earneſtly refuſing the ſame. So that the treaty for peace being broken off, and the Commiſſioners departing, the ſiege was more cruelly by the Turks continued than before.

Now there were in the Turks army lying at the ſiege, certaine companies of Coſſackes, men for their pay indifferent to ſerue any Prince of what Religion ſoeuer. Which ſeruiceable men, in number 700, had agreed together the 28 of September, by night to forſake the Turks campe, and to come vnto the Chriſtians. Of which their purpoſe and deſigne the Viſier Baſſa hauing by ſome vntruſty amongſt them got knowledge, cauſed the footmen of theſe companies to be apprehended and ſlaine; the horſemen in the meane time making themſelues way ouer the bellies of ſuch as would haue ſtaied them, fled, and eſcaped, ſome of them to Komara, and ſome to Dotis. Threeſcore of theſe Caſſocks being by the Turks hardly purſued, aduentured to ſwim ouer Danubius, and ſo all naked came to Collonitz, by whom they were courteouſly entertained and apparelled. And within three daies after, two hundred horſemen moe of the ſame Coſſackes came to Collonitz alſo: who marching in good order vnto the head of the Chriſtian campe, were there ſworne vnto the Emperours ſeruice; and in token of their loyalty, there diſcharged their piſtols thrice. Which horſemen Collonitz diuided among the reſt of his troups, as hauing before time had good experience of the courage and good ſeruice of diuers ſuch others of their fellowes.

The Ianizaries in mutiny againſt the Viſier Baſſa.

By theſe fugitiue ſoldiers it was vnderſtood, that the Ianizaries in great number vp in mutiny againſt the Viſier Baſſa, would haue enforced him to haue raiſed the ſiege, and ſo to haue departed. The cauſe of their ſo great diſcontentment (as they pretended) was the manifeſt and aſſured danger of their liues, with little or no hope at all for the gaining of the place: They themſelues being ſtill expoſed to the dangers both of the ſiege and of the field, hauing the beſieged on head of them armed with an aſſured reſolution, and the Chriſtian army at their backes, of knowne valour and experience. Beſides that, the place it ſelfe was (as they ſaid) impregnable, being at all times to be relieued, by reaſon that it commanded ouer the Danuby, which might alwaies relieue it both with men and victuals. And that therefore after that they had ſatisfied their honour, by giuing an aſſault or two vnto the fort of Saint Thomas, they had reſolued to ariſe, and to be gone. And much about this time, viz. the nine and twentieth of September, in the night time, was a moſt dreadfull fiery impreſſion ſeene in faſhion much like a Rainebow, of a fiery red colour, which beginning ouer Cockera, and riſing higher ouer Strigonium, at length vaniſhed away ouer the fort of Saint Thomas. The ſight whereof much troubled the beholders thereof, as well the Chriſtians as the Turkes: ſuch ſtrange meteors and apparitions being oftentimes the preſages of the ruine of them to whom they appeare.

In the meane time whileſt the Turks thus lay before Strigonium, at the ſiege of Saint Thomas fort, the Lord Baſta, Lieutenant Generall of the Emperours forces, to giue the Turks to vnderſtand, how that he was alwaies in readineſſe to attend vpon their doings, and to take hold of all ſuch opportunities as ſhould by them be offered, and ſo to keepe them in ſuſpence, came with ſeuen thouſand braue horſemen, and ſhewed himſelfe in the plaine field in order of battell; ſo, as it were, brauing the Turks euen vnto their owne trenches: where haning diſcharged their piſtols thrice, they returned as victorious, alwaies keeping themſelues in order, as men ready either to giue or to accept of battell. Howbeit the Turks for the preſent keeping themſelues cloſe within their trenches, mooued not; but afterwards being deſirous to counter-braue this the Chriſtians preſumption, the third day of October they came forth of their trenches, and gaue a ſecond aſſault to Saint Thomas fort, imploying the vttermoſt of their power in this action, whereupon they well knew a great part both of their honour and of their ſafety to depend. But in aſſayling the fort they met with them as reſolutely ſet downe for the defence thereof, and for the maintenence of their honour, as were they for the winning of the ſame. So the aſſault was begun with great fury and aduenture, as was the other before: howbeit that it endured not long, for that the Turks fought rather for the diſcharge of their duty, and to haue ſome juſt cauſe to raiſe their ſiege, than for any hope they had to preuaile, or to carry the place. For it befell them according as they had expected, ſo that after that the fight had endured little more than halfe an houre, amiddeſt the tempeſts of armes and fury, in fine the Turks out of hope to preuaile, gaue ouer the ſiege, and retired, hauing in that conflict loſt fiue hundred of their beſt ſouldiers.

The fort of S. Thomas againe aſſaulted.

The Gouernour of Strigonium had in the city vnder his charge ſix thouſand Hiaduckes,

who

who attainted with treaſon and feare, all forſooke the place excepting fiue hundred, preferring their liues vnworthy the ſauing, before their duty, and the life and honour of their Generall. With which ſhamefull treaſon, and the reſolution of the great Baſſa for forcing of the place, the Germanes there left, ſeeing their Captaines diſmaied, gathered themſelues together, promiſing by their own valour, to ſupply what wanted by reaſon of the trechery of the others; offering themſelues to be ſworne againe vnto the ſeruice of the Emperour, and rather to die all in the place, than to yeeld it vp vnto the Turks, or to leaue it vnto their enemies: where by their generall conſent a ſolemne decree was made, that whoſoeuer hee were which ſhould ſpeake or once make mention of yeelding the Towne, ſhould forthwith therefore be hanged vpon a gibbet. The Turks although they had now in two aſſaults been twice repulſed, came yet forth once againe the fifth day of October, and aſſaulted Saint Thomas fort the third time: wherein they failed not to doe what they might, but were by the Chriſtians therein ſo receiued, that deſpairing of the winning thereof, they with great loſſe and ſhame retired. Which diſgrace cauſed them to returne to their old practiſes, for the taking of places by policy. For hauing in many places vndermined the walls, and filled them with gunpouder, they were in hope by that meanes to haue opened themſelues a way vnto their conqueſt. Of which their hope for all that, they were deceiued: for the Chriſtians hauing perceiued their meaning, did by countermining not only fruſtrate their endeauour, but carried away the pouder alſo, which they had before laied in the mines, reſeruing it to their owne further neceſſity and vſe. Wherefore the Turks ſeeing themſelues of thir hope deceiued, returned againe vnto their old practiſes, to come to a parly for peace. Of which their motion the Chriſtians nothing diſliked. But the Commiſſioners on both ſides being met together for that purpoſe, in a little Iſland beneath Strigonium, when as the Turkes had offered vnto the Chriſtians the City of Agria for Strgonium; or if ſo be that that exchange pleaſed them not, but that they would needs keepe the City of Strigonium ſtill, that then in conſideration of the peace, they ſhould deliuer vnto them the ſtrong Townes of Fileck, Saint Setſchin, Pallanke, and Nouigrade; both of which demands were very vnreaſonable: The Commiſſioners thereupon againe departed without concluding of any thing.

The fort of S. Thomas the third time aſſaulted.

Now the army of the Turkes was in it ſelfe diuerſly diuided with quite contrary deſires; the Viſier Baſſa with ſome other of the Commanders, ſtood ſtifly for the taking of the place, as men willing either to returne from thence with victory, or elſe there to end their daies: but the Ianizaries to the contrary, were as earneſt to be gone, and to raiſe the ſiege, deeming it impoſſible then to preuaile againſt a place ſo ſtrong, ſo well manned, and ſo eaſily to be ſtill relieued. With which their reſolution ſo contrary vnto his, the Baſſa enraged, and yet propoſing before his departure to proue the vttermoſt of his forces againſt the fort now already by him thrice before aſſaulted, the tenth of October gaue thereunto ſix great aſſaults, but with like ſucceſſe as before, finding there ſtill the ſame defendants, no whit diſcouraged, but armed with their accuſtomed reſolution. For the defendants encouraged by their moſt valiant commanders, with ſuch fury repulſed the Turks, that they were glad to giue ouer aſſault vpon aſſault, and with great loſſe of their men to retire. Their often retreats alſo being vnto them no leſſe hurtfull than were their aſſaults, the deadly bullets being out of their fort diſcharged vpon them like ſhowers of haile. So that the Baſſa now after ſo many aſſaults, out of all hope to gaine the fort, and ſtill preſſed by the Ianizaries for the raiſing of the ſiege, immediatly after roſe with his army, quitted his trenches, and retired with his campe neere vnto a caſtle, about a league diſtant from Strigonium. From whence the Turks the better to couer their diſhonour, and to hinder the Chriſtians from purſuing of them in their retreat, the next day after came into the field with a good part of their army, and ſhewed themſelues before the Raſcian Towne, and there skirmiſhed with the Chriſtian Haiduckes. Which manner of skirmiſhing for all that was more in ſhew, than in effect, neither party therein receiuing any great loſſe or hurt. In the meane time, the beſieged which were in Strigonium, hauing gotten certaine knowledge, that the enemy had already remoued his cannon and other prouiſion for the ſiege backe againe into Buda, in token of joy diſcharged all their great Ordnance out of the city and the fort; by the report thereof giuing knowledge vnto

The fort of S. Thomas ſix times in one day aſſaulted.

The ſiege of Strigonium giuen ouer by the Turks.

the other townes and castles of the Christians, of their deliuerance. Of which so common a joy euery one of them were partakers, as deliuered from some part of the feare which the siege of so great a city as was Strigonium, had brought vpon them. And so the siege of Strigonium, begun the eighteenth day of September, was by the Turks giuen ouer the thirteenth of October: the Ianizaries insolently threatening to haue slaine the great Bassa their Generall, if he had there any longer staied.

Bassa pursueth the Turks army departing from the siege of Strigonium.

Bassa the Emperors Lieutenant in the meane time awaiting all opportunities, failed not to take hold of so fit an occasion, but with his horsemen following after the Turks army, slew of them a great number, and tooke some other of them prisoners. And afterward returning vnto their campe, found it void of men, but full of bullets, with certain pieces of great ordnance, which the Turks had left there, hauing not time to remoue the same to Buda. Vpon this rising of the Turks army the Commanders thereof were diuersly affected vnto the seruice that was further to be done, as they had before been in the time of the siege. Such of them as lay in Hungary or neere thereunto, desiring still to hold the field, in hope of the spoile of the country: but they which dwelt farther off, especially such as were come out of Asia, desiring as much to be discharged, their horses being almost all dead with faintnesse and trauell, and themselues weary of the seruice.

Shortly after the rising of the Turks army from Strigonium, two fugitiues of the Turks most brauely mounted, came vnto Bassa the Emperors Lieutenant, and presenting him with a ring of great value, and a most faire Turkish Ensigne, told him, most part of the Turks army to lie then incamped in the country neere vnto Pesth; and the great Cham, a young Prince of about twenty yeares old to be come thither with a great power of Tartars, to aid the Bassa: And that the Turks by their comming incouraged, were determined yet to make a great excursion for the spoiling of the country. All which shortly after was certainely knowne to be true, the plaine country of the vpper Hungary about Palanka, Setschin, and Villecampe, being by them, but especially of these new come Tartars, all spoiled and burnt. For remedy whereof Sigefride Collonitz opposing himselfe with his Hungarian horsemen, against these insolent forragers, so danted them, that ceasing further to spoile the country, they departed, carrying away with them such prisoners and spoile as they had there taken, and leauing behind them a strong garrison of three thousand good souldiers, for the repairing and keeping of Pesth, but a little before cowardly (as we said) by the Christians forsaken. But within some few daies after, viz. the foure and twentieth of October, the Visier Bassa by his letters written vnto County Althem Gouernour of Strigonium, made a mention for a treaty of peace to be had for the comfort of the distressed people of that spoiled country, solemnly protesting, most religiously on his part to keepe the same, if it should be once concluded: and yet in the meane time with fire and sword spoiling all the Countrey by the way as he departed out of Hungary.

New rebellion in Transyluania raised by Istiuan, syrnamed Botscay.

But now as this poore Country began to feele release by the departure of the great Bassa with his army out thereof, so the Country of Transyluania joyning thereunto, was at the same time as much with rebellion and discord distressed. Bethlin Habor the Rebell, with his Bassa ouerthrowne and driuen out of Transyluania (as is aforesaid) the Lord Belgiosa, Bassa his Lieutenant in this prouince, thinking all things now at quiet, was making himself ready with his troups, to haue gon to aid the Lord Bassa his General, then incamped in the plains of Strigonium, to hinder the Turks designes for the taking of this Towne. But as he was about so to haue done, behold, euen at the same time when he least feared, a second Rebell there started vp far worse than the first, namely, the Lord Istiuan (otherwise surnamed Botscay, or more truely * Potscay) who accompanied with great troups of men of warre vnder the protection of the Turke, and stiling himselfe by the name of the Prince of Transyluania, entering that Prouince, miserably burnt and spoiled the same. For the repressing of which so sudden a rebellion, Belgiosa with a thousand horse, vnder the leading of Rotkeuitz and Peter Lasla, marched toward Veradin: and with his troupe comming to Ador, a country village about a league distant from Veradin, and meaning thither to assemble together his army, he sent to Petsie Gouernour of Veradin, to put him in minde of his duty, and to craue his aid. Which valiant captaine, alwaies prest and ready to do his Prince seruice, failed not now of his duty, but calling

He was in scorn called Potscay (which in the Bohemian language signifieth tarry, or stay) of the long delaies bee by way of disgrace had before endured in the emperors court.

together

A together six companies of footmen out of Romosa, and joyning vnto them foure companies out of Veradin, together with the Silesian horsemen of Schuet-Kenhut his Regiment) whom by reason of his sickenesse he was not able to lead) and with them the Haiduckes of County Tambier, came vnto the place of the rendezuous, bringing with him all warlike prouision in token of his fidelity. With this army Belgiosa marched against the Rebels, who as resolute men attended his comming: for why, Botscay knowing the Haiduckes of County Tambier secretly to fauour him and his rebellion more than they did Belgiosa and his just quarrels, stood in no feare of them, but assured himselfe of them as of his friends; who failed not of his hope and expectation, but euen at the first joyning of the battell, turned themselues to his part: with the going ouer of whom, the number of the Rebels was much encreased, and Belgiosa his po-
B wer both in force and courage much weakened, seeing themselues at once exposed both vnto the force of their enemies, and to the trechery of their fellowes, who now with conjoyned forces most fiercely assailed them: who finding themselues now on all sides inuironed with so great a multitude, and not able with so small a number as was left, to withstand the violence of their enemies, and the treason of their companions; after they had to the vttermost of their power performed all the parts of valiant and courageous men, were there almost all cut in pieces, and there buried in the field of their loyalty, honoured with their owne bloud, and altogether embrued with the bloud of their enemies. In this vnlucky and disloyall fight were diuers good and faithfull Captaines slaine: Petsie Gouernour of Veradin, and Pallas Lippa, both great Captaines, and grieuously wounded, were there taken prisoners. The Lieutenant
C of Petsie also, hauing retired himselfe with some of his troups into a place of good strength, there so valiantly defended themselues, that Botscay out of hope to ouercome them by force, to get them into his power promised them vpon his Oath, if they would yeeld themselues, to suffer them in safety to depart. But what trust or credit is to be giuen to him who hath before broken his faith and loyalty to his Prince, this Rebell well shewed by the death of these valiant and warlike men, who after that they had vpon his faith and promise yeelded themselues, were by his appointment cruelly slaine and cut in pieces. The Silesian horsmen were there also ouerthrowne and buried in the middest of their enemies: and as for Belgiosa himselfe, he strangely escaped out of the battell, and saued himselfe by flying to Veradin. The Victorious Rebell after the battell, in stead of praising God, sacrificed to the Diuell, by sending a great part of the Ensignes by him gained, to the Visier Bassa, with a thousand praises of his glory, for supporting him in his rebellion; and vaunting much of this his victory, gaue him withall to vnderstand, That he had slaine aboue 6000 of his enemies.

Belgiosa in a great battell ouerthrowne by Botscay the Rebell.

This victory gotten, together with the humble submission of Botscay, obtained of the Great Sultan, That from thenceforth he should be stiled by the name of the Prince of Transyluania, with a further charge from him, to do the vttermost of his endeauour for the subduing vnto his obeysance the rest of Transyluania; promising plentifully to supply his wants both with men and mony, and out of hand to send him three thousand Tartars to his aid. And in-
3 deed this was a very great and bloudy battell, fought from the first breake of the day, vntill eleuen a clocke at noone: but whether so many were slaine there or no, it cannot certainely be told, for that diuers of them who were said to be slaine, and so accounted among the dead, had hid themselues in the wood thereby, and some others of them by some other meanes escaped death also. Petsie himselfe had with him when he was taken two Monkes, whom the souldiers in despight cut into many pieces, and carried him fast bound in chains to Derritza, to be there cured of the dangerous wounds by him in the battell receiued.

Botscay in his rebellion countenanced by the Great Sultan, and called prince of Transyluania.

But as for Pallas Lippa, who being wounded, was taken prisoner with Petsie, hee was afterwards by Botscay appointed his Lieutenant Generall, and so by his commandement was publipuely proclaimed; as he which was desirous to take vpon him the defence of the reformed Religion, and of such as were willing to professe the same: who forthwith made a generall proclamation, That all they which were desirous of the liberty of conscience, and to liue free from the superstitions of the Roman Church, should repaire vnto him as vnto their head and chiefetaine, ready to entertaine them, and to allow to euery one of them fiue Dollars a month for their pay. Vpon which Proclamation made, a great multitude of men vpon the sudden resorted vnto him; so that in a short time he had following of him ten thousand Haiduckes, beside

beside a number of the other common rascall people; yea, almost all the gentlemen of the country repairing vnto him, bound themselues by oath to him, and one of them to another, That as they would not take vp armes to fight against the Christian Emperor, so they would not submit themselues vnto the Turke, but only stand vpon the defence of their religion, and the liberty of conscience.

The Rebell Botscay thus wonderfully encreased in strength and number, beset almost all the passages of the country, and with the sword of rebellion in his hand, and his souldiers following him, commanded the cities still as he went to yeeld vnto him: but hearing that Belgiosa was after the late ouerthrow gone from Veradin to Cassouia, where his wife lay; and being come thither, to haue been by the citisens rejected, who would not only not receiue him into their city, but turned his wife also out of their city vnto him; he with a great army comming thither, tooke the City without resistance, the Citisens for the most part enclining vnto him. Of which City beeing possessed, hee forthwith changed both the Religion and ciuile gouernment thereof, slew part of such as were of the Romish Religion, and thrust the rest out of the City, with all the Church men, tooke the Bishop and the Emperours Treasuror prisoners, and so changed the whole gouernment of the Towne vpside downe. The onely man he stood in feare of, was Belgiosa, for whom he laid wait by all meanes hee could to haue taken him, with a purpose to haue vsed him most hardly, if hee had fallen into his hands.

The great city of Cassouia yeelded to the rebel Botscay.

These things thus done in Transyluania and in Hungary, the Visier Bassa being about to returne to Constantinople, to grace that little which he had done this yeare in Hungary, and to auoid the suspition of his euill succesſe in that Prouince, borrowed of Botscay the rest of the Ensignes, together with Petsie and other the noble Christian captiues which he had taken in the late battell with Belgiosa: which Ensignes and prisoners he confidently afterwards caused to be presented vnto the Great Sultan Achmat, as taken by himselfe; and in recompence thereof, left three thousand Turks and Tartars with the Rebell, to aid him in his wars both in Transyluania and Hungary.

Bassa the Emperours Lieutenant in Hungary, and Gouernour of Transyluania, hearing of the stirres and troubles of late raised in both those Countries, by Botscay and his rebellious Followers, and hauing as he thought best, set all things in order againe at Strigonium, marched thence with his Army, being foureteene thousand strong, towards Cassouia, with a purpose to haue suppressed the rebellion in the vpper Hungary, before it should haue spred farther, to the endangering of the whole state of both those Countries, as afterward it did. Howbeit before he could come thither, the Rebels after the taking of Cassouia, being wonderfully encreased both in strength and number, had taken in most of the strong Townes and places in the vpper Hungary, the people almost generally now fauouring their quarrell, carrying with it the face of Religion, with the suppressing of the German gouernement, both things vnto them much pleasing. And now hearing that Belgiosa (a man of them most hated, beeing, as we said, shut out of Cassouia) was fled into the Castle of Zipze, they by Letters required of Turson Captaine of the Castle, to haue him deliuered vnto them, to be according to his deserts punished; promising withall, to doe Turson himselfe no harme, so that hee would take part with them in defence of their Religion, and of the liberty of conscience: which if hee should refuse to doe, yet that they would giue him free liberty to depart whither hee would, out of his Castle, and in safety to conduct him thither, so that he would forthwith resolue, what course hee would take. But if hee should of this his offer mislike also, then they threatened to spoyle his Countrey, to kill his people, to rase his Castle, and to make himselfe an example vnto others. Wherewith for all that hee nothing mooued, refused to deliuer vnto them Belgiosa, the man whom they so much desired, or yet to accept of any of their other offers. Whereupon the Rebels with great labour repairing the broken way betwixt Cassouia and the Castle, and bringing certaine pieces of great Ordnance from Cassouia, in great number came and streightly besieged the Castle. With whose attempts the valiant Captaine nothing mooued, with his thundering shot out of the Castle so welcommed them, that hauing thereby receiued great harme, they thought it not their best course to stay any longer there with so great a power, but with the greatest part

Bassa goeth with his army against the Rebels in the vpper Hungary.

Belgiosa in the castle of Zipze besieged by the Rebels.

A part thereof to go to Presburg, to reforme that city and ſome other places by the way; perſuading themſelues, That the Captaine of this caſtle ſo ſhut vp, and on euery ſide beſet with his enemies, would at length of himſelfe yeeld vp the caſtle.

But while the Rebels thus lay at the ſiege of this caſtle, certaine companies of them went to haue taken the ſpoile of a Religious houſe there by: but comming thither, and breaking open the doores, and ſearching euery ſecret corner of the houſe, they found therein nothing worth the reckoning of, but ſo returned almoſt empty handed: for the Prieſts had for feare of them before carried away with them all the beſt of their goods and ſubſtance into the beſieged caſtle. And ſo likewiſe the rife report of their comming to Presburg flying abroad, almoſt all the Prieſts and Ieſuits in Presburg and the country thereabout, leauing their Churches
B and Colledges, fled with their ſubſtance to Vienna, ſcarcely accounting themſelues ſafe there, vntill that the garriſon of that ſtrong city was increaſed with a new ſupply of ſix hundred good ſouldiers.

And now the Rebels, their number ſtill more and more encreaſing, and hauing ſet all the vpper part of Hungary on a broyle, were beſieging diuers other caſtles and ſtrong places, yet holden for the Emperor; when as Baſta in the meane time, comming from the ſiege of Strigonium, came and with his army encamped about three miles from Filek. Of whoſe comming the Rebels hearing, and thereupon retyring, he forthwith followed after them toward Budnoc; which caſtle they alſo left, and ſo neere vnto Ramoſambat, the place of their rendezuous, gathered together a great number, with an intent to haue giuen Baſta battell. Whereof Baſta ha-
C uing knowledge, to ſpare the effuſion of more Chriſtian bloud, by an Herauld ſent vnto them in friendly and courteous manner, aduiſed them to change their minds, and to returne againe vnto their former allegiance. But finding them obſtinately ſet downe in their former purpoſe, for the maintaining of their rebellion, and the giuing of him battel, he marching forward with his army, with great force charged certaine companies of the Rebels, appointed to keepe the paſſage of Filek; who at the firſt right valiantly receiued the charge, and defended the paſſage, vntill that at length with number oppreſſed, and aboue foure hundred of them ſlaine, they were put to the worſe, and enforced to flee; in which flight, amongſt others there taken priſoners, Blaſe Nemet their captain was taken alſo, whom Baſta cauſed to be hanged vp by the heels, with the Enſignes ſet vp about him which he had taken from the rebels in the late fight; and
D after he had for a time ſo hung, made him to be taken downe, and his head to be ſtrucke off from his ſhoulders. In this conflict fifty of Baſta his men were ſlaine alſo, and many moe hurt, and amongſt them Collonitz, hurt in his ſhoulder and his foot with a ſmall ſhot.

Baſta after this victory marching on with his army, by the way met with certaine other companies of the rebellious Haiducks as he was going to S. Peters, with whom he had many an hot skirmiſh for the ſpace of three daies together, being by them ſtill put to the worſe, inſomuch that hauing burnt many of his carriages, tents and other luggage, he was of nothing more carefull, than how well to get out of their hands. Neuertheleſſe ſeeing no other remedy, he with great courage not onely endured the often and fierce aſſaults of his enemies, ſtill
Baſta diſtreſſed by the Rebels.
F more and more encreaſing vpon him, but the fourth day after ſo many vnfortunat skirmiſhes, (being the eight and twentieth of Nouember) putting his men in order of battell, right valiantly againe charged the Rebels: who by reaſon of the darkeneſſe of the weather, it beeing then a very thicke miſt, being not able to perceiue where the enemies attempts were moſt to be feared, or what way to turne their owne forces; as men diſmaied, were eaſily by them ouer-
The Rebels by Baſta ouerthrowne.
throwne and put to flight: who ſo flying, Baſta with his ſouldiers fiercely purſuing, made of them a great ſlaughter: ſo that in the ſpace of leſſe than three houres, fifteen hundred of them were in this thicke and darke miſt ſlain, with ſome few alſo of Baſta his ſouldiers, and amongſt them Fredericke Earle of Solmes, and the County of Erbach wounded. Vpon the report of which ouerthrow, the Rebels which yet lay at the ſiege of the caſtle of Zipze, in hope there at length to haue taken Belgioſa, forthwith roſe and retired themſelues to Leuſta. But Baſta after H this victory remouing to Saint Andrewes, and hauing recouered that towne from the Rebels, and thereinto put a new garriſon, and ſo by this meanes ſomewhat daunted and repreſſed the inſolency of the Haiduckes in thoſe quarters, and being not well able longer to keepe the field with his army in ſo vnſeaſonable a time of the yeare, and ſo to maintaine warre as it were both

both againſt his enemies, and the extremities of nature, ſought by letters to haue reclaimed them of Caſſouia againe vnto their obedience; offering vnto them pardon for all their offences paſt, ſo that they would now at laſt acknowledge their fault, and receiue into their towne a garriſon of the Emperors. To which purpoſe he writ alſo to them of Eperia; in hope that if he might ſo haue gained thoſe two ſtrong towns, to haue in them Wintered in ſafety with his army. But them of Coſſouia hauing in the city a ſtrang garriſon of ſix thouſand good ſouldiers, and out of feare to be by Baſta beſieged at that time of the yeare, and withall in hope (if need were) to be by Botſcay relieued, (who was then reported to be forty thouſand ſtrong) vtterly refuſed to hearken to Baſta his motion, for their reconciliation, or at all to ſubmit themſelues againe vnto the Emperour. Which cauſed him with his army to come neerer vnto the city, yet ſtill ſeeking rather by faire meanes to haue perſuaded the citiſens to haue returned vnto their loyalty, than by force to haue conſtrained them. But finding them obſtinately ſet downe, and by no perſuaſions to be remoued, but with their great ordnance in what they might to trouble his campe, he ſent before the County Hohenloh and Rotnitz, with part of his army to Eperia, to command them vpon their allegiance to receiue the Emperours ſouldiers into the city, and to relieue them with ſuch things as they were able: and within a few dayes after, viz. the fifth of December, followed himſelfe with the reſt of his army. But being come thither, after much talke had with the chiefe men of the City, it was at length, contrary to all mens expectation, agreed, That Baſta aſſuring them of the free exerciſe of their religion, of the good behauiour of the ſouldiers towards them, and to defend them from the injury and incurſions of their enemies, they ſhould open the gates vnto the Imperials, and relieue them with what they were able, and ſo as before to continue in their allegiance and obedience vnto the Emperour. Of all which things when Baſta had vpon his faith giuen, aſſured them, they opened their gates and receiued in the ſouldiers: vnto whom now almoſt dead and ſtarued with hunger) nothing could haue happened more lucky or welcome. Leuſta, Barbeld, Zebena, famous townes in thoſe places, following the example of Eperia, ſubmitted themſelues in like manner, and helped Baſta his ſouldiers with reliefe. Thither with great danger came vnto Baſta, Sigefrid Collonitz, a man of great power and authority in that part of Hungary, to confer with him about the appeaſing of theſe troubles: who afterward by his letters vnto the States and the reſt of the Nobility of Hungary, yea, and to Botſcay himſelfe, in vaine perſuading them to lay downe armes, and to returne againe vnto their wonted obedience vnto the Emperour.

Eperia yeelded vnto Baſta.

There had been hitherto in the Imperiall campe great ſcarcity of victuals and of other neceſſaries, ſo that for want thereof, and for the extremitie of the cold, and other miſeries, it was greatly feared, leſt the campe ſhould haue been broken vp; to the irrepairable loſſe of his Imperiall Majeſty, as the ſtate of things then ſtood in Hungary. For the remedy whereof, thirty waggons loded with mony and cloath were ſent from Vienna, vnder the conduct of County Solmes, Colonell Starenberg, the Treaſurer, and others: vnto whom Tanhuſar joyned fifteene hundred Huſſars (Hungarian horſemen ſo called) to ſtrengthen the conuoy againſt the danger which was feared from the Haiducks which lay vpon the way, and who indeed were now roaming about and ſeeking after booty in euery corner of the country. Which Huſſars being come with the reſt of the conuoy into a thick wood, about two miles from Filek, like enemies ſet vpon the waggoners, whom they ſhould haue conducted, and there made a great ſlaughter of ſuch as were about to reſiſt them; inſomuch that the County Solmes had much ado to ſaue himſelfe and to get out of their hands, leauing the waggons as a prey vnto the trecherous Huſſars; who now become maſters of them, draue them away to Botſcay the Rebels campe: Tanhuſar their Captaine in vaine purſuing after them (with ſuch of his Huſſars as more faithfull than the reſt, had no hand in that ſo foule a treachery) and recouering nothind but tenne waggons loaded with cloath, which the traitors had left behinde them, hauing taken the horſes out of them, and put them into the other waggons wherein the mony was, (which was reported to be 130000 florens) with the more ſpeed to bring them vnto Botſcay. Who hauing vpon the ſudden receiued ſo great a ſumme of mony, by him not looked for, forthwith diuided the ſame amongſt his ſouldiers, the more to encourage them in their rebellion againſt the Emperour.

The Huſſars traiterouſly ſpoyle them whom they ſhould haue conducted.

The

The newes of this so great a losse being quickly spred thorow all the Emperours campe, at the first filled the souldiers with griefe and disdaine against the trecherous Hussars, but afterwards with wrath and indignation against their own Commanders, as deeming it to hane bin nothing but a false report by them deuised and giuen out to deceiue them, and to feed them with a vaine hope. Which persuasion, though not true, had now so strongly possessed their minds, as that they were about all to haue risen vp in mutiny, and to haue forsaken the seruice, to the vtter perill of their Captains, and endangering of the whole Prouince, now vpon point to haue bin for euer lost. All which mischiefes Basta foreseeing, did first what he might with words and faire promises to haue appeased them; which not seruing, he with certaine thousands of duckats and waggons of cloth taken vp at Leusta and other townes there by, wisely contented them, in some good measure furnishing the old souldiers, before halfe naked, both with mony and apparell, the souldiers greatest contentments.

Basta wisely appeaseth his soldiers, ready to forsake his seruice.

Which mutiny so againe appeased, the Imperials shortly after surprising a castle not farre from Eperia, found therein a great many of Hungarian Gentlemen, whom they carried away with them prisoners, to learne of them what they might concerning the Rebels proceedings, and further designes. In the meane time the Haiducks on the other side besieged the castle of Sendra, which they after many assaults tooke, and put to the sword all the garrison souldiers therin; and departing thence, first rifled and after burnt the towne of Filek. They also took the castles of Boluar, Setschin, Dregell, Burac, Holloc, Blaueſtein, and the strong castle of Cabrageria, whither they of Hatwan not long before had carried their great ordnance at such time as they for feare of the Turks, then lying at the siege of Strigonium, had abandoned the place: all strong holds in the vpper Hungary. After the taking of which places, Ferentius Radius, and Charles Istuan (Botscay his neere kinsman) and the chiefe captains and ringleaders of the rebels, exacted contribution mony of the minerall townes (as they call them) belonging vnto the Emperor in the vpper Hungary; but especially of the city of Newsoll, enforcing them also to sweare to be in all things obedient to Botscay, and to take his part against the Imperials, threatning with fire and sword to infest such places as should refuse to do the like. And to the intent that they should not by Collonitz be incouraged or defended, who to that end was comming thither, the Rebels in great number went to meet him, and hauing belaied all the passages, enforced him to retire himselfe vnto his castle of Libentsia, where he lying in great danger with his wife then in child-bed, accompanied but with 50 German soldiers only, for that he durst not to trust his Hungarian Cossackes, now in heart altogether enclining vnto the Rebels, was glad in post to send to Vienna, most humbly requesting to haue a new supply of German soldiers sent vnto him for his reliefe, and the furtherance of the Emperors seruice, in that so dangerous a time and wauering estate of that country, being the best part of that the Emperor then held in Hungary.

Diuers places taken by the Haiduckes.

Collonetz prayeth aid from Vienna.

Now while Basta thus lay with his army at Eperia and in the country thereabout, he dayly receiued great harme from the Haiduckes, who were still houering about him, as Hawkes ouer their prey; his souldiers, by necessity enforced to fetch in wood, and other things necessary into the campe, being still most miserably slaine and cut in pieces; yea, they were so bold, as oftentimes to trouble him in his campe, and to assayle the soldiers where they lay quartered in their trenches; as amongst other times, they did in the latter end of December to end the yeare withall: at which time they by night breaking into the quarter where Charles Collonitz, with Copell and Pettinger, two Captaines of Austria, with their companies lay, they slew the said Copell, with almost all his souldiers, and burnt Pettinger in his tent, Collonitz himselfe being at the same time in great danger, and hardly by them beset also; vntill that encouraging his men, by performing all the parts both of a good Captaine and valiant souldier, he by true valour enforced them at length to retire backe againe into the woods, from whence they came, hauing in this conflict slaine foureteene of them with his owne hand.

Copel and Pettinger slaine by the Haiduckes.

About this time was a spy taken in the Imperiall campe, one of Botscay his chiefe men, discouered by one comming from Cassouia to Eperia which knew him: who by Basta his commandement apprehended, vnd vpon torture examined, and confessing what he had done, was for his good seruice hanged and afterward quartered, to the terrour of others attempting the like.

A spie taken.

The

The Turks this yeare were not much fortunat in their warres: Haſſan the Viſier Baſſa and their Generall againſt the Chriſtians in Hungary hauing in vaine (as is before declared) beſieged Strigonium, and with all his forces done nothing worth the remembrance; and Cicala Baſſa their other Generall againſt the Perſians in the Eaſt being with all his great power by the Perſian King ouerthrowne and put to fight, and the city of Babylon now called Bagdat taken: as it was firſt at Prague the two and twentieth of October reported by the Secretary of the Vayuod of Valachia, ſent thither by an Embaſſador from his Maſter vnto the Emperour, and afterward confirmed by an Embaſſador ſent from the Perſian King himſelfe vnto the Emperor; who hauing audience, told his Majeſty, how that the King his Maſter was not ignorant of the great and difficult warre by him now for many yeares maintained againſt the Turkiſh Sultan, with whom although he for his part might haue liued in peace & amity, yet that mooued with the zeale which one Prince ought to haue to the reliefe of another, he had taken vp armes againſt him, ſo to auert ſome part of that heauy war from his Majeſty euen vpon himſelfe: and that he had already obtained many great and notable victories & conqueſts againſt him: and recouered a great territory, wrongfully before taken from the Perſian Kings his predeceſſors by the Turkiſh Sultans: and that now he was of nothing more deſirous, than to joine in a perpetual league and amity with his Majeſty, that ſo in a moſt ſtrong confederation combined together, they might neuer afterward be diſſeuered, or euer make peace with the Sultan, without one anothers knowledge and conſent. And further, That for his part he was minded neuer to giue ouer the warre ſo happily by him begun, vntill he had driuen him euen into his Imperiall city of Conſtantinople, ſo that his Majeſty ſhould on his part do the like, by continuing of his preſent wars; it being not poſſible for the Turke to hold out againſt them both, and the only means to abate his greatneſſe, and to aſſure them in their eſtates: requeſting him withall, to ſend backe with him ſome graue man his Embaſſador, with ſufficient authority and inſtructions to conferre about theſe matters with him; that ſo knowing and vnderſtanding one anothers minde, the league and confederation betwixt them might the more eaſily and commodiouſly be made and concluded.

The euill ſucceſſe of Cicala Baſſa againſt the Perſians.

Neither were the Turks buſied with theſe forreine warres only, againſt theſe ſo great and mighty Princes, in places ſo remote and farre off, but vnto theſe were joyned their owne inteſtine and ciuill warres and troubles alſo; the Rebels being yet vp in the leſſer Aſia, and the Baſſa's of Aleppo and Damaſco, two of the moſt famous cities in Siria, and both of them men of great place and command, of late vp in armes one of them againſt the other: inſomuch, that they had brought the matter to be tried by the ſword in the plaine field, where the Baſſa of Aleppo in a great and bloudy battell ouercome, and flying vnto his own city, was by the Baſſa of Damaſco purſued thither, and ſo ſtreitly by him beſieged with an army of thirty thouſand men, that in fine he was glad to reconcile himſelfe vnto him, and to make his peace, by yeelding vnto him whatſoeuer the other Baſſa his enemy pleaſed to demand of him; as being thereunto driuen by the extremity of famine, which then reigned in the city; as alſo for that he had loſt a great number of his men, whom he had ſent ſecretly out of the city to ſeeke for victuals, being all ſlaine by the Baſſa of Damaſco his ſouldiers. With which ſo great matters the Baſſaes of the Court (who had the mannaging of the State vnder the young Sultan) were much troubled, he himſelfe (as was fitteſt for his yeres) in the meane time delighting himſelf with the pleaſures of the Court, and much rejoycing at the birth of his firſt begotten ſon, who was about that time borne.

Sultan Achmat his firſt ſonne borne.

1605 The reuolution of time had now thus brought this yeare to an end, the troubles of Hungary and Tranſyluania yet ſtill more and more ſo encreaſing, as if that thoſe moſt miſerable countries had by the juſt and heauy judgements of God beene now appointed vnto their laſt and vtter ruine and deſtruction: the cauſes of their ſo great miſeries proceeding not ſo much from the Turks their enemies, as from the naturall inhabitants themſelues; who in minds diuided both in religion and affection, ſome of them continuing in their allegiance vnto the Emperor, and otherſome following the Enſignes of the Rebell Botſcay, did both vnto themſelues and to their country more harme in a little time, than had the Turks in many yeres before. Of which ſo dangerous a diſſention, and of the harmes thereof inſuing, Belioioſa left by Baſta as his Lieutenant, was reported to haue beene the firſt and chiefe authour: For whereas the yeare

before

before the Bishops and other Clergy men, in an assembly of them at Possonium, had without the knowledge of the Nobilitie and States of Hungary, published a Decree by them there made, for the burning or perpetual banishing of all such as were of the Reformed Religion in Hungary: and that the States of that kingdome vnderstanding thereof, and solemnly protesting against the same, vnder the Scale of the Lord Palatine had publiquely affirmed, with just Arms to defend themselues, if they should for their Religion be called into question or troubled: and had again repeated the same their protestation at Galset. Yet Belioiosa neuertheles in the meane time by cunning seising vpon the reformed churches at Cassovia, would not suffer the Citisens of the Reformed Religion there, to haue any Sermons in their owne priuat houses, or so much as to reade on the holy Bible. Neither any whit mooued with the former protestations of the Nobilitie and States, had taken vnto himselfe all the lands and goods of them of their Religion in Cassovia, not suffering them to bury the bodies of their dead within the city, neere vnto the Monasteries. And requesting to haue borrowed of Botscay certaine thousands of crownes, and thereof by him denied, caused his souldiers to ransacke two of his Castles, and to spoyle him of all the wealth and treasure he therein had. For which indignities and injuries Botscay inraged, caused open proclamation to be made, That hee would giue vnto euery Haiducke that would serue him, four Crownes a moneth pay, with all the booty that they could get. Whereupon six thousand Haiduckes which then serued vnder Belioiosa, forthwith reuolted vnto Botscay, their number increasing daily. But after that vnto this extraordinary pay, Pallas Lippa his Lieutenant had also joined the protection of the Reformed Religion, it is wonderfull to say, how the Haiducks by heaps resorted vnto him, and how the people in all parts of Hungary generally fauoured him and his quarrell; beeing in all places whereas he came, ready to join hands with him against the Imperials. The Turkes and Tartars also, both with men and mony furthering him in all his doings, whose help he refused not. Whereof proceeded all the aforesaid miseries both in Hungary and Transylvania, with many other worse than they, which together with the beginning of this year tooke their beginning and encrease also. Vnto which so great troubles stil more and more encreasing, Basta not able by force to giue remedy, sought by lenitie and faire persuasions to haue eased the same: by Letters oftentimes aduising euen Botscay the chiefe Rebell himselfe, to change his minde, to lay downe armes, to dis-band his forces, and to persuade with the rest of his seditious followers, to submit themselues vnto the Emperour, and to return againe vnto their wonted obedience. Whereunto he at length answered, That if the gouernment of all Transylvania might be left vnto himselfe alone: If a naturall Hungarian borne might bee still chosen Lieutenant Generall in Hungary: if none but such as were Hungarians borne, should haue the gouernement and commaund of all the garrisons in Hungary: if the Wallon and French souldiers might be shut out of Hungarie: If the naturall Hungarians borne might from thenceforth be regarded and prouided of their pay: If it might bee lawfull for euery man to haue the free exercise of his Religion: If the authors of these troubles might be deliuered vnto the Hungarians to be punished: If the Emperour himselfe in person should come and be present at the Parliament at Presbourg: If the Germane garrison souldiers should still keepe themselues within the places wherunto they were appointed, without making of any incursions into the towns or villages neer vnto them, or hurting of the poor countrey men; he could then be content to come to such a good agreement for peace. With which offer he sent two of the Rebels his followers vnto Basta; who not liking thereof, returned them backe again without concluding of any thing.

The causes of Botscay his rebellion.

But while things were thus in talke, some of the Haiducks in the meane time, with a number of Tartars joined vnto them, in seeking after booty surprised Gokara a towne ouer against Strigonium: where hauing slain certain Germanes who had the keeping of the place, and rifled the town, as they were about to haue set it on fire, by the comming ouer of the gouernor of Strigonium with his garrison, they were inforced to forsake the place, and again to retire. This losse receiued at Gokara was again by our men requited by the taking of Palantwar, a good fortresse of the Turks, after a long and cruel fight taken by Captain Bathian (Commander of the Imperiall troupes on this side the riuer of Danubius) whereinto a number of the Turks being retyred, were there together with the garrison soldiers all slain, and among them diuers men of great account, who but some few daies before were come thither. Which fortresse

Gokara surprised by the Haiducks.

Palantwar taken by the Imperials.

treſſe the Captain cauſed to be forthwith raſed, becauſe it ſhould no more ſtand the Turks in ſtead for the annoying of the Chriſtians.

Vacia ſhamefully betrayed to the Turks.

The Turks about this time had a purpoſe to beſiege Vacia, a city not farre from Vicegrade on the other ſide of Danubius, a place which ſtill did them great harme, and ſtood the Chriſtians in great ſtead. The garriſon of which place was part Germans, and part Hungarians, as the reſt of all the garriſons in the Imperiall towns of Hungary were. Of which the Turks purpoſe for the ſiege, the trecherous Haiducks there in garriſon hauing got vnderſtanding, conſpired to deliuer vnto them the place; and yet not ſo contented, to ioyne thereunto a treaſon more bloudy and treacherous than was the betraying of the towne: for finding themſelues by far too ſtrong for the Germanes in garriſon in the towne with them, they fell vpon them, fearing no ſuch matter, and ſlew moſt part of them, the reſt ſauing themſelues by ſpeedy flight to Strigonium: and ſo afterward, according to their former pretended treaſon, deliuered the towne to the Turks, joining with them and the Tartars, and directing them for the more eaſie ſpoiling of the Chriſtians and the countrey thereabout.

The taking of this City of Vacia had in ſhort time called together great numbers of the Turks and Tartars out of all places of the Realme; who together with the Haiducks made a great and puiſſant army, to the terror of the Chriſtians, not then able to hold the field againſt them, and the encouraging of the Turks, thus holpen euen by the Chriſtians themſelues, to the deſtroying of one another. With this army they turned from Vacia to Gokara, with a purpoſe from thence to haue paſſed ouer the Danubius vpon the yce, and to haue ſurpriſed Strigonium. Which exploit they had once before attempted againſt the baſe towne, being then by the Chriſtians repulſed and beaten backe with their great and ſmall ſhot out of the town, as now they were againe. Howbeit that ſeeing the number of their enemies daily more and more to increaſe, they in Strigonium ſtood more in doubt of a ſecond ſiege, than they had done of the firſt; whereof we haue before ſpoken.

The report of theſe ſo great troubles, and of the generall reuolt of the diſcontented Haiducks in Hungarie, much troubled and grieued the Chriſtian Emperor: Who both in reſpect of his honour, and of the ſafety of his eſtate, raiſed what power he might out of his prouinces thereabout, and leuied great ſummes of money from his ſubiects, taking a ducket vpon euery houſe in Auſtria, being then in great feare of theſe miſeries and miſchiefes ſo faſt ſpreading, and ſtill more and more increaſing and approaching that way. Vnto whoſe forces already on foot, had the aid promiſed from the King of Spaine, the Pope, the Princes of Italy and Germanie, with ſix thouſand footmen and two thouſand horſe out of Bohemia, bin in time joyned, they might haue made a ſufficient army vnder the conduct of Baſta the Emperours Lieutenant, to haue repreſſed both the attempts of the enemy, and the inſolencie of the rebellious Haiduckes. All or moſt part of which aid this yeare failing, and Baſta with his ſmall forces much weakened with wants and the extremitie of Winter, and not able to keep the field, the enemies ſtill increaſing both in number and in ſtrength, and without feare of any to encounter them, at their pleaſure roaming vp and downe, began now to draw neere vnto Vicegrade (a good and ſtrong towne of Hungarie ſtanding vpon the ſide of Danubius, about the mid way betwixt Buda & Strigonium) with a purpoſe to haue beſieged the ſame. Of whoſe comming the Germans there in garriſon hearing, and warned by the trechery of the Haiducks of Vacia, what to feare from the Haiducks in garriſon with them in Vicegrade, betime retyred themſelues out of the towne into the Caſtle. In which doing they were well aduiſed, being otherwiſe like enough to haue run the ſame fortune that the Germanes their fellowes before had done at Vacia. For the Turks with the rebellious Haiducks were no ſooner come thither, but that the Haiducks in the towne, without more ado, opened the gates of the towne vnto them, as vnto their friends, directing them in beſt ſort they could both for the beſieging and winning of the caſtle. Which while the Turks hardly beſieged, and the Germans therein notably defended, Haſſan the Viſier Baſſa, together with Begedes Baſſa, to perſuade them to yeeld vp the Caſtle, writ vnto them in this ſort.

Vicegrade yeelded vnto the Turks.

Right worthy and valiant friends, it is not to you vnknowne, the Caſtle of Vicegrade of right to belong vnto our moſt mighty and dread Souereigne, the great Sultan. And therefore ſeeing that it is reaſon that euery man ſhould haue that which of right belongeth vnto him; Wee aduertiſe and requeſt queſt you to yeeld vp the ſame Caſtle vnto our moſt mighty Emperour, and the honorable Lord Stephen Botſcay, Prince of Hungary; and with all your ſubſtance to depart thence. Promiſing you vpon our faith and honor, to ſuffer you quietly and in ſafety, with your wiues and children, bag and baggage, to depart thence, and to prouide you ſufficient ſhipping for the carrying away of your things to Strigonium. And if it ſhall pleaſe you to take part with vs, we promiſe you the ſame pay from our Emperor, that you had from your owne; and the ſame kind entertainment which the Wallons haue before had with vs. But if that you vpon an obſtinat reſolution ſhall refuſe this our friendly motion and grace offered vnto you, blame vs not if we ſhall by ſtrong hand and force of arms ſeek to obtaine our right. In kindneſſe we offer you our friendſhip, and ſo with ſpeed expect your anſwer.

B But the Germanes hearkning not vnto theſe letters, as men reſolued, valiantly ſtood vpon the defence of themſelues, and of the place, vntill that by extream neceſſity forced therunto, they yeelded the ſame by compoſition.

Baſta in the mean time with his forces much diminiſhed lying at Eperia, and in the country thereabout, ſeeing the general reuolt of the Haiducks, of late the Emperors chief ſtrength in Hungary, and Botſcay the Rebels ſtrength daily to increaſe more and more, with no poſſibilitie for himſelfe with ſo ſmall forces as he then had, to repreſſe the Rebels inſolencie, or to remedie theſe ſo far ſpreading euils, but for want of greater ſtrength he muſt lie ſtil as it were a man beſieged; was therwith exceedingly grieued, and as it were almoſt ouerwhelmed with C the heauy burthen of ſo many great miſeries at once beſetting him. To threaten without power he knew to be but folly; and to ſpeake faire, to be but vaine. Neuertheleſſe hauing procured from the Emperour a generall pardon for all ſuch as hauing taken part with the Rebels, were willing to return again to their allegiance: hee to aſſure all them whom it might concern, of the Emperours gratious fauour, and to put them all out of feare, cauſed Letters of generall pardon to be publiſhed, for all men to take knowledge of: The purport whereof was this:

Baſta's proclamation for appeaſing the rebellion in Hungary.

We George Baſta, County of Huſt and Marmar, Lord of Sult, Knight, Counſellor to his Imperiall Maieſty, Gouernor of the realm of Tranſylvania, and Lieutenant of the Chriſtian Armies of the Em-
D perour; To all Faithfull, loue and greeting. Whereas in this ſo troubleſome a ſtate of things, ſome as well of the Nobilitie as others in theſe vpper parts of Hungary, partly of their owne accord, and partly for feare, haue reuolted from his Imperiall Maieſty, and taken part with the traiterous Haiduckes in their rebellion, to the great preiudice of the Emperor his ſeruice, and the ſtaining of their faith: We in the name of his Imperiall and royall Maieſty, whom we know to be greatly inclined, and ready to pardon his ſubiects euen of his owne naturall goodneſſe and clemencie, haue by vertue of the full power and authoritie by his ſaid Imperiall Maieſty granted vnto vs, giuen free grace and pardon to all them which haue withdrawn themſelues from his obeiſance, or forſaken the ſame, of what order, qualitie, or condition ſoeuer they bee: whom we will receiue into our protection as void of all crime: and requeſt them, as much as in vs is poſ-
E ſible, to make their profit of this grace, and to returne vnto their former duty and obeiſance, vnder all aſſurance of impunitie for their forepaſſed faults, and without any ſearch or inquiry to be of the ſame hereafter made, as well for matters of Religion as of State: aſſuring them of their liues, goods, fortunes, dignities, franchiſes, priuiledges, and immunities whatſoeuer; as is more at large declared by his Maieſties Letters patents which remain with vs. And if any letted either with their vrgent affairs, or with ſickneſs, canot repair vnto vs within the day in the ſame Letters patents nominated, we will accept of their iuſt excuſes. But if any contrary to our hope, ſhall vpon any indurat mind, or obſtinat contumacie, faile to re-
F pent, and to make their appearance before vs within the day limited, we denounce them to be Rebels, ſubiect vnto the pain of Rebellion, and ſtained with the note of infamy; pronouncing their liues, their goods and dignities, to be confiſcat and devolved vnto the Emperors coffers: for which they ſhall by vs, the Chieftains and Captaines of his armies, with all rigor and extremitie be proſecuted. Proteſting before the Maieſtie of God, before the Maieſtie of the Emperor, and before all Chriſtendome, vs not to be in any ſort culpable of the euills, calamities, and miſeries, which ſhall enſue of the wars and diſaſters which ſuch their rebellion ſhall cauſe; but to be therefrom exempt and acquitted, the only authors of theſe diſorders hauing deſerued theſe imprecations and calamities: vpon the heads of whom we iuſtly from henceforth lay them, as vpon the miserable authors therof; by their wickednesse hauing refused so great grace from the Emperor and vs; vnto all men made known by these presents.

This proclamation solemnly by Basta published, with the sound of many drums and trumpets, the sixteenth of Ianuary, and ten daies libertie giuen for such as would to come in and again submit themselues; diuers gentlemen of the country neer vnto Eperia, where Basta with his army lay, for fear of being spoiled came in, and accepted of the grace offered: other of the Seditious dwelling farther off, little or nothing at all regarding the same. Insomuch that the Rebels in number daily increasing, and the rebellion farther and farther spreading, Botscay was was now grown so strong, that he dismissed from him most part of the Turkes, whose seruice he had in all these troubles hitherto vsed, reseruing yet certain Ianizaries, whom he mingled with the garrison of Haiducks which he had put into Cassovia.

Pallas Lippa beheaded.

Pallas Lippa, before by Botscay taken prisoner, and vpon his reuolt from the Emperour, by Botscay made his Lieutenant General, and a great man amongst the Rebels (as is before declared) was now of many thought to be a most fortunat and happy man. But in the middest of such his happinesse, and the greatnes of his command, he was by the malice of some, enuying at his estate, accused to Botscay, as if he had had a purpose to haue made him away; and deliuering the strong city of Cassovia vnto Basta, to haue gon ouer again vnto the Emperour, and to haue followed his Ensignes. Vpon which suspition he was by Botscay's commandement beheaded, with fiue other men more of good place, suspected to haue bin partakers in the conspiracie with Lippa. In whose treasure, after he was executed, was found an hundred thousand Hungarian ducats, with seuen hundred chains of gold; all which he had scraped together in that short time wherin he had bin Botscay's Lieutenant amongst the rebels. With which money Botscay in his rebellion confirmed, became more furious and obstinat than before; not admitting any talk with Basta concerning peace, but vpon such vnreasonable conditions as best stood with his own good liking.

Now long and tedious it were to prosecute euery particular exploit, with the diuers woful euents thereof during this so great and dangerous a rebellion in Hungary; which how heauy soeuer they were for the poore Christians there dwelling to endure, as tending all to the ruin and destruction both of themselues and of their countrey (sometime one of the most flourishing kingdomes thorowout all Christendome, but now become as it were a large Theatre for all the World to behold most wofull tragedies and bloudy massacres acted in) yet for all that, vnto some nothing is pleasing, but what is written of the greatest actions; as of great and bloudy battels, of the conquests of whole Kingdomes, and the ruine of most mighty and famous Princes; all other things else beeing vnto them tedious. In some part to ease them of such wearinesse, and to please their appetites, I will briefly passe ouer, and euen lightly touch such things as for the most part of this year passed in this troublesome Countrey; not staying but vpon matters of greatest weight and importance.

The Haiduckes still proceeding in their rebellion, in the beginning of February besieged the castle of Sacmar, a place very fit for their purpose. Which Castle the souldiers there in garrison doubting to be able to hold against them, being not past threescore sound men left in it, and destitute also of their necessarie prouision, couenanting to haue their liues spared, at length yeelded vnto them. But in going thence, meeting with certaine other companies of Haiducks neer vnto Tokay, they were by them most part of them slaine, some few of them by speedy flight escaping. The same Haiducks which had taken Sacmar, immediatly after attempted to haue surprised the town and castle of Tocay also: but the Gouernor of the place in good time aduertised of their intent and purpose, caused the ice wherewith the Riuer was hard frozen, to be broken forty paces ouer neer vnto the castle, and the same to be lightly couered ouer with straw. Whither the Haiducks comming by night, and finding the ice on the other side the riuer, whereunto they first came, strong enough to beare them; by heapes thrusting one another forward to haue scaled the castle, the ice breaking vnder them, they there together by heapes most miserably perished; many of the rest which escaped that danger, being with shot out of the castle slain also. In this castle was no great store of victuals: wherof Basta vnderstanding, with his army marched from Eperia toward Bodac, a town holden by the

Sacmar yeelds to the Haiduks

Rebels,

A Rebels, in hope with the ſpoile thereof to haue relieued Tokay. But the Rebels hearing of his comming, hauing themſelues burnt the town, had got themſelues with that they had, into the Caſtle, and from thence with their great Ordnance ſo welcommed Baſta at his comming, that diſappointed of his purpoſe, and hauing loſt ſome of his men, he was glad with all ſpeed (not hauing ſtayed aboue foure houres) to returne again to Eperia: certain of the nobility of that country, which tooke part with the Rebels, being reported, in his abſence to haue made a road towards Eperia, to the endangering of that City. In which his returne towards Eperia, the troups of County Turon, and of Charles Collonitz, by chance lighting vpon 500 Haiducks in a countrey village, ſet the ſame on fire, and therein burnt moſt of the ſaid Rebels, and ſlew the reſt of them that remained, in ſeeking by flight to haue ſaued themſelues.

B In the mean time one of the great men among the Turks came to Caſſouia, bringing with him a great ſum of money, which being diuided amongſt the Rebels there, much confirmed them, both in their rebellion, and deuotion toward the Turks; which rebellion they ſpared not for any coſt by all meanes to maintaine, as more preuailing thereby, than by the greateſt forces they could vſe for the conquering of Hungary.

Baſta his ſoldiers in mutiny

But Baſta was no ſooner with his army returned againe to Eperia, but that the ſouldiers generally exclaiming, and calling vpon him for their pay, were about in a mutinie to haue forſaken him: for the appeaſing of which tumult, he was glad preſently to make what ſhift he could for money, wherewith hee in ſome meaſure gaue them contentment, and ſo with much ado, agreed with them for ſix weeks ſeruice longer, thereby deliuering the citiſens of Eperia from
C a great feare, wherein they were, for being ſpoyled by thoſe mutinous ſoldiers, of whom they ſtood in no leſſe doubt than they did of their enemies.

And now the ſeditious Haiducks after their wonted manner ſtill roaming vp and down the vpper part of Hungarie, the ſecond day of March, about ſeuen of the clocke in the morning came to Neuſoll, a Faire in that countrey, and there by many reaſons perſuading the citiſens to reuolt, and to take part with them, had parley with them till it was full twelue of the clock; but drawing ſtil neerer and neerer to the town. Inſomuch that Turbelius gouernor of the place, perceiuing a yeelding inclination in the citiſens, and doubting without their help to be able to defend ſo great a city againſt the Haiducks, with ſo weak a garriſon as he then had therein, he with his Coſſacks, for his more ſafety retyred himſelf into the caſtle. Which don, the Hai-
D ducks forthwith breaking into the City with ſix companies, ſummoned the caſtle, requiring to haue it deliuered vnto them. Of whom Turbelius ſlew diuers with ſhot out of the caſtle: and the ſame day in the euening couragiouſly ſallying out of the caſtle, with certaine companies of Harquebuſiers, draue the Haiducks againe out of the city: which he afterward better fortified againſt their like attempts. And the next day vnderſtanding by a countreyman, That certain companies of Haiducks and Turks together, were comming to Turtzo, a town not far off, carrying with them a great number of cattel, women and children, which they had got out of the country villages and towns therabout: he preſently ſent forth his lieutenant againſt them, with his Coſſacks (a deſperat kind of horſmen) who meeting with theſe Haiducks and Turks, ſlew of them about 150, and recouered from them all the captiues, the cattell, with 200 hor-
E ſes, and a mule loaded with 4000 Hungarian duckats.

Fileck yeelded to the Haiducks

Now had Filek (a moſt beautiful caſtle, and as it were the key of that part of the vpper Hungary, which the Chriſtian Emperor yet held againſt the Turks) for certain months bin hardly beſieged by the Haiducks: which although it was ſo well ſtored with victuals, and other neceſſary prouiſion, as that it might haue holden out three months longer ſiege, yet the ſoldiers there in garriſon for want of water were enforced now at length to yeeld the ſame. For the keeping of which caſtle Redeius Ferentiſius, captain of the Haiducks which had won it, placed therein a garriſon, part Haiducks, part Turks: as not daring to truſt either of them alone; the Haiducks for feare of their trecherie; nor the Turks, for that he knew them to be deſirous of the place, for the commodious ſcituation thereof, as giuing them a way to enter farther into F the territories of the Chriſtians: which Redeius, though a Rebell, would not yet in any ſort grant them.

This Caſtle of Filek ſo (as is beforeſaid) beſieged, the valiant Collonitz had oftentimes in vain fought to haue relieued; all the waies being so beset and as it were fortified with infinite numbers of the Turks, Tartars, and Rebels, as that there was no comming vnto it; and most of his own soldiers being Haiducks also, to whom he durst not wel trust, for fear of being betrayed by them. Concerning which matters he shortly after writing to a certaine nobleman, after he had shewed vnto him, That he desired nothing more of the Emperor than to be discharged of his seruice, he thus breaketh forth:

A letter of Collonitz touching the troubls in Hungary.

I cannot (saith he) performe any more faithfull seruice vnto the Emperor: for being attended vpon by very traitors, I am inforced to hasard euen myne honest reputation. I would willingly serue with German horsmen, and I could also wish three thousand Cossacks, and two thousand Polonian Hussars to bee again raised, who would do notable seruice in pursuing the enemy: but euery moneth they must needs haue their wages payd them. The number of the enemy increaseth daily, and their strength still more and more; so that things canot be in worse state than now they are. All deuices are directed to the hurt of the Emperor, neither is there any place quiet. What courage I am of, which haue lost all my wealth and substance, is easie for any man to iudge: all which for all that, I could conceal and dissemble, so that I might faithfully and according to my desire serue the Emperor; which for all that is not possible for me to do, without a sufficient strength of German soldiers. But this of all doth most comfort me, that I know I haue done my duty, for otherwise this mischiefe had spred farther. Many were in hope I would rather haue reuolted from the Emperor, than haue lost my goods: and some there were which doubted not to say so of me. The enemies are now in my dukedom of Cleve, and there make spoil of all. Setchin, Iarmeta, Tregla, Palanka, Samoschin, Blavenstein, Ravenstein, Vacia, Regiomont, Dillena, Pugantsa, Tabra, Libetna, Sitna, Dibina, Sacmaria, Sendra, Onoth, Disgiora, Zatnar, Calo, Scharospotac, Budnoc, Nagibana, Filek, and almost all Transiluania are now subiect to the rebels. So that what will ensue therof, except they speedily be confronted, euery man may right easily iudge.

Now if Collonitz, one of the greatest and best commanders of the Emperors forces against the Turks in Hungary, was thus beset and spoiled of his substance by the rebels, as he in these his letters complaineth, and as indeed he was, hauing at one time receiued so great harm from them as was valued to an hundred thousand ducats; and not daring to trust his owne Hungarian soldiers, whose hearts he knew to be with the rebels: In what state may the rest of the people of that distressed prouince be thought to haue bin, being at the same time exposed to the same rebels as a prey and spoil, and their country laid open for the Turkes and Tartars to forrage at their pleasure.

But in briefe to run along with the Haiducks: four thousand of them attempting to haue surprised Wiglase, were so from thence repulsed, as that many of them being there slain, thirtie fiue wagons were scarse sufficient to carry the rest of the wounded ouer the mountaines, of whom an hundred died by the way. But going from thence they brake into Tursons country, where hauing rifled all the townes and villages, they commanded all the States of the country, within three daies after to submit themselues to Botscay; & to swear vnto him fealty; or otherwise to expect all extremities: who with fear dismaied, promised to submit themselues vnto Redetus, Botscay's Lieutenant.

Embassadours sent to Botscay

Now for remedie of these euils, Napragius and Forgatius, two graue Counsellors, were dispatched in the Emperours name to entreat of peace with Botscay. Who the seuen and twentieth day of March departing from Eperia, with fourscore harquebusiers towards Cassovia; before they came thither sent before them an herauld to aduertise Botscay of their comming. Which messenger so soon as he was come into Cassovia, the Turks so streightly kept, as that no man might speake with him but Botscay himselfe, and not he also, but in open place, and that in the hearing of the Turkes. Who at his first meeting with him told him, That if the Embassadors from whom he came were sent from the Nobilitie and States of Hungarie, they should be right welcome vnto him, and haue audience: but if they came from the Emperour, as had Rogatius and Ciaccius before them, sent from Botscay, they should then spare their labours and come no farther, for that all matters had with him beene often enough talked vpon: it being now more than time, that things so often consulted vpon, should bee no more talked

A talked of, but indeed performed. Which messenger returning vnto the Embassadours, told them what Botscay had said, and that the Haiducks had in Cassovia built a bulwark of a wonderful height, beset the gates with strong gards, and so filled the trenches with souldiers, that a man could hardly enter into the City; howbeit that euery man might safely come and goe thither about his trade and busines. He told them also, That Botscay's lieutenant had called together all the gouernors of the places therabouts, and aduised them for the space of fourteen daies to beware of the excursions of the Haiducks; and in the mean time for their more safety, to bring their wiues and children, with such other things as they made most reckoning of, into the city; for that he could not as yet (as he said) represse the vnruly and headstrong Haiducks, being yet in their rage and fury, as the maner of the discontented multitude is. Of the B which Haiducks, some going forth toward Neuhuse, and bringing home a great booty of cattel, were by Collonitz and Trautmanstorf, pursuing them with their horsmen, ouerthrowne, and all the booty again recouered.

Botscay about this time, viz. the 29 of March, summoned all the Nobilitie and States of Hungary, vnto an assembly to be holden at Serentium the 17 day of Aprill: writing to them to this effect:

Botsca's letters to the States of Hungary.

You know (said hee) right worthy and valiant men, into what extreame miseries our poore afflicted Country (all the antient priuiledges and immunities therof being contemned and trodden vnder foot) is by this comming in of strangers brought: whose insolencie is grown so far, that we cannot only not quietly
C possesse our own goods, but so much as enioy the liberty of our own consciences. For which cause the Nobilitie of the whole kingdom being the last year sent in embassy, and as it were foreseeing what was to come; the assembly of the Empire being ended, openly protested before the whole Imperial Diet, and by their letters oftentimes declared, That they should at length be of necessitie inforced to take vpon themselues the defence of their priuiledges and of their religion. By which their protestation for all that, they so little preuailed, that forthwith after, such an intollerable Edict was by the Emperours owne commandement published, as had exposed vs all and euery one of vs vnto most certain death, had we not prouided for our selues betime. All which things are vnto you all most certainly known, both by the vnlawfull acts themselues, and the whole proceeding of the Prouost generall. All which things considered, you met together at Galest, and from thence again openly signified vnto the aforesaid Prouost General (vnto whom his Imperiall Maiestie had committed the shedding of our bloud, the abolishing of our priuiledges and religion, D viz. the execution of this cruell Edict) that if he proceeded to go forward in that busines, you would put in execution what you had before openly protested in the generall Assembly of the whole Empire at Presburg. But what answer you receiued from him, forasmuch as it is not vnto any of you vnknowne, it is not needfull here to rehearse. Wherfore when as he going about the execution of the aforesaid Edict, did in forcible maner with certain pieces of great ordnance impugn the army of his Imperiall Maiesty, both his and our dread Lord and Soueraign, and by force took from vs some of our castles, and besieged some other; we found no other remedie against these so great euills, but that which God himselfe euen then shewed to vs, which was, by force of arms to defend our selues so far as we might. In which our purpose, seeing the grace of God, and the good successe which we haue hitherto had, will vs to continue, although we haue suffered no little harm from the Germans and Haiducks (which for all that, is for the recouery of the libertie of our countrey patiently to be born) to the intent that we vnited with other our brethren thorow Hungary, may the better withstand our enemies, and fight against them, it is most necessarie we should meet together, and all matters set apart, enter into consultation how hereafter to resist our enemies, and set our Country in peace and quietnesse. Wherfore seeing that we haue determined to hold an assembly at Serents, the seuenteenth day of Aprill, wee by these Presents doe warne and charge you all, there at the aforesayd 17 day of Aprill to make your personall appearance, to ioyn in amitie with vs, and after Gods name called vpon, to consult and conclude vpon such things as may be both acceptable and pleasing vnto God, and most profitable and necessarie for the good of our afflicted country in generall. But if there shall be any which vpon a presumptuous and careless contempt, shall not at the time appointed come, nor seem to regard such
F things as so much concern the Common good and welfare of their native Countrey; let them assuredly know, both themselues to be therfore to be accounted for enemies vnto their country, and their goods also so to be disposed of, as shall vnto the Nobilitie and States then and there assembled, be thought meet and conuenient.

Much

A great tumult and fire in Constantinople.

Much about this time a great tumult was raiſed amongſt the Ianizaries and other ſoldiers of the court at Conſtantinople, at which time a great fire aroſe alſo in the city (as oft times the like hath before done through the Ianizaries inſolencie, who in ſuch confuſion of mens minds vſe to make their own gains) wherin many both men and women periſhed, with aboue fiue hundred ſhops and ware-houſes full of rich merchandiſe, moſt part wherof belonged to the Iews, of whom almoſt two hundred are ſaid to be there burnt. The deformitie and ſpoile made by which fire in the city remaining long after to be ſeen. Theſe troubles much feared the yong Sultan; who firſt therewith halfe diſmaied, and ſeeing the like to ariſe in Pera alſo on the other ſide of the hauen, about a mile from the Seraglio, could not but thinke that the ſoldiers were about ſome dangerous treaſon. Which ſuſpition two meſſengers newly come from Cicala Baſſa encreaſed; who earneſtly by them deſired new ſupplies to be forthwith ſent vnto him: proteſting, That foraſmuch as he had not long before in a great battel loſt a number of his men, if he were not with new ſupplies ſpeedily relieued, he muſt of force retyre, and leaue all to the Perſian. Howbeit the fire quenched, and the Ianizaries and other ſouldiers with the ſpoil they had gotten by others loſſes ſatisfied, the tumult was without much adoe again quieted.

The Emperours ſoldiers in mutinie.

Now beſides the aforeſaid troubles from the rebels in Tranſylvania and the vpper Hungary, that nothing might be wanting vnto the miſeries of thoſe ſo miſerable countries, the Emperours ſouldiers which ſerued vnder Baſta, hauing of long from day to day in vain expected their pay, and ſeeing neither their pay nor other reliefe to come vnto them, roſe vp in mutiny, and ſo in great rage brake into Baſta the Generals lodging, where hauing heaped vpon him many vnworthy and deſpightfull reproches, with their pieces bent againſt him, and taking the ſpoil of many cariages loden with very rich commodities, they departed from him, and ſo marching thorow the country toward Presburg, by the way vſed ſuch inſolencie and cruelty, by rifling and ſpoiling whatſoeuer came to hand, as that they ſeemed vnto the people as they went, worſe and more inhumane than the very Turks and Tartars themſelues: where amongſt other prey by them taken, which was very great, they carried away with them toward Preſburg aboue ten thouſand oxen and two thouſand horſes; threatning as they went, to burn the ſuburbs of the city ſo ſoone as they came thither, if they were not forthwith paid their pay. Whereupon many of the Citiſens for feare forſooke their dwellings and remooued vnto Vienna.

Newſoll taken by the Haiduks.

But the rebels on the other ſide (as is before declared) hauing in vaine attempted Newſol, being forthwith driuen out of it again; aſſembling themſelues in great number came now again and beſieged it, and the 16 of April took it, to the great and incomparable loſſe of the citiſens. Other of their fellowes in other places hauing but the day before taken Cibinium, Portfeld, Schemnitſe, with ſome other places alſo.

Thus while the Haiducks at their pleaſure on the one ſide ſpoil the vpper part of Hungary, and the Emperors ſoldiers on the other ſide for want of pay doe therein no leſſe harme than they, as enemies rifling and ranſacking euery corner of the Countrey as they went; the poore husbandmen dwelling here and there, diſperſed abroad in the country, for feare leauing their homely dwellings with ſuch things as they had, fled ſome of them into Polonia, other ſome into the mountains, where many of them periſhed with hunger: the poor husbandman not daring now to go forth to till his land, neither the ſhepheard to feed his flock, all places beeing filled with miſerie, mourning, and heauineſſe; the Turkes and Tartars, the common enemies of the Chriſtians, beeing not the cauſers thereof, but euen the Chriſtians themſelues, one of them euen with greedineſſe ſeeking the ruine and deſtruction of another: as it commonly happens in kingdoms and ſtates diuided.

Neither did theſe ſo great troubles, the ground of ſo many miſeries, containe themſelues within the bounds of Hungary only, but brake out into other countries and prouinces thereunto adjoining alſo; but eſpecially into Moravia, into which Countrey the Haiduckes breaking, miſerably ſpoyled the ſame, by force took certaine townes, which they robbed and rifled, carrying away with them euen the very little children, taken from their heauy parents, to be ſold afterwards vnto the Turks: a miſerable kinde of merchandiſe, and of all Chriſtians to be

A he deteſted. For remedy of which miſchiefs, by ſufferance ſtil more and more increaſing, Lichtenſtein gouernor of the country hauing raiſed all the power he was able to make, went againſt them, and with much ado draue them out of the Countrey, with fire and ſword now by them moſt grieuouſly ſpoyled. They for all that carrying away with them a great part of the wealth of that Country, with foure thouſand captiues, all by them appointed vnto the Turks ſlauery.

About this time alſo Baſta lying at Presbourg, and vnderſtanding that fourteen thouſand Turks and Tartars being come to S. Georges, ſix thouſand of them were gone ouer the Danubius, about a mile beneath Presburg, to the end that whilſt they were making a rode into Auſtria, the reſt in the mean time might proue their forces vpon Presburg; with his horſemen
B followed after them himſelf, to cut off ſuch ſtragling companies of them as otherwiſe might haue don great harm abroad in the country: leauing behind him in Presburg but three hundred Wallon horſmen, with certain companies of footmen for the keeping of the city: which three hundred horſmen beiug very good and expert ſoldiers, and deſirous to be doing ſomething, by night made a road out of the city toward S. Georges, where the reſt of the Haiducks and Turkes in great ſecuritie lay: vpon whom theſe reſolute men vpon the ſudden falling, brought a great fear vpon the whole camp; and hauing ſlain of them aboue fiue hundred before the reſt could arm themſelues, returned with a great victory, though but with ſmal prey; carrying with them ſome few horſes of ſeruice to Presburg: where by that they had done, it was reaſonably thought, that had they bin but a thouſand ſtrong, they had diſcomfited the e-C nemies whole camp.

In the mean time they of the gariſon of Comora vnderſtanding that Begedes Baſſa was determined with a notable conuoy to go from Buda with ſeuenteen wagons loded with money and other things of great value, to Botſcay the Rebel, and the Tartar Cham his ſon, who with certain thouſands of Tartars was come to Solnoc, to the aid of Botſcay and the rebels: they in hope of ſo great a booty lay in wait for him vpon the way whereby he muſt needs paſſe, and at his comming ſet vpon him and ſlew a number of his men; amongſt whom it fortuned the Baſſa himſelf to be ſlain, ſhot in the breſt with a ſmal ſhot whileſt hee was mounting vp his horſe: whoſe dead body the Turkes about him hauing taken vp, and therewith about to flie, were there ſome of them ſlaine, and ſome of them taken priſoners, the reſt by ſpeedy flight e-D ſcaping. Here were alſo all the aforeſaid wagons taken, with an exceeding rich bootie. All which the garriſon ſoldiers, well worthy therof, carried away with them to Comora, together with the Baſſa's head, ſtruck from his body with his own ſcimiter: which ſcimiter, with the Baſſa's rich coat, Pogranus Gouernor of Comora afterward ſent as a preſent to the Emperour at Prague. This Baſſa whilſt he liued was a moſt crafty and ſubtil man, the chiefe plotter and author of all the late troubles in Hungary; hauing before put all Tranſylvania into moſt dangerous ſtirs and tumults, and greatly confirmed Botſcay in his rebellion. He ſpake the Hungarian language naturally, and was therin very eloquent, which ſerued him to great purpoſe both for the raiſing and maintaining of the rebellion both in Tranſilvania and in Hungary. Which ſo dangerous a man taken out of the way, many were in good hope of ſome good end to bee
E made of theſe ciuil wars, more dangerous vnto the ſtate of both theſe afflicted countries, than were the great and puiſſant armies of the Turks; which were almoſt euery year in the heart of one or other of them to be ſeen.

Begedes Baſſa ſlain.

Now was the rebellion grown ſo great in Hungary, and the rebels ſo ſtrong, that euen the very name of the Germans was become vnto the Hungarians both odious and contemptible: inſomuch that Baſta offering to haue put new ſupplies of German ſouldiers into the City of Tyrna, then in danger of the Haiducks; the Gouernours of the place not onely refuſed to re-
F ceiue them, but alſo to let them haue any thing of them for their ready money; ſaying, That they had citiſens ynow in the city to defend the ſame againſt their enemies; and that therfore as they needed not the helpe of the Germanes, ſo they would haue nothing to do with them.
G And yet as ſoon as Redeius, Botſcay his lieutenant, was with his army come thither, they without more ado opened vnto him the gates of the city, and receiuing him in, were about to haue ſlain all the Germans there dwelling amongſt them, being wel neere a third part of the inhabitants; & had ſo done, but that ſome wiſer than the reſt, conſidering that the Germans hauing

there

there long dwelt, were by often mariages joined in affinitie with the Hungarians, and the Hungarians with them, otherwise perſuaded them, leſt in ſo doing they might ſeeme to bee cruell againſt their owne bloud. And ſo the matter being referred to Redeius himſelfe, it was by him (by the counſel of one of the greateſt men of the Turks) ordered, That the Germans ſhould be ſpared their liues, ſo that from thenceforth they ſhould no more vſe the Germane, but the Hungarian apparel and attyre; only the German attyre being taken away for the Germans themſelues. G

The Rebels proceedings in Hungary.

But to proceed with theſe troubles according to the courſe of the time and of the yeare, about the foure and twentieth day of May, the Turks and Tartars joyning their forces with the Rebels, burnt fourteen countrey Villages about the lake of Neuiſdier, and as many more in other places alſo towards Newſtat; leauing behinde them moſt lamentable remembrances and teſtimonies of their barbarous and inhumane crueltie, hauing put moſt of the women and children to the ſword, and impaled diuers vpon ſtakes, carrying the men away with them as Captiues, and the beaſts and cattell as a prey; and ſo leauing the country as they went almoſt deſolate, ſcarſe any being therein left to bewail the miſeries thereof. And about the end of this ſame moneth the Rebels ſurpriſed Simega, Grotta, and Coppernacum, and a little while after Gintium: all which places they rifled and ſpoiled, as they did alſo Hogengoa, a great towne of the Lord Lichtenſteins; and Niderſprunga a towne of Collonitzes, which they firſt rifled, and afterwards burnt: and with the terrour of this their dealing enforced all the Countrey thereabout both farre and neere to yeeld vnto them: onely Altſoll and Cremnicz, who continued in their loyaltie, and ſtanding faſt for the Emperour, did the Rebels very much harme. H I

About the beginning of Iune, certaine companies of Turks and Haiducks mingled together, came againe as they had before done, to Presburg. Of whoſe comming the Gouernour of the City hauing aduertiſement, with three troupes of Wallon horſemen, and certain companies of harquebuſiers, breaking out of the city, cauſed them forthwith to retyre. Which the Wallon horſemen ſeeing, to preuent them in their retreit, fetching a compaſſe about, met with them when they thought themſelues paſt al danger, nnd falling vpon them, ſlew of them fiue hundred, and draue the reſt into Danubius: ſo that of all thoſe Turks and Haiducks none eſcaped but only fourteen, amongſt whom three Turks and one fugitiue Citiſen of Presburg were found, whom together with a great ſpoil the garriſon ſoldiers carried backe with them into the city. K

At the ſelfe ſame time the Citiſens of Veſprinium fauouring the proceedings of the Haiducks, roſe themſelues in rebellion alſo, and taking the Captaine of the Caſtle, together with his Lieutenant and the keyes of the Caſtle, cauſed them to be carried to Redeius, Botſcay his Lieutenant; yeelding themſelues into his protection. Of which reuolt of the city the Turks tooke exceeding pleaſure, and forthwith ſent newes thereof vnto the Sultan, wiſhing him to haſt the comming of his Army; for that the paſſages were now layd open vnto his further conqueſts. And further aduiſing him, ſtill more and more to encourage Botſcay in his rebellion.

And now was Hungary too little, or elſe too bare, to contain and ſatisfie the ſtil increaſing Rebels; who in great number breaking into Stiria (as they had before done on the other ſide of Hungary into Moravia) did therin great harm, waſting and ſpoiling al before them as they went: inſomuch that County Serin, the lord Nadaſti, and Budian, all right worthy men, & ſuch as hertofore had don great things againſt the Turks, for the Chriſtian commonweale, ſeeing themſelues and all that they had in danger to be ſpoiled, being not able to withſtand the Rebels, nor hauing any other ſtay wheron to reſt, ſubmitted themſelues vnto Botſcay, as did many other noblemen of that country alſo. Out of Stiria the rebels made head into Auſtria, and there roming vp and down the country, did like harm. L

Thus was the ſtate of Auſtria and Hungary at this time moſt miſerable: which for that it is ſo wel ſet down in certain letters by a graue and vnderſtanding citiſen of Vienna, who was himſelfe an eye witneſſe of moſt part therof, as that it cannot well be better expreſſed; I haue thought it good to refer the report therof vnto the letters themſelues. M

All

A

All Austria (saith he) is full of misery and calamitie. From out of the Castle and Bulwarks here at Vienna, a man may sometimes at once behold fifteene Townes and villages all on fire in the Countrey hereabout, kindled partly by the Rebels and Turkes, and partly by our owne mutinous souldiers. Odenburg is yet besieged, and the Haiduckes haue forraged the Countrey as farre as Hinberg: whom had not the Regiment of Collonitz repressed, these our suburbs of Vienna had now beene taken, ransacked, and burnt. Newstat is on euery side besieged by the Enemy: all the Villages about Vienna, as far as Dresskirc are with fire destroyed. They of Newstat went about to haue cut off some part of the Enemies Forces, but with euill successe, hauing lost aboue fifty of their owne men. Brunna and Entzendorfe are also with fire consumed. The Wallons lie incamped at Miedling, most miserably spoiling the Countrey peo-
B ple of all that they had. The Haiduckes hauing by night surprised the great towne of Altenbourg, and from thence carrying a great prey, haue burnt it. The Castle had endured the like fortune, had not an hundred Harquebusiers that were by chance come thither, holpen to defend it. Six thousand of the Enemies lie about Wisselbourg, but whether the Wallons will attempt any thing against them or no, is greatly doubted. Presbourg is also in great danger; for the Garrison souldiers there doe threaten the cruell spoyle of the Citisens, with all extremities, if by a certaine day they receiue not their pay. Who if they shall depart thence, there is no doubt but that the Haiduckes will forthwith succeed them in their places. These men indeed doe pretend Religion; but what lours they be thereof, the late example of a Minister by them most cruelly tormented, not farre from Cobbelsdorffe, doth manifestly shew. The report is, That the Vayuod of Valachia doth fauor neither part: into which prouince a great number of Tartars are
C come in the aid of Botscay. All the Market places and streets here in this City, lie full of poore fugitiue creatures of all sexes and ages, a most miserable sight to behold. Our owne mutinous souldiers beset all the wayes to the City, and exclude vs from all manner of victuall; and not to vse many words, in cruelty and hostilitie almost exceed the very enemies. The Hungarian Rebels, who of late forraged Austria, haue carried away with them aboue eight thousand head of Cattell, which together with the prisoners by them taken, they haue sent into Turkey. The little boyes and children, which cannot by reason of their tender years go, they carry along with them vpon horses; whose pittiful mourning and lamentation might moue euen the very stones; and yet are they (inhumane men) no whit mooued. Yea many of these poore soules are here and there by the way found dashed against the ground with their braines beaten out. And these Rebels in their behauiour shew such cruelty, as whereat the very Turkes themselues were amased. All things abaut Isenstad are by the Enemies taken and carried away. They of Newhuse, besieged by thirtie thousand of their Enemies, haue hitherto played the men, and of late repulsed the second assault, with much slaughter of their enemies. They say, That two thousand Tartars, as many Rebels, and thirteen thousand Turkes, are to be yet expected to come vnto the camp at Newhuse: who if they shall chance to come, it can scarce be that they of Newhuse can long well hold out against them; especially being not well appointed of necessarie prouision. The report is, That hauing taken Newhuse, they will remoue to Strigonium. It is also said, twelue thousand Turkes to haue now passed ouer the bridge at Essec; and great supplies both of men and money to come to Botscay, who lieth incamped about Eperia, and is said to haue made a couenant with the great Sultan, That what place soeuer either of them should first take, he should hold the same wholly vnto himselfe. Tanhuser, who of late was Gouernor of Fileck, is now (as the common report goeth) of counsell with Botscay. Germenchius hath put in three moneths victuall into Hust in Transylvania. God in his mercy behold our poore afflicted and distressed Countrey.

A letter shewing the miserable troubles of Hungarie and Austria.

Thus far he. Whereby the Reader (as I suppose) may easily gather the miserable estate of both the countries of Hungary and Austria; the Christians themselues being the chief authors therof.

The rebellious Haiduckes had hitherto most streightly besieged the city of Odenbourg, hauing assaulted it in fiue sundry places at once. Vpon whom Trautmanstorffe, who was Generall of the garrison there, causing part of his horsemen to sally forth, skirmished with them from eleuen of the clocke in the forenoon, vntill two of the clocke in the afternoon, at which time the Haiducks beginning to preuaile, the Gouernor with the rest of his horsmen, certain enſignes of footmen, with ſome of the citiſens, with three field peeces vpon the ſudden brea- king out of the gate, diſcomfited the Haiduckes, put them to flight, and ſlew many of them, hauing taken from them twelue enſignes, with many priſoners, whom he carried with him into the city. Of which ouerthrow the Haiduckes deſirous to be reuenged, with their renewed forces ſhortly after returned againe vnto the city, burnt the ſuburbs of the ſame, and ſpoyled the villages thereabout. But whileſt they thus lay about Odenburg, Baſta but with a ſmall power drawing neere vnto them, they preſently roſe, and paſſing ouer the riuer Dranus carried away with them two thouſand heads of Cattell, with a great number of Chriſtian captiues.

Ensignes

The Turks being not to learne to make vſe of the diſcord of the Chriſtians among themſelues, had oftentimes been in hand with Botſcay, to deliuer Caſſouia wholly into their hands. Of which ſtrong city, being the beſt that the Chriſtians now held in the vpper Hungary, the Turkes were moſt deſirous, both for the commodious ſcituation thereof, and alſo for that they deemed themſelues partly thereof already poſſeſſed, ſome good part of the garriſon therein being Turkes, as well Ianizaries as others. The full poſſeſſion of which ſtrong City the better to obtaine from Botſcay, and to get it into their owne hands, they ſent vnto him three waggons loaded with mony and other rich commodities for a Preſent, and to ſupply his wants, by a good conuoy of foure hundred Haiducks and ſome Turks joyned vnto them. Which Haiducks as they were by the way to Caſſovia, to paſſe by Tocay a ſtrong town holden by the Chriſtians, gaue ſecret knowledge vnto the Gouernour of the place, of their comming that way; and that if he would receiue them into the towne, and ſo into his protection, they would with ſome ſmall helpe from him, deliuer into his hands that ſo rich a booty, and ſo continue with him as his faithfull and truſty ſouldiers. Of whoſe offer the Gouernor well aſſured, forthwith ſent out foure hundred of the ſouldiers of his garriſon to meet them; who joyning with the aforeſaid Haiduckes which came with the Conuoy, ſet vpon the Turkes which came with them, and ſlew them euery mothers ſonne, and ſo with the rich booty were by the Gouernour receiued into the Towne, and by him courteouſly welcommed and entertained. Where they had not long lien, but that after their woonted manner looking abroad into the Countrey, they chanced to meet with certain Companies of Botſcay his men; with whom they encountering, and hauing ſlaine of them neere about fiue hundred, tooke from them ſeuen Waggons loded with good prouiſion, and thirty horſes, beſides much other rich ſpoile.

A great booty taken by the Chriſtians.

But the Rebels, notwithſtanding theſe and other ſuch like loſſes, increaſing both in number and ſtrength, ſtill more and more in all places preuailed, but eſpecially in the vpper part of Hungary, the townes there one after another daily reuolting vnto them; as amongſt the reſt the ſtrong towne of Totiſa did: whereinto the Rebels entering, ſent from thence part of the great Ordnance, together with Relinger a Germane Captaine Gouernour of the Towne, and certaine other Germane ſouldiers there taken, vnto Redeius, Botſcay his Lieutenant, then lying with a great army of thirty thouſand Hungarian Rebels and Turkes, at the ſiege of the ſtrong towne and Caſtle of Newhuſe. Which as it had oftentimes by him been fiercely aſſaulted, ſo was it by the ſouldiers therein moſt notably defended; proteſting neuer to yeeld the ſame, but to hold it out euen to the laſt man therein to bee left aliue. Which cauſed Redeius for the encouraging of his ſouldiers (who had now lien there certaine moneths at the ſiege thereof) to promiſe vnto them the whole ſpoile of the towne, and of all that therin was. And yet for all that, oftentimes kept backe the Turkes from aſſaulting the ſame, for feare leſt if they ſhould by force haue taken it, they would by force alſo haue holden it vnto themſelues, as a place for them moſt commodious for the conquering of that which remained of the vpper part of Hungary. Which hee, although one of the greateſt Rebels, was yet loth to haue it fall into their hands; and yet himſelf, with the Haiducks the Hungarian Rebels, afterward, viz. the 25 of Iuly, gaue thereunto a moſt furious aſſault; inſomuch that hauing aduanced ten of their Enſignes to the top of the Rampiers, they were in great hope euen preſently to haue taken it, but yet were by the reſolute valour of the defendants notably repulſed, and inforced againe to retyre, leauing behind them aboue ſeuen hundred of their moſt forward men

Totiſa yeelded to the Turks.

dead

dead in the trenches. Vnto which siege the Bassa of Agria came also afterward with three thousand horsemen and a number of Ianizaries; so that the besieged, partly with mines, partly with shot and often assaults distressed, were so wasted and wounded, that there were scarcely two hundred whole and sound men left in the whole garrison: beside that, both victuals and pouder begun now to grow scarce also, so that they were brought vnto such extremity, as that well they could not be in worse case: and yet armed with a constant resolution, they seemed not to be any thing therewith danted or discouraged, but still valiantly held it out.

The Rebels in the Isle of Shut submit themselues againe vnto the Emperour.

The Hungarians dwelling in the Isle of Shut in the riuer of Danubium, hauing before submitted themselues vnto the Rebels, did with their helpe much trouble the passages vnto the towne of Rab and Comara, and the City of Strigonium; vnto whom certaine messengers were sent on the Emperours behalfe to persuade with them to forsake the Rebels and to returne againe vnto their antient obedience. Who so well vsed the matter with them, that taking a truce for eight daies, they in the meane time sent fiue of the chiefe men amongst them by ship to Presburg, offering vnto the Gouernour there, That if they might be secured of their goods and safety, and that the Haiduckes that were with them might be entertained in pay, they would be ready againe to take the oath of allegiance and faithfulnesse to serue him as became his loyall subjects and valiant souldiers: and for the assurance thereof, to leaue their wiues and children as pledges at Presburg. Which their offer was vnto the Gouernour very acceptable and welcome, who yeelding vnto their request, in friendly sort dismissed them. But they being returned home, and hauing declared vnto the rest of their fellowes what they had done; it was by generall consent agreed, that foure thousand of them should joyne themselues vnto the Emperours power vnder the Regiment of Collonitz, who to be knowne from others, wore in their crests certaine speciall feathers; their wiues and children being carried to Presburg as pledges of their faith: but this agreement by them made with the Gouernour of Presburg being once knowne, the rest of the Rebels in the Countrey thereabout together assembled with the Turks, inuaded the Isle, in hope vpon the sudden to haue surprised them: but deceiued of their expectation, were by the inhabitants of the Isle, and by the helpe of certaine Germane troupes ouerthrowne and put to flight, and three thousand of them there slaine.

About the beginning of Iuly certaine Commissioners were sent on the Emperours behalfe
D to Cossouia, to intreat with Botscay concerning a pacification to be made, who being by him there honourably entertained, and hauing with him staied almost a whole moneth, were at length the nine and twentieth of the same moneth againe dismissed. Now the articles, which Botscay propounded vnto these Commissinners to be considered of for the making of a peace, and which for the most part were agreed vpon in the peace afterward concluded betwixt the great Sultan and the Emperour, were these.

Articles by Botscay propounded vnto the Emperous commissioners for the appeasing of the tumults in the vpper Hungary.

First, That it should be lawfull for all such as would, to haue the free exercise of the reformed religion. For although (as he said) he was not ignorant that there was an antient decree amongst the Hungarians, whereby all that professed not the Catholicke Religion, or that reuolted from the same were to be burnt, and that he desired not to haue that article repealed;
E yet that his request was, That the Emperour hauing regard vnto the troubles of the present time, would promise and assure, That from thenceforth no man should be troubled for his Religion, or called in question for his conscience and Beliefe. Besides that, he requested to haue the Principality of Transyluania during his life; yet with this condition, That after his death it should againe returne vnto the Emperour, so that the Emperour in his absence should appoint a naturall Hungarian to gouerne the same, as also to haue the chiefe gouernment in Hungary. That there should no more Bishops sit in counsell but one, and that he, if it should be so thought meet, should beare the office of the Chancelour. That the liberty and priueledges of that Kingdome should be kept whole and inuiolate. That it should be lawfull for him only to make choice of the chiefe Palatine of the Kingdome. That goods confiscated
F for any offence committed, should not be dispersed or sold, but giuen to men of disert. That all offenders against the State from thenceforth should be judged by the Counsell of Hungary. That none should be preferred to Bishoprickes in Hungary, but such as were of the noble Hungarian bloud. That all injuries heretofore don should be absoltely pardoned, forgiuen and forgotten. All which things if they might be granted, he promiſed to labor to the vttermoſt of his power, vpon the beſt conditions he might to procure a peace betwixt the Great Sultan and the Emperor. Laſt of all he requeſted, That the charters of peace containing theſe articles thus agreed vpon, might be ſubſcribed and confirmed by the Biſhop of Rome, the Emperor, the King of Polonia, and all the Imperiall Kingdomes and Prouinces.

The great Sultan loth that Botſcay ſhould come to a peace with the Emperour.

The Turkiſh Sultan vnderſtanding of this treaty of peace betwixt the Emperour and Botſcay, by a meſſenger ſent in haſte to Botſcay, ſought by great offers and promiſes to hinder the ſame; putting him withall in remembrance, that a little before this treaty made, he had not onely by words but by letters alſo ſubſcribed with his owne hand, promiſed vnto Botſcay his Embaſſadors ſent to Conſtantinople, That hee would bring to paſſe, that Botſcay rewarded with ſuch priuiledges as King Iohn in former time enjoyed, ſhould in ſhort time be proclaimed and crowned King of Hungary, and that to that purpoſe he was euen now ready to ſend a ſcepter and a crowne, the ornaments of a King, to Alba Regalis. But for the preſent, he by theſe meſſengers ſent vnto Botſcay two goodly horſes, with furniture of gold, gliſtering with pretious ſtones. He ſent him alſo a rich ſcimiter, a paire of golden ſpurs, and a long horſmans coat garniſhed with gold and pretious ſtones of great price; perſuading him valiantly to perſiſt in his former courſe and purpoſe. Which he failed not to doe: for immediatly after, he with a gallant traine went from Caſſouia into Tranſyluania, there to take of the Nobility of that Prouince the oath of their fidelity vnto him; accounting no paines or labor great, which he tooke to turne the people from their obedience vnto the Emperor, and to ſtrengthen himſelfe. At which time he alſo ſent Redeius his Chancellor, with ſome others into Polonia, to renew the confederation which was ſometime betwixt the Polonians and the Hungarians: who being admitted vnto the Kings preſence, and audience giuen him, firſt declared the cauſes of the diſcord and ciuill war that then was in Hungary, which he imputed chiefly vnto the oppreſſion of Religion, the free exerciſe thereof being forbidden them; and to the inſolency of the Germans, who there at their pleaſure commanded ouer them. Vpon which two points he ſtood much, labouring with many words to perſuade the King thereof: and afterwards requeſting him of his gratious goodneſſe, and of the care which he, together with other Chriſtian Princes, had for the common quiet of the Chriſtian common-weale in generall, and eſpecially of thoſe two diſtreſſed countries, lying as it were euen in the enemies mouth, to enter into conſultation how the ſame euils might be remedied, and thoſe ſo great troubles again appeaſed, and to the effecting of ſo good a worke to put to his helping hand. Whereunto the King anſwered, That the friendſhip wherein Botſcay offered to joine with him being but the renuing of the antient amity betwixt the countries of Polonia and Hungary, to be vnto him pleaſing; howbeit, he could not for all that (as he ſaid) well like of Botſcay his reuolt from that houſe and family, whereunto he was himſelfe ſo neere joyned in affinity; promiſing yet neuertheleſſe, That he would propound the matter vnto his Nobility, to be further conſidered of: which when he had indeed done, it was by common conſent agreed, That no aid ſhould be giuen out of Polonia vnto Botſcay or the Rebels; and that whoſoeuer ſhould from thence affoord him any aid, ſhould therefore loſe his head. With which anſwer the Embaſſadours returned to Botſcay much diſcontented, being now with a great power againe returned out of Tranſyluania to Caſſouia.

The Lord Ruſſworme beheaded.

About this time the Lord Ruſſworm (ſometimes Generall of the Emperours army againſt the Turks in Hungary, a man of great note and valor, and of whom we haue before much ſpoken) at Prague falling into words, and from words to blowes, with Francis Count Beliojoſa his brother, and their men taking their parts on both ſides, it fortuned the ſaid Francis, the Earles brother, being grieuouſly wounded, to be there ſlaine; Beliojoſa himſelfe being alſo in fiue places dangerouſly hurt: who ſo hardly proſecuted the death of his brother againſt the Lord Ruſſworm, that within a while after, hee was therefore by the Emperour condemned, and at Prague beheaded, and diuers of his men hanged, with ſuch weapons hanging at their heeles, as wherewith they had ſlaine the ſaid Francis the Earles brother.

Now was the time of the yeare come, when as the Turks great armies were wont to bee ſeene euen in the heart of Hungary: howbeit, ſuch were their troubles in Aſia, both with the Perſian, and their owne Rebels, that they were not at leiſure now to ſend ſuch great forces as

A as they had before vſed, into Hungary: neither could the Chriſtian Emperour on the other ſide now raiſe ſuch a power as he had in former times don to oppoſe againſt them, and to hinder their proceedings. The Hungarians themſelues (his greateſt ſtrength in thoſe wars) were now generally reuolted from him, and for moſt part followed the Enſignes of the Rebell Botſcay. The Princes wont to ſend him aid both out of Italy and out of Germany, now affoorded him little or none at all: and his mercenary ſouldiers for want of pay were now almoſt euery where vp in mutiny ready to forſake his ſeruice, and to pay themſelues with the ſpoyle of his Countries euen to the gates of Vienna. So that had not the Turks beene ſo buſied in the Eaſt, but at leiſure to haue turned their whole power into Hungary, as oftentimes they had before done, it is hardly to be imagined, what ſhould haue letted them to haue ouer-run B not onely that which remained of Hungary, but euen all Auſtria, with ſome good part of Germany alſo; the Emperours preparations being then ſo ſmall, and his forces ſo weake, as that they were not able to hold the field againſt his owne rebellious ſubjects, much leſſe a-gainſt ſo puiſſant and dreadfull an enemy. But God which with his word hath ſet bounds vnto the raging ſea, beyond which it cannot paſſe, and by whoſe power Kings do reigne and Princes beare rule, had by other meanes auerted the greateſt part of the Turks forces Eaſtwards: ſo that Serdar Baſſa, Sultan Achmat his Lieutenant Generall for his wars againſt the Chriſtians, came this yeare but with a right ſmall army (in compariſon of thoſe which the Turkiſh Sultans were wont to ſend) into Hungary. Howbeit, with ſuch forces as hee brought, and with ſuch ſupplies of the Rebels in Hungary as came vnto him, hee being growne fifty thouſand
C ſtrong, and out of feare of the Emperours forces, came the nine and twentieth day of Auguſt to Strigonium, and with his army (part Turks, part Tartars, and part diſloyall Chriſtians) en- Strigonium be- camped in the ſelfeſame place where the Turks army had but the yeare before lodged; hauing ſieged by the brought with him forty great pieces of battery, with all things elſe neceſſary for the ſiege. Turks.
Neither were the Turks ſooner encamped, but that the Tartars which came with them to the ſiege (after their wonted manner) more deſirous of prey and booty, than of honor and victory, paſſing ouer the riuer of Gran into the territory of the Chriſtians, there ſpoiled and burnt all before them as they went.

The Turks in the meane time to depriue the beſieged of all reliefe to be ſent vnto them The Turkes down the riuer of Danubius, made a great bridge of boats ouer the riuer, well fortified at both make a bridge
D ends thereof on each ſide the riuer with a ſtrong Corps de guard for the defence thereof, ſo that ouer the riuer nothing could that way paſſe to or from the beſieged city. Which things much diſmaied of Danubius.
them in the city, ſeeing no preparation to be made on the other ſide for their defence or re-liefe: yea, Baſta himſelfe, Generall of ſuch ſmall forces as the Emperour had then, ſeeing the enemy ſo ſtrong, and himſelfe ſo weake, began greatly to doubt of the euent of this ſiege: and yet neuertheleſſe reſolutely ſet downe to employ both his valour and his wiſedome for the ſafegard of the place, he, during the time of the ſiege failed not to the vttermoſt of his power to ſhew the effects both of the one and of the other.

And now the Turks aſſiſted with the Hungarian Rebels, had performed an exploit vpon the The Iſle of Stri- Iſle of Strigonium, aſwell to take the ſame from the Imperials, as for the ſpoile and pillage gonium ſpoyled thereof. The inhabitants there had ſtill remained faithfull vnto the ſeruice of the Emperor, by the Hai-
E whom the Rebels for all that had oftentimes ſought both by force and by perſuaſion to haue ducks.
remoued from this their loyalty and juſt deuoire. Within this Iſle were 200 Haiducks, returned againe to the Emperors ſeruice, who were joyned vnto the Iſlanders, for the better defence both of them and of the Iſland. But the Rebels knowing well the paſſages and entrances into the Iſle, vpon the ſudden ſurpriſed the ſame, and in it theſe poore Haiducks, whom they cut all in pieces: which loſſe cauſed Baſta to reſolue to ſend the Wallons he had in his army into the Iſle for the defence thereof. Which they of the Iſland vnderſtanding, made requeſt vnto the Generall, That he would not in any wiſe ſo doe, for that they greatly feared leſt the Wallons, being men altogether giuen to the ſpoile, not finding the Rebels to prey vpon, ſhould F after their wonted manner pray vpon them, the Emperours faithfull ſubjects. At whoſe inſtance the former purpoſe for the ſending of the Wallons beeing changed, Collonitz him-ſelfe was appointed vnto that ſeruice; with whom Mounſieur de Laual, a noble young Gentleman of France (who but a few dayes before was newly come vnto the campe for the honourable desire hee had to see seruice, and to serue himselfe, with his troupe of horsemen whom he had brought with him out of France) went ouer into the Island also. Whereinto when as the Rebels shortly after againe entered, they were by Collonitz ouerthrowne and driuen out of the Isle, two hundred and fifty of them being slaine, and aboue fifty moe of them taken prisoners. In which conflict the noble young Gentleman Mounsieur Laual, so brauely behaued himselfe, as that he gained vnto himselfe much honour and renowne, euery mans mouth being full of his prayses, and wondering to see so great courage in so young yeares, he being then scarce nineteene yeares old. With which losse the Rebels rather enraged than discouraged, shortly after returned againe, in great number and better resolued; where betwixt them, and them that were left for the defence of the Island, was fought a more sharpe and bloudy fight than was the former; yet so, as that the Rebels were enforced againe with losse to retyre. In which so hot and bloudy a skirmish, Mounsieur Laual, hauing most valiantly borne himselfe against the enemy, and done enough for his honour, but not so contented, but carryed away with the heat of youth, and the desire of glory, and not otherwise to be persuaded, but still aduenturously pressing on the retiring enemy, was there with a small shot slaine; all they which knew him much lamenting his vntimely death. But the Rebels not so discouraged, but still in one place or other inuading the Island, and threatening the Islanders with all extremities, except they would take part with them; what by force, what by persuasion, so much preuailed with them, that the most part of them reuolting from the Emperour, vpon the sudden set vpon the Count of Rhene, beeing then in the Island, and hauing slaine three hundred of his men, grieuously wounded himselfe also. For the speedy appeasing of which multitude, Basta sent ouer into the Island certaine companies of Ratzians and Wallons, who not regarding that the Islanders were dayly damnified by the Rebels, most miserably spoyled them of whatsoeuer the Rebels had yet left them.

The Haiduckes ouerthrowne by Collonitz.

S. Thomas Fort battered and assaulted by the Turks.

The Turks encamped before Strigonium, first planted their battery against the strong fort, standing aloft vpon S. Thomas hill: for that from thence they should haue receiued infinit harme, if they should before the winning thereof haue attempted to haue woon the City; it standing on their backes, and all the plaine betwixt the hill and the city wherein they were to plant their battery being subiect vnto it. Which fort, though very strong, they with continuall battery by the space of almost three weekes, hauing with infinit charge, and the losse of a number of their men, made faultable, the foure and twentieth day of September mounted the hill to assault the same. Vnto which assault they went vp the hill so thicke one thrusting another forward, that the hill seemed now to be nothing but a mount or heape of armed men, scarce any part of it being to be seene, it was so couered with them. Vpon whom so swarming vp, the Christians in the fort, hauing reposed all the hope of their welfare in their valour, and resolued thereby to die or liue, couragiously discharged their murthring shot both great and small, scarce any of their deadly bullets falling in vaine. Howbeit the Turks, resolutely set downe for the performing of that they had taken in hand, without respect of death or danger, came still desperatly on, vntill that they were come to the push of pike, and so to handy blowes euen in the very breaches, which the long fury of the Turks cannon had made very faultable. Fiue houres this furious assault was by the Turks maintained, and by the Christians with inuincible courage and resolution endured, many braue and valiant men falling on both sides: and thrice the Turks repulsed, were enforced to retire, but were still by their commanders brought on againe. The losse was to both sides common, many worthy men there ending their daies, worthy of eternall fame. The Christians fell dead vpon the Turks slaine by their valor, and the Turks vpon the Christians slaine by their multitude. But what should we say? The Turks by numbers died, but not their force, that being by their great numbers still maintained euen in despight of death, and alwaies liuing in their great multitude, yet left aliue. Which was not so with the defendants, but euen quite contrary; who could not lose one onely man, without diminishing of their forces, and means of resistance: so that they still lost without hope of safegard, and yet could not be in safety, without continuing of their so great losses. But he that still fighteth only for to saue his life, without hope of killing of his enemy, being too mighty for him to ouercome, must needs at last die ouercome, if it were but

A with very wearineſſe. So in the end of this long and furious aſſault, nine hundred of the Chriſtians being ſlaine, together with the Count Oetingen, their Chiefetaine, and his Lieutenant mortally wounded, and nothing now more left but a few ſore hurt men, and the dead wals for the Turks to ouercome, they entered the place, ſlew thoſe few whom they found yet breathing, made booty of their death, bloud, and armes; and by the infinite price of their owne bloud, gained that place which had now no more bloud or life left in it. From whence they carried certaine great pieces, to helpe to batter the city withall, and to vanquiſh them, for whoſe defence they were but a little before appointed.

S. Thomas fort woon by the Turks.

The Turks hauing thus gained S. Thomas fort, euen as they were yet embrued with bloud, and prickt forward with fury, forthwith planted thirty great pieces of battery againſt the B baſe towne of Strigonium, ſtanding low by the ſide of Danubius, and commonly called the Water-towne; which they with all their force and fury moſt terribly battered. This baſe towne was inuironed with a palliſado of wood, to defend it againſt all ſudden ſurpriſes, as almoſt all the townes of Hungary are: Whereunto the confuſed multitude of the Turks carried a number of bruſh faggots, ſtuffed with gunpouder and brimſtone, which being ſet on fire, preſently ſet fire vpon the palliſado alſo, and burnt it downe to the ground, making away for the Turks to come euen to the wals of the city; which they with their great ordnance both night and day inceſſantly moſt terribly battered, vntil that by the fury of the cannon they had therein made a faire and large faultable breach. A great ſhame for our men to ſuffer the ſame ſo to be made, and not againe repaired: whereas the Turks before in the ſame place, had made C it good againſt the great army of the Archduke Matthias, being neuer to be driuen and forced out of it by the Chriſtians valour, vntill they were therein ſlaine; and to be now by our men through their cowardiſe not to be able to be made good. For why, it was euen the ſame place of battell, the ſame men, the ſame armes, and the ſame forme of fight, but not the ſame courages. The Turks can very well learne of vs that which is for them profitable, and make vſe thereof to their owne aduantage; whereas we can borrow nothing of them to ſerue vs againſt them, and ſo profit our ſelues by their example. Beſides that, the confidence they haue in their multitude carrieth them vnto ſuch aduantages, as from which the deſpaire of being ſeconded and relieued keepeth vs: whoſe boldneſſe alſo firmely grounded vpon a reſolution to die, paſſeth our reſolution far, in fighting only to ſaue their liues.

The baſe towne of Strigonium battered.

D The breach ſo made, the Turks in good order, ſtaied vpon a firme reſolution, came brauely marching on, one of them thruſting another, and as it were ſtriuing among themſelues who ſhould haue the honour to giue the firſt charge, their haughtineſſe of minde animating of them to ſeeke for honour euen where perils were rifeſt; ſo to haue the honor to die amongſt the moſt forward and valiant men of war, rather than to liue among cowards of no reputation or valor. During the heat of which their ſo great and firme a reſolution, they regarded not the ſhowers of deadly bullets falling amongſt them as thicke as haile, as too weake to dant their haughty courages; but thruſting one another amiddeſt ſo great dangers, came vnto the breach, there to try the matter hand to hand with our men. The Ianizaries were the men eſ- E pecially appointed to this ſeruice, and had taken the ſame vpon them; who with their great muskets on their reſts cruelly gauled our men, expoſed to the danger of their deadly ſhot vpon the brinke as it were of their own graues. The great Baſſa himſelfe was there preſent at the aſſault, encouraging his ſouldiers with ſpeeches full of terrour and of comfort, as he ſaw occaſion for either to be vſed; wherewith he ſtirred vp their valor as is a ſhip with a faire or rough gale of wind. Death it ſelfe could not ouercome theſe miſcreants, their number ſtill repairing in a moment what death had taken away in an houre: whereas our men ſlew others but to be ſlaine themſelues; and fought not, but to become ſacrifices vnto death themſelues, and not by their reſiſtance to carry away the victory againſt inexorable deſtiny. The fight was great and terrible, and the bullets ſtill flew, few of them falling in vaine amongſt ſuch a multitude and preaſe of men. They of the high towne, who themſelues expected the like danger where- F in their companions now floated betwixt life and death, ſtood aboue looking on, not daring to giue them aide, or to remooue out of their ſtrength, but reſerning themſelues with all their forces for the ſole ſafegard of themſelues and of their owne defence. Howbeit all this while the enemies forces ſtill encreaſed, and the Chriſtians diminiſhed; for death could not weaken theirs, whereas it ſtill deſtroyed ours, who failed but in number, not in valour, and gaue place but vnto the force of death, and not vnto the force of men. All the deadly blowes appointed to be giuen for the defence of a breach, had been by our men giuen; all the armes neceſſary for ſuch a purpoſe had been employed, all reſiſtance that could be deſired had been made, and all the duties of valiant and worthy men performed; ſo that nothing here wanted but number, and not valour. But in all ſuch actions there are two things neceſſary, the one for the helping of the other, for the correſpondency of their power; which both joyned in one body, may doe all things, but being diuided, can neither of them doe any thing againſt him which is poſſeſſed of both.

The baſe towne aſſaulted.

A terrible aſſault.

The baſe towne of Strigonium woon by the Turks.

In fine, after foure attempts in this aſſault, moſt of the Chriſtian defendants being ſlaine, the Turks forced the reſt, and gained the breach, treading vnder-foot the dead bodies both of the Turks and of the Chriſtians, to get into the City. This place thus woon, and thoſe that were left, put to the ſword, and the towne rifled; the Turks yet in breath, and all embrued in bloud, gaue an attempt vnto the high Towne, in ſome hope euen at that time in ſo great a confuſion of the defendants to haue carried the ſame alſo. Howbeit, the defendants beholding their weapons yet dropping with the bloud of their friends and companions, and ready to ſhead theirs alſo, for the preſent notably repulſed them. Who ſo diſappointed of their purpoſe, and deſiring to gaine the place with the leaſt loſſe they might, reſolued to take the ſame by vndermining of it, repoſing more truſt in the ſpade and the mattocke, than in their ſwords and harquebuſies; beeing by experience of their former ſieges taught, how hard and dangerous a thing it was by battery and aſſault to obtaine the ſame. This trauell in the mynes tooke ſucceſſe according to their deſire: for within a few dayes the mynes (with much labour) beeing brought to perfection, and fire put vnto them, they fayled not to worke their effect, but with great violence blew vp the walls, their rampiers, men, and munition, altogether, caſting forth ſuch ſmoakes and flames, as wherewith a number of the defendants were ſmothered and burnt. Which breaches ſo made, and the defences of the City blowne vp, in ſuch ſort, that the Chriſtians lay open to the enemies deadly ſhot, beeing not able any more to ſhew themſelues without danger of their liues, the Turks in order forthwith came to aſſault and force the ſame. Which the Captaines of the Chriſtians beholding, prepared themſelues to withſtand them, and to that purpoſe would haue giuen order vnto their ſouldiers for the defence both of the breach and of the walls, whom they found ſuch as Eumenes at his greateſt need found his, not willing in any wiſe to fight, and in the moſt aſſured perill of death, without courage, either to vanquiſh their enemies, or defend themſelues,; in ſuch ſort, that not one of them would put themſelues in order, ſhew themſelues vpon the breach, or come neere the walls. Lazie cowards, chuſing rather to attend an aſſured death in their cowardiſe and want of courage, than to aduenture their liues into the danger of armes; well deſeruing to endure the ſame with diſhonour, ſeeing that they refuſed by honourable reſiſtance to preſerue their liues. The Captaines for all that by faire ſpeeches and by threats ceaſed not to ſtirre them vp; praying, exhorting, and ſometime with death theatening them, if they thus refnſed to doe their duty, and with their naked ſwords in their hands would haue enforced them to the breach. Bnt all in vaine; their dead courages beeing not to be reuiued or ſtirred vp in their ſo great a feare of death: Which much diſmaied the Captaines, ſeeing their liues and honour, together with the place (through this tumult and cowardiſe of their ſouldiers) to be in extreame perill. During which time the Turks comming on, had without any great reſiſtance gained the foot of the breach: whom the ſouldiers now ſeeing ſo neere vnto them, and out of hope to be relieued, and deſtitute of courage alſo, in ſtead of truſting vnto their armes and valour, betooke themſelues vnto the refuge of their ſhame and cowardiſe. For compaſſing in the Count Dampierre, Gouernour of the place, they would by reaſons haue perſuaded him to haue yeelded, and by threats haue feared him from further reſiſting of the enemy. Their fury emboldened them, proceeding not from their valour, but from their feare; ſtorming againſt their Generall for not beeing a coward, as they themſelues were; trembling for feare of their enemies, and inſulting againſt him. They had but one man of him to fight againſt, which made them furious and hardy: hardy with cowardiſe againſt one,

The vpper towne of Strigonium in vain by the Turks aſſaulted.

Strigonium vndermined.

not

not daring to hold vp their weapons against their enemies being many. Howbeit the Count in the middle of these feares enraged, continued firme in his resolution, his courage encreasing in this storme of mutiny, wishing rather to die by the hands of his owne souldiers, in the performing of his duty, than to be saued by the Turks in the bottome of his dishonour. Which his so braue a resolution caused him euen in the middest of these furious and tumultuous companies, to put them in minde of their duties, and to persuade with them: That the perill they so much feared, was greater through their owne feare, than indeed it was: that onely their fearefull apprehension made the danger, and not the action that was by them to be performed; seeing that it was impossible for the enemy to ouercome them, if they would but resolutely stand vpon their valour to resist him. That all things resting but in opinion, were by themselues to be subdued, if they had but the desire to ouercome them, and yet of power to ouerthrow them, if they would yeeld to their dishonour. That therefore they should propound vnto themselues the honor and the shame that was to ensue vnto them, by the different deportment of themselues in this action, how much the deformity of the one differed from the beauty of the other, and aspire vnto the honour which their enemies had sometimes got in the same place, and in the very same action wherein they were now, for hauing with lesse appearance of their safety ouercome the like danger, wherein their holding out had made them victorious with honour, without any great fight at all. That it should be an eternall infamy vnto them, that the Turks should surmount them in their resolution, in an action wherein they ought to shew themselues most valorous; and by their cowardise become subject vnto them, whom at other times they had accounted vnworthy to be compared with them in valour. That they should lay their hands vpon their hearts, and remember their estate and faith; bound vnto the first by their honour, and to the second by their duty. That they were men of Warre, liuing by their pay, which bound them to the seruice of him from whom they receiued it, euen vnto death; hauing before obliged their liues vnto their pay: and that they were Christian subjects, bound to keepe their promise giuen by oath before God. That forgetting either the one or the other of these things, they depriued themselues of the pay promised to them which performed their seruice; and losing their renowne in this world for their cowardise, and in the World to come for breaking their faith. That therefore they should continue constant in the performance of their duty, resoluing with themselues rather to endure an honourable death, vnto which belonged the recompence of an eternall fame for their valour and fidelity; than to prolong a miserable life with perpetuall infamy for their cowardise: whereof for all that, they could no more assure themselues by the yeelding vp of the place, than by the defending thereof, for as much as the Turks were oft times euen as cruell vpon them that yeelded, as those that resisted; keeping no faith with the Christians, but as best stood with their profit and their pleasure. And that therefore for his part he was resolued, rather to die with honour in the place, than to be beholden to his enemies for an infamous and miserbale life. And that therefore he besought them to follow him in this last action of their deuoire, which carried with it all the trophies of their precedent actions, wherein they had oftentimes assisted him in many actions of lesse worth, and of much greater perill.

The braue resolution of Count Dampierre Gouernor of Strigonium.

This discourse grounded vpon so good reasons, and proceeding for so great valour, might haue preuailed with any other generous mindes, except with these degenerate souldiers, who by their cowardise had hardened themselues against all the points of honour which might any way moone them; in such sort that they stood as fast in their base cowardise as did their Generall in his valorous and constant resolution. They stood with their hands behinde them, without any weapons in them, as was their minds without any courage at all: and as men appointed to be scrificed vpon the altar of death, attending without mooving, but the hands of them that should sacrifice them. Great and shameless cowardise, not daring by resistance to withstand the violence of their enemies, for feare of hindering them in their desires, being indeed such as had vowed their death to satisfie their owne fury. Meane while some of these souldiers seeing their speeches to be but vaine, and not able to mooue their Gouernour to satisfie their desire, conceiued the same their requests, with the reasons thereof, into writing, which they sent vnto him. Which the Gouernour hauing read, in their sight tore the letters

Most shamefull cowardise.

ters

ters in pieces, and trode the same vnder his feet; rejecting as well their demands by letters, as he had done their requests by words. In briefe, hauing forgotten nothing of the duty of a worthy Generall, and valiant Captaine, joyned now thereunto the office of a simple souldier, going himselfe vnto the breach, with some few to defend the same. But the more the Count stood vpon this his so great resolution, the more these cowardly and mutinous villaines proceeded in their base obstinacy, in so much that they fell from prayers, to fury and rage, threatening to deliuer him their Gouernour, together with the place, vnto the Enemy, to saue their liues, if he himselfe would not by treaty saue them from the imminent perils. If these base cowards were before deafe vnto the just remonstrances of their Gouernour, which might haue preserued them from death and infamy, he was also as deafe as they, to conceiue their requests, or to be mooued with their threats; knowing that he had more reason on his side, by constant valour to withstand the wicked and shamefull resolution of his soldiers, than they had with dishonour to enforce him, or to offer him violence, to their eternall shame and infamy.

In the meane time these obstinate and enraged cowards proceeded from words to deeds, and from requests to violence, as did oft times the disloyall souldiers of Rome, in slaying the good Emperors. For they in cruell manner without reuerence, by force layed hands vpon the Gouernor, put him in prison, and afterwards crauing parley, fell to treaty with the great Bassa about the deliuery vp of the place. Wherewith the Bassa well contented, sent in vnto them Haly Bassa, to conclude the matter. Where after some little talke, it was agreed, That they should deliuer vp the place (which was not indeed theirs to dispose of) and that the Bassa should therefore promise and suffer them with bag and baggage in safety to depart whither they would, with their ensignes frilled vp, and fire in their matches; leauing behinde them their great ordnance, with all their other munition and warlike prouision. Which only composition by the perfidious souldiers made in the absence and indurance of their Generall, was by the Turks faithfully kept, amongst a thousand others like before by them broken: whether it were in respect of the easie conquest of the city, (being one of the chiefe and principall places of all Hungary) or for that they being ouer-joyed with the gaining of that which they had so long desired, and now so little hoped for, they forgat their wonted cruelty and breach of faith, is doubted.

The conditions wherupon Strigonium was deliuered to the Turks.

This city thus yeelded the third of October, and the Turks forgetting their wonted cruelty, according to their faith and promise before giuen, in safety conducted these cowardly souldiers within a league of Comora, helping them by the way to carry their sicke and wounded men, together with their fardles, which the Turks oft times carried vpon their own shoulders. These cowards which thus went out, with their Gouernor sent out also with them, were in number a thousand whole and sound men, fitted whilst they were in the city, with all things necessary for their honour, and defence of the place: but themselues destitute and void of all honour and courage. A thousand, which all together were not worth their Gouernor alone, seeing that in him alone there remained more valour than in all that whole multitude. Many of the Inhabitants which had there long dwelt, would not forsake the place, but by the leaue of the Turks there remained still; the rest which would not, hauing leaue in safety to depart whither they would.

Thus this famous City of Strigonium, one of the strongest bulwarkes of Christendome against the Turks, which the Christians had now holden by the space of ten yeares and one moneth, after that it was by Count Charles Mansfelt won from the Turks, when as it had long time before beene in the Turks possession, woon from the Christians by Sultan Solyman, now againe (as is before said) fell into the power of the Turks, with threescore and ten peeces of great ordnance, and a wonderfull deale of other warlike prouision.

Base cowardise worthily punished.

These base and cowardly Souldiers, together with the Count their Gouernour, being come to Comora, were justly despoyled both of their honour and of their armes, and sent backe againe to Presburg, where cursed and detested of all the World, and especially of the Hungarians themselues (who although they were reuolted from their alleageance toward the Emperour, yet could they not but much detest their so shamefull and notable cowardise) were there the chiefe of them committed to prison; where after they had for a cer-

a certaine time lien, and being brought to iudgement, and conuicted of treason, in deliuering vp the city of Strigonium vnto the Turks, & in so doing to haue greatly damnified the Christian commonweale, they were therefore condemned, and according to the quality of their offences, diuersly in this manner executed. Captain Leonard Fredericke Schleker had his iudgement, first to haue his right hand cut off, and his tongue drawne out behinde in his necke, and both of them nailed to the gallowes, and afterwards to bee hanged; howbeit through the intercession of many of his friends he was not hanged but beheaded. Iohn Michael Scorer, Iohn Hopfi, Adam Lindawar, Philip Dur, and Casper Lielharter, all Captaines, were adiudged to haue their right hands first cut off and nailed to the gallowes, and afterward hanged, but through the intercession of County Mansfield, they were hanged, and their hands not cut off. Iohn Lautenberger was condemned to bee quartered aliue; but was at the intercession of County Mansfield, first beheaded and afterward quartred. Iohn Discoff with eleuen other were only hanged. Laurence Marshall was enioyned to serue two yeares against the Turks as a common souldier, without pay; but through the intercession of County Mansfield had one yeare pardoned him. Ieremy Strelin, with diuers other, which were either fled, or else remained still in Strigonium, were iudged, their names to be set vpon the gallows, and being afterwards caught, some of them to be quartred, and other some their hands to be cut off, and nailed vpon the gallows, and afterward hanged. And thus these disloyall captains, by shunning of an honourable death in defence of Strigonium, and performing of their duty; by neglecting the same, procured vnto themselues a most shamefull death, attended vpon with perpetuall infamy and dishonour.

But as the losse of this strong place was vnto the Christians heauy and grieuous, so was it to the Turks no lesse pleasing and ioyfull; it being the place they had of long aboue al others desired, and whereat they had euer since the losse thereof, with their great armies in Hungary, for the space of ten yeares still aimed. Howbeit this their ioy endured not long, their prosperitie beeing too hot to hold out without some cooling blast of aduerse fortune. For the same report of Fame, which with the right hand presented vnto the Great Sultan at Constantinople, the pleasing newes of the winning of Strigonium in Hungary; euen with the left hand deliuered likewise vnto him the melancholie report of the ouerthrow of his great armies in Asia, with the losse of Damasco the greatest city of Syria. For, to begin with the greatest first: The King of Persia, inuaded by Cicala Bassa, Sultan Achmat his great Lieutenant in Asia; and hearing that the Bassa of Caramania had expresse charge, with all speed to come vnto him with a great supply of souldiers to be taken vp in Caramania and the countries thereabout: he then hauing a puissant army on foot, before prepared for all euents, presently set forward against Cicala: whom he comming vpon before he was ready to fight, by his vnexpected comming, and sudden charge, ouerthrew his army, and tooke from him all his great Ordnance. Cicala himselfe with three hundred souldiers, with much ado escaping and retyring himselfe to Adena; which city the Persian King, pursuing Cicala, shortly after streitly besieged. With which vnluckie newes Sultan Achmat much troubled, forthwith writ vnto the Bassa of Trebezond, with all speed to send aid vnto Cicala: who taking vnto him some other of the Turks Commanders, with a great army set forward on his journey. Of whose comming Cicala hearing, the better to direct the Bassa in his proceeding, caused himselfe with ten of his souldiers whom he best trusted, secretly by night to be let downe ouer the wals of the city. And so comming to the Bassa, together with him kept on his way to joyne battell with the King as neere vnto the city as he could, for that he had taken order before he came out of the City, that so soone as they should perceiue the battell to be ioyned, they should forthwith sally out vpon the backs of the Persians, and so by holding them with a doubtfull battell, to further the victorie. All which the Persian King, hearing of the Bassaes comming, wisely doubting, and not willing to forsake the siege, diuided his army, and leauing one part thereof to continue the siege, went himselfe with the other to meet the Bassa. Wherein hee vsed such expedition and speed, that with all his power falling vpon him before he could put his men in order, or range his battell, he made of the Turks (now confusedly and without all order fighting more for the safegard of their liues, than for any hope they had of victory) such an exceeding great slaughter, that few of them escaped, but were there almost all slaine. Cicala himselfe but with two or three moe, hauing much ado by getting into a little boat, and so by passing ouer the riuer, to escape

Cicala Bassa with his army ouerthrowne by the Persian King.

The Bassa of Trapezond discomfited.

eſcape the danger. After which victory ſo eaſily gained, the King returning againe to the ſiege, after many ſharpe and great aſſaults thereunto giuen, and many men on both ſides loſt, had the ſame at length yeelded vnto his mercy.

Now with this news of the loſſe of his armies, and of the victories of the Perſian King, Sultan Achmat enraged, cauſed Cicala Baſſa his houſe at Conſtantinople, ful of treaſure & wealth, to be rifled; after the manner of the world, deeming of the doings of him ſo great a Captaine, according to the euent and euill ſucceſſe thereof, though not in his power to haue been remedied: neuertheleſſe ſhortly after, he cauſed great ſummes of mony to be deliuered out of his treaſures, and new forces raiſed for the renewing of the warre againſt the Perſian King. Vnto which ſeruice (now become vnto the Turks dreadfull) when as many of the Ianizaries were to be appointed, they after t heir proud and inſolent manner, all ariſing vp in mutiny, ſaid flatly, That they would not ſtirre one foot out of Conſtantinople, except they were both before hand payed, and aſſured alſo to haue their wages encreaſed: complaining grieuouſly withall, of the Baſſa of Damaſco, the Great Sultan his high Treaſurer, that he conuerting the Sultans treaſures to his owne vſe, did not pay the ſouldiers their wages due. For the appeaſing of which mutiny and tumult, the Sultan cauſed the ſame Baſſa to be apprehended and his head ſtrucken off, and ſo with the price of his bloud againe appeaſed them.

The Ianizaries mutiny.

But leauing the Perſian King triumphing in his victories, and the Great Sultan grieuing at his loſſes, let vs turne aſide into Siria, to ſee the troubles the Turks had euen among themſelues, to the weakening of their State, and the encreaſing of the Great Sultans cares & griefe. The two Baſſa's of Damaſco and Aleppo had (as is before declared) been at great diſcord and variance betwixt themſelues, and the Baſſa of Aleppo in field ouerthrowne, and in his city beſieged, glad to make peace with the other Baſſa, by yeelding vnto all ſuch things as it pleaſed him to demand. Which two Baſſa's for all that being diuerſly affected vnto the Sate, long agreed not, he of Damaſco continuing faithful in his allegiance towards the Great Sultan, and the other of Aleppo ſecretly inclining vnto Rebellion. Which the Baſſa of Damaſco perceiuing, and joyning vnto him the Baſſa's of Tripolis and Gazare, with their vnited forces went againſt the Baſſa of Aleppo, leading with them 60000 good men, with purpoſe to haue beſieged the Baſſa of Aleppo his enemy, in his city. But he betimes aduertiſed of this his deſigne, and not vnprouided for his comming, quickely called together his Forces, and had in very ſhort time raiſed an army of thirty thouſand valiant men, whom he encouraging, and finding them willing to follow him whitherſoeuer he would lead them, marched directly towards his enemies; with whom he meeting, readily joyned battell with them, which was fought with ſuch fury and hideous noiſe, as if it had been two thunder-claps oppoſing each other in one cloud, ſtriuing of themſelues, which ſhould burſt out firſt, being like people, like armes, and like order of fight. The medley for a great time continued ſharpe and furious, the number of the one ſide counteruailing the valour of the other, and the others valor ballancing the others great number: howbeit in the end the lone Baſſa ouercame the other three, and the ſmaller number the greater, and putting them to flight, remained ſole victors of the field. Now the victorious Baſſa, as wiſe to vſe the victory, as hee was valiant to obtaine the ſame, ſo eagerly purſued them, that without giuing them leaue to breathe, hee beſieged Tripolis, the Baſſa whereof at his comming abandoned the ſame, and carrying with him all his treaſure, fled into Cyprus; which made the taking of the place vnto the victorious Baſſa eaſie, who rifled and ranſacked the ſame: and not content with this conqueſt, forthwith beſieged the great and ſtrong city of Damaſco, reſolued to die in the plaines thereof, or to become victorious within the walls of the ſame. During which ſiege, the Baſſa of Tripolis had out of the prouinces and countries of the Turks thereabouts, raiſed another great army, and was comming to raiſe the ſiege, and to reſcue the City. Whereof the Baſſa of Aleppo hearing, roſe with the greateſt part of his army, and meeting with him, gaue him battell, and therein the ſecond time ouerthrew him and put him to flight. Which misfortune ſo diſmaied the minds of the beſieged, that deſpairing of all ſuccour and reliefe, they by conſent of their Gouernor fell to parly with the enemies, and ſo vpon certaine capitulations yeelded vnto him the place. Whereinto the Baſſa entering, found therein great treaſure, raiſed of the Turks tributes, whereupon he ſeiſed, and by the meanes thereof reſolued to make himſelfe Maſter of all Syria, the chiefe

The Baſſaes of Damaſco, Tripolis, and Gazare, ouerthrown by the Baſſa of Aleppo.

Damaſco taken & rifled by the Baſſa of Aleppo.

city

A city whereof he had now in his owne power: whereunto he gaue free acceſſe and traffique vnto all the Merchants of Perſia and of the Indies.

Now in the time of this his proſperity, newes was brought him, That the Beglerbeg of Natolia had ſent his Lieutenant with a great Army againſt him; who knowing that diligence was the ſpirit of conqueſt, and that to conquer was to little purpoſe, without a vigilant care for the preſeruation thereof, reſted not vpon his former good fortune, but marched directly towards his enemies. Wherein his ſucceſſe was anſwerable to his deſigne, for within the ſpace of two dayes hee had taken all the paſſages which might giue way vnto his enemies to diſtreſſe him: and in the ſtreights of the mountaines, whereby the enemy was to paſſe, layed a great ambuſh of two thouſand harquebuſiers and three thouſand horſe, who,
B the enemies being paſſed, and hee charging them a head, ſet vpon them in the rereward, and brought ſuch a feare vpon them, that hauing made a great fight, in fine, they hauing loſt a number of men, were glad to fly, and to leaue the Victory vnto the Baſſa. And to the encreaſing of his good happes, hee intercepted a Ship, caſt by weather vpon that Coaſt, laded with great treaſure, bound from Alexandria to Conſtantinople with the tributes of Ægypt, belonging to the Great Sultan. Of all which things the Perſian King aduertiſed, ſought to joyne with him in amity, highly commending all his valiant acts, and ſending vnto him honourable Preſents; to wit, a Piſtoll, an Helmet, and a Targuet, all ſet with pretious ſtones, eſteemed to bee worth fifty thouſand Crownes. This flame of rebellion ſpread abroad out of Syria, into Caramania, and ſo farther and farther into the leſſer Aſia.
C Which was the cauſe that the Great Sultan ſent with all ſpeed vnto the Viſier Baſſa, then in Hungary; commanding him, now that Strigonium was taken, which before had hindered the concluding of peace, hee ſhould now vpon reaſonable conditions conclude the ſame, to the end that his affaires on this ſide of his Empire beeing ſet in quiet and ſecurity, hee might forthwith after turne his Forces againſt the Perſians and the Rebels in Aſia.

The Beglerbeg of Natolia his Lieutenant with his Army diſcomfited by the Baſſa of Aleppo.

But after all theſe great troubles, to returne againe into Hungary. The Rebels there had of long beſieged the ſtrong Towne of Newhuſe, as is before declared: which being hitherto valiantly defended by the German garriſon therein, was now brought to ſuch extremity, as that it was thought almoſt impoſſible to be longer defended, the garriſon ſouldiers therein being with often aſſaults for the moſt part ſlaine, and the reſt of them that were left, grieuouſly wounded. Of which ſtrong Towne (beeing as it were the Key of that ſide of the Countrey) the Turkes which together with the Rebels beſieged the ſame, were for the commodious ſcituation thereof very deſirous: and the Rebels thereunto as vnwilling, for that it being once in their hand, would hardly euer bee againe from them recouered. For which cauſe Illiſhaſcius one of the Captaines of the Hungarian Rebels then at the ſiege thereof, perceiuing it could not be long kept, to the intent that the Turks ſhould not by force obtaine the ſame, by Letters requeſted of Baſta the Emperours Lieutenant, though then his enemy, That the Towne might be deliuered vnto Humanoius, another Captaine of the Hungarian Rebels, leſt the Turks ſhould by force obtaine the ſame: aſſuring him vpon the perill
E of his owne life, and the confiſcation of all his goods to the Emperour, that vpon a reconciliation and peace to be made betwixt the Emperour and the Hungarians his ſubjects, hee ſhould againe deliuer the ſame Towne and Fortreſſe into his poſſeſſion. Whereupon by commandement of the Archduke and of Baſta, the Towne was yeelded vp the ſeuenteenth day of the Moneth of October, vnto the aforeſaid Humanoius, and the Hungarians only receiued into the towne; yet with this condition, That the Germane ſouldiers which were yet left, and who had valiantly thus long endured the ſiege, might ſtill ſtay in the towne in pay, and keepe watch and ward together with the reſt of the Hungarians, Humanoius hauing command ouer them all.

Newhuſe yeelded vnto the Hungarian Rebels.

Wherefore the Turks ſeeing themſelues diſappointed of their purpoſe, for the obtaining F of this ſtrong Towne, riſing by night, and not a little diſcontented with the Hungarians, marched towards Strigonium, at the ſiege whereof the Viſier Baſſa lay. Howbeit within a few dayes after, the Hungarians not liking to haue the Germanes in garriſon with them, turned them with their Captaine Strenius out of the Towne, and yet ſafely conducted them to Comara.

At

At the ſame time they of Altenſoll, another ſtrong towne of the vpper Hungary, not farre from Neuhuſe, hauing bin long beſieged by the Rebels, and driuen for want of victuall to eat their horſes for the ſpace of fiue weeks; and hauing now eaten them all but ſeuen, and nothing elſe left, yeelded themſelues together with their towne to the Rebels: as did alſo they of Wiglas, Shemnitz, and Cremnits.

In the meane time Botſcay with a very great army of his Hungarian Rebels, came to Tyirna, a ſtrong towne about ſixteene miles diſtant from Vienna, attended vpon with a guard of an hundred tall ſouldiers, gallantly apparelled all in blew: a little before whoſe comming, Humanoius, vnto whom Neuhuſe was a little before yeelded, had ſummoned Presburg, requiring the ſame to be yeelded vnto him. Which thing Botſcoy, being now come, by Letters likewiſe required of the Citiſens, threatning otherwiſe moſt ſtreightly to beſiege them. Whereupon Schonberg Gouernour of Presburg, doubting of the faithfulneſſe of the Citiſens, being almoſt all Hungarians, retired himſelfe with a good part of his ſouldiers into the Caſtle; with proteſtation, to ſpend his life and all that he had for the keeping and defence thereof. With whoſe conſtancy the Citiſens mooued, continued firme in their allegiance vnto the Emperour. Which Botſcay perceiuing, and that the City was not to be got by threats, forthwith remooued and went to Peſth, where he was moſt honourably receiued by the Viſier Baſſa, and by him preſented with a crowne of curious workemanſhip, and threeſcore thouſand duckats, with fiue and twenty moſt goodly horſes: and there hauing receiued from him full power to entreat of peace, and to conclude the ſame with the Imperials, with Haly Baſſa and certaine other of the chiefe of the Turks joyned in Commiſſion with him, againe departed and went to Kyrpa, vnto an aſſembly of the Hungarians there to be holden: whither but a little before Sigiſmund Forgatt was come with the Emperors reſolution, concerning the negotiation of peace; when as in the meane time other Commiſſioners from the Emperour were come to Comara about the treaty of peace with the Turks, they themſelues ſo requiring. Howbeit Collonitz at the ſame time by letters writ vnto the Archduke, aduiſing him that this treaty of peace might not, together and at one time, be taken in hand with the Turks and the Rebels: but that if it were poſſible, an attonement ſhould be firſt made with the Rebels, and afterward a peace concluded with the Turks; the common good of the common-weale ſo requiring: for that he perceiued the Turks indeed not to be deſirous of peace at all, but only to go about, by keeping the Chriſtians at variance among themſelues, and in ſuſpence betwixt hope and feare, to do them harme, and themſelues good; which was afterward found to be ſo indeed.

A treaty of peace.

The Perſian King had ſome moneths before ſent three Embaſſadours vnto his Imperiall Majeſty, who being come at diuers times one after another, were all with peculiar letters diſmiſſed from Prague the 29 of Nouember. Vnto the firſt of which Embaſſadours Letters were giuen, of this purport.

The Emperors Letters vnto the Perſian King.

Zinel Chan Beg whom your Majeſty hath ſent Embaſſadour vnto vs, we haue willingly ſeene and receiued, and giuen him audience, in declaring of ſuch things as he had from you in charge. It is vnto vs both acceptable and pleaſing, that your Majeſty hath regard, ſo friendly to ſalute vs, and ſo carefully to ſeeke to joyne in amity and friendſhip with vs, whereby your Majeſty much bindeth vs vnto the like deſire of mutuall loue and friendſhip; and that we againe on our parts ſhould be ready to performe ſuch things as may be vnto your Majeſty pleaſing: and that we ſhould wiſh for nothing more, than that our friendſhip ſhould dayly more and more be confirmed, and for the common good of vs both, for many yeares preſerued: wherein we for our parts will not be wanting. Whereas your Majeſty with great courage hath vndertaken, and with ſo happy ſucceſſe of victories continued your warres againſt the Turke, whereof you had ſo juſt cauſe, we from our hearts in your behalfe rejoyce as all other Chriſtians worthily doe: and we our ſelues are thereby much animated valiantly and conſtantly to proceed in our warres, which we now ſo many yeares haue made with the ſame enemy, nothing doubting but that God the reuenger of wrong will ſo proſper the honourable endeauours of your Majeſty, as that you ſhall not onely recouer ſuch things as haue beene wrongfully taken from you, but alſo weaken and deſtroy the power of that perfidious enemy. Which that it may the better bee brought to paſſe, wee alſo renew our warres, raiſe greater forces, and by our Embaſſadours and Letters exhort and incite the greateſt Chriſtian Princes and Potentates to extend their power againſt this our common enemy: and thereby

thereby to giue fitter opportunitie and occasion vnto your Maiesty for the better proceeding of your affairs in Asia. The course of our notable victories which wee haue in few yeares past obtained against the Turkes, the tumults and troubles which the Turks haue by secret deuices raised in Hungary, haue somewhat hindred: howbeit we hope by Gods permission, that all things shall shortly be again restored to their former estate, so that we may wholly without let turn our selues with our power against the Turkes. Yet in the mean time we haue thus much preuailed with the King of Spaine, as that hee hath already set forth a fleet vnto the borders of his territories, to distract his forces, the prosperous successe of which Fleet we daily expect. We haue also mooued the Pope, that he should also giue aid in this common Cause, and excite other Princes also to do the like; which he with great endeauor doth. But concerning such things as shall hereafter happen, we shall by Letters and Embassadors certifie your Maiesty as occasion shall require: as at this present we had appointed to send vnto you the Baron of Dohna, a famous and noble gentleman, who (all things being ready for his iourney) suddenly died. And would now haue sent another, had not the vnexpected change of the affairs of the Muscouits otherwise dissuaded vs, we hauing no other way but that at this time to send into Persia. For concerning this great Prince which is now reported to reign there, what his minde is, or how he standeth affected, we haue as yet no experience. In the mean time wee so desire a perpetuall and firme friendship betweene vs and your Maiesty, with a certain secure and free commerce, that if your Maiesty (which we wish) shall extend your victories vnto the sea, your subiects may haue free accesse and traffique vnto all our Kingdomes and Dominions. We also thanke your Maiesty, that you so kindely entertaine the Christians into your Kingdomes, and grant vnto them to haue the free exercise of their Religion. As also for that you haue sent your Embassadours vnto the King of France, although without wished successe: whereby we easily gather your Maiesties great care and circumspection euery way. As concerning them whom your Maiesty hath sent vnto vs, they haue diligently and faithfully performed their duty, so that they haue deserued praise and fauour both here and in Persia: whom we much commend vnto your Maiesty, to whom in all things we offer our greatest loue and affection.

Vnto the second Embassador were also giuen Letters from the Emperor, to this effect.

Whilest we were yet busied in the dispatch of Zinel Chan Beg, your former Embassador, in the mean time Methi Culi Beg another Embassador of yours came vnto vs, whom we haue curteously entertained, and graciously heard. By whose speech, as also by your Maiesties letters, wee haue with exceeding great pleasure vnderstood both your friendly greeting of vs, as also of the happy successe of your affaires against the Turks since the departure of your former Embassador, together with your kinde affection toward the Christians in those parts. One of the seruants also of our Embassadour which died by the way, hath reported vnto vs, how curteously our said Embassador was by your Maiesty receiued; and how you haue shewed your selfe affected against the common Enemy: which was vnto vs a thing both acceptable and pleasing. Vnto both which your embasses the more solemnly to answer, we had appointed again to send an honorable embassage vnto your Maiesty, had not these lets and impediments hapned, which in our Letters giuen vnto your former Embassador are declared. But so soon and as often as may be, we will indeauor either by letters or Embassadors, more at large to manifest our loue and affection toward you. Wherefore we greatly desire that your Maiesty may continue in perfect amitie with vs, and valiantly proceed in subduing of the common enemy; we on our part being ready to perform all things wherby we may testifie vnto you the desire we haue for the preseruation of our mutual loue and friendship, as also of our endeauors in our wars against him. God almighty long preserue your Maiesty in health, and make you still victorious against the common enemy.

Vnto the third Embassador were likewise Letters giuen from the Emperor, of this purport.

Whereas Ius Bassi Hassan Beg, your Maiesties Embassadour vnto the French King, came this way, at the same time that other two of your Embassadors were heere present with vs; wee receiued him with the same curteſie wherwith we receiued them, making ſtay of him vntill they might all three be together diſmiſſed. And for that his Embaſſage was vndertaken for the furtherance of the common good, though it wanted the wiſhed ſucceſſe, yet we haue thought it good to giue thanks vnto your Maieſtie, and in moſt friendly maner to greet you by this your ſaid Embaſſador, whom we highly commend to you, for that for the time he here ſtaid in our court, he ſo behaued himſelfe, as that he well deſerued both our and your Maieſties fauor, wherof we wiſh him to be partaker. Almighty God bleſſe your Maieſtie with all felicitie, and long to his good pleaſure preſerue the ſame.

Theſe Embaſſadors with theſe letters thus diſmiſſed, one of them went into Polonia, and there declared vnto the King the great loue and affection of the Perſian King toward him, offering vnto him all loue and kindneſſe: firſt requeſting him, That he would join with his Majeſtie in all friendſhip and brotherly loue: and then, That he would take vp armes againſt the Turks their common enemy: promiſing on his maſters behalfe, That he ſhould not lay down arms vntill that the enemy were vtterly brought to nought and deſtroied, ſo that the Chriſtian princes would on the other ſide likewiſe impugn him. This was a ſtrange meſſage, and not before heard of in Polonia, where for all that the meſſenger was curteouſly and bountifully entertained, and afterwards with good words put in hope of obtaining what he had requeſted, was ſo honorably diſmiſſed.

The Turks and Hungarian Rebels by the Imperials ouerthrowne.

But leauing theſe Embaſſadors vnto their long journey, to return again into Hungary. A great number of the Turkes and Hungarian Rebels meeting together at Hidweg, had a purpoſe ſecretly to haue ſurpriſed and oppreſſed the Imperial ſoldiers in their camp. Of which their purpoſe they in good time aduertiſed, and therfore keeping ſtrong Watch and ward, ſo receiued the Turks and Rebels at their comming, contrary to their expectation, as that after a ſmall fight they cauſed them to fly: whom the Imperials ſo hotly purſued towards Caniſia, that they ſlew of them aboue a thouſand, tooke about two hundred more of them priſoners, with fifteen hundred horſes which they caried away with them: and ſo hauing left ſufficient gariſons on that ſide of the countrey towards Caniſia, returned themſelues towards Vienna. In the mean time the Emperors Commiſſioners being met together at Comora, about the treaty of peace with the Turks and the Hungarians, the ſixt of December receiuing letters from the Baſſa of Buda, certaine of them the next day after went by water down the riuer of Danubius to Buda: where they being honorably receiued, and hauing with the Baſſa much and long talke concerning a peace, found little difficultie therin, but that the Turks ſaid they could therof determine nothing, without the preſence and conſent of the Hungarians. With which anſwer they ful of hope returned backe again to Comora, as did alſo Sigiſmund Forgat, with the like hope of peace from Botſcay. At which time Botſcay beeing about to depart from the aſſembly at Kirpay, back again to Caſſovia, gaue power to Illiſhaſcius for the furtherance of the treaty for peace. Who hauing receiued letters of ſafe conduct from the Archduke Matthias, about the end of December, together with his wife went to Vienna: who being admitted vnto the Archdukes preſence, and hauing had an houre and a halfes talk with him, and euery day after conferred with the Counſellors from eight a clock to twelue, at the length compoſed all difficulties and differences touching the treaty of peace, excepting fiue Articles onely concerning Religion; the free exerciſe whereof the Hungarians in any wiſe required. So that now men began to conceiue ſome good hope of a peace to be in time concluded.

1606

The Haiduckes do great harme in the vpper Hungarie.

This year thus ending with the beginning of the treaty for peace, the next year began with the wonted troubles of war, the rebellious Haiducks doing great harm in the vpper Hungary, tyranniſing after their wonted maner vpon men of all ſorts and conditions. Where aſſaulting diuers cities, and being valiantly repulſed, they were conſtrained to retyre by the Polonian Coſſacks defending the ſame: yet did they neuertheleſſe no little harm vnto the Country inhabitants. Wherof complaint being made to the King of Polonia, he by his Embaſſador ſent to Botſcay at Caſſovia, obtained, that thoſe ſpoiling Haiducks ſhould be called back again out of thoſe parts.

Now had Illiſhaſcius the negotiator for the treaty of peace to bee made with the Rebels, ſo well well dealt in that matter, as that the same in the later end of Ianuarie should haue been published at Vienna, but that certaine of the chiefe of the Clergy could not be brought to consent, that the free exercise of Religion should indifferently be granted to all the people in generall, but vnto the Nobilitie onely. Whereupon Illishascius with the rest of the Commissioners for the Hungarians, with great discontentment being about to return home again without any thing at all concluded, the Deputies for the Emperor seeing that it could not otherwise be brought to passe, at length agreed (although neuer so much contrary to the good liking of the Clergy-men) to satisfie the Hungarians in this their request, and that the free exercise as well of the Reformed as of the Romish Religion, should bee permitted to all men thorowout all Hungary, in such sort as they had before beene in the time of the Emperours Maximilian and Ferdinand. Concerning which point for the free libertie of Religion, Letters were deliuered vnto Illishascius; all the other points concerning the peace beeing put off vntill the next assembly of the chiefe States of Hungary, shortly after to be holden at the city of Presburg. The free exercise of religion granted to the Hungarians.

About the beginning of March, the Spahi at Constantinople had requested of the Visier Bassa, That it might bee lawfull for themselues to take vp their woonted Pension of the Farmers and husbandmen here and there in the Countrey. Which although it were vnto them by the Visier Bassa denied, (who had commaundement from the great Sultan, within a few daies after to giue euery one of them his present pay in ready money) yet they not so contented, but going out of the city, presumptuously presumed to trouble the countrey men, and to do the Farmers great harm. For which their insolencie the great Sultan (the chiefe Captaines and leaders of them being again returned into the City) caused them some to bee beheaded, some to be hanged, and other some to be bound in chains and drowned: whereby no small fear was struck into the rest of the common souldiers. But the rebellion in Asia stil increasing, and the rebels there secretly both fauouring and furthering the proceedings of the Persian King, the Sultan forthwith sent for the Visier Bassa, who the last yeare had serued in Hungary, to go into Asia to represse the Rebels there, and also to withstand the proceedings of the Persian King: committing in the mean time the managing of the war in Hungary vnto his Lieutenant.

The treaty of peace both with the Turkes and the Rebels was yet in hand; whereunto how much the Turks were for their part inclined, the garrison souldiers of Rab had good proofe: for the eighteenth day of March, being the day at their request appointed for the treatie, and wheron the Commissioners on both parts there meeting together, should haue furthered the negotiation of the peace, not past fifty of the Turkes comming to the gate of the towne, required to be let in, as if they had come for that purpose. Whom our men nothing suspecting, were about to receiue them into the town: when as a Sentinel without the town (it beeing a thicke mist) perceiued three thousand more of the Turks lurking there by: and forthwith giuing an alarm to those of the town, bewraied the enemies treachery; who therupon retyred, they of the town discharging their great ordnance after them.

The next moneth about the beginning of Aprill certain messengers came from Eperia (a City seated in the vpper Hungary, yet holden for the Emperour) to Vienna, declaring the most miserable state of that city: which although the way therunto being three or four weeks before opened, it had receiued some good store of victuals, yet now (as they said) was so on euery side beset by the Rebels, as that no prouision at all could more therunto come: hoping by that means to bring to passe, that the citizens pinched with hunger and want of things necessarie, should at length yeeld themselues together with the city into their power. By which means they but a little before had obtained the strong town of Tokay; wherin the famin was so great, that the soldiers had not only eaten their shooes and leather jerkins, but had now also killed two boyes to eat, and some others of them had cast lots amongst themselues, which should be kild for the other to eat. By which extremitie Ruber the Gouernor of the place was inforced to yeeld. Vnto whom Botscay, who then lay at Cassouia, is said to haue offred a great summe of mony, with many other good things, to haue taken his part: all which he most constantly refused, protesting, euen vnto death to continue faithfull in his obedience to the Emperour. Tokay taken by the Rebels.

About the ſame time Illiſhaſchius, who had before not a little laboured about the furthering of the peace in Hungarie, writ letters from Caſſouia vnto a certaine great man at Vienna; whereby he declared, that Botſcay without the conſent of the Eſtates of Hungarie could of himſelfe determine nothing concerning the concluſion of the peace: who had oft times told him to his face, that rather than they would againe ſubmit themſelues to a forreine Gouernour, they would for euer put themſelues vnder the Turks protection: and yet promiſed by the ſame lettters, that although he had got vnto himſelfe great diſpleaſure thereby with the Haiduckes, he would not for all that ceaſe by all meanes to draw the States of the country in their next aſſembly vnto his part, ſo that that which was before concluded at Vienna concerning Religion, ſhould not againe be reuerſed: for many of them (as he ſaid) were afraid that it would not be performed, which was there promiſed vnto the States concerning the exerciſe of their Religion. And that therefore they could not yet bee perſuaded to put themſelues from vnder the Turks protection, vntill they ſaw themſelues ſufficiently ſecured, both for the liberty of their Religion, and the keeping of their antient priuiledges. And that they could not, nor would not endure a forreine Gouernour to rule ouer them, with whom they could not talke; nor yet ſuffer Clergy men to haue any voyces in their ciuill affaires. And therefore (he ſaid) he thought it very neceſſarie that the Emperour ſhould not doubt in this point to gratifie the Hungarians. And that Tranſyluania, whereupon hee had been hitherto inforced to beſtow ſo great coſt for the keeping thereof, being now left vnto Botſcay, he ſhould appoint ſuch a Gouernour ouer Hungarie as the States of that countrey ſhould require. For that there was no hope of any peace to be made with the Turks, except Botſcay and the States of Hungarie ſhould vndertake the treaty thereof; ſeeing that they but only ſeeking for a peace in ſhew, were oftentimes diſcouered but to ſeeke for their owne aduantages and profits.

Illiſhaſchius reprochfully vſed by the Hungarians.

But concerning Illiſhaſchius himſelfe, the Hungarian Rebels ſeeing him ſo much to labour about the concluding of a peace, in ſcorne called him by the by-name of Cripeliſhacius, as hee that too much inclined vnto the Germanes: which by-name he tooke in ſo ill part, as that he departed ſtreight to Eperia, with a purpoſe not to haue been preſent at the next aſſembly of the States: but being again pacified, and by Botſcay called back, he made ſuch a notable ſpeech vnto the States in their next aſſembly, that all men now began both to hope and wiſh more for peace than they had before done.

In the meane time, the Turks in great number being gathered together to Belgrade, expected the end of this treaty for peace, and letters from the great Sultan to Botſcay were intercepted alſo: whereby he aduiſed him to proceed in his purpoſe, and ioyning with his powers, to ſeize vpon Auſtria, Bohemia, and Morauia; for that he could not be contented with Hungary and Tranſyluania, and leaue the reſt of the Prouinces vnto Botſcay as his inheritance.

The Tartars about this time were about ſo make a road into Polonia; but when as they with their oft incurſions had not a little troubled the Haiduckes alſo in the vpper Hungary, they reſolued amongſt themſelues to ioyne their forces together, and to fight as well againſt the Turks as the Tartars, and from thenceforth neither to truſt the one nor the other.

Hereupon, when as the Turks in great number came to aſſault Lippa, a towne of the Haiduckes, they forſaking the towne, fortified the Caſtle with certaine companies of armed men, and afterwards beſtowed many others here and there in caues and cellers in the towne, and layed great ſtore of gunpouder in the ſtreets. Vnto which towne the Turks comming, and finding the gates open, and none to reſiſt them, haſted to haue taken the Caſtle. But in the meane time, the pouder which the Haiduckes had layed taking fire, blew vp a number of them, and they which lay hid in the caues and cellers forthwith breaking out, ſlew of them whomſoeuer they met, and ſo made of the Turks a great ſlaughter, and againe cleered the towne.

The Eſtates of Auſtria conſidering the great harmes they had in theſe late troubles receiued, as well from the Hungarian Rebels, as from the Emperors mutinous ſouldiers; and by experience taught how dangerous a thing it was for them to reſt vpon other mens protection, being

being vnto them ſtrangers; reſolued now in a general aſſembly of the Eſtates by them about this time holden, to take vpon themſelues the defence of their Countrey againſt ſuch ſudden incurſions and tumults of the mutinous ſoldiers, and no more to rely vpon forrein protection, ſtill to ſeek when they had moſt need thereof. Wherefore to aſſure themſelues in their own ſtrength, they with a general conſent agreed to haue alwaies in readines two thouſand horſemen and eight thouſand footmen to be maintained at the common charge; fifty of the country peaſants ſtil finding of one of the ſaid ſouldiers.

And much about this time, viz. the third of Iune, Illiſhaſcius a great man among the rebels, and yet the greateſt furtherer of the peace, (as appeared by his doings, and by that wee haue before of him written) hauing before obtained letters of ſafe conduct from the Archduke, came now again with his wife alſo to Vienna; there more at large to conferre vpon the Articles for a peace to be concluded, with ſuch as were on the Emperors behalfe for that purpoſe deputed. Where comming to confer and talke about that matter, he was ſo croſſed by Nicolas then Biſhop of Vienna, who hitherto had been preſent in counſell together with the reſt of the Commiſſioners (a great enemy vnto the peace, in reſpect of the article concerning the liberty of the Reformed Religion) he was, I ſay, by him ſo croſſed, as that there was no hope of any thing to be for the common quiet concluded, ſo long as he was there preſent. For the which cauſe he, on both ſides and of all men deſirous of the peace diſliked, was in the Archdukes name willed no more to come into the Councel, for diſturbing of the peace. In which negotiation for concluding of the peace, Illiſhaſcius had taken ſuch pains in trauelling to and fro, betwixt the Archduke then lying at Vienna, and Botſcay with the States of Hungary then lying at Caſſovia, and ſo debated the matter on both ſides, that all things beeing as good as agreed vpon, for a full concluſion of all matters, he himſelfe, together with George Humanoius, Francis Magot, Sebaſtian Tockel, Staniſlaus Turſon, and others, with two hundred horſe, and thirty two wagons, in all four hundred perſons, the ſeuenth of September came to Vienna, with fifty Huſſars following them. Shortly after whoſe comming, the treaty for peace was earneſtly begun, with often meſſengers paſſing to and fro betwixt Vienna and Caſſovia, to Botſcay lying then very dangerouſly ſick, vntil that all the articles of the peace were neere about the 14 day of September fully on both parts agreed vpon: moſt difference ariſing about the Article for the free exerciſe of Religion. For although it was before declared, that men might haue the free exerciſe of Religion; yet the Hungarians recalling that general word Religion, to a particularitie, would needs haue it ſet down, that men might haue the free exerciſe of thoſe Religions which are at this day called the Lutheran, Calvinian, and Romiſh religion. Neither would they conclude any peace, til they were of their requeſt in that point ſatisfied. Which peace ſo concluded, the next day after, the Deputies for the Hungarians ſent an Embaſſador to the Viſier Baſſa at Buda, to certifie him of all their proceedings, and to requeſt him not as yet to attempt any thing for the diſturbing of the peace. Now the Articles of the peace were as followeth.

Peace between the Emperour and the diſcontented Hungarians.

Articles of Peace agreed vpon betwixt the Emperor and his diſcontented ſubiects in the vpper Hungary.

1 THat from thenceforth it ſhould be lawfull for euery man thorowout the kingdome of Hungary to haue the free vſe of his Religion, and to beleeue what he would.

2 That if the Hungarians ſo thought good, they might chuſe a Palatine for their Gouernour; and that in the meantime the Archduke Matthias ſhould no more vſe the title of a Gouernor, but of a Vice-Roy.

3 That the Crown of Hungary ſhould ſtill be left in the Emperors keeping.

4 That the Biſhops that were nobly deſcended in Hungary, and had lands of their owne, ſhould from thenceforth be admitted into the Councell, but the other Biſhops not ſo to be receiued.

5 That Botſcay for himſelfe and his heirs male ſhould for euer hold Tranſylvania.

6 That the ſame country of Tranſylvania ſhould be ſtill ſubiect to the kingdom of Hungary.

7 That for his arms he ſhould bear three royall Crownes, and three open Helmets.

8 That he should no more afterward stile himselfe Prince, but Lord of part of the Kingdome of Hungary.

9 That they should pay the Haiducks their wages which had levied them.

10 That the harms don on both sides should for euer be forgotten.

11 That Bohemia, Moravia, Lausnisium, and Austria, should not only with their Letters and seales confirm the articles, but also swear at Vienna, to keep the same so far as should concern them.

12 That the Hungarians should likewise send some to Vienna, who in their behalfe should with their Letters, Seals and Oaths, confirm and ratifie these articles.

13 That the assembly of the States of Hungary should be referred vntill a more conuenient time for them.

14 That all these things being don, this agreement should be publiquely confirmed and inrolled in the Records of the kingdom of Hungary.

15 That it should be lawfull for the Hungarians by their Embassadors to inuite the Princes of the Empire to the approuing and confirming of these Articles.

Which fifteen articles were on the Emperors part subscribed by Trausam, Mollart, Sigifred, Pruner, Lichtenstein, and Kreuberge: and on the Hungarians part, by Illishascius, Peter Erkod, George Turso, Sigismund Forgat, and others.

The twentieth of September following, the Embassadors for Botscay and the Hungarians being admitted vnto the presence of the Archduke Matthias, obtained of him pardon for the forepassed rebellion, and all that was therein don. Vnto whom securitie for the same was afterward giuen by the prouinces; therby also to assure them that they should not be therfore afterwards troubled. But yet for all that was before don, the title of the prince of Transylvania was left vnto Botscay for term of his life. Who feeling his sicknes daily to increase, would oftentimes say, That he could willingly die, so that it would please God before his death to giue him leaue to excuse himselfe of his rebellion before the whole Roman Empire. And so about the end of September, all the aforesaid Embassadours for the Hungarians and Botscay, being assembled into the castle of Vienna, together with the Emperors Councel, and certain other Noblemen of the prouinces belonging to the Emperor, receiued euery one of them the articles of the peace, copied out and fair written in parchment. Which don they returned to their own dwellings: but Illishascius went from thence to Newhuse, to bee present at the peace to be afterwards made with the Turks also: from whence he afterwards writ letters vnto the Visier Bassa, to request him, not as yet to attempt any thing against the Emperors prouinces, but peaceably and quietly to expect his Commissioners, which were shortly to come to him.

A great fire at Constantinople.

But in the mean time whilst this peace was thus in concluding, certain Tartars at Constantinople, in their insolencie set fire vpon a certaine Iewes house: whereof arose such a terrible flame, as burnt not only many houses, but a great number of Iewes themselues also; the harm there don being esteemed at forty hundred thousand duckats. In which tumult and noise of the people running to and fro and quenching of the fire, the great Sultan hauing a fall from his horse, was therof for a while sicke.

The Turks of Canisia also hauing conspired with the Captain of the lesser Comora, came to haue surprised the same. But the garrison souldiers there hauing before had a suspition of it, suffered so many of the Turkes as they knew they were able to ouercome, to enter: and so shutting the gates of the city, kild them euery mothers son, the rest which were without returning again to Canisia.

Peace thus as is aforesaid concluded with the Hungarians, George Turson, Nicolas Istuan, Iohn Mollart, Althem, with some others the Emperors Commissioners for a peace to bee made with the Turks, went to Comara; Sigifrid Collonitz and Budin following them with the army: for as yet they durst not altogether trust the Turks, for intercepting them by the way. Which Commissioners caried with them Solyman Bassa of Buda, who had now bin seuen yeares kept prisoner in the castle of Vienna; and Aly Bassa; both brauely apparelled in blew silk; six wagons following them, wherin were caried certaine presents for the great Sultan, to wit, a most curious clock, certain fair pieces of plate, an hundred thousand duckats, and diuers other things of great value.

But

But whilſt they there ſtaid, expecting to hear from the Viſier Baſſa then at Buda, a ſudden inſolent accident fel out, like enough againe to haue broken off the peace already made with the Hungarians, as alſo to haue vtterly cut off the treaty of peace to be had with the Turkes, and to haue ſet them altogether by the ears again. For albeit that the firſt article of the peace made with the Hungarians was, That euery man ſhould haue the free exerciſe of his religion; yet the eighth of October, about three a clock in the afternoon, when as a certaine Hungarian Lutheran preacher was in the pulpit preaching to the people in a church in the ſuburbes of Comora, Buchem and Knevie two captaines comming from dinner with certaine of their ſeruants more than halfe drunk, with their ſwords drawn ran into the church and draue the Preacher out thence; vpon whom captain Buchems trumpetter alſo diſcharged a piſtol, and raiſed ſuch a tumult in the church, that diuers children were troden to death vnder foot, and the reſt put in great fear of their liues.

Which inſolent fact ſo mooued the Hungarians, that Turſon and Budian there preſent with the reſt of the Commiſſioners, ready to haue gon about the treaty for peace, would needs the next day haue departed from Comora, and were hardly by Mollart and Collonitz intreated to ſtay. Buchem and Knevie the two Captaines were bound to their appearance for anſwering of the matter, and the trumpeter with irons on his heels was clapt in priſon. But the news hereof being carried to Neuhuſel, and as the manner of report is, by fame made far greater than it was, as, That 150 perſons was ſlain in the Church, there aroſe ſuch a tumult among the Hungarians there, as that Illiſhaſcius with the reſt of the captains had much adoe to quiet and appeaſe the ſame: who joining with the Turks of Strigonium and the Haiducks of the Iſland, had determined now by night to haue inuaded Comora, where the outrage was committed; had not Pogrania the elder (a man of great grauitie) comming from thence, declared to Illiſhaſcius and the reſt of the captains all the matter as it was don; vpon whoſe relation the whole tumult was again appeaſed. But foraſmuch as the two aforeſaid captains bound to their appearance, were by night fled to Vienna, the Hungarians were very erneſt to haue them ſeuerely puniſhed, as breakers of the firſt article of the peace concerning Religion. Botſcay in the mean time beheaded Catayus his Chancellor, who had gon about to poiſon him, in hope after his death to haue bin Prince of Tranſylvania himſelf; placing Iohn Ianuſy in his ſtead, and giuing him Catay his lands.

Botſcay cauſeth his Chancellor to be beheaded.

Peace now made with the Hungarians as is aforeſaid, and Commiſſioners appointed for a treaty of peace to be had with the Turks alſo (wherunto the Viſier Baſſa, then lying at Buda, was as forward as any, beeing ſo commaunded from the great Sultan his maſter) there wanted but a place commodious for the ſaid Commiſſioners, without ſuſpition of danger, and indifferent for them all to meet in. Whereupon Cæſar Gallen, a man of great experience in ſuch matters, with ſome other captains, were appointed to find out a fit place for them to meet in: who hauing viewed many, at length made choice of one within half a league of Comora, ſo fit for that purpoſe, as if Nature had therfore prouided it. The great riuer of Danubius beeing there diuided into three parts, made therin three Iſlands, al compaſſed round with the arms therof; into which Iſlands the Commiſſioners for the Emperor, for the Turk, and for the Hungarians might come without let one of another, to intreat of their affairs, and ſo in little boats prepared for that purpoſe, paſſe ouer one to another as their occaſions required. Into which ſo commodious a place, the Deputies for the Emperour the 25 of October, conducted by the horſemen of Mansfelt, Hohenlo and Bonchimin, came. After whom followed Illiſhaſcius and the other deputies for the Hungarians, aſſiſted with the nobility of Hungary, al attending the comming of the great Sultans Commiſſioners; who likewiſe immediatly after came, being brought vp the riuer in 24 braue ſhips wel appointed.

Theſe Commiſſioners being thus apart arriued in the Iſlands, began firſt to conſult by themſelues euery one, of their ſeueral affairs and buſineſſes; and afterwards many times meeting together, with much grauitie conſulted and conferred of the beſt waies and meanes for the making of a good and aſſured peace for the appeaſing of theſe wars: which euery one of them, and all together, to that end employing the vttermoſt of their indeauours, at laſt the nineteenth of November it was betwixt all the three parties fully agreed vpon and concluded, and hoſtages on all parts giuen one to another, with oathes and promiſes ſolemnly on all sides giuen and receiued for the inuiolate keeping and obseruing of the same. The Articles C follow.

Peace between the Emperour and the grand Sultan.

Articles of the Peace concluded betwixt the Great Sultan and the German Emperor.

First, That the Emperor and the great Sultan, in all their Letters, Dispatches, Instruments, and Embassages, should not stile themselues by any other names or additions, but by the names of Welbeloued father and son; to wit, the Emperor calling the great Sultan his Son; and the great Sultan the Emperor (in respect of his years) his Father.

That in the beginning of their Letters they should take vpon them the name and quality of Emperor, and not of King, respectiuely one of them to another.

That those two Emperors should take order, that the realme of Hungary and the Archdukedome of Austria might be in rest, peace, and tranquilitie, and altogether deliuered and assured from all incursions, oppressions, and outrages of the men of war on both parties.

That it should be lawfull for the King of Spain, if he so thought good, to enter into this treaty of peace, without the opposition or let of one or other of these Emperors in any sort.

That the Tartars, and all other people vsually wont to come in arms into Hungary, should be compriſed within this treaty of the peace, so to be disarmed of all power, by their means to do harm within the realme of Hungary, and they there assured from their violences and robberies.

That euery one, both on the one part and on the other, should forbear from making incursions and pillages, and enterprises of war, and from all acts of hostility one against another; and yet euery one neuertheless to haue power to pursue theeues and robbers, and such others seeking after booty, to the disturbing of the peace, and injuring of the Commonweale. Wherof euery man should haue power to giue knowledge, to the intent by common force to suppresse them, and to cause them to recompence the wrongs and harmes by them done.

That all places, castles, towns, and forts should remain without attempt either on the one part or on the other, whether it were by force, surprise, or treason; and so likewise the goods, families, and cattell of the countrymen which were of their territories and jurisdiction; Botscay still holding all that was lately to him granted by the Treaty of Vienna. K

That all prisoners taken in the wars should be set at liberty, but especially such as had beene taken in Townes and Citadels, which by their valour and courage they sought to haue defended. And the other prisoners to bee deliuered by exchange and ransome, as should bee most expedient and easie for both parties.

That all controuersies happing as well on this side as beyond the riuer of Danubius, should be peaceably ended by the iudgement of the gouernor of Rab, of the Bassa of Buda, of the Gouernour of Sclavonia, and of the Gouernors of other places: and that if they should chance to be of such important weight and consequence, as that they could not by these magistrats be determined and composed; that they should in that case be reserued to be decided by their Imperial Maiesties; and that it should bee lawfull both for the one party and for the other, to repair and build the places ruined, but not to build places of new, which L might preiudice either the one part or the other.

That Amurath the Visier Bassa should send his messengers with presents to the Archduke Mathias; and that the Emperor should dispatch an Embassador toward the great Sultan with 200000 Duckets: And that the great Sultan likewise should send his Embassador to Prague with great and rich presents to the Emperor.

That this peace should begin in the year 1607, and continue for the space of twenty years; and that one of the Emperors should send vnto the other euery three years their Embassadors with honorable and rich presents, according to the pleasure and power of their Maiesties.

That all the Emperors successors, as also those of the kingdome of Hungary, should bee comprehended within the agreement of peace; together with all their kindred, allyes, and confederats, as likewise those of M the great Sultans also.

That the Christians should again haue the city of Vacia deliuered to them, which they should at their pleasure keepe and fortifie: and that Strigonium, with all the Villages therto belonging, should remaine

vnto

A vnto the Great Sultan; yet ſo as that no man ſhould be with any new tribute oppreſſed; and that ſuch as had before beene free from paying of tribute, ſhould ſtill keep the ſame priuiledges.

And that the Turks ſhould not exact their tribute by the point of their ſwords, but by the way of Iuſtice, which they ſhould commit vnto the diſcretion of the Iudges and Receiuers, to that end appointed, that ſo it might be payed without oppreſſing of the people, except haply they which ſhould pay it, vpon preſumption ſhould deny it, or too long deferre the payment of it: in which caſe it ſhould be lawfull both for the one ſide and the other, to vſe ſuch meanes as ſhould ſeeme vnto them good for the obtaining thereof.

These are the Articles of this peace, which God turne to the glory of his Name, and the
B benefit of the Christian Commonweale; and for which all the townes of Hungary made great ioy and triumph, which they declared by the thundring of their Cannons, which they in great number discharged, with many other solemnities and triumphs. The Commissioners themselues in token of their conceiued ioy, magnificently feasted one another also: which the Turks first began; and not content to haue made them great cheere, gaue vnto our Commissioners great Presents also: for the Bassa of Buda gaue vnto Mollart, Althem, Turſon, Iſtuan, Collonitz, Budian, Hendoc, Cæſar Gallen, and Eleſchin, braue and couragious horses most gallantly furnished; and to the rest exceeding rich garments and tapestrie hangings of great value. And as at the time of this feast, the troupe of Mansfield had by many sallies and vollies of shot giuen great pleasure vnto the Turks as they sate at the table; Alla Baſſa to de-C clare the contentment and pleasure he had therein receiued, sent to the captaine of this troup two hundred duckets, which he would not accept, requesting in stead of them to haue deliuered vnto him a certain captiue by the Turks then kept prisoner; whom the Bassa caused freely to be deliuered vnto him, and withall sent backe againe the two hundred duckets to be diuided among the souldiers; which for all that Mansfeld refused, sending them backe againe vnto the Bassa. After which actions of ioy and peace, euery man returned home well content and pleased.

These things thus done, and the peace confirmed, the Bassa of Buda forthwith sent his Embassadors to Constantinople, certifying the great Sultan of the peace now made with the Christians: who thereof conceiuing great ioy, with a number of Ianizaries and others, in great
D magnificence went to the Church, to giue thanks therefore vnto his Prophet Mahomet, and spent the next day with great sport and pleasure, purposing from thenceforth to turne all his force and power for the suppressing of his Rebels in Asia, and the subduing of the Persian King.

The Haiduckes begin new stirs in Hungary.

Now albeit that there was a peace of late concluded with the Hungarians at Vienna (as is before declared) yet diuers stirs and tumults were neuertheleſſe by the Haiduckes in diuers places of the vpper Hungary still raised: insomuch that about the end of Nouember the Inhabitants of the County of Bocotsie were through their insolences inforced to ioyne battell with them, wherein a number were on both sides slaine, and three countrey villages burnt: so that it should seeme, no peace can be so well and indifferently made, but that some will be
E still troubling and impugning the same.

Botſcay calleth an assembly of the States of Hungary.

Shortly after, viz. the thirteenth of December, Botſcay calling together an assembly of the Estates of Hungary, propounded to them to be considered of, first, That the last reuolt, almost generally made throughout all Hungarie, with all the stirres and troubles thereby raised, had all been hitherto to no other end made, but for the defence of their Religion, and the maintenance of their antient liberty: Then, That whereas they by their generall good liking had made choice of him for their prince, and that hitherto he had done nothing without their knowledge and consent; and that euen now at this present he was by their consent ready to depart from the Castles and free Cities in the vpper Hungary; and had now sent his Letters vnto the Archduke Matthias, for the sending of his Deputies to receiue them; whether hee
F should from thence forth relinquish the title of a Prince, or not. And that forasmuch as no warre could bee made without great harme doing, that he would therefore for the auoiding of further troubles about such matters, that a Decree should be made, That all such wrongs and iniuries should bee forgiuen and forgotten, and that euery man should still hold all such goods

goods, whether they were moueable or immoueable, during the time of this late warre. He wished them also in the next generall assembly of the States, with all their power and endeauor, to vrge the repealing of the Article concerning the burning of Heretiques, with al other Articles contrary to their Religion: and not to remit any thing concerning the choice of their Palatine, as had in former time bin vsed: neither in this next generall assembly of the Estates to neglect any thing which might seeme to concerne their priuiledges and liberty. And that therefore they should be carefull to send thither wise and powerfull men, such as should not easily be ouercome with the clamors and outcries of the contrary part. At length he wished them to consider of this also, how a true and sincere confederation might bee made betwixt Hungary and Transyluania, so that a safe and quiet traffique and commerce might in both places be vsed.

Botscay dieth at Cossouia.

These things thus done, Botscay his sickneſſe still more and more increasing vpon him, so at length preuailed, that it made an end of him, to the great sorrow and griefe of all the people in generall, who had him in great honour and regard. He died at Cossouia the 30 of December, in the yeare 1606. He was honourably descended, and a man of great spirit, ambitious, wise, and politique, a great louer of his countrey, but an extreme enemy vnto the Germanes, and their gouernment in Hungary.

A little before his death, he earnestly perswaded Iohn Ianusie his Chancellor to continue in his alleagance to the Emperor, and not to raise new stirres, or so much as in him was, not to suffer any to be raised. Neuertheleſſe, such his wholesome counsell not regarded, there were some who immediatly after his death were about to haue raised new forces, for to haue seised vpon Transyluania, and so to haue stirred vp new troubles. For preuenting whereof, Matthias the Archduke forthwith sent a messenger vnto the States of the vpper Hungary; aduising them, That the great harmes and miseries considered which that part of Hungary had of late felt and endured, almost to the vtter ruine and destruction thereof (which proceeded not so much from the warres with the Turks, as from their owne ciuill tumults and seditions) they should from thenceforth giue themselues to quietneſſe and peace, and not again insolently to prescribe vnto the Emperor what to do, or how he was to dispose of the countrey of Transyluania, assuring them, that the Emperour would not hereafter winke at such their rebellious plots and deuices, but forthwith turne all his power and forces to the vtter destruction and rooting out of such rebellious and seditious persons, the disturbers of the common peace and quiet. By which the Archdukes warning, some, otherwise ready enough to haue raised new stirres and troubles, were not therein so forward as otherwise haply they would haue bin, but kept themselues quiet.

Now many there were (and yet are) which much maruelled, that the Christian Emperour would thus make peace with the great Sultan (as is aforesaid) he being then so much troubled with wars, both against his owne Rebels, and the Persian King, in Asia, most part of his forces being turned that way; so that a fitter time, or of more aduantage, could not haue been wished for the Emperor to haue done great matters against him in, and not only to haue holden his owne (which he did not) in Hungary, but to haue recouered some good part of his losses there before receiued also. And indeed true it is, that the time then well serued for both: but what auaileth opportunitie without power? And had the Hungarians (the greatest strength the Emperor hath hitherto had for the defence of that little which is yet left of that so great a kingdome) been at quiet and at his command, and he himselfe a Prince which had rested vpon his owne strength and power, euer at his pleasure to haue been raised, and as need should require supplied, without depending vpon his friends and allyes, then haply it might haue bin in him accounted a great ouersight, to haue omitted and ouerslipped so faire an opportunitie. But the Hungarians being then not only reuolted from him, but taking part with the Turks, and the Turks with them, and he of himselfe with his own power not able to hold the field against them, or well to maintaine a defensiue warre; and his friends and allyes, his wonted and greatest staies, then at his greatest need failing of him also, what should he in such a case do but as he did? to accept of a reasonable peace whilest he might haue it; especially against such an enemy, as whose whole power being turned against him, might haue easily endangered his whole estate. For it is not reasonably to be thought, how the Emperour should

of

of himselfe, without the great aid of the other Christian princes, his friends and allies, be able to withstand the huge and dreadfull power of the Othoman Emperour: as (without ominous presage be it spoken) it is to be feared it will too true appeare, whensoeuer his wars and troubles in the East being ended, he shall againe turne his forces this way towards the West.

Now Botscay was no sooner dead, but that some others of the Nobilitie both of Hungary and Transyluania (haply no lesse ambitious than was he) began by diuers means to seek after and to aspire to that principalitie. Of whom, though some other with the weakenesse of their owne meanes or with the threats of Matthias the Archduke deterred, ceased further to seeke after it: yet were there some others, who better supported, and nothing afraid of the Archdukes great words, laboured vnder hand to haue obtained it. For the crossing of whom, and the auoiding of further troubles to be raised by these ambitious competitors, certain of the Nobilitie of Transyluania gathered together at Claudianople the twelfth of February, made choice of Sigismund Rogotsie for their Gouernor and their Prince of Transyluania, and the more to assure him of their loue and affection towards him, bound themselues vnto him by the oath of their alleagance solemnely taken in the chiefe Church there. And afterward sent messengers to the Archduke Matthias at Vienna, to certifie him what they had done, and to excuse themselues thereof: who comming to Presburg the twelfth of March, there openly protested this election of Ragotsie for their Prince to haue been made, not for that they were about to rebell, or to reuolt from the Emperour, whom they would alwaies acknowledge for their Souereigne Lord; but for that their necessitie so required, many of the Nobilitie both of Transyluania and of Hungary gaping after this Principalitie, and going about, for the obtaining thereof, to raise new stirres and troubles. Howbeit, the same Ragotsie afterward doubting not to be able, without great trouble and danger, besides the Emperors displeasure, to hold the same Principalitie, of his own accord about a yeare after, gaue the same vp againe, and got himselfe out of the way to Sarentum: who was no sooner gone, but that Gabriel Bathor was about to haue stept into his place: vnto whom the States of Transyluania sent word by two of the Noblemen, That the free election of the Prince belonged to them, and that therefore he should not seeke by force to intrude himselfe into the Principalitie, but quietly to come vnto the election, and not to bring with him aboue a thousand horsemen, and fiue hundred foot. 1607

Neuhusse again deliuered vnto the Emperour.

About this time the strong towne of Neuhusse (otherwise called Neuheusel) the last yeare so hardly won by the Hungarian Rebels, was againe deliuered to Sigefrid Collonitz for the Emperor; who shortly after comming to Vienna, brought news of a great number of the Turks to haue risen vp in rebellion at Belgrade, to haue rifled the town, and to haue burnt another town, called Alischria, downe to the ground, and so with a great prey to be gone ouer to the Rebels: and also Redeius, Botscay his Lieutenant, in going to take possession of certain lands giuen him by Botscay, to haue been by his owne tenants, lying in wait for him vpon a streit passage, slaine.

The Ianizaries in mutinie against the Bassa of Buda.

Amongst the articles of the peace before concluded betwixt the Emperour and the Great Sultan, one was for the mutuall sending of Presents one of them vnto another: With which Presents, when as the Embassadour, by the Emperour appointed for the carriage of the same to Constantinople, from day to day deferred to set forward, the Turks and Tartars began to doubt, or else seemed to doubt of the good meaning of the Christians, for the obseruing of the aforesaid peace; and thereupon began againe not onely to roame abroad into the territories of the Christians, but also caused the pledges left at Buda for the obseruing of the peace, to bee hardly handled and clapt fast in prison: whom when as the Bassa of Buda shortly after suffered again a little to walke abroad, the proud Ianizaries were therewith so much offended, that rising in a tumult, they had almost slaine the Bassa with stones, heaping vpon him many reproachfull words, and vnto his face calling him traitor and betrayer of his Prince and countrey, one of which pledges they grieuously wounded also. Which their insolencie the Bassa in some sort to chastise, and to deterre them from doing the like againe, caused certaine of them the night following to be secretly taken, and being found, to bee so cast into the riuer of Danubius. And yet shortly after, they purposing to make a road vpon the Christians, to colour such harmes as they should therein doe, and to lay all the blame blame therof vpon the Christians, and to excuse themselues, they procured the Bassa to write vnto the Archduke Matthias, of great wrongs done vnto the Turkes by the Christians, when as there was no such thing at all. The effect of which letters were, That whereas it was in the articles of peace set down and agreed, that both parties should abstain from roads and excursions of each others countries; yet that the Christians for all that, had aboue an hundred times since the conclusion of the peace, made roads into diuers territories of the Turkes, and slaine many of them; especially them about Leoven and Setschin, who (as they said) had slain diuers Turkish merchants of Pesth, and tooke from them great sums of money; as they had also taken from them of Potsen an hundred and twenty horses, with diuers other cattell. Besides that, there were (as he said) four Turks more by the Christians slain neer vnto Canisia, and twenty eight more taken prisoners. And that in the mid way betwixt Hatwan and Buda, fiue and twenty Turks more were slaine, and their horses with all that they had beside caried away. Which things for that they tended to the breach of the peace, he could not (as he said) but aduertise his Highnesse of, for that he thought the Christian Captains vpon the borders of their territories to be men that hated peace, and to seeke by their excursions, as heretofore they had done, so now likewise, to disturbe this good worke begun, and by all sinister meanes to increase their own priuat profit. And that therefore seeing that he and the Turkes on their part, wished not to attempt or goe about any thing contrary to the Articles of the peace, that in like maner the Christians should also containe themselues within their owne bounds, and with all speed by Letters to giue him to vnderstand, whether they purposed to keep the peace or not.

The Grand Sultans proceedings against the Rebels in Asia.

The great Sultan (as is afore said) hauing made peace with the Christian Emperour, and now purposing to turne all his forces against his Rebels in Asia, and the Persian King (as wee haue oftentimes said) and desirous first to appease those his troubles at home, before hee had further to do with the Persian, he sent a messenger vnto the Bassa of Aleppo, to lay down arms and to deliuer vp his charge vnto another, to whom hee had appointed the same: promising, that if he would shew himselfe obedient vnto this his command, he would not onely pardon him all that was past, but receiue him into his grace and fauor also. Whereunto the Bassa answered, That he had neuer taken vp arms against his Maiestie, but to be reuenged of the Bassa's of Tripolis and Damasco his sworne enemies; who once taken out of the way, he would not only yeeld himselfe vnto his Maiestie, but deliuer also the tribute sent him from Caire and Alexandria, by him before intercepted; and if hee so pleased to imploy him, to bring great forces in his seruice against the Persian King. With which answer the Sultan not contented, shortly after sent the Visier Bassa with a great Army against the Rebels into Asia. Who by his wisedom and discretion, more than by force of arms, hauing appeased the rebels in the lesser Asia, and receiued certaine of the chiefest of them into his fauor; with an Army of an hundred and thirty thousand men marched directly toward Aleppo in Syria. Of whose comming the Bassa hauing intelligence, with an army of forty thousand men, most of them harquebusiers, went against him, and in a place of aduantage not past two miles from the city valiantly encountred him, and in three notable battels one after another withstood his whole forces. But making himselfe ready to haue incountred him the fourth time, and vnderstanding of great aid comming to the Visier from the Bassa's of Damasco and Tripolis, he with speed retyred: and returning into the City, hauing trussed vp his treasure, with such things as he made most reckoning of, fled into the mountains toward Persia, with the greatest part of his army yet left stil following him. After which vnfortunat battel, the Visier Bassa with his army comming vnto the city, at length by force tooke the same; and there to the terrour of the inhabitants, put to the sword all the garrison souldiers which the Bassa had left there.

But the Bassa purposing with new forces to haue encountred the Visier, finding himselfe together with his better fortune, vtterly forsaken by many of his former friends and Companions, thought it best at length to take his refuge vnto the mercy of the great Sultan. And so resolued, by Letters requested the Visier Bassa to write in his behalfe to the Sultan; and so if it were possible to procure his peace. Which the Visier hauing easily obtained, hee was by Letters from the great Sultan sent for to Constantinople; with assured promise, that hee should ſhould be employed in ſeruice againſt the Perſian King. Vpon receipt of which letters, the Baſſa with an hundred horſe ſet forward; and comming to Conſtantinople, there in the preſence of many other of the Baſſaes humbled himſelfe vnto the Sultan; who not onely kept his promiſe with him in pardoning of him; but alſo in regard of the antient family whereof he was diſcended, as alſo of his great valour and faire conditions, receiued him againe into his fauour, and cauſed all the goods taken from him in Syria, to be againe vnto him reſtored.

Now in the meane time the Great Sultan had by the meanes of the great Cham of Tartarie ſought to make peace with the Perſian King; but all in vaine: for that he demanded the City of Tauris, with all the prouinces before taken from him by the Perſians, to be againe vnto him reſtored: which the Perſian King vtterly denied, foraſmuch as he had now by force of Armes recouered the ſame, and which in former time belonged vnto his anceſtours. At which time the ſaid Perſian King, the more to entangle the Turke, writ vnto the King of Spaine, for the turning of his forces alſo againſt the Turke their common enemy; the Letters being to this effect: That though they were in Religion diuided, yet that in power and in common hatred againſt the Othoman Empire they were conjoyned: and that hee conſidering the greatneſſe of his power and armes, whereby hee was become his neighbour in the Eaſt, he could not but moſt entirely loue and fauour him: and that therefore hee had commanded all his Prouinces, as well in India as in other places thereabouts, that they ſhould ſhew vnto his ſubjects all manner of courteſie, and to demand of them no tribute. And that he hauing by force racouered the fortreſſe of Aden, which Solyman the Turkiſh Sultan had ſometime by treaſon ſurpriſed, he had appointed the ſame vnto the ſeruice of the Spaniſh Gouernour dwelling in Goa. And that his pleaſure was, That all the Chriſtians dwelling in his Kingdome ſhould enjoy the ſame liberty and priuiledges which his owne faithfull ſubjects had. And beſides declared, that he had now for ſeuen yeares ſpace made continuall warres againſt the Turkiſh Sultan, who by treaſon had taken from him the ſtrong Towne of Chiamon, for the recouery whereof he had now diuers times ouerthrowne his Armies. But foraſmuch as he was determined to make no end of this warre, vntill he had driuen the Sultan out of thoſe parts of the Eaſt, and recouered the ſeat of Iſmael and Iuchel, his anceſtours in Babylon and Caire, he therefore requeſted him, being a King of ſo great power, to joyne in league with him, and to ſend his dreadfull fleet into the Perſian gulfe; promiſing that by ſuch meanes the Othoman power driuen out, he could eaſily make himſelfe Lord of Syria and of Ægypt. Laſt of all, he reckoneth vp the Preſents he ſent him; to wit, the Images of Iſmael, Iuchel, and of Ionas, together with his owne, caſt in gold, and ſet with moſt rich pretious ſtones and pearles; a Perſian writing table, garniſhed with faire pretious ſtones, foure dogs by nature wonderfully ſpotted with red, yellow, and blew ſpots, two peeces of Arras adorned with moſt pretious ſtones and pearle, wherein the worthy acts of him that great Tamberlane were liuely to be ſeene: foure hunters hornes very ſmooth and richly garniſhed: twelue moſt gallant plumes of feathers of diuers colours: ſix drinking glaſſes which could not be broken, and couchbeds ſo cunningly made, as that they were like vnto chaires, hauing wrought in them the antient wars betwixt Aſcanius and Chiuſa King of the Medes.

The States of Hungary about to depart from Presburg, by the perſuaſion of the Archbiſhop there ſtaied

Now the Emperour, for the better appeaſing of all former troubles, and the preuenting of new, and the better aſſurance of the State, had about the middeſt of Auguſt called an aſſembly of the States of Hungary to Presburg; whither they being come, and hauing long in vaine expected the comming of Matthias the Archduke, by the Emperour appointed to haue beene Preſident in that aſſembly, were in the beginning of September about to haue returned home, but that requeſted by the Archduke to ſtay yet fifteen daies longer, they were contented ſo to do; but yet vpon condition, That if the Archduke then came not, they ſhould not be bound to ſtay any longer: For why, they by Letters certified of the attempts of the Tartars (who had requeſted to haue a place in the borders of Hungary, appointed them to dwell in) were deſirous in any wiſe to haue that aſſembly of Parliament put off to a further time, that ſo they might the better betime preuent and meet with ſuch the Tartars deſignes, whom they were loth to haue for their bad and troubleſome neighbours. And now the Turks in the meane time, in hope that the peace betwixt them and the Christians would not long hold, were come to Buda in such multitude, that the houses in the towne being not able to hold them, they were glad to set vp tents for them to lie in within the city: for that the Bassa would not suffer them to set vp any tents abroad in the fields, lest the Christians should suspect them to be about the raising of an army, and so disturbe the peace.

But the States of Hungary hauing staied full 15 daies, as the Archbishop had requested, and the Archduke not comming, made a solemne protestation before the Chapter of the Cathedrall church at Presburg, that they departed from Presburg, and so returned home, not vpon any discontentment or contumacy, but for want of things necessary, and other their vrgent occasions (hauing about seuen weekes expected the Archdukes comming, without whom nothing could be done) and yet that if it should please the Emperor by solemne summons at any time after to call another Parliament, they would be ready vpon such summons giuen, to returne againe to Presburg, and there to consult of all such things, as should be for the good and welfare of the Common-weale: so that nothing were propounded contrary to the articles they the yeare before agreed vpon at Vienna, which they would haue in all points kept whole and inuiolate: so that if any man should goe about or attempt any thing in disposing and ordring of the publike affaires contrary to that agreement, they would not in any wise ratifie the same, although it were by the Emperor himselfe allowed: which their protestation they requested to haue registred, and sealed with the Chapters Seale, and so not hauing done any thing at all for which they came, againe returned.

After whose departure from Presburg, the Haiduckes (men vsed to liue by their swords, and not by their labour) of all others most discontented with this generall peace, began now to raise new stirres and tumults, and dayly to grow stronger and stronger, craving aid of the Turks and Tartars, and not of the other Hungarians their countrymen, now againe returned to their wonted allegiance vnto the Christian Emperour: a number of which Haiduckes flocking to Buda, the Bassa there with some other of the Turks Captaines and Commanders, entered into consultation what to doe with these so fit instruments for the troubling of the Christians, and the disturbing of the peace. To entertaine them he durst not, and to cast them off he was loth; but yet purposing to vse them and to set them a worke as occasion should serue, he to prepare an enterance thereunto, by Letters threatened them of Comara, that except they better kept the capitulations and articles of the late peace, they should shortly heare of new matters. But in the meane time Letters were sent from the great Sultan to the Bassa of Buda, with charge, that although the Christians were reported to encrease their strength, he should yet keep himself within his bounds, and to attempt nothing against them, except they should proceed to manifest force: in which case he should not faile by all lawfull meanes to reuenge himselfe. Which the Sultans mind once made know, the Turks again departed from Buda, most part of the great ordnance that they brought with them being carried backe againe to Sigeth.

The Bassa of Buda forbiddeth to make warres vpon the Christians.

But the States of Hungary, beeing returned home from Presburg, and againe assembled, the foureteenth day of October, by their generall consent, decreed, That Tokay should againe be joyned vnto their jurisdiction; and that the great ordnance throughout all the free cities should be remoued and carried home vnto the places whereunto they before belonged: That the Vayuod of Transyluania should be admonished not to seperate Transyluania from Hungary: that the Bassa of Buda should be warned for to keepe his Turks within their owne bounds: and that the Nobility of Hungary should betime be admonished with all their force to represse the Haiduckes, and all other their enemies. Howbeit the Haiduckes proceeding in their insolent outrages more than before, tooke certaine forts, and with fire and sword spoyled many places of the Countrey, causing the people to sweare to be friends to them and the Turks, and enemies vnto the Germanes and Wallons: and demanding of Humanoius the Crowne wherewith Botscay had sometime beene rewarded from the Grand Seigniour, had a purpose to haue crowned him, or some other for their King: who for all that, by a messenger sent word vnto them, that he would not at their hands accept that dignity, but faithfully continue in his allegiance toward the Emperour. But when the States of the vpper Hungary were about to haue gone against these seditious and rebellious people to haue surprised them; they were from so doing deterred by the Bassa of Agria, threatening with his Turks and Tartars to take their parts if they should once take vp armes against them.

when

About the same time six hundred Haiducks going to the castle of Saint Andrew, and comming thither, could not be let in by the garrison souldiers, as they had desired; and perceiuing them to make no reckoning of their seruice, could no longer hold, but openly professed themselues to become the great Sultans seruants: who from thence marching to Budnoc, tooke it by force, and ransacked it: and so still seeking after booty, ran out towards Tockay, where by the way they were in a streit by Humanoius, lying in wait for them, entrapped, and almost all slaine; who afterward sent two of the Turks ensignes, taken from them, to Vienna, and to the terrour of others, empailed some of them vpon stakes, being brought prisoners to Cassouia. For which vnfortunat expedition, some other of the Haiduckes lighting vpon two of the captains, who by chance had escaped out of Humanoius his hands, put them both to death for the euill leading of their fellowes, hanging vp the one, and with their swords hewing the other all to peeces. Now by the report of some of the prisoners there taken, it was known this new rebellion of the Haiducks to haue bin raised by the procurement of the Bassaes of Buda and Agria, who by their messengers had promised vnto them all helpe. Which report to haue been true, the euent did shortly after confirme, for the 27 day of Nouember almost 15000 of these Haiducks hauing before receiued from the great Sultan 300000 duckats for pay, came and most streightly besieged Filek, a strong castle, the Turks sending them great ordnance from Agria; vnto whom these Haiducks had promised to deliuer all such places as they should win. Howbeit, the euent of this siege answered not to their desire: for Thomas Bosnias, Captaine of Filek, with his garrison all of Germane souldiers, so valiantly repulsed them, and the extremity of the Winter weather so distressed them, that they were glad to raise their siege, and be gone.

Six hundred Haiducks intercepted by Humanoius.

Now much about the same time, viz. about the beginning of Nouember, a great fire arose at Constantinople, wherein almost fiue hundred shops of wares with many other faire buildings were burnt, so that the harme there by fire done was esteemed to amount to aboue two millions of gold.

A great fire at Constantinople.

At the same time that the assembly of the States of Hungary should haue been holden at Presburg (as is before declared) the Emperor had appointed also another assembly of the nobility and States of Austria to be holden at Vienna; where after they were assembled, certain articles were vnto them on the Emperors behalfe propounded for them in that assembly then to consider of: as first, that for the keeping of the frontiers of Austria in quiet, the contribution by them granted amongst themselues the last yeare, should this yeare following be doubled. Then, That if it should fortune the enemy to attempt any thing of new against that Prouince, that in stead of the horses and money which they were woont to send vnto the warres, they should for the space of twelue moneths, or of the greatest part thereof, as occasion should require, of their owne costs maintaine ten companies of German footmen, euery company being three hundred strong; and as many troupes of Germane horsemen, euery troupe consisting of an hundred horse. And, that if for the better defence of the borders of Austria there should happily need a greater strength, the same should be raised in no other sort than was vsed in Hungary, nor at greater charges maintained. And, that if it should continue peace, these charges should be conuerted to the payment of the souldiers wages: And that the States & other subjects of that Prouince should so much as might be, be eased from the trouble of sending either of horse or foot for the defence of the frontiers. Thirdly, That Commissioners should be maintained this yeare also to attend the army, and certaine skilfull Captaines appointed for the chusing of a fit Generall for the army. That diligent regard and care should be had for the prouision of corne and victuals for the vse of the people in generall, as well in the time of peace as of warre. And that forasmuch as it much concerned the good of the Common weale, to haue the frontiers of the country toward Canisia diligently viewed, for feare of the Turks great garrison there still lying, that therefore certaine good and expert souldiers, which knew those places well, should be chosen, who together with the Deputies of the Emperour, Hungarians, and Stirians, riding about these confines should forthwith consider what were best to be done for the safety thereof. In briefe, seeing that of the safety of Rab, the welfare of the city of Vienna and of the forts thereabouts depended, that for the repairing of the fortifications thereof, and the better strengthening of the same, the summe of foure thousand florins should be appointed: and for the defence of the frontiers of Austria from the incursion of the Turks garrison of Canisia, fiue thousand: and for the furthering of the buildings at Nustorfe, fiue thousand moe should be paied: and that those who hitherto had beene slacke in paying of their contribution mony, should forthwith be enforced to pay the same. And also that it might be considered of, how that too much inhauncing of the value of monies might be restrained: that good orders might be kept; all the country cleared from the roberies of the souldiers, stragling here and there vp and downe the same: that the counterfeit Hungarian and Polonian mony should be prohibited, as not currant: that good order might be taken for the staying of the Plague, which then began in many places in Austria.

Concerning which Articles, when as the States there assembled complained, all that country to be with the long wars against the Turke, the incursions of the Rebels, and the outrages of the mutinous souldiers, already almost exhausted, and miserably bared of mony; no resolution could then, according as the necessity required, be made, but was vnto a further time deferred, and the assembly broken vp.

1608 A Diet of the Empire by the Emperour appointed at Ratisbone.

The Emperour at the same time appointed a Diet of the Empire to be holden at Ratisbone: wherin he hauing appointed Ferdinand Archduke of Austria, to be chiefe in his place, he with a notable traine of seuen hundred horse, and a gallant guard of footmen, came thither the eight and twentieth of Nouember, and was there by the citisens honourably receiued. Vnto which assembly, when as the Deputies of the Electors, and of the other Princes and Cities of the Empire, were in great number come, at length the twelfth of Ianuary Diuine seruice being done in the Cathedrall Church, Ferdinand the Archduke, with his Courtiers, the Emperours Counsellors, and other the Princes deputies being there present, taking horse before the Church, with a great company of the Nobility and Princes deputies following of him, went to the Court; the citisens in their armes standing on both sides: where Godfrey Ortelius the Emperours Secretary hauing in a notable Oration set forth the Emperours loue and affection towards the Electors, Princes and States of the Empire; and why, the Emperour K himselfe could not be present at this assembly, as willingly he would haue been; he propounded in his name fiue Articles for them in this their assembly to be especially considered of. First, how the Empire might hereafter be preserued and defended against the violence of the Turks, and the dangerous rebellions by their procurement stirred vp in Hungary, to the endangering of the whole Empire; especially seeing that the Turks themselues (with whom the peace was of late concluded) by their doings had heretofore more than sufficiently declared what trust or credit was to be giuen vnto them: and seeing that it is most manifest, them therein to haue sought for nothing else, than that hauing made or rather counterfeited a peace with the Christians for a time, for the suppressing of the Rebels, and the repressing of the inuasion of the Persians, they might after such victory against them obtained, come L better prouided, and stronger to ouercome the Christians. Which was easie to be seene: for that whilest they were yet intreating of peace, they had taken Strigonium, and hauing concluded peace, they ceased not as yet with their counsell and aid to helpe the Rebels in their rebellious tumults: which was manifestly to be perceiued by the Haiduckes themselues, who were not ashamed openly to professe themselues to be the great Sultans seruants, to require Cities and Fortresses to be yeelded vnto the Sultan, and to conspire against the very name of the Germanes. For the speedy remedy of which mischiefe, the Emperour had thought good, that consideration of this point should so bee had, as that the Princes should either consent vnto a certaine standing and perpetuall contribution, whereby a sufficient strength might alwaies bee ready, wherewith to withstand the enemies attempts: or M else that for certaine yeares twenty thousand footmeen and foure thousand horse might there be still in readinesse, to be maintained at the common charges of the Empire; which the Emperour (need so requiring) might vse against the common enemy. Or that if this

were

A were heauy or troubleſome vnto the States of the Empire, yet at leaſt they ſhould conſent yearely to contribute ſuch money as might ſuffice for the ſuſtayning of ſuch a power. Another poynt of this concluſion, was about the correcting and reforming of the adminiſtration of Iuſtice in the Imperiall Chamber. For ſeeing that in the former aſſemblies and meetings this matter could not be fully decided, by reaſon of certaine hinderances and impediments which then fell out, and that without the due adminiſtration and execution of Iuſtice no Empire could long ſtand or flouriſh, no more than the World could without the Sunne; his Imperiall Majeſty therefore would not haue the deliberation of this ſo neceſſary a point to be put off or referred vnto any other aſſembly, but to bee done and concluded in this preſent aſſembly. The third point to be conſidered of, was the warre which
B hath beene now ſo many yeares made in the Low-Countries, and the inconueniencie thereof redounding vnto the Empire. For whereas in the treaty of peace in the Low-Countries, (at which treaty both hee and the whole Empire ought to haue beene there preſent) for the better concluding and ending of the ſame, hee had heard the confederate Princes to be now acknowledged for a free State, he could not now any longer (as hee ſaid) forbeare, but that (ſeeing the Low-Countries to be a member and free of the Empire, and by the antient Records of the Empire, and of the Emperours, and by many other proofes it appeareth, the Gouernours of the Low-Countries to haue beene vaſſals of the Empire) he ſhould by Letters which were written vnto the King of Spaine, the Archduke Albertus, and the States of C the confederate Prouinces, admoniſh them, That they ſhould not proceed to doe or determine any thing in this matter, which might any way tend to the hurt or prejudice of the Emperour, of the Empire, and of the houſe of Auſtria. And foraſmuch as that warre in the Low-Countries had hitherto done no ſmall harme vnto the Empire, if happily it could not be agreed vpon betweene the parties, and that it ſhould happen the ſame warre to be any longer continued, or rather againe renewed, it ſhould then bee conſidered vpon, how the Empire might be ſatisfied for the great harme it had vntill this preſent thereby receiued, and how it might be from the like harme hereafter kept and preſerued. The fourth point in this conſultation, which was to be conſidered of, concerned the coyne. For whereas it is manifeſt, that the value of the mony to bee dayly more and more inhaunſed and rayſed, and that thereby not onely the Magiſtrates in the publique receipt, but the ſubjects alſo in ge-D nerall receiued great and manifeſt harme, foraſmuch as the price of ſuch neceſſary things which wee muſt in this life haue ordinary vſe of, muſt of neceſſity be ſtill more and more encreaſed, according to the value of the money, the Emperour thought good with mature deliberation to remedy this miſchiefe in this preſent aſſembly of the Empire. The fifth and laſt point which was to be conſidered vpon, was the perfecting of the Matriculer of the Empire, for the giuing vnto euery man that which of due belongeth vnto him: the perfecting of which Matriculer, the Emperour would haue in this aſſembly to be amongſt them conſidered of.

Which articles thus propounded, there fell a great contouerſie amongſt the Deputies of the Princes concerning the manner of their proceedings in theſe matters: as whether they ſhould conſider of theſe articles in ſuch order as they were propounded, or otherwiſe. And when as many thought it beſt firſt to conſider of the article, for the reformation of Iuſtice, being the ſecond article propounded to be conſidered of, and afterwards to come vnto the reſt of the articles to be afterward conſulted of: when as the two and twentieth day of Ianuary they came againe to Counſell, a writing was by the Emperours command read vnto them, whereby it was ſignified vnto the States of the Empire; the rebellious tumults by Botſcay and ſome others raiſed in Hungary to be yet by the Haiduckes continued, the Sultan himſelfe ſending of them rewards, and furniſhing them with ordnance and other things neceſſary for the warres, by the Gouernour of Agria, and the Baſſa of Buda, threatening all extremities vnto them which ſhould go about to reſiſt them; and then augmenting the danger which thereby might enſue vnto the Empire, and eſpecially vnto the Germane name, ſeeing that it was manifeſt thoſe rebellious Haiducks to haue eſpecially conſpired the deſtruction of the Germanes, and to haue confirmed that their league, by drinking of an health: It was requeſted, that leauing off theſe contentions, for the manner of their proceeding, they would turne their conſultations vnto the firſt article, and reſolue how remedy might in time bee giuen vnto this miſchiefe, and how aid might be ſent vnto the Emperour againſt his enemies.

The Deputies for the States of the Empire, in the aſſembly at Ratisbone, at variãce among themſelues.

But when as in their often meetings, nothing could be concluded, by reaſon of the diuers and different opinions betwixt the Proteſtants and Catholickes, Ferdinand the Archduke againe calling together the Deputies of the Electors, of the Princes, and of the Imperiall cities, cauſed it by Letters to be declared vnto them, How that the Emperour not without his great griefe and ſorrow had heard, That for certaine diſſention among them they could not yet come to conſult of the articles propounded in that aſſembly, to be by them conſidered of, but to his great griefe to be from day to day protracted: and that therefore he requeſted them, That either they themſelues would quietly end thoſe diſſentions amongſt themſelues, or elſe ſend their differences conceiued in writing vnto the Emperour to be decided, and ſo to come at length effectually to conſult of the propounded articles. And indeed the Deputies aforeſaid had in writing before exhibited their mindes concerning that point, for the manner of their proceeding, vnto the Archduke Ferdinand. But foraſmuch as that writing was according to the manner of the Catholickes and the Proteſtants, of two different ſorts; the former thinking it meet to conſult of the aforeſaid article in ſuch order as they were propounded; and firſt of all, to conſider of the contribution to be giuen againſt the Turks, and other enemies in Hungary; but the other labouring, firſt for the reformation of Iuſtice, and the confirmation of the peace of Religion: and afterward to prouide for aid againſt the forreine enemies, that ſo remedy might firſt be prouided for inward, then for outward griefes; eſpecially ſeeing that they had no expreſſe commandement firſt to determine of the contribution. Vnto whom the Archduke by writing againe anſwered, That he had receiued no other inſtruction from the Emperour, than that he ſhould conſult of the aforeſaid articles, with the Deputies there preſent, in ſuch order as they were propounded: Neither that it was conuenient, that the firſt article concerning contribution being neglected, they ſhould proceed vnto the ſecond, ſeeing that the enemies might eaſily, by the delay of putting off the ſame in effect, take occaſion in the meane time to do the Chriſtians great harme. Beſides that, that he had ſufficiently proteſted, That conſultation concerning the reformation of Iuſtice ſhould in this preſent aſſembly bee had alſo; neither that it was the Emperours minde to haue it deferred vnto any other aſſembly. Whereunto he exhorted the Proteſtants, That they ſhould forthwith endeauour by their Letters vnto the Electors and Princes, and other their ſuperiours, to obtaine leaue, that they might firſt determine ſome certainty about the firſt article concerning contribution; that ſo giuing way to the opinion of the other party, they might inſtantly prepare themſelues for the making of the contribution. Howbeit, this his perſuaſion preuailed nothing, by reaſon of their diſcord and diſſention about the order of their conſultation; the one part ſtill labouring for the contribution to be firſt agreed vpon, and the other part holding as hard for the reformation of Iuſtice, ſo that Ferdinand the Archduke out of hope of concluding any thing that good was, not in vaine to ſpend his coſt and time any longer, the fifth of May diſmiſſed the aſſembly, and returned home, as did all the reſt of the Electors and Princes Deputies, no one article that was propounded being ſo much as once reaſoned of, but all left vndecided: ſo ſmall care was there of the common good, either for the raiſing of money for the withſtanding of the Turks and Rebels, or for the reformation of Iuſtice; the neceſſity of both, either on the one ſide or the other, ſo hardly vrged, and yet in concluſion be neither reſpected or regarded.

The Diet broke off, and nothing concluded.

Matthias the Archduke commeth to Preſburg.

Whileſt the Diet to no purpoſe (as is aforeſaid) was by the Archduke Ferdinand holden at Ratisbone, Matthias the Archduke with a great traine following of him, came in the meane time to Presburg, where he was with much joy and triumph receiued; the garriſon ſouldiers in order ſtanding on both ſides the way as he went vnto the Caſtle: Napragius the Biſhop of Rab, with an eloquent Oration welcomming of him, in the preſence of certaine of the Hungarian Nobility, who had gone out as far as Hainburg to meet him, and now alſo honourably welcommed him, much rejoycing at his comming. The next day the Archbiſhop and Cardinall of Strigonium with a notable traine of Hungarian Gentlemen came to Presburg:

A Presburg: who forthwith receiued into the Caſtle, and hauing ſaluted the Archduke, conferred with him of many things in this aſſembly to be conferred of. In the meane time Illiſhaſchius (that noble Hungarian of whom we haue ſo often ſpoken) arriued there alſo with twelue coaches, ninety harquebuſiers, and forty Hungarian horſemen going before him, and three hundred Haiducks which had attended vpon him, being at the gate diſmiſſed. So the chiefe of the Hungarian States being come, the conſultation was begun the three and twentieth day of Ianuary: where when as the Archduke had propounded vnto the Hungarian Nobility, what things they were eſpecially to conſider of; it was by them anſwered, The Haiducks before their comming out, to haue determined, not one whit to depart from the articles the yeare before propounded and agreed of at Vienna; nor to admit any limitation
B at all of them: ſo that for the appeaſing of the tumults of the Haiduckes, there was no need of any new conſultation, but onely to confirme ſuch things as was then and there conſulted and agreed vpon. From which their reſolution when as the Hungarians were not to be remoued, and being grieued with the ſcoffing at of certaine of the Clergy (thereupon refuſing in any wiſe to make their appearance, as they were commanded, before the Cardinall in the caſtle) were about againe to depart; making a ſolemne proteſtation, themſelues to be guiltleſſe of ſuch harmes as ſhould thereof afterwards enſue; it was at length on all parts agreed vpon, That the whole matter ſhould be committed vnto ten choſen out of the Hungarian Counſellors, and ten moe of the Counſellors of Auſtria, to be conſulted and determined of. By whom being met all together the eight and twentieth of Ianuary in the houſe of Illiſhaſchius, it was
C concluded, That ſeeing that peace and quietneſſe in thoſe countries of Hungary and Auſtria could not otherwiſe be made, that thoſe articles and conditions, concerning which no agreement could the yeare before be made in the treaty at Vienna, being quite left off and neglected, the reſt of the articles which were there agreed vpon, ſhould be ſtill entirely obſerued and kept: and that it ſhould be lawfull for euery man to haue the free exerciſe of his Religion. Which thing the Commiſſioners of Auſtria by a ſpeciall writing there confirmed vnto the Hungarians. Whereby they declared themſelues after long and mature deliberation, to haue perceiued not onely by the true relation and report of the Hungarians, but alſo by their owne experience, vnto how great inconueniences the whole Kingdome of Hungary hath of long beene expoſed, as well for the warres it hath had with the common enemy of the Chriſtians, as for diuers the ciuile tumults and ſeditions therein; and that therefore they not
D willing that ſuch harmes ſhould in thoſe countries againe encreaſe and grow, to the infinite effuſion of Chriſtian bloud, after the articles of Pacification agreed vpon at Vienna, ſaw no other better remedy for theſe ſo great inconueniences, than that all parties ſhould ſtill hold themſelues contented with the ſame articles of Pacification concluded and agreed vpon in the ſaid aſſembly at Vienna. And that therefore they had decreed, thoſe articles to be ſincerely and inuiolately kept: and promiſed vnto the States of Hungary, to giue their aid for the defence of theſe articles, againſt all their enemies, being ready to giue good reaſon thereof before God, the Church, the Emperour Rodolph, the Archduke Matthias, and his other brethren, and all the Houſe of Auſtria, as the neceſſity of thoſe Countries ſhould ſeeme to E require: hoping alſo that the States of Hungary would reſt themſelues likewiſe in that Pacification of Vienna, and the aſſurance thereof, in all points obſeruing the ſame; and that they would alwaies giue their ready helpe and aid vnto the Countries of Auſtria, againſt their enemies in like manner. All which things thus agreed vpon and determined, Letters of Confederation were in the name of Matthias the Archduke, and of all as well the Eccleſiaſticall as Temporall States of Hungary and Auſtria, to this purpoſe written, That whereas for the appeaſing and ſuppreſſing of the tumults and ſeditions which the Haiducks by the inſtigation of the Turks had of late not doubted to raiſe, for the concluding of peace with the Great Sultan; they were met together at Presburg, and therein altogether buſied, F to deuiſe how the Kingdome of Hungary, with the Countries adjoyning, might from deſtruction be deliuered, the Chriſtian Religion preſerued, and from waſting and ſpoyling, whereunto they had hitherto beene expoſed, ſaued: Vpon mature deliberation, had as well in the name of them that were preſent, as of them that were abſent, made ſuch a Confederation and League; That if hereafter it ſhould fortune any detriment of Warre to be by any Commiſſioners appointed for the appeaſing of the new troubles in Hungary.

Letters of Confederation betwixt the States of Auſtria and Hungary, for the maintaining of the Articles of Pacification agreed vpon at Vienna.

any man made or done vnto the Hungarians, or the countries thereabout, for the aforesaid article of Pacification, which they had determined religiously to keep, that they would forthwith with their vnited forces come to aid their confederat brethren, and together with them to liue or die.

With these letters signed and sealed with the hand of the Archduke, and of the Noblemen there present, the first of February, Illishaschius with George Turson, were sent vnto the tumultuous Haiducks (who had now appointed their messages to be sent vnto the Sultan and the Tartar Cham, to craue their aid) to dissuade them from such their purpose, and to persuade them to quietnesse; threatening them withall, That if they would not hearken to such honest conditions, they should altogether, and at once, be set vpon and oppressed by the whole power of the States.

The Assembly at Presburg thus ended, Matthias the Archduke returning to Vienna, and forthwith calling together the States of Enseric, declared vnto them all that was done in the Assembly at Presburg. And for as much as that assembly was chiefely to that end appointed, That the Kingdome of Hungary should not altogether be pluckt away from the Empire; and that after the reuolt thereof, the greatest harme to be done by the incursions and spoyling of the enemies, would lie vpon the countries of Austria; he aduised them so to looke vnto themselues, and carefully to prouinde for the Common-weale, as that hauing mony alwaies in readinesse to maintaine an army, they might with all conuenient speed go to meet with the Haiducks, if haply they would not conforme themselues vnto the Articles of Pacification, but againe raise new broiles; that so they might defend and preserue their Country from their outrages.

The Prince of Valachia dieth; whose widow notably preserueth the Country for her son.

About the begining of this Spring, when as Ierome Prince of Valachia was dead, leauing behind him a sonne but thirteene yeares old, the Emperour admitted him, as yet not capable of the gouernment, vnder Tutors, vnto the succession of his heritage. Which thing the Valachians being by no meanes willing to endure, and bearing themselues vpon the helpe of the Turks, went about to make choice of another in stead of their Prince of late dead. For which cause, the Princesse widow by letters certified Polloscie her sonne in law, of this outrage and injury of her subjects: and hauing obtained of him a great summe of mony, and therewith raised an army of ten thousand good souldiers, went forth against the Valachians, and in open field ouercame them in so bloudy and terrible a battell, that hauing slaine fiue thousand of the Valachians and Turks, she had ouer them a notable victory, and by that means preserued the principality of that country for her son.

The Duke of Florence in vaine requested by the Turks to spare their gallies.

The Great Duke of Florence had hitherto done great harme with his fleet vnto the Turks in the Mediterranean sea: for which cause a messenger about this time comming vnto him in the Great Sultans name, promised him great matters, if he would from thenceforth forbeare to hurt and pursue the Turks Gallies. Which his request serued the Turks to no other purpose, but as it were to put oyle vnto the fire. For the Duke afterward caused new Gallies to be made, and his fleet encreased, and therewith did more harme than formerly he had done.

The Haiduckes refuse to admit of the Pacification made at Vienna.

Now although that after the ending of the Assembly at Presburg, Illishaschius and George Turson had deliuered vnto the Haiduckes the Articles of the Pacification, and commanded them from thenceforth to keepe themselues quiet; yet for all that, could they not yet be persuaded to hearken vnto such their counsell: for that they being men still accustomed to the wars, and liuing by their swords, could not endure to fall to Husbandry, and such other labours. For which cause they of the country about Gymeric, writ vnto them which dwelt in the country about Nusol, letters to this effect: That forasmuch as they being diuers times certified of the miserable estate of their neighbours, had refused to come to aid them, they should yet now remember how necessary a thing it were, with their conjoyned minds and forces to helpe one another; for that the Haiduckes hauing now passed the riuer of Teise, were broken into that Prouince, and were run as far as Budnoc: neither were they minded so to stay, but to rob and spoile all the country before them, if they were not with speed encountered. And the rather, for that but a few daies before, they had receiued thirty thousand Hungarian Duckats from the Turks, whom they now acknowledged for their Lords, with horses

horſes and other gifts to be diuided among their leaders and captaines; and moreouer, dayly expected aid from the Tartars, who in great number lay about Belgrade. Wherefore ſeeing it could not be expreſſed, what great harme and loſſe was by the Haiducks done, as well vnto the Noblemen themſelues, as to the common country-men; that they ſhould therefore thereof giue their neighbours to vnderſtand, and with all ſpeed to take vp armes againſt the ſame rebellious Haiducks.

Not long after, about the later end of March, Proclamation was made by the commandement of Matthias the Archduke, throughout all Auſtria, That euery man ſhould prouide himſelfe to take vp armes. The cauſe whereof men diuerſly ſuſpected: howbeit that vnto this Proclamation was this reaſon joyned, That the Archduke was determined himſelfe to go about the 14 of Aprill into Morauia, and there to gather together all his power, as well Hungarians, as Auſtrians and Haiducks, for the war he was to take in hand. There were alſo Letters in the Archdukes name ſent vnto the Vaſſals of Auſtria, to giue them to vnderſtand, That whereas they were not ignorant, what, for the obtaining of peace, and defence of theſe countries, had of late beene decreed at Presburg; and that all the States of Enſeric had approoued the report thereof receiued from their Deputies, and ſo promiſed their helpe and aid vnto the Archduke, as if that he himſelfe would take in hand any expedition, they would joyne themſelues vnto him, and together with him to liue or die: yet that there were ſome, which being more deſirous of war than peace, did not only not reſt vpon the former pacification, but gathered an army alſo in the borders of Morauia, with a purpoſe to make an inroad as well into Morauia, as into Auſtria it ſelfe. For which cauſe the States of Morauia were alſo enforced, for defence of themſelues to raiſe an army, and to craue helpe from their neighbors. And that therefore ſeeing the Archduke, mindefull of his promiſe for the common defence of the country, was reſolued to beſtow his life and all his fortunes, and in his owne perſon to vndertake an expedition into thoſe places from whence the greateſt danger was to be feared to fall vpon thoſe countries; neceſſity then required, that the States themſelues alſo ſhould ſuffer nothing to be wanting on their behalfe, but euery one of them together with their ſeruants forthwith to joyne themſelues vnto the Archduke, and to the vttermoſt of their power to endeauor themſelues to deliuer them and theirs from death and deſtruction. That God, in whoſe name this expedition was by them to be taken in hand, as by the louers of peace, might ſo in ſhort time make an end of all tumults, and grant vnto thoſe countries wiſhed peace and quietneſſe. And that therefore they were to be admoniſhed, That according to the tenor of the Decree made at Presburg, they with ſuch a number of horſe and foot as they could vpon the ſudden raiſe at a day to be ſhortly after vnto them named, ſhould joyne themſelues vnto the Archduke, and not to ſuffer any thing to let them in ſo doing. So that if haply any chance or ſickeneſſe ſhould happen vnto their Generall, yet notwithſtanding that they ſhould ſend their power vnder the leading of ſome other man, ſeeing that the Archduke himſelfe ſpared not to aduenture his life and fortunes, and (if God ſhould ſee it ſo good) account it a great gaine euen to loſe the ſame, ſo that thereby he might do his country good.

The Archduke Matthias prepareth himſelfe for his expedition into Morauia.

About the beginning of Aprill, the Cardinall returning from Prague to Vienna, brought with him the Emperors anſwer and reſolution, viz. That he did ratifie and confirme all things that were done and concluded with the Hungarians and Turks; but that his will was, That the confederation made betwixt the States of Hungary and Auſtria at Presburg, ſhould be void and of none effect. Which the Archduke proteſting that he could by no means like of, or ſuffer to be don, he the 15 of Aprill afterwards with a great number of the Peers, Nobility, and Counſellors, and a multitude of good ſouldiers, going out of Vienna towards the monaſtery of Neoburg, ſet forward vpon his journy, carrying with him eight and twenty pieces of ordnance, there expecting his ſouldiers in all places leuied: by publike Letters proteſting, That no man ſhould from his army receiue any harme; or if that by chance any harme were done vnto any man by his army, aſſuring his ſubjects it ſhould be againe vnto them reſtored and recompenſed.

But the rumor of this expedition being brought into Bohemia, the Nobility of ths country began to aſſemble themſelues the fifteenth day of Aprill; whither when as many of the Deputies of the other Countries were aſſembled alſo, it being decreed, That the Nobility of of the faithfull States there preſent, ſhould with all ſpeed returne home, and ſo prouide themſelues and their ſubjects of neceſſary armes; that, need ſo requiring, they ſhould therewith be able to defend themſelues and their countrey, the aſſembly was diſmiſſed. Beſides that, the Emperor himſelfe carefull for all euents, cauſed many both horſe and foot, to be brought to Prague, and be diuerſly bilited in the Citiſens houſes: and furthermore, the eighteenth of Aprill, by letters directed vnto certaine Princes of the Empire, and to certaine Earles alſo, citiſens, and other vaſſals of the Kingdome of Bohemia, warned them with all ſpeed to ſend aid vnto him at Prague. G

The Archduke Matthias with an army commeth to Zname in Morania.

But Matthias the Archduke in the meane time marching forward with an army of twenty thouſand horſe and foot, the foure and twentieth day of Aprill came to Zname, a city of Morauia; and was there, by the States of Morauia (who the day before were come thither alſo with foure hundred horſe) honourably receiued and brought into the City. From thence ſending out letters into the territories of Bohemia, and to the city of Prague, he requeſted, That they would ſend out of euery place two deputies for them, vnto the aſſembly to be holden at Zaſlauia, the fourth day of May: promiſing withall, That hee himſelfe there being preſent, would yeeld vnto their deputies a reaſon of his doings, as alſo what he meant to do hereafter. Beſides that, he by letters ſent vnto the Electors and other Princes of the Empire, declared the cauſe why he was enforced to make this expedition: and withall ſending vnto them a copy of the agreement made at Vienna, the fiue and twentieth day of Aprill, in the yeare 1606, by the common conſent of the Archdukes; in moſt friendly manner requeſted them, That they would not intermeddle in this buſineſſe, but rather with their counſell and aid to further the ſame. H I

But the three and twentieth day of Aprill, the Emperor ſent the Popes Embaſſadors, with the Embaſſadors of diuers other Princes and States, then lying at Prague with ſundry of the Bohemian Miniſters, in Embaſſage to the Archduke Matthias, ſtill lying at Zname: whom the Cardinal the next day after followed alſo, to make ſome good pacification, if it were poſſible, with the Archduke. But the Emperor in the meane time calling vnto him the counſellors of the old and new towne of Prague (contrary to his wonted manner) moſt courteouſly with his owne hand receiued them, and giuing them thanks for the faithfull duties by them hitherto performed; requeſted them, That hereafter they would continue in their like fidelity and loyalty alſo: moſt liberally promiſing vnto them all kindneſſe, with the reſtitution of the priuiledges concerning the ſhutting of the gates of the city: which liberty they had before loſt in the time of the Emperor Ferdinand. And not long after, a generall muſter was taken, not only in the city of Prague, and the townes thereabouts, but alſo throughout all the Kingdome of Bohemia, and three hundred musketiers appointed for the gard and keeping of the caſtle, vnder the command of Count Solmes, who had commiſſion for the raiſing of other ſouldiers alſo. K

The Tartar Cham dieth.

At the very ſame time it was from Conſtantinople certainely reported, the Tartar Cham to haue died, and the Turkiſh Sultan hauing receiued newes thereof, to haue diſmiſſed his ſonne, whom he hitherto had detained as a pledge, and with diuers ſhips and gallies, to haue cauſed him to be tranſported ouer the Blacke Sea, vnto the borders of Tartary, there to take poſſeſſion of his fathers kingdome. It was alſo then reported, certaine of the ſeditious Turks making of a road, to haue ſurpriſed Smirna, a rich city of Aſia, and to haue forraged all the country about it farre and neere, and comming vnto Magneſia, a chiefe city of that Country, to haue had ten thouſand crownes by the inhabitants offered, from thenceforth to ſpare the Country thereabouts. The Perſian King alſo at the ſame time notably to proceed in his warres, and to do the Turks great harme, the Turks and Tartars ſeeking in vaine to withſtand him. L

In the meane time Embaſſadours comming vnto Prague from the Electors of Saxony and Brandenburg, part of them the ninth of May, went vnto the Archduke Matthias to Zaſlauia, who ſtill lay there encamped with an army of fiue and twenty thouſand men: of whom they requeſted a truce for the ſpace of eight daies, for the making of a Pacification betwixt the Emperour and him, and for friendly ending of this buſineſſe, eaſily obtained the ſame, eſpecially ſeeing that thoſe Princes Electors, being joyned and bound vnto the Empe- M

rour

rour in a double confederation, as well for their Electorship, as in respect of the Kingdome of Bohemia, could not, as they said, otherwise do, but sent present aid vnto the Emperor his necessity so requiring; to which end they had now in readinesse certaine thousands of souldiers in the frontiers of their countries, to be forthwith sent vnto him: The other part of these Embassadors in the meane time staying with the Emperor, where after the German manner they were all prouided of good cheere and wine.

Matthias the Archduke marcheth towards Prague.

About the seuenteenth of May Matthias the Archduke with eighteene thousand men rose and marched towards Prague, Collonits with the rest of his army following him. And although that the Archduke had seuerely commanded his souldiers to abstaine from robbing, spoyling and, burning of the Country, and had diuers times seuerely punished some offenders therein, by hanging of some, and heading of others, yet could he by no meanes so restraine them, and keepe them in, but that some of them would sometimes be straggling abroad, and doing harme, especially the Hungarians, who were still running out euen as far as the Emperors campe, and the new city of Prague. Whom for all that, the Emperours souldiers (being then twenty thousand strong) would not meddle withall, being so commanded by the Emperour. Howbeit some of these straglers going too farre abroad into the country, were by the countrymen cut off and slaine.

The three and twentieth day of May an assembly of the States of Bohemia was called at Prague, the Emperour himselfe being there present; Adam Waldsteine carrying the drawne sword before him. In which assembly the Nobility and States of the country with one consent promised to spend their goods and liues in the Emperours quarrell; yet in the meane time requested these things following to be granted and confirmed vnto them: viz. That Religion according to the confession of Bohemia and Augusta should inuiolately be kept, and that they which professed the one, should not therefore scoffe or despise the other. That Bohemians only should be preferred to Archbishopricks, Abbotships, and other spirituall preferments. That the Archbishop should not meddle with ciuill and politicall affaires. That Ecclesiasticall offices should be permitted vnto the Protestant Ministers, as in former time, the Catholicks in the mean time holding what they had. That the Pontificall dispensation in causes of Matrimony, according to the Decree of the assembly holden in the yeare 1602, should be abrogated and taken away. That it should not be lawfull for Priests and other Ecclesiasticall persons to buy lands or territories, without the expresse consent of all the three States, but to hold themselues contented with their tythes and other their reuenues. That it should be lawfull for all men in their own ground and territories to build Churches for Religion, on both sides. That Protestants and Patrons of the Vniuersity of Prague should be joyned to the Consistory, as they were in the time of the Emperor Ferdinand. That one should be chosen for Burgraue in this assembly. That chiefe politicall offices should not be left void aboue a month. That vnto these politicall offices men of both religions should be admitted: so that if the Burgraue were a Catholike, the chiefe judge should be a Protestant. That euery man should enjoy his right, and that no Decree should be published against the same: neither that they which were of the Order of Knights should be rashly sued, or bound to any arrest. That one of the Bohemians should alwaies be chosen into the secret Counsell, and made acquainted with the Bohemian affaires. That euery man might haue accesse vnto the Emperor, and not all things to be done by his Counsellors. That it should be declared to all men, what was to be vnderstood by the crime of treason. That a difference should be made betwixt offences: and that no man should for any light offence, together with his goods, lose his life and reputation. That the suits of widows, orphans, and others also, should with expedition be dispatched, and not from day to day deferred. That from henceforth the father should not be bound to pay the sons debt, which he was run into without his knowledge; neither yet the son himselfe. That in politicall offices men should not be too much grieued with too heauy exactions. That men sued should not be summoned but in good tearms, and that such as were in any reputation be bound to any arrest, without the hearing of their cause, and much lesse to be imprisoned. That the sword vpon frowardnesse or madnesse taken out of the Church of Thine certaine yeres before, should be againe set in the former place. That Lawyers which pleaded mens causes, should be contented with such fees as were by common Decres appointed them.

And

And last of all to conclude, they in any wise requested the Emperour, that it would please him to ease the Nobility and States of Bohemia of these griefes, before they were compelled to answer vnto such things as were to be propounded vnto them on his behalfe. Who easily granted vnto most of these articles, those which concerned Religion only excepted; so that the Senators of the old towne of Prague obtained the desired sword to be againe forthwith set in the wonted place. But as for the businesse of Religion, it was altogether put off and deferred vnto the next assembly to be holden at the feast of Saint Michael.

About the end of May the Archduke Matthias his Embassadors hauing receiued safe conduct from the Emperor and the Nobility of the kingdome of Bohemia, came to Prague: and being admitted into the councell of the Nobility, Charles Count Tseratin to whom that charge was giuen, hauing in the Archdukes name first saluted the Nobility, caused what he and the rest had in charge, to be before them out of a long writing in the Bohemian tongue read: which done, when as, the Nobility so requiring, they were put aside, and almost an houre after were called againe, they receiued answer, That the points of the Embassage by them propounded, were greater and of more weight than that sufficient deliberation could thereof in so short a time be had; and that therefore it was by the Nobility thought meet, that Commissioners on both sides meeting together in the open field neere vnto Debritse should there consult of these articles, and by the consent of the Emperor and Archduke to do what they might to end the matter. Vnto which answer the Archdukes Embassadors consenting, the ninth of Iune returned againe vnto the campe. The Emperours Embassadors within two daies after with forty coaches and an hundred horse following them vnto the place appointed: who oftentimes going to and fro, at length so wrought the matter on both sides, that the businesse quietly and friendly ended, they were againe made friends.

The articles of which pacification and agreement betwixt the Emperor and the Archduke were the seuenteenth day of Iune in the castle of Prague openly read in the Bohemian tongue, Lichtenstein, Kintskie, and other Chiefetaines the Archdukes Embassadours, being there present, in order thus:

The Articles of pacification betwixt the Emperour and the Archduke Matthias.

That the Emperour refused not, but that the Crowne of Hungary should be deliuered into the Archduke Matthias his hands: and to yeeld vnto him the Kingdome of Hungary, and to remit vnto his subjects the oath of their allegiance before giuen vnto him, so that the Nobility and States of Hungary should chuse no other King but the Archduke. That in the next Dyet of the Empire, he should propound vnto the States of the Empire to be considered of, what contribution they ought to make vnto the Archduke for the defence of their frontiers, if happely longer warre were to be made with the Turke. That hee should cause the Writings which concerned that Kingdome of Hungary, within the space of two months to be deliuered vnto the Archduke. That he should likewise also surrender vp the Archdukedome of Austria, by himselfe hitherto possessed, vnto the Archduke: yet so, as that the Archduke should take vpon himselfe all the Emperours debt as well in Hungary as in Austria, and within a yeare should cause sufficient Recognizance or Caution sealed with his owne hand, to be deliuered vnto the Creditors. That he should cause all the Letters and Writings, as well concerning the vpper Austria, as the neather, within the same time to be deliuered vnto him, together with a Copy of the Priuiledges therein, vntill that deliberation might be had concerning them, to be transferred vnto him also. That the Nobility and States of Bohemia should in the Emperours name ratifie and confirme the Treaty held at Vienna, for the making of the peace betwixt the Emperour, the Turks, and the Hungarians. That they also should not refuse at the Emperours request, to promise vnto the Archduke a certaine succession into the Kingdome of Bohemia; but yet with condition, so that if it should happen the Emperour to die without heires male, before the death of the Archduke his brother: but if he should haue heires male lawfully begotten and vnder age: that in that case he should onely haue the rule and gouernment of the Kingdome of Bohemia, yet with certaine Bohemian Counsellors joyned vnto him. That the Archduke should by Writing confirme vnto the Nobility and States of Bohemia, That he should after the vsuall manner and fashion demand the Kingdome of Bohemia, being void of a King. That he should take the vsuall oath of a King, and alwaies haue like regard of all their priuiledges, as the other Kings

his

his predeceſſours had. That the States of Bohemia ſhould not gainesay, but that the Archduke might hereafter vſe the title of the deſigned King of Hungary. That the adminiſtration of the Marquiſet of Morauia ſhould be granted vnto the Archduke Matthias and his heires, together with the title of a Marqueſſe, till that after the death of the Emperor this Prouince was againe to reuert vnto him which was to enioy the kingdome of Bohemia. But if it ſhould happen the Archduke to die before the Emperour, the States of Bohemia ſhould not refuſe, but that this Prouince ſeparate apart, might (as ſhould ſeem good) chuſe vnto it ſelf a Patron and Defendor, vnto the death of the Emperour. That the Biſhopricke of Almits, hitherto in temporalities ſubiect to the King of Bohemia, ſhould from thenceforth acknowledge the Archduke Matthias to be the Gouernour thereof, leſt there ſhould be a confuſion of ſuites in Morauia; the Biſhop in the meane time hauing regard to his owne priuiledges. That the Emperor at the requeſt of the Archduke ſhould maintain the priuiledges of them of Sileſia, and of the States of the cities, and augment them alſo with new priuiledges, being reaſonable and conuenient. That for the defence of the borders againſt the Turks, the Nobility and States of Bohemia ſhould not contribute more than hitherto they were wont; yet ſauing to the Archduke power and abilitie in the generall meetings and aſſemblies of the Kingdome to intreat thereof, as the Emperor had hitherto had. That the titles of all the Prouinces which the Emperor did now ſurrender vnto the Archduke Matthias, ſhould be ſtill vnto him reſerued. That the Archduke Matthias ſhould vtterly renounce the County of Tirali, and ſurrender his part therof vnto the Emperor. That in the meetings and aſſemblies to come, the Archduke ſhould by all means endeauour, that the Emperour ſhould receiue a reaſonable yearely contribution out of thoſe Prouinces which he now departed with. That all offences hitherto committed, ſhould generally be forgiuen and pardoned, all and euery the perſons on both parties, onely Verkauious excepted, concerning whom, as alſo concerning his debt, the Nobility of Morauia had vndertaken in their next Aſſembly to take order. And that armes ſhould on both ſides be laid apart.

The Crowne of Hungary deliuered vnto the Archduke Mathias.

Which Articles thus agreed vpon, and on both parts accepted of, the Crowne of Hungarie, with the Ornaments thereto belonging, ſuch as are King Stephen his Sword, the golden Apple, with the Croſſe of the Kingdome vpon it, two paire of rich ſhooes, a very antient Robe, with a Royall Scepter, were by the Emperours chiefe Lieutenant carried into the campe, and there in a broad and open field deliuered vnto the Archduke Matthias: who with his army in order raunged, and ſixteene thouſand horſe and foot diuided into three battalions, after he had receiued theſe Royall ornaments, commanded three great vollies of ſhot to be diſcharged, and afterwards royally feaſted the Emperours Embaſſadour. Which pacification thus made, many out of the Archdukes camp, but eſpecially the Hungarians, went into the City of Prague, there to buy things neceſſary; and many came alſo out of the City to ſee the Archdukes camp. But in the mean time certaine inſolent ſoldiers hauing by night broken vp certaine ſhops of the Iewes, and carried out of them much rich wares, were the cauſe of great ſtirres and tumults in the City; inſomuch, that diuers of the ſouldiers were therefore caſt into priſon.

The firſt of Iuly King Matthias riſing with his army, departed from before Prague, taking his way with his chiefe Councellors towards Lintze, and diuiding his army into three parts, that ſo they might the more eaſilier paſſe through thoſe countries home. After the riſing of which army, a certaine noble Bohemian and a good ſouldier, called Cottouits, vnto whom the Hungarians and Haiduckes had in this expedition done great harme, with ſix hundred harquebuſiers and a number of countreymen went forth to a place called Partouitſe; where hauing cut off the paſſage, and cut downe trees croſſe the waies, that none might that way conueniently paſſe, hee with ſuch fury in a place of aduantage charged the Hungarians, comming that way, that hauing ſlaine about nine hundred of them, ſome others were alſo carried away priſoners, with a great booty of horſes, waggons, and other goods. With which deed the Hungarians grieued, trod downe the corne as they went, and began to ſet fire on the villages and houſes in the Countrey thereabouts. But the newes thereof being brought vnto the King, hee forthwith by Herbenſtein, Generall of the horſemen, commanded the Hungarians and Haiducks not onely to deſiſt from this their inſolencie, but themselues also, vpon a great penalty, to help to quench the fires by them raised.

King Matthias roially receiued at Vienna.

In the mean time the comming of King Matthias being reported at Vienna, great preparation was there made for receiuing of him, and bringing of him into the city according to his royal dignitie: who the 14 of Iuly towards night beeing come thither, with the Archduke Maximilian his brother, and 3000 horse, the Archbishop of Hungary, who with Count Trautsamius and many other of the Emperors counsellors and seruants went out of the city to meet him, and there amidst eight ensignes of German soldiers, and 1500 horsemen, as it were set in order of battel, receiued him with a long and eloquent oration; as did afterward Trautsamius, in the name of the States of Austria; the Emperors Counsellors also honorably welcomming him. Which done, mounting again to horse, the King with the Archduke Maximilian his brother, stayed vntil two troups of the horsmen of Vienna, in number about 400, were all entered into the city; and afterwards 1500 of Bucheims horsemen and the aforesaid eight ensignes of the Germans going before, and the Emperours Counsellors following them, the King himselfe with the Archduke his brother and all his train set forward; and passing ouer the bridge, wheron three triumphal arches were most sumptuously erected, he was by 3000 Citisens of Vienna, gallantly apparelled and armed, with much thundring of the great ordnance & vollies of small shot most magnificently receiued, diuers other triumphs and sports, to manifest the joy of the people, being there made also, which for breuities sake we passe ouer. But being gon a little further, he was by the Senators of Vienna on horseback receiued vnder a rich canopy, born vp by six of the antientest of the said Senators, and so brought to Saint Stephens Church: whither he was no sooner come, but that lighting from his horse, he was there receiued by the whole Clergy, and vnder a canopie brought into the Church; where after Seruice don, he was with like triumph and magnificence, through diuers other triumphall arches, brought to the Castle, the great ordnance on all sides still thundring off from thence, and from the walls and bulwarks of the town.

Troubls in Austria about religion.

But these triumphs and solemnities ended, shortly after when as they began to consult about such things as concerned the good gouernment of the kingdome of Hungary, and crowning of the King, and that the Protestant States of Austria in many places began to exercise their Religion according to the manner of the Confession of Augusta, and that the Ministers began openly to preach in the Churches there, Leopold the Archduke and Bishop of Passavia comming to Vienna, with Melinus the Popes Nuntio (but a little before come to Prague) with Cardinal Forgatsius and the Bishop of Vienna, with earnest and importunate soliciting of the King, obtained from him a commandement, That that exercise of religion should bee again abrogated, the Churches shut, and publique preaching forbidden. Which thing forthwith brought forth new stirs and troubles in Austria. For the Protestant States forthwith calling a Councel among themselues, by generall consent refused by oath of loyaltie and allegiance to binde themselues vnto the new King, vntill they had of him obtained the libertie for the free exercise of their religion; and combining themselues together, resolued euen with the losse of their liues and goods to maintain the free preaching of the Word, and exercise of their Religion according to the Confession of Augusta: and to that end commanded all their subiects and tenants to be ready in arms, that need so requiring, euery thirtieth man, tenth, or fifth might be prest to come forth vnto the wars. But hauing sent a supplication to the King, wherunto 280 of the nobilitie had set their hands, and receiuing no answer, but that they should desist from their purpose, and without delay to make their appearance to take their oath of allegiance to the King; they forthwith the 14 of September going to Horne, by Letters sent vnto the rest of the Roman Catholique States, protested themselues to be cleare, before God and the whole world, of all the euils and mischiefs that were afterward to insue, if those States not regarding the appeasing and ending of those troubles, or the safety of them their countrymen, should take their oath of allegiance vnto the King. And so forthwith raising an army, lest vpon the sudden they should be at Horn oppressed, they began by all means to prouide for their affairs. But the report therof comming to the States of Bohemia & Moravia their neighbors, they were by them giuen to vnderstand, That they would become Intercessors for them vnto the King, and yet not to be wanting vnto them at their need, as occasion should require.

In

In the mean time letters were brought from Constantinople to Vienna; declaring King Matthias his Embassadors hauing audience with the great Sultan, to haue in an eloquent Oration on the Kings behalfe promised, religiously to keep the peace of late made betweene them. And afterwards in the Kings name to haue offered his presents vnto the Sultan, and he in the presence of his chiefe Bassa's to haue receiued them. But when he came to request the gouernment of Transylvania, he would in no wise therunto consent, but gaue the same to Gabriel Bathor, with commandment vnto the Bassa of Buda for the establishing of him in this principalitie.

About the beginning of October, the Counties of Trautsame and Furstenburg were from King Matthias sent vnto the Protestant States at Horne; and shortly after them Maximilian the Archduke followed also. Who although they with most glorious promises sought to appease them, and by all means to draw them to take the oath of allegiance; yet could they no whit preuail with them, without granting the free exercise of their Religion. But the sixt of October, the Catholique States not expecting the consent of the Protestant States, at Vienna swore fealty vnto Matthias the new king of Hungary; the great ordnance in the mean time thundring off, with drums and trumpets in euery place of the City sounding, and the rest of the day being with great feasting, triumph, and solemnitie spent.

King Matthias hauing thus at Vienna receiued the oath of allegiance of the Catholiques, shortly after departing thence, the 22 of October comming to Presburg, was there by the nobility of Hungary receiued and brought into the city with 10000 soldiers. Whiest Estates afterward, viz. the 6 of Nouember, offered in writing vnto the King certaine articles, whereof they desired to be by him assured: most of which articles were drawne out of the pacification made at Vienna the 23 of August, Anno 1606; the chiefe effect wherof was this, That the free exercise of Religion should be permitted vnto all men in all the cities and towns of Hungary, not so much as that city to be excepted wherein the king should be resident. That no German captain should be suffered in any the strong forts of Hungary, but that the strong townes of Rab, Comora, Vivaria, and others, should be committed vnto the gouernment of naturall Hungarians born: That the crown of Hungary should stil be kept in Hungary, and committed to the keeping of Temporall men. That first and before all other things a Count Palatine should be choosen. That the king himself should alwaies reside in Hungarie; or if not, that the Palatine in his absence should haue ful power, with the Counsellors of estate of Hungary, to determine and conclude of all things; and that the King should therewith hold himselfe contented. That no publique office should be bestowed vpon any, but vpon such natural Hungarians as had of their country wel deserued; nor permitted to any for mony. That no Iesuites should be suffered in the kingdom; neither that Ecclesiastical men should be so much fauoured as formerly they had bin. That officers should not be bound to giue account of the administration of their offices, but before the Treasurers of Presburg, being natural Hungarians born. That from henceforth mony should not be carried out of the kingdom, as hitherto it had bin. That the Palatine being dead, the king should within a year keep another; the chiefe Iustice in the mean time after the old maner supplying his room.

Troubles in Austria about matters of religion.

The Protestant States of Austria had but a little before sent their Embassadors vnto the Nobilitie and States of Hungary then gathered together at Presburg; with request, That forasmuch as they could not by any intreaty obtaine of the king the free exercise of their religion, as wel within their cities as without, and that very necessitie had driuen them by force of arms to seek for the same, that they would by sending of them men, afford them such ayd as was vnto them due by the former pacification made at Vienna An. 1606. Which troubles of Austria the Nobilitie and States of Hungary desiring to haue appeased, sent George Turson and some others with letters of intercession in their behalfe vnto the Archduke Maximilian: which when they had deliuered vnto him, they receiued from him this answer, That K. Matthias neuer thought to disturb the common quiet of that country, or to attempt any thing against the priuiledges therof, granted by the Emperor Maximilian of happy memory; but to grant vnto the cities the liberty of Religion, he could by no meanes, partly in respect of conscience, partly for the danger that might therof insue from the Pope and the king of Spaine; and yet neuertheles he would promise to suffer and tolerate the free exercise of religion without the city, and in the bestowing of publique offices to haue no respect of Religion: yet with this this condition, That they ſhould lay down armes, ſubmit themſelues vnto the King, acknowledge their fault, and craue pardon for the ſame; for that in ſo doing, the States ſhould haply preuail more than by force of arms.

With which anſwer, ſeeing no better could be got, the Hungarian Embaſſadors going to the States of Auſtria, began by diuers reaſons earneſtly to perſuade them to ſubmit themſelues vnto the King. If the Hungarians ſhould (as they ſaid) giue aid vnto them of Auſtria, they ſhould in ſo doing, in ſtead of helping them but do them more harm; for that the Hungarian power could not be brought into Auſtria but to the vtter deſtruction thereof. That the league betwixt the Hungarians and them of Auſtria was a general league, and concerned as well the Catholiques as the Proteſtants. That the Chriſtian religion was neuer with the ſword planted or defended; Chriſt himſelfe ſaying, Them to be happy which therfore ſuffer perſecution; and commanding Peter to put vp his ſword into his ſcabberd. That it was an eaſie matter for euery man to raiſe ſtirs and tumults, but again to appeaſe them was farre more difficult. That by the taking vp of arms the free exerciſe of Religion could not bee furthered or prouided for, it being rather dangerous, leſt the contrary part preuailing it ſhould be vtterly ſuppreſſed. That by this means Hungary it ſelfe ſhould be expoſed to many dangers, for that not only new ſtirs might vpon this occaſion by the ſubiects thereof bee raiſed, but other forrein Princes alſo take vp arms againſt it alſo; the Emperor by force of arms ſeeking for his right, and the Turkiſh Sultan by a new inuaſion going about to bring the ſame vnder his ſubiection. And telling them further, That the Archduke had promiſed to take good order for all things, ſo that they would lay downe armes: and that the clemencie and bounty of theſe Princes being known, they were not to doubt but that they would perform their promiſe: and that the Hungarians could not now doe or attempt any thing againſt the King: but that if it ſhould happen theſe two Archdukes being dead without heirs male, the gouernment of theſe two prouinces ſhould come vnto the Archduke Ferdinand, that then they ſhould haue more cauſe to help them of Auſtria againſt him. Moravia they ſaid to be a free country, and yet the King to haue giuen therunto no more aſſurance for the liberty of religion, more than his bare promiſe. Wherfore ſeeing that both the fortune and chance of war was doubtful, and was not without great expence to be maintained; that they were of opinion, it to be beſt for the Proteſtant States of Auſtria to lay downe armes, and by way of requeſt to ſolicit their cauſe with the King.

Illiſhaſcius is choſen palatine of Hungary.

Mathias crowned King of Hungary.

In the mean time, the griefs wherof the Hungarians complained being taken away, and all controuerſies happily ended, Illiſhaſcius was by a general conſent choſen to be Palatine, and Matthias the 14 of November openly proclaimed King of Hungary, and the 19 of the ſame month in S. Martins church at Presburg in this maner crowned: firſt, the Royal Crowne was in a ſtately chariot caried out of the caſtle vnto the church, with a great number of the counſellors and Nobilitie of Hungary attending the ſame; in which Chariot were alſo caried ten enſignes, with the arms of the kingdom in them frilled vp; four of the Hungarian counſellors taking it out of the chariot, in a little cheſt couered with cloath of gold, and ſo carying it into the Chancel of the church. After which Matthias, together with the Archduke Maximilian his brother, followed on horſeback, both attyred in Hungarian apparel; and ſo going into the Chancel, there ſtayed about halfe an houre, vntill that hee was by two Biſhops brought forth vnto the Altar; before whom ten of the Hungarian Nobilitie caried the tenne aforeſaid Enſignes: after whom followed the Palatine with the Crowne, Endeodius with the royall Scepter, Forgatſie with the Apple of the kingdom, Turſo with King Stephens ſword, Tſechius carying the Pax, as they call it, Budian the Croſſe; the Cardinal Forgatſie ſaying Maſſe, with diuers Biſhops and Prelats helping of him: by whom the King was at the beginning of Seruice annointed with oile: where, while the Epiſtle and Goſpel were in reading, the Cardinal ſet the crown vpon the Kings head; all the people crying out, Long liue Matthias the King of Hungarie. But the King with the crown vpon his head, taking a drawn ſword out of Sigifred Collonitz the Marſhals hand, thrice brandiſhed it acroſſe ouer the Clergy mens heads, and receiued the Sacrament at the Cardinals hand. The Maſſe being ended, he by an highway couered with cloath, going in his royal robes from S. Martins church, vnto the bare-foot friers church, as he went, cauſed mony to be caſt abroad among the people. In which church after the firſt Chapter of the Goſpel of S. Iohn being read, he made 28 Knights. From thence the king with the Crowne

A crown yet on his head, and in his ſtately robes, went out of the city at S. Michaels gate, where on horſeback he was brought vnto an high ſtage couered with cloath, wheron hee was ſworne vnto the Hungarians as their King, and they vnto him as his ſubiects. And afterwards thrice mounting vp to horſe vpon a little hil made for that purpoſe, and ſo downe againe, and thrice brandiſhing his ſword acroſſe, he returned back again into the caſtle; where he and Maximilian the Archduke, Cardinal Forgatſie the Popes Nuntio, and the Palatine ſate down at one table; the reſt of the Hungarian Nobilitie, to the number of 70, ſitting down at ſix other tables, and ſo dining with great mirth; the Haiduks and common ſort of people being there bountifully feaſted alſo. Where many of them in ſcrambling for the money that was caſt abroad, and in taking vp of the cloath from the ſcaffold, hauing their hands and fingers cut off, & ſo lamed, B caried from thence the woful remembrance of what was there then don.

The ſolemnitie of this coronation thus paſt, King Matthias thought it good for him yet for a time to ſtay at Presburg, vntil the new building in the caſtle was ended, which the nobility of Hungarie had appointed for the keeping of the Crown of Hungary, to the intent that hee himſelfe might ſee the ſame, with other the royall ornaments put thereinto, and ſealed vp with his own ſeal: he in the meanwhile labouring to appeaſe great contentions, and to place fit men again in the great offices of the commonweale; for that the Hungarians would by no means ſuffer the Germans to enioy any of the ſame: for which cauſe many of the chiefe officers, men of great authoritie, were diſplaced; and among them Sigifrid Collonitz, a man who had much deſerued of the kingdom of Hungary. Howbeit ſhortly after, he by the counſel of
C Maximilian the Archduke, was by the Hungarians themſelues, repenting them of that they had done, not only reſtored vnto his former offices, but had by them (and that not without his iuſt deſert) euen greater preferments offered him alſo: ſo mutable a thing the iudgment of the Common people is. But Illiſhaſcius now Palatine of Hungary, the 28 of Nouember talking with king Matthias at large, earneſtly intreated him in the behalfe of the proteſtant States of Auſtria; eſpecially for that the other Proteſtant States of Hungary ſeemed now in their behalfe to be much mooued alſo; and the Moravian Embaſſadors openly at the ſame time proteſting, That their States could in no wiſe forſake them their friends the States of Auſtria, if their need ſo required. And albeit that both the Elector of Saxony and other Princes of the Empire, were become earneſt interceſſors alſo vnto the King for them; yet the Popes Nuntio
D ſo hardly withſtood them, as nothing could as then be granted.

About the beginning of December the king returning again from Presburg to Vienna, the Proteſtant States of Auſtria about the 16 of December ſent Erneſtus the free Baron of Landau, Maximilian Polheim, Sebaſtian Grobner, Charles Forberger, Pilgram Sitſendorff, and Chriſtopher Buchner, their Embaſſadors vnto the King, to know what they ſhould truſt to. Who the 27 of December receiued anſwer, That they ſhould hold themſelues contented with ſuch anſwer as they had before receiued, and to ſubmit themſelues to the kings pleaſure; or els to doe what they themſelues thought good. With which anſwer they returning, the States forthwith began to leuy new forces, perſuading the ſoldiers, that mindful of their oaths they ſhould truly ſerue whitherſoeuer and againſt whom ſoeuer they were ſent.

1609. The States of Auſtria in arms about religion.

E And now a great army of the Proteſtant States of Auſtria lay in the villages about Crembſa and Spaine, ſo that thoſe two towns were thought to bee in great danger of them. For the ſtrengthning of which places, Bucheime was by the King ſent thither with 1500 horſe, & certain pieces of great ordnance: and an edict withall publiſhed the 10 of Ianuary, charging the States to be preſent at Vienna the 21 day of the ſame moneth, to take their oath of allegiance to the king. Howbeit they moſt ſtifly ſtil refuſed ſo to do, or to remit any thing of that they had before required. Inſomuch that Maximilian the Archduke, who hitherto had not a little labored in this cauſe, was quite out of hope to bring them to any conformitie, or to make any good end therof. In the mean time certaine of Bucheims horſemen on the kings part, being a-F bout to haue taken vp a place, ſuch as they thought conuenient for them to lodge in, had like to haue bin diſappointed of the ſame by the horſemen of Gerrane on the States ſide. About which matter Bucheim comming forth with 7 troups of horſmen, and Gerrane but with three, and three companies of foot, there was betwixt them an hot skirmiſh for the time, fought the thirteenth day of Ianuary, in which an hundred of Bucheims horſemen were ſlaine, but of Gerrane his men not ſo many, they hauing the aduantage of the ground, and ſo therewith in the skirmish holpen,both for the defence of themselues, and the annoying of their enemies. C Wherof the King hauing knowledge,and therwith much mooued,beside the aforesaid Edict, caused another to be proclaimed at Vienna, against such souldiers as serued the protestants; proscribing them all,and denouncing them Rebels,except before the 21 day of Ianuarie,they laying down armes,departed out of the protestants Campe. Howbeit the Protestant States were so far from dismissing their forces,as that they with new supplies strengthned the same; and hauing taken an hil not far from Hallenbynne,and from thence discharging three tyre of 20 pieces of great ordnance,strook a great fear and terror into the minds of the kings soldiers within the town.

About this time also the States of Moravia (that nothing might on their part bee wanting for the making of an attonement betwixt the king and the Protestant States of Austria) sent H some of their Embassadors vnto those States at Horn,and other some vnto the King at Vienna;who hauing accesse vnto the King,declared vnto him, The States of Moravia, from whom they came,to be earnestly importuned by the protestant States of Austria,to send them ayd, according to the agreement made with them the year before. And told him moreouer, That this maner of his proceeding tended not vnto peace and quietnes, but rather vnto the trouble and destruction both of the kingdome and of all the prouinces to him belonging. All that errour,the ground of those troubles,they said to depend vpon a corrupt interpretation or misconstruing of words, rather than of the matter it selfe; so that by men desirous of peace, it might easily be composed and ended. And that therfore their request vnto his Majesty was, That he hauing regard not only vnto the good and welfare of his prouinces and subiects, but I euen of himselfe and of his honour also, would of his clemencie and goodnesse vouchsafe to giue remedy vnto the present danger, and auert the miserable calamities now hanging ouer them,and euen ready to fall vpon their heads. The protestant States they said to bee content to put the controuersie to be decided and composed by certain graue & wise men,to be chosen arbitrators on both parts; yet with this condition, That for 14 daies space no hostilitie should on either side be vsed. That the inhabitants both aboue and beneath Amisum should be comprised within this truce. That such as were kept in durance for religion should bee set at libertie: and that all highwaies and passages should be from all ambushes and other dangers cleared. Vnto which their requests the king condescending,gaue leaue vnto the States of Moravia,vpon the most equall conditions they could deuise,to compose and end all differen- K ces:who so laboured in this businesse betwixt the King and the protestant States of Austria, that at length,viz. the twelfth of March,a pacification was made betweene them: Leopold the Archduke,Melinus the Popes Nuntio,the Bishop of Vienna, and other great men of the contrary religion and faction,seeking in vain to hinder the same. The chief articles and points in the Pacification were these:That the Nobility in their castles and towns,as also in their houses in the city,should for themselues and their people haue the free exercise of their religion. That the free exercise of preaching might be vsed in three Churches,at Iersdore,Trihelsuincel,and Horn. That the other Churches shut vp might again be opened by three of the Romish and three of the Reformed religion,and the free exercise of Religion in them vsed. That Counsellors and other publique officers should from thenceforth indifferently be chosen of L men of both religions; but such Offices as were hereditarie should so still remain. That the election of Magistrates and other publique Officers in towns and cities, should from thenceforth be made by the Magistrates and Citisens themselues,and not to be nominated from the Court,as hitherto they had beene. That no Church should bee hereafter shut against either part,but their own Churches to be left vnto them both,quietly to vse. That the townesmen and Citisens in their townes and Cities should from thenceforth haue power to make choice of their ministers and preachers; and that for them it should be lawfull to visit the sicke, and to administer vnto them the Lords supper. That the oath of Allegiance should be taken of them of the Reformed religion, in like maner as it had beene before taken of them of the Romish,but yet not with the same ceremonies of the Romish church;all vnitie and confederati- M on with them to be had, to be taken away. That all grudging hatred and quarrell should bee on both sides forgiuen,and for euer forgotten. Wolfgang of Hoffkirch, Voltsogius, and others, remoued and put from their offices for not taking the oth of allegiance,being again receiued into fauor and restored to their places. That it might be lawful for the towns and cities aboue

The troubles in Austria pacified.

Amisum,

A Amisum, to haue the free exercise of the Reformed religion in their suburbs and hospitals.

It was not long after this pacification made, but that king Mathias the 17 of May, going to Lintze with 300 horse, was there with eight troups of horsmen & fifteen companies of foot, by the States sent forth to meet him, most honorably receiued, and by three triumphal arches brought into the city: where he receiued of the States of the religion the oath of obedience; which with much ioy, triumph, and feasting performed, he the 27 of the same moneth againe returned to Vienna. The aforesaid States of Austria in the mean time with great zeal continuing the free exercise of their Religion at Horn, a great multitude of people daily resorting vnto the sermons there made: they of the Romish religion much grieuing and fretting therat. The King himselfe also being come to Vienna, put diuers of the Romish Catholiques out of
B their offices, placing others of the Reformed religion in their rooms, to the great discontentment of many.

About this time the Bassa of Agria, notwithstanding the peace, had for the sum of twenty thousand crowns before hand payd, secretly compacted with one Andrew Drake, to haue the strong town of Filek in the vpper Hungary deliuered vnto him. Which the traitor had intended (as he himself confessed) to haue performed, by setting of the house wherin he himself dwelt, by night on fire: vnto the quenching wherof the garison soldiers resorting, his purpose was in the mean time to haue secretly let in the Turks, and so to haue deliuered the town into their hands. But this his so wicked a purpose in good time discouered, and by him confessed, he was therfore, as he had wel deserued, aliue cut into four pieces; a iust reward for his so
C foul intended treason. The Bassa of Buda also, contrary to the treaty of peace, about the same time went about to haue exacted the oath of allegiance of aboue 400 country villages of the Christians, being not comprised within the foresaid treaty. But as the Turks for their part were secretly plotting how to incroch vpon the Christians, and to do them harm; so the Haiducks on the other side in great numbers gathered together in the vpper Hungary, began here and there to molest and trouble the Turks, vntil they were by their superiors commanded to desist from so doing, for disturbing of the peace.

Now about this time also Illishascius the County Palatine of Hungary died at Vienna; A man much beloued of the Hungarians his countrymen, and now by them no lesse lamented for. Whose dead body was with great honor afterward conueyed from Vienna, vnto his owne D territorie in Hungary, and there with all funeral pomp buried with his Ancestors. In whose stead George Turson was afterward by the general consent of 150 of the Hungarian Nobilitie chosen County Palatine of Hungary, and so with the vniuersal and solemn acclamations of the people saluted.

Illishascius dieth.

And now the troubles for religion were scarcely wel ended in Austria (as is aforesaid) but that the like, or rather worse, began forthwith euen for the same quarrel to arise in Bohemia; the Hussites (as they call them) most earnestly importuning the Emperor for the free exercise of their Religion, or rather for the taking away of certaine grieuances done to their religion: and the Roman Catholiques euen at the same time leauing nothing vnattempted, that might serue to bring them of the Religion into hatred with the Emperour and others sitting at the E helm of the gouernment of estate; and so to frustrat whatsoeuer the Emperor had in the general assembly of the States the last year granted vnto them of the Religion, for the free exercise and aduancement therof. The composing of which controuersie (tending vnto the rending in sunder of the whole kingdom) when as the Emperor had referred vnto certain of his chiefe Counsellors, and they altogether fauoring the Roman Catholiques, would giue them of the Religion no certain answer wheron to rest; they therwith much discontented, as out of hope to by them relieued, and in great fear to be by their aduersaries, as enemies vnto the state oppressed, layd their heads together, and after good deliberation taken, What were best for them to doe, both for the safety of themselues, their wiues, children, and Religion; they by a generall consent, of themselues appointed the fourth of May to hold a generall meeting of F them of the Religion in the new Court at Prague, there to consult of all matters concerning the businesse of Religion. And yet in the mean time openly in parliament protesting, by the mouth of Wentceslaus Bodovitsius a Baron of Bohemia, them to haue appointed this Assembly for the Emperors good, and for the common quiet of the whole realme; as also for the better informing informing of the Emperor of all matters, and to prouide that the Emperor and the kingdom might not through the means and perſuaſions of thoſe his euill Counſellors be brought into extream peril and danger. Immediatly after, the States of the Religion with all ſpeed diſpatched their Embaſſadors vnto King Matthias, the Elector Palatine, the Duke of Saxonie, and the Duke of Brunſwick, to requeſt them, by their interceſſion to become mediators for them vnto the Emperor, for the obtaining of the free exerciſe of their religion, which in all points agreed with the Confeſſion of Auguſta, and which long before was exhibited vnto Maximilian the Emperor, and by him allowed. Now in the mean time theſe the States of the Religion were by ſome for theſe their proceedings commended; but by other ſome not onely blamed, but alſo accuſed of rebellion againſt the Emperor and the State. But the matter beeing declared vnto the Emperour, he complaining vnto himſelfe of the inconſiderateneſſe of his Counſellors; to maintain his authoritie, cauſed the Parliament then in hand to be prorogued: and to ſeem of himſelf to grant that which he could not wel withſtand, commanded by a Decree, that ſame very day to be appointed for the concluding of that article of Religion, on which the States themſelues had appointed their aſſembly to be holden in the new Court at Prague. Notwithſtanding which Decree, many troubleſome ſpirits publiquely ſet forth other their conceits in writing, to far other purpoſe; grieuouſly therin reprehending the ſtates of the Religion, for that of themſelues they had appointed a day for their aſſembly into the new Court at Prague: which (as they ſaid) was nothing elſe, but in a rebellious maner to riſe againſt the Lawes of the kingdome, and the authoritie of their lawfull Prince; and therefore aduiſed them to forbear from making any ſuch aſſembly as was by them appointed. Hereof aroſe great troubles euen vnder the Emperors noſe, in Prague the chief city of Bohemia; they of the Religion not daring to truſt the Roman Catholiques, neither they them: beeing ſtill ready vpon euery falſe report or vain ſurmiſe to go together by the ears; vntill that the Emperor for the ſtaying of theſe troubles, and for the auoiding of further danger, was glad to cauſe it to be openly proclaimed in the new Court at Prague, That his Imperiall Maieſtie hauing receiued and vnderſtood the Apologie of the States, now did abrogate that his Edict publiſhed againſt them but a few daies before; and now by this his new Edict did account all the States of the Religion for his faithfull and welbeloued Subiects; and as of them, vnto whom the right of the kingdom and the Kings oath belonged, as wel as to all the other ſtates of the kingdome. And that hee alſo had thoſe the ſame States excuſed, in that they for the good of his Majeſty & of the whole kingdom had appointed their Aſſembly in the new court at Prague; and that therefore he denounced them in ſo doing, not to haue don any thing contrary vnto his Majeſty. And that he appointed the 25 day of May for the generall aſſembly of Parliament to be holden in the Caſtle of Prague, for the ending of the Article concerning Religion, and the reforming of other the publique grieuances of the Commonweal. Yet with this prouiſo, That the ſaid States ſhould ſafely and quietly come vnto the parliament, without entertaining of any forrein ſoldiers: as that his Majeſtie ſhould alſo, not by himſelfe nor any other, for pay entertaine any, or ſuffer any forreine ſouldiers to come into the kingdome. Which the Emperors Edict being proclaimed, the States of the Religion hauing made their publique prayers, and ſung certain hymnes and pſalmes vnto the glory of God, for the good ſucceſſe of their buſines, left the new court at Prague, and returned euery man home to their own houſes, to make themſelues ready to come vnto the Parliament, to be holden at the appointed day.

New Troubles for religion in Bohemia.

But the day appointed for the Parliament being come, and the Emperour ſtill delaying the matter, the States of the Religion weary of ſuch long delayes, and in doubt to be therewith deluded, as hauing not receiued from the Emperour any ſuch anſwer as whereon they might reſt; the third of Iune offered vnto the Emperour a ſhort Writing concerning their griefe and further purpoſe, to this effect. They had (as they ſaid) expected, and well hoped, That regard beeing had not onely of ſo many requeſts of ſo great and moſt noble Princes, made in their behalfe, but euen of the Emperour his promiſe alſo, made vnto them, both in the generall Aſſembly of the States the laſt yeare, and in the late precept of the Emperours alſo, they ſhould at length haue receiued ſuch anſwer vnto their petition, concerning the free exerciſe of their Religion, as wheron they might haue ſafely reſted. Which for that it had not bin

yet

A yet don, they referred the doing therof vnto God and further time; imputing the blame ther-of not vnto his Imperial Maiesty, but vnto the vnquiet and troublesome natures of some as well the Ecclesiastical as Temporall magistrats and persons. But forasmuch as they meant no longer to be deluded by their enemies, much lesse to be defrauded of his Maiesties Royal promise, which was now vnto the world known; they had thought good to offer and present vnto his Maiesty a writing conceiued in the Bohemian tongue, according vnto which they desired to be secured concerning the free exercise of their Religion: most humbly requesting his Maiesty to accept of the same, and at length to satisfie their requests. Which if it might not be granted (the Emperours Maiesty hauing more respect vnto the troublesome Clergie men, and some other his euill affected Counsellors, than to the faithfull States and subiects of B his kingdome) that then they would rest themselues vpon the Decree made in the Assembly holden in the year 1608, and vpon the last Edict of his Maiesty: yet with this solemn protestation, That seeing they had by certain information vnderstood, much warlike preparation, especially in Bavaria, to be made, and diuers consultations in many places to be held against the States of the Religion (his Imperial Maiesty and other his faithful counsellors knowing nothing therof) which might tend vnto the ruin and destruction both of his Maiesty and of the whole kingdom; they themselues would take vpon them the defence thereof, & do their indeauor, that furnished with men and armes, they might to the vtmost of their power defend him their Soueraign, together with themselues and the whole kingdome, against the inuasion of their forrein enemies.

C In the mean time while these things were thus in doing, an Embassadour came from the Duke of Saxonie to Prague, to intreat the Emperour for the States, and for the granting of them the free exercise of their Religion. The Embassadors of the States of Silesia forthwith following of them also: who also requested of the Emperor, to haue the liberty for the free exercise of their Religion by him confirmed vnto them; promising their most ready help & aid vnto the States of Bohemia, if need should so require. But the States of Bohemia hauing in vain from day to day expected answer from the Emperour, turning themselues vnto their former resolution for the defence of themselues and of their Religion; forthwith raised a great number both of horse and foot; who with their well known Captains and commanders they brought euen vnto the city of Prague. Howbeit at length, viz. the eleuenth day of Iuly, the D Saxon Embassadours earnestly soliciting their cause, and vrging their request, according to their desire receiued answer from the Emperour, by letters from his Maiesty written to this effect.

The Emperors letters for the free exercise of Religion in Bohemia.

He gaue all men (as he said) to vnderstand, and by these his Letters witnessed to eternall memory, That after that all the free States of his kingdome of Bohemia, which in the receiuing of the Lords Supper participate the body and bloud of our Lord Christ Iesus vnder both kinds, his faithfull subiects, had in the Assembly holden in the Castle at Prague, in the year 1608, in all humilitie requested, That it might be lawfull for them to hold, and freely to exercise their Religion according to the Confession of Augusta (as some call it) exhibited vnto his father Maximilian the Emperour, of most happy memory, and by him to the sayd E States allowed: and that he then and at that time, by reason of other most weighty busines, for which that assembly was then called, and such as could suffer no procrastination or delay, had thought it good to defer the allowing and ratifying of this their petition, vnto this present assembly of Parliament: and that the same States now again assembled, incessantly renewing this their former petition, and hauing therunto ioyned also the request and intercession of certain noble personages, had requested to be therein satisfied: and that hee and his Counsellors would consult, how prouision might be made for his subiects in the kingdome of Bohemia, as wel communicating vnder both kinds as vnder one; now at length to haue effected the same. Wherefore seeing that his will and desire was, in these and future times peace and quietnesse might for the increasing of the Kingdome, be preserued and kept a-F mongst his subiects of all the three Estates of the kingdom of Bohemia, communicating as well vnder the one as vnder both kinds: That both parties might freely and without any impediment or let, haue the free exercise of their Religion, whereby they were both in hope to obtain euerlasting saluation. And to the intent that accomplishment and satisfaction might in

in all points be made, as well according to the breaking vp of the Assembly of Parliament in G the yeare, 1608, as to the performance of his own precept, of late published (whereby he hath acknowledged, and euen acknowledgeth, those same Estates communicating vnder both kinds, and subscribing to this confession, for his faithfull and loyall subiects, vnto whom the rights and immunities of the kingdome of Bohemia belonged) he by the common consent of the Councellors, and other Magistrates of the Kingdome, did determine, That his subiects communicating both vnder one and both kinds, should friendly and peaceably liue together, without wronging or reuiling of one another; and that vpon the paine and penalty in the law set downe, to bee inflicted vpon them that should otherwise do. And moreouer, seeing that they which communicated but vnder one kinde, enioyed the free exercise of their Religion in all points throughout the kingdome of Bohemia, that he gaue leaue and commanded, that H they also which communicated vnder both kindes, viz. all the States of the Religion, with all such as embraced the Confession of Bohemia, sometime exhibited to Maximilian the Emperour his father, in the Parliament holden in the yeare 1575, and now againe to himselfe presented, should euery where and in all places of the Kingdome, haue the free exercise of their Religion, without the let or interruption of any; to retaine the same, vntill a generall vnion of Religion, and an ending of all dissention and controuersies might be made.
Moreouer, That he did grant vnto the States of the Religion this fauour, That they should haue the lower Consistorie at Prague, with power to conforme the same according to their owne Confession. That they might lawfully make their Priests, as well in the Bohemian as Germane Tongue, and set them ouer their Churches, without any let of the Archbishop I of Prague. That hee did also restore vnto them the Vniuersitie of Prague, which for many yeares agoe belonged vnto the States of the Religion vnder both kindes: giuing them power againe to open the same, to furnish it with graue and learned men of their owne Confession, to beautifie it with good Lawes, and to appoint certaine of their owne companie and profession for Gouernours and defendors as well of the Consistorie as of the Vniuersitie: whom so by the states appointed and chosen, he without any stay or delay, or other instruction or information than they should from the States receiue, would confirme in that their office, and pronounce them for the lawfull Defendors: yet so, as that if he being letted by other great businesse, cannot performe the same within the space of fourteen days, they shall neuertheles continue Defendors, and as well enioy the charge of the Office committed vnto them, as if they K had been therein by him confirmed: and that one or other of their number being dead, it shall be lawfull for the States to chuse other in their places. And if that beside the Churches which they now hold, they would build other moe, or erect more schooles for the instructing of the youth, it shall bee lawfull for them freely and without any let so to doe, as well in the Cities as in the Countrey Townes and villages. And forasmuch as in some of the Cities of the Kingdome of Bohemia, men of both Religions did dwell together, he therefore did will and command, That for the preseruation of peace and quietnesse, either part freely exercising their Religion, and obeying their Priests, should by no means either hurt or trouble them on the other part; and much lesse to hinder them to bury their dead in their Churches or Churchyards, with the ringing or tolling of their Bels, or goe about to turne any man from his L Religion, of what state or condition soeuer he be, whether hee dwell in the City or in the Countrey Towne or village; or by force to draw them to their opinion, or to take their part.
For that he onely respected that peace and quietnesse might bee kept, and that mutuall loue might still grow amongst all the three States: Vnto which end and purpose, that he for himselfe and his heires, the King of Bohemia his Successors, in the faith and word of a King, did grant and promise vnto the States of the Religion, vnto whom this common peace of Religion (as they call it) belongs, as to a principall member of the Empire, all these things to be for euer inuiolably kept (the ecclesiastical and temporall persons whatsoeuer resisting) so that no contrary precept or Edict, should either by himself, or any other his heirs or successors be published against the States of the religion, or being published by any, should be accounted effectuall and strong, especially seeing that he by these letters, pronounces all the Edicts hitherto published against these the states of the religion, to be void, frustrate, and of none effect. Neither would that any thing of those which were don by the States of the Religion whilst they M sought

A sought for the confirmation of this article concerning Religion should for euer be laid vnto their charge, or by any man by way of reproch obiected vnto them. And that therefore hee streitly charged and commanded all Magistrats, and such as bare rule in Bohemia, that they should to the vtmost of their power protect & defend al the three States, together with them of the Religion, and neither themselues to trouble them, nor suffer them to be by any others for the exercise of their Religion molested or troubled: for that hee and other the Kings of Bohemia his successors, would most seuerely chastise all such as should offend against these his Maiesties letters (which to be for euer remembred, he would cause to be inrolled in the publique Records of Parliament) whether such offenders were ecclesiastical or lay men, to be sharply punished as troublers of the common peace.

B This was the sum of his Majesties letter, which he caused to bee publiquely set vp in the castle of Prague the 13 of Iuly, that it might be to all men knowne, this article of Religion, which was the first of the articles in this parliament to be concluded and agreed vpon according to the mind of the States of the Religion; and so their requests to be in all points satisfied. Who forthwith therupon the fifteenth of Iuly caused the first publique sermon according to the confession of Augusta, to be preached in the German tongue in a church of them of the Religion, which had for a long time before bin shut vp. At which time they also sent vnto the Elector of Saxonie, to send vnto them certain learned men, for the setting vp of the Vniuersitie, and the gouerning of the Consistory at Prague. And yet for all this, the Embassadors for the States of Silesia earnestly labouring with the Emperor for the liberty of Reli-
C gion to be granted to the said States and the rest of the inhabitants of the prouince, the states of Bohemia refused in any wise to dismisse their soldiers whom they had mustred neere vnto Roggenson, vntil the Silesians were of their request in that point satisfied: offring also to the Emperor a large label of the said States griefs.

Now it may be some hauing read so much as is before written concerning these late troubles about the free exercise of the Reformed Religion, but especially in Bohemia, Austria, Moravia, and Silesia, may deeme the same both tedious and beside our purpose. Vnto whom indeed it is not written; but rather vnto such as who together with my selfe (the Warres betwixt the Christians and the Turks ended, and the peace concluded as is aforesaid) desire to know in what state those frontier Countries stand; which being the greatest bulwarks of that
D side of Christendome, and the chiefe territories of the House of Austria, are (the peace being either expired, or otherwise broken off) most subiect vnto the fury of the puissant enemy, as neerest vnto him, and so like soonest to feel his great force and power, which prefineth vnto it selfe neither bounds nor measure, whilst there is any thing farther to be had. Against whom the Christian Emperor had no forces of his owne to oppose, more than such as he could raise out of the reliques of Hungary, and the aforesaid frontier Countries; all together but weake helpes against so puissant an enemy, as neuer commeth into the field but with a world of men following him. But yet much weaker, being as now of late they were, euery one of them a-part diuided in themselues about matters of Religion, the incredible maladies of the Christian Estates and Commonweales. The heauy and lamentable effect whereof too much of E late appeared in the losse of Strigonium, won by the Turks with a farre lesse army than euer the Grand Seigniors Lieutenant General was wont to come into Hungary: and yet the Christian Emperor by reason of the reuolt of the Hungarians, vpon a discontentment about the exercise of their Religion, not able of himselfe to relieue the distressed city of Strigonium, or yet to take the field with an army of any strength, for defence of the rest of his cities or territories. So weak are euen the greatest princes, their subiects being amongst themselues diuided in minds.

But to stray further: The Turks Embassador in the mean time with a notable traine of an hundred and fifty Turks comming from Vienna the one and twentieth of September, and there hauing saluted and with great gifts presented the King, set forward towards Prague, F where he was by the citizens and certain noblemen of the Emperors counsel, the 12 of October honourably receiued, and the nineteenth of the same month admitted vnto the Emperors presence, first presented to him from the great Sultan his master a rich Tent of diuers colors, most curiously wrought with faire Orient Pearle of great value; and then foure couragious horses, horſes, all furniſhed with moſt rich and ſumptuous furniture. Hee preſented vnto him alſo G certain Turkiſh weapons ſet and garniſhed with pretious ſtones ; and a princely Turks Robe ſuch as they vſe at their mariages, gliſtring with gold and pretious ſtones, with diuers other rare things of leſſe value. Together with which he deliuered vnto him the great Sultans letters ; and withall deſired the confirmation of the peace before made for twenty yeares, to bee now again renewed.

Vnto which Embaſſadour letters were afterwards deliuered from the Emperour, together with certain other rich preſents to be by him preſented vnto the great Sultan : viz. certaine Caroches lined within with Damaske, and couered without with black veluet ; ſix faire and gallant horſes moſt richly furniſhed ; a Clocke of wonderfull workmanſhip ; two fair Deskes to write vpon of Ebonie : with diuers other like Preſents of no ſmall price. Who ſo H charged with preſents, and bountifully rewarded, and to his good liking anſwered, was afterward in the beginning of Ianuary, with a train of 200 horſe from Prague honourably diſmiſſed.

HERE

HERE FOLLOWETH A CONTINVATION OF THIS PRESENT HISTORY (CONTAINING THOSE OCCVRRENTS WHICH HAVE HAPPENED TO THE TVRKISH EMPIRE SINCE THE YEARE OF OVR LORD, 1609, TO THE YEAR 1917, &c.)

By EDWARD GRIMSTON, Sergeant at Armes.

THe Turkiſh Emperour, hauing beene freed ſome yeares from the care of wars in Hungary, in regard that he had concluded a truce for twenty yeares with the Emperor Rodulphus, he now bent all his forces againſt his Rebels in Aſia, and the Sophy of Perſia, where he had no good ſucceſſe this yeare. For the Perſians hauing formerly extended their Monarchy far into the Turkiſh Empire, and defeated Cicala Baſſa and others in diuers battels; now they entered into the Prouince of Babylon, with a deſigne to ioyne it to Perſia. Achmat to ſtay the courſe of their proſperity, ſends a mighty army thither, vnder the command of Naſſut Baſſa: but his fortune was no better than thoſe that went before him. The Perſians came to meet him, gaue him battell, defeated him, and ſlew 20000 of his men. Theſe mournfull newes comming to Court, did much diſtemper the Sultans minde; he could not endure it ſhould be ſaid, that the Perſians had defeated his mighty armies thrice in open battell; and much leſſe that it ſhould be ſo, and that he ſhould ſeiſe vpon his countries: wherefore to repaire this loſſe, he leuies new forces to be commanded by Combolat Baſſa of Aleppo, who had bin the moſt powerfull Rebel in Aſia, and was newly reconciled and brought into fauor with the grand Seignior. This man came to the Port to receiue the Sultans commandements, and and to paſſe his army into Aſia: but whether hauing ſome ſuſpition, that he had intelligence with the Perſians, or that ſuch as enuied his greatneſſe, had giuen ſome bad impreſſion of his loyalty to the Sultan; within ſome few daies after his arriuall, Achmat cauſed him to be ſlain by his Capigi. Whereby we may well obſerue, that he that is a Rebell to his Prince, which hath ſo violently oppreſt his ſubjects, and ſet his countries on fire by ſedition, the which he hath bin forced to quench with the bloud of innocents, cannot but end his daies violently and miſerably, ſeeing that God reuengeth the bloud of innocents vpon the guilty.

1610

The Perſians enter into the Prouince of Babylon.

The Turke defeated.

The Perſian ſeeing what aduantage he had gotten of the Turke, laboured by the bruit of his victories, to draw the Chriſtian Princes vnto his party, and with them wholly to ruine the Othomans; the which he had ſo happily begun. For the effecting whereof he ſent his Embaſſadors to the Emperor being at Prague, to perſuade him to breake the peace with the Turke, and to ioine with him. The Embaſſadors arriued at Prague this yeare with rich and rare Preſents: firſt a croſſe of gold inricht with many pretious ſtones; amongſt which there was one piece of amber, whereon was ſeene the figure of the Virgin Mary, holding her young babe in her armes; the which was ſo artificially grauen, as it might be thought the worke of nature: a Topas of exceeding greatneſſe, giuen to the King of Perſia by an Indian King: two kniues of damaske, with hafts of jaſper, and their ſheaths couered with diamonds: a certaine kind of Indian wood of moſt excellent vertue, moſt ſouereigne to cure the paines of the breſt, and to purge the ſtomacke: the gall of a pellican excellent to cure the pluriſie, appoplexie, and feuer: two topazes the one white, and the other violet; this laſt was ſo big, as it was capable to make a cup: an Amathiſt as big as a hens egge; a Perſian bow inlaid with the veines of a camell, Preſents ſent to the Emperor by the Perſian.

camell, and a rough diamond exceeding great; a white ſtone of the colour of water, which was a preſeruatiue againſt the plague, being hung about ones necke; three orientall pearles exceeding big; three rich eſcarbuncles, and three maruellous faire diamonds; and withall this, a ſerpents horne, much eſteemed for the rare vertues. All theſe Preſents were very well accepted, and the Embaſſadors much honoured. But what apparance was there for the Emperor, who had ſo great differences with his brother Matthias King of Hungary, who ſaw the greateſt part of his ſubjects rebelled againſt him, his prouinces in diuiſion, Tranſyluania in combuſtion by the conſpiracy which had bin diſcouered againſt Battori, and finally a generall diſorder ouer all, to breake the peace with the Turke, (who was at his dore, retained only with this bar) and to allie himſelfe with the Perſian ſo far from his countries, from whom he could draw no ſuccors, but only that he might keep the Othoman buſie in Aſia? Thus the Embaſſadors returned, carrying home nothing but good words.

His affairs will not ſuffer him to joyne with the Perſian.

The troubles which hapned in Bohemia, made him ſee of what importance it was to entertaine peace with the Turke: for if he had broken it by the Perſians perſuaſion, hee had giuen his enemy an aſſured meanes to ruine him: for the Archduke Leopold intred into Bohemia with an army of 9000 foot, and 3000 horſe; he ſurpriſed petty Prague, attempted the old towne, and ſeeking to force it, he ſlew many which made reſiſtance. Matthias King of Hungary aduertiſed of this diſorder, parts from Auſtria with a powerfull army, and aduanceth ſpeedily towards Bohemia. It was to be feared, that if Matthias army and Leopolds had met neer vnto Prague, it had been the loſſe and ouerthrow of the one, and the deſolation nnd ruine of the country. The Emperor foreſeeing this danger, cauſed 300000 florens to be deliuered to Romeo, Leopolds Lieutenant, for the paiment of his army, and ſo ſent him out of Bohemia. This diuiſion betwixt the Princes of the houſe of Auſtria, grew by the practiſes of ſome of the Emperors Counſell, who being deligated judges to compound the differences of the Bohemians of diuers religions, in ſtead of labouring to reconcile and vnite thoſe people, for the good of the publike, they made themſelues partiſans to the one to oppreſſe the other, and therby they drew the Princes into a dangerous diuiſion, for the ſupport of parties. And moreouer, the Archdukes Ferdinand and Leopold, practiſed to depriue Matthias King of Hungary of the ſucceſſion which he pretended of Bohemia; leſt that being maſter, he ſhould take reuenge vpon their partiſans for the troubles wherewith they had formerly afflicted the country. Such was the eſtate of affaires in Germany, giuing the Turke a faire opportunity, if he ſhould haue embraced ſo rich an occaſion, to make his profit of their combuſtions. But the confirmation of the truce, and the affaires of his houſe kept him in Thrace.

Let vs ſee how the Turke ſpeeds at ſea; where he hath the Knights of Malta, the Sicilians, and Neapolitanes, and the Florentines, vigilant and valiant enemies to annoy him, and croſſe his deſignes. The laſt yeare, which was 1609, the Chriſtians had no good ſucceſſe, loſſe fell particularly vpon the Knights of Malta: for he that fights often can hardly vanquiſh alwaies. The gallion of the Order, commanded by Chiualier Guidoti, an Italian, had made two voyages to ſea very fortunatly, and brought to Malta 300 Turkiſh ſlaues. The encouragement of this good ſucceſſe engaged many Knights to diuers enterpriſes. They armed certain gallions, and made a fleet of ten good ſhips of war, as vnfortunat in their courſes as the gallion of the Order had before beene ſucceſſefull: for meeting with the Turks fleet in the ſeas of Cyprus, they were ſet vpon, and moſt of them ſlaine or made ſlaues. The Knight Freſſinet was ſlaine, and the red gallion wherein he commanded, taken by the Turks; but it was after a whole daies fight. Ambuſon otherwiſe called Fueillade another Knight, was made a ſlaue, and his gallion taken: the Knight Ouges run the ſame fortune, with the loſſe of a gallion. Freſſinet hauing brought a pinnace with him to attend his ſhip, after ſome fight neere vnto the gallion, it eſcaped by night. In this voiage vnfortunat for them of Malta, the gallion of the Order would needs ſeeke ſome better aduenture: the Knights of Baillou and Rhodes did accompany him either of them with a ſmall gallion. He ſet vpon the carauan of the Turks fleet, neer the Iſland of the Rhodes, his ſucceſſefull beginning of this combat made him hope for victory, and the number of the enemies veſſels for a rich booty: for there were among the reſt two great gallions of the Sultans; theſe are ſhips which belong to the Great Seigniors women, loden commonly with great riches: but 20 gallies of Rhodes ſeeing this fight, came out of their port to ſuccor them, and by the fauour of a faire wind, drew them into ſafety.

The gallions of Malta defeated by the Turks.

At

At Malta the bruit was, That the Turks army consisting of fourscore gallies, should go and besiege the Isle of Goza, whereas a Knight called Saint-Liger commanded. Whereupon the Great Master had resolued to fortifie the Castle of the Island, with a good counterscarfe, which he caused to be made, sending thither two hundred souldiers, and thirty Knights for supply, all braue souldiers, who might haue made a great resistance, if the Turks had attempted it: but the enemies fleet passed on and gaue them time to rest.

But this yeare 1610, Vignaucourt the Great Master of Malta, sent the fiue gallies of the Order into Barbary, towards the Port Farino, memorable, for that it was the hauen where S. Lewis the French King ended the nauigation of his daies, and at his returne from Ierusalem and Palestine, went to receiue in Heauen the glorious palmes of his holy actions. The gallies of Biserta had accustomed to fetch palmes there in that season (which was in the Spring time) whom the gallies of Malta had a designe to surprise. But the contrary winds, and the tempestuous seas ouerthrew that enterprise; yet their voiage was not altogether vnprofitable; for returning towards Malta, being within the channell, which diuides the Island from that of Sicily, they encountered with a great gallion of Tunes, armed by a Turke called Carousinan, being in view of the gallies of Malta: The Rayse (who commanded) assured his company, and smiling, promised to free them from their enemies. Being so transported with vanity, as he spake confidently, that he would not feare twenty of the gallies of Malta: but this his pride was soone abated with his ruine; for the fiue gallies came close vnder him, and plied him so furiously with their cannon, as they sunke him. The gally wherein Verdella an Italian Knight commanded, had like to haue beene lost, for being grapled with the gallion, if the diligence of Verdille had not speedily retired it. The Turks after the losse of their vessell, began to swim away, but they were all made slaues to serue in the gallies of Malta, who this yeare had no other fruits of their generous enterprises.

The course of the Duke of Tuscany his Gallies.

The gallies of Cosmo de Medicis great Duke of Tuskany, parted from Ligorne, vnder the conduct of the Commander and Admirall Inghiraim, and running along st the coast of Barbary, they tooke a Turkish ship in the sight of Algier, loaden with merchandise, armes, and munition of war, freeing many Christian slaues which were in it. This happy beginning promised them better fortune. They passe on, and some twenty fiue leagues beyond Algiers they goe to surprise the towne of Bisquirre, a small towne in circuit, but strong and well walled. Inghirami drawing neere vnto the coast, tooke downe his masts, lest they should discouer his comming. In the meane time he sent two long boats to find some place fit for their landing; the which being carefully obserued, Colonell Bindy landed his men, and about eleuen a clocke at night marched in good order towards the towne, and forced it. The darkenesse of the night kept them from spoiling it; being content only to set their guards and sentinels in the most important places of the wall: but day being come, the souldiers made themselues masters of the towne, which they sacked and spoiled. Certaine Moores and Turks, during the obscurity of the night, had retired themselues into a Mosque which they fortified: They were summoned to yeeld; but the feare of being slaues, (which they could not auoid) made them resolue to die in their owne defence; so as the Florentines hauing forced the place, put them all to sword; and then embarqued their troups, hauing filled Bisquirre with fire and bloud. The night following, being in the gulph called the Bad woman, they met with a pinnace loaden with corne, the which they tooke, and sent to Ligorne, and then they put on to encrease their conquest. Being vpon the coast of Sardinia, two Galliots of Biserta did furnish them with a faire occasion. Inghirami sendeth his gallies to pursue them, who hauing had them in chase threescore leagues, tooke the one, wherin they had one hundred and twenty slaues, and freed many poore Christians from the chaine, who suffered the tyranny of the Turkish seruitude. They also tooke a Turkish gally within halfe a league of Algier, and spoiled it. And thus triumphing ouer their enemies, they tooke their course towards Ligorne, hauing taken foure Turkish vessels, spoiled the towne of Bisquerre, and twice braued that of Algier.

The Morisques or new Christians chased out of Spaine.

This yeare was fatall for the Morisques or new Christians in Spaine, who being in number nine hundred thousand persons, as the originall writes, and had continued there from father to son, for the space of almost nine hundred yeares, were now in an instant banished, and made vagabonds with the blast of the Kings mouth. Men discoursed diuersly hereof: Some said, that the King had reason to do it, for that they had secret practises and intelligences with the Turke

Turke his capitall enemy. Others affirmed, that hee did wisely to preuent their attempts against his Estate, which were to be feared considering their numbers were also great. And some said plainely, that it was to haue their lands and inheritances, which had continued so long in their races. But the King declared his owne intent by his Edict, the which he published in these termes.

The King of Spaines Edict.

The King: For that reason doth in conscience binde a good and Christian gouernment, to expell out of all Realmes and Common weales those things which breed scandall, and bring hurt to our good subjects, and danger to the Estate, but especially which are offensiue to God, and prejudiciall to his seruice: for this cause experience hauing taught vs, That the residence of the new Christian Morisques, and their abode in the Realmes of Granado, Murcia, and Andelosia, hath beene the cause of all these inconueniences: for that besides the manner of their proceedings, which joyned in the rebellion of Granado, the which began by cruell murthers of all the Priests and old Christians which liued amongst them, calling the Turks in to their aid; yet hauing drawne them out of the said country, and suffered them to liue in other Prouinces, so as they would repent them of their faults, and liue faithfully and Christian like, according to the precepts and just ordinances which were giuen them: They haue not obserued and kept them according to the strict and direct rules of our Holy Faith: but haue alwaies made shew to contemne it, and to haue no feare to offend God; as hath beene seene by the great numbers which haue beene punished by the Inquisition: and besides, they haue committed many thefts and murthers against the old Christians. And not content herewith, they haue conspired against my Royall Crowne and Realmes, seeking aid and succors from the Turke, certaine interposed persons being sent to that effect, and doing the like with other Princes, promising vnto themselues aid and assistance, offering vnto them their persons and meanes. And seeing that during so many yeares, in which they haue practised these treasons and conspiracies, not any one hath come to reueale them, but they haue alwaies couered, concealed, and denied them; it is a most apparant signe, that they haue all beene of one minde and will, against the seruice of God and of me, and against the good of this Realme; yet they might haue imitated many Knights of theirs, of generous extraction, who haue don seruice to God, to the Kings our progenitors, and to vs, like good Christians, and most loyall vassals.

Wherefore considering all this, and how much I am bound to set downe some good order, and to procure the preseruation and increase of my Realmes and subjects, and desiring to prouide for all; I haue decreed, with the aduice and counsell of many judicious learned men, and others, that are very religious, wise, and jealous of Gods seruice and mine, to chase out of the Realmes of Granado, Murcia, and Andelosia, and out of the towne of Hernache (although it be not within the limits of the said Realmes) all the new Christians Morisques, both men, women, and children. For when as a great or detestable crime is committed in any Colledge or Communalty, it is fit that Colledge or Communalty should be ruined, and that the lesse with the greater, and one with another, should be punished: And that such as peruert the good and sincere life of Common-weales, and of their townes and cities, should be banished from other inhabitants, lest their contagion infect them.

For this cause, by vertue of these presents, we ordaine and command, That all the new Christians Morisques, without any exception of age or sex, of those that liue and reside in the said Realmes, and in the towne of Harnache, except such as be slaues, shall within the space of thirty daies after the publication hereof, depart out of all our Realmes and Dominions of Spaine, with their wiues, children, seruants, and others of their Nation: and that they shall not presume to returne or to make any residence in them, in any sort whatsoeuer. And we forbid them to depart by the Realmes of Valentia, or Aragon, nor to enter into them, nor to stay in any of our Realmes or Countries after the time prefixed, vpon paine of death, and confiscation of all their goods. And we command, that no person within our Realmes or Seigniories, of what estate, qualities, or condition soeuer, shall presume to receiue, conceale, or defend publikely nor secretly any Morisque man or woman, after the said tearme, vpon paine to lose all their goods, vassals, forts, and lands; and moreouer to lose all the graces, and benefits which they haue from me, to be applied to my Exchequer.

And though I may justly confiscate all the goods moueable and vnmoueable of the said Morisques, as belonging to traitours, and guilty of high treason; yet vsing clemency, I am

contene

A content, that during the ſaid terme of thirty daies, they may diſpoſe of their moueable goods, and carry them away, not in gold, ſiluer, jewels, nor letter of exchange, but in merchandiſe which is not prohibited, bought of the naturall ſubjects of this Realme, and not of others: or in the commodities of the ſaid country. And to the end they may during the time of thirty daies diſpoſe thereof, and of their moueable goods, and employ it in merchandiſe, or in the commodities of the country, and tranſport what they ſhall buy (for as for their lands, that muſt be annexed to my reuenues, to be employed in the ſeruice of God and the commonweale, as I ſhall thinke moſt fit) I declare by theſe Preſents, that I take them into my royall protection, and aſſure them and their goods, That during the ſaid time they may go and come, to ſell, exchange, and alienate all their moueable goods, and to employ their mony, gold,
B ſiluer, and jewels, in merchandiſe not prohibited, or in the commodities of the country, and to tranſport the ſame freely, without any let or interruption, by land or by ſea, paying vſuall cuſtomes; ſo as they carry no gold or ſiluer coyned, or to coyne, nor any other thing prohibited by the lawes of my Realme. Yet we are content, they ſhall carry ſo much money as ſhall be needfull for their paſſage by land, and embarking by ſea: commanding all our officers and louing ſubjects to ſee this preſent Edict duely obſerued. &c. Signed, I the King.

After this publication of the Edict, the tearme of thirty daies was reſtrained to twenty, ſo as the Moriſques were haſtened to depart: and the ſhips and veſſels of what country ſoeuer, were ſtaied in all the Ports of Spaine, to tranſport them whither they would go. Many paſſed from Spaine into Barbary: but during this yeare there came aboue 150000 of theſe Moriſques into France,
C the King ſending Commiſſaries, to ſee them well vſed, and orderly tranſported away.

There was a warre fallen out in Barbary betwixt Muley Xequy, King of Fez, and Muley Sidan his younger brother, both Mahometanes; in which warre the younger forced the elder to fly his Country, and to come and craue aid from Philip King of Spaine: But the vnfortunat loſſe of Don Sebaſtian King of Portugall, was a good preſident for the Spaniard not to truſt in barbarous Kings, without good aſſurance: He treated with the Barbarian, and promiſed him ſuccours, with an hundred thouſand Duckats to returne to Alarache, (a place which held for him) where by money or other practiſes, hee ſhould draw vnto him as many ſouldiers as hee could: And that for the ſafety of the ſuccours that he ſhould giue him, hee ſhould put Ala-
D rache or Arrache into his hands. This Arrache is a ſtrong towne in the Realme of Fez, in the Prouince of Algar, ſeated vpon the Ocean, at the mouth of the Riuer of Lucus, whereon part of it is built, and the other part vpon the Ocean: It hath a goodly Port, and hard to take, for that it is defended by a Fort, in the which the Kings of Fez do vſually entertaine a garriſon of three hundred light horſe, and three hundred harquebuſiers: for that the Portugals and Caſtilians hold in a manner all the Sea townes of the Prouinces of Habat, and Erif, where they haue great garriſons. This Prouince is from the Riuer of Nocor along the Mediterranean Sea, vnto the ſtreight of Gibralter, the other is vpon the Ocean from the ſaid ſtreight vnto the riuer Lucus, in the which the King of Spaine holdeth at this day the ſtrong townes of Tanger, Arzilla, and others. According to the former accord, the Barbarian returned to Arrache, with E his mony in one of the King of Spaine his ſhips; to whom in a ſhort time repaired many of his friends and ſeruants. The Spaniard in the meane time hauing prepared a fleet of a great number of gallies and ſhips, and embarqued ten thouſand ſouldiers therein, he gaue the command thereof vnto the Marqueſſe of S. Germaine, who arriued on the twentieth of Nouember in the euening at the Port of Arrache, and there rode at anchor all the night. The next day in the morning, the Marqueſſe called all the Captaines to a Councell, imparting vnto them his deſigne for to force Arrache, in caſe that the Mooriſh King did not keepe his promiſe; they gaue him aſſurance, that they would carry themſelues like vnto braue and valiant ſouldiers. But ſee what hapned: The King of Fez hauing no meanes to goe from his word, ſeeing the Spaniard ſo ſtrong as he might well force it, many of his followers and people, fearing to fall F vnder the power of Spaine, they would haue abandoned him: but hauing the Gouernour of the caſtle at his deuotion, he thruſt out the garriſon, and deliuered the keies himſelfe vnto the Marqueſſe of S. Germaine. Vpon the firſt bruit that the Spaniards were entred into the caſtle, all the inhabitants ran to armes, and thinking to reſiſt them, after that many of them had warre in Barbary.

Deſcription of the towne of Arrache or Allaracke.

Arrache in Barbary taken by the Spaniards.

ended their daies valiantly, during three houres combat, they were forced to yeeld vnto the Marqueſſe, who preſently planted the croſſe and armes of Caſtile vpon all the Towers and Steeples. Thus this ſtrong towne which the Caſtilians and Portugals had ſo long deſired, and wheras the inhabitants receiued a great ruine, is in the end faine vnder the domination of their King. The newes of this exploit being brought into Spaine, pleaſed the King much, and the people made bone-fires for joy: theſe are the alterations of times. The Moores in old time were wont to ouerrun Spaine, and now the Spaniards take their pleaſure in Mauritania. G

About the end of this yeare newes came to Conſtantinople, of the great warres which had been between the Vncle and the Nephew, by the death of the great Cham of the Tartars: the ſon, who during his fathers life time, had continued at Conſtantinople as an hoſtage, and was now ſent backe into his country by the Sultan Achmat, thinking to enjoy his fathers eſtate; his vncle, brother to the deceaſed Cham, practiſed to ſeize vpon the crowne: but either of them hauing drawne an army of 60000 men together, in the end, they joyned battell, whereas after the ſlaughter of 40000 men vpon the place, the ſonne had the victory, and by that meanes obtained the Crowne of Tartaria. H

A great battell in Tartary.

I will conclude this yeare 1610, with the relation of a particular buſineſſe, to ſhew the greedy deſire of the Turks to get by any vnjuſt meanes whatſoeuer, and their infidelity and falſhod to ſay and ſweare any thing for bribes. Some yeares before, one Maſter Willoughbie an Engliſh Gentleman, hauing rigged vp a ſhip for war into the Leuant, he came into Algier in Barbary to ſell his prize, where at that time one Solyman Catania was Baſſa. This ſhip was ſuddenly ſeiſed on, and rifled by the command of this Baſſa, vpon no other ſubject, but that the Baſſa pretended this ſhip had burnt a Caramouſall of his, which in truth the Baſſa himſelfe had cauſed to be ſet on fire, that vnder colour thereof he might ſeiſe vpon the ſhip and goods. Maſter Willoughby went to Conſtantinople, and there made his complaint to Sir Henry Lilloe, then Embaſſadour for the Engliſh; but yet could get no ſatisfaction: whereupon he returned into England, and obtained letters from his Majeſty to the Grand Seignior, and to Sir Thomas Glouer, then Embaſſador, reſiding at Conſtantinople: which hauing receiued, he went preſently to the Chimacham (who was Lieutenant to Murath Baſſa the grand Viſier, hee being then imploied in the wars againſt the Perſian.) The Chimacham hauing read theſe letters, would not ſuffer them to be deliuered to the Grand Seignior; promiſing to doe juſtice vpon Solyman Catania, whom he diſcharged from his place, and ſent for him to Conſtantinople; who being come, and called in queſtion, he denied the fact: Maſter Willoughby (hauing no certaine proofe of his loſſe) ſuborned one Oſiſh Baſſa a Turke, who had beene at Mecha, and was therefore held a very holy man, who ſet a brother of his to procure falſe witneſſes, vpon promiſe to haue the tenth part of what ſhould be recouered: the witneſſes being ready to ſweare to his aſſertion, Solyman Catania hearing their Oath, compounded with Maſter Willoughby, and gaue him foure or fiue thouſand Dollars; ſo the buſineſſe ended. Which ſhews the corruption of the Turks, and that the holieſt of them for mony will not ſticke to beare falſe witneſſe, and take falſe Oathes. I K

A great Plague in Conſtantinople.

This yeare 1611 the city of Conſtantinople was wonderfully afflicted with the Plague, the which diſperſed it ſelfe ouer all, and crept into the Grand Seigniours Seraglio, whereas one of his ſonnes died of that infection: whereupon the Grand Seigniour was forced to retire for his ſafety, and to paſſe the remainder of the Summer in his palace or Seraglio of Darut Baſſa, about a league and a halfe diſtant from the city: this violent contagion did ſo rage in Conſtantinople for the ſpace of fiue moneths, as there were numbred two hundred thouſand perſons dead within the time, and they did commonly carry euery day twelue or fifteene hundred bodies to be buried. The greatneſſe of this mortality is not to be imputed ſo much to the corruption of the aire, as to the wilfull negligence of the Turks, who would not vouchſafe to turne away from a body dead of this diſeaſe, whent it wen to buriall, not to forbeare to viſite their friends being infected. The obſtinate beleefe they haue of Predeſtination maketh them brutiſhly contemne all ſorts of dangers: For ſay they, as ſoone as man comes out of his mothers wombe to injoy the light of the world, God writes in his forehead all the good or euill ſhall happen vnto him, and particularly of what death he ſhall die, the neceſſity whereof no humane power can auoid. All is gouerned (ſay they) by Deſtiny, and therefore they L M 200000 perſons died of the Plague.

The Turks obſtinate beleefe touching predeſtination.

regard

A regard not any infection, but contrariwise when any one is dead, another takes his cloathes and weares them: which is the cause that Constantinople and the grand Caire are seldome free; and when as the aire is any thing disposed to contagion, there dies such multitudes of people, as they do not number them but by hundred thousands.

Death of the French Embassador at Constantinople.

Before the beginning of this plague, the Baron of Salignac Embassadour for the French King at Constantinople, ended his Embassage with his life. His most Christian Majesty sent the Baron of Mole, eldest sonne to the Baron of Sansie, to supply his place. He arriued at Pera this yeare in the beginning of September, and about the end of October the Sultan being returned to Constantinople; after that he had visited the Muphti, (who is the chiefe of their Law) the Grand Visier, the Defterda, (who is the Sultans high Treasurer) the Bostangi
B Bassa his chiefe Gardiner, with other Great men of the Port which were highly in fauour; in the end he was admitted to audience, and to kisse the Sultans hand. A ceremony which in mine opinion I owe vnto the History, to shew that the Majesty of the Turkish Emperours is so great, as to approch neere vnto them, the Embassadours of forreine Princes are forced to disguise themselues, and leauing the habits of their nation, to attire themselues and their Traine after the Turkish manner. Thus the Embassador of France parted from his Lodging at Pera, wearing vpon his French apparel a long Turkish Robe of cloath of gold curled, furred with Sables: his Gentlemen and Secretaries to the number of sixteene had the like Robes, but of meaner stuffe, wearing caps of blacke Veluet: he had twenty seruants in long cassocks of Skarlet, called in Turkish, Ferrages, and vpon them long Robes of the same stuffe, with
C caps of Taffata; the foure Dragomans or the Kings Interpreters, the Captaines, Masters of Ships, and other Frenchmen attyred all in long Robes, accompanied the Traine. He past the channell which doth separate Pera from Constantinople: being come to the other side, he found many goodly horses for him and his Traine, which some Turkes that were friends to France, had sent him to conduct him to the City; at the gate whereof many Chiaus and Ianizaries attended him to conduct him to the Seraglio: two Chiaus Bassaes went of either side him, accompanying him thither, the rest of the Turks going before. His arriuall was no lesse honourable at the Palace Royall, than his comming to the Towne: Two Capigi Bassaes, or chiefe of the Porters, receiued him at the entry of a great Court, and conducted him to the Grand Visier, who attended him at dinner in the hal, where he was feasted, being accompanied D only with one Dragoman or Interpreter: the rest of his Traine were conducted into a low gallery, whereas dinner was prepared for them after the Turkish manner: That is to say, a great Tapestry vpon the ground without cloath or napkins, and some dishes thinne set. The meat was water gruell with sugar, and some pottage with pullets: there were two men either of them holding a certain instrument of sodden leather, in which there was a beuerage which they call Cerbet, made of the juyce of Lymmons, water, and sugar, and withall they held a cup of blancht copper, giuing to euery one drinke, and going among the dishes to serue them more commodiously. From this feast, distastefull to them that had liued after the French fashion, they past into another gallery, whereas the Embassadour and sixteene of his company receiued each of them a Robe of Tinsell, the which hauing put on vpon their other,
E they were conducted through a little court paued with marble, towards the Grand Seigniours chamber, which was enricht on the one side with many pillars of marble, and square stones of the same stuffe, and beautified with two little fountaines on either side: The Chamber within was about ten paces square, the planchard was gilt, the wals enameled with floures after the Turkish manner, and the floore couered with Tapestry of gold and silke. At the entry of this Imperiall chamber stood six Capigi or Porters, whereof two of them tooke the Embassador vnder the armes, and led him to kisse the Sultans hand, or rather his Robe; for hauing saluted him from the greatest of Christian Kings, hee kist but his Robe, and then was led on the one side, going backewards, to the end he should not turne his backe to the Emperour. The French Gentlemen were conducted after the like manner to kisse his Robe. But F they could hardly see the Sultan, for his face was turned towards a window that was grated, before the which, during the ceremony there past thirty Capigi, euery one carrying a piece of the Presents which the Embassador had brought: during the which, the Frenchmen could not see him but on the other side. This salutation being ended, the Embassador made a short speech

The Sultans Chamber.

speech, and presented vnto the Sultan the principall letter of his Embassage, written in the Turkish tongue. G Troubles in Transyluania.

This past at Constantinople, wheras the Sultan did willingly see an Embassador his Ally, whom he honoured aboue all others. But in Transyluania the affaires went after another straine; the combustions which seemed inseparable to this miserable Prouince, made it still the Theater of all disorders. Gabriel Battori, who gouerned it since the succession of Ragotzi, had put himselfe into the Turks protection, against King Matthias, who pretended a title, by reason of the Session made by Prince Sigismund vnto the Emperour, as King of Hungary, and had recouered Hermstad, and chased Raduille Vayuod of Valachia out of his countrey; where hauing settled a new Gouernour, and filled the garrisons with Haiduckes, he returned toward Transyluania, to oppose himselfe against Fortgatsie King Matthias his Lieutenant, who came H with troups out of high Hungary, and past the riuer of Tibisce. The Vayuod Raduille had retyred himselfe into Moldauia to Prince Constantine, whom he gaue to vnderstand, That Battory had an intent to seise vpon his country, and to make but one Monarchy of their three Prouinces: whereupon they joyned their forces together, and in the end of Iune entered into Valachia, from whence they expelled Battori his Lieutenant with all the garrisons. This exploit made them to hope of a continuance in the prosperity of their armes; they entered into Transyluania, whereas they pursued Battori with such dilligence, as they forced him to come to a battell neere vnto Cromstat, the which he lost with part of his troups, being constrained to saue himselfe with his horsemen in Hermstad, whereas some of the chiefe inhabitants seeing him receiue this disgrace, attempted to submit themselues vnder the obedience of King Matthias: but the practise being discouered by him, hee did such execution, as hee purchased to himselfe the name of Cruell. I

In the meane time Fortgatsie Lieutenant to King Matthias, maketh vse of this defeat to seise vpon Transyluania; hee made an Accord with Andrew Nage (who had drawne high Hungary into rebellion, and caused the Haiduckes to reuolt) so as being freed from that feare, hee entered into Transyluania; where hauing taken some Townes and Castles, hee layed siege to Clausenburg, the which he battered so furiously, as the garrisons and inhabitants seeing themselues ready to bee forced, yeelded, and tooke the Oath of Allegiance to King Matthias the fiue and twentieth of Iuly. But as these prosperities of Fortgatsie were humane, so did they not long continue. Battori being shut vp in Hermstad, conjures all his friends to K come vnto him, and entreated the Bassaes of Buda and Temesware to succour him, according to the commandement which they had receiued from the Grand Seignior: hee practised with Nage (a man which did swimme continually in the floats of inconstancy) and makes him to reuolt againe in high Hungary, vpon a surmise, That Fortgatsie had not kept promise with him; so as Nage tooke armes againe, seised vpon the fort of Bayens, and filled all high Hungary with combustions; so as Fortgatsie could expect no succours at his need from thence: then hauing receiued some forces from the Turks and Tartarians, he went to field, pursuing Fortgatsie with such heat and fury, as he forced him to abandon all that he had taken in Transyluania, and to retyre into Valachia. What desolation did this warre bring vnto these Prouinces by so many prises and reprises? Battori going with a thousand horse to surprise Tocai, L vpon the frontiers of Valachia, whereas they then held a great faire, he found the garrison so watchfull vpon their guard, as hauing lost part of his horsemen, he was forced to returne into Transyluania.

Fortgatsie his miserable retreat.

On the other side, Fortgatsie with his Hungarians, thinking from Valachia to recouer high Hungary by the Countrey of the Zeclerians, could not effect his designe: for Battori being aduertised thereof, stopped his passage; and in like manner the Earles of Bucheime and Dampier had passed the riuer of Tibisce to meet him: so as Battori set such guards in all the passages and streights; that Fortgatsie was forced to retyre towards Polonia by the steep mountains, and desart places, wheras his army was so oppreset with famine and all other necessities, as they perished miserably, there remaining few aliue; with the which he ended his passage into Po- M lonia, and from thence soone after hee returned into Hungary, but with a very poore Equipage.

Thus the storme ceasing in Transyluania by the restraint of Fortgatsie, a more violent tempest

A tempeſt riſeth in Moldauia, to the end that theſe vnfortunate Regions ſhould neuer be without ſome touch of miſery: for the Turke hauing vnderſtood, That Conſtantine Prince of that country had relieued the Valachian againſt Battori his allye, or rather his Tributary, he ſends a new Prince into Moldauia, the ſuppoſed ſonne of one Thomas, or Aaron as ſome write, who had in former time commanded there, and with him fifteene hundred ſouldiers, with Letters of command to the Turks and Tartarians thereabouts, to aſſiſt him with their forces. This new Prince was ſometime in France, and afterwards detained priſoner in the Fort of Iaques in Spaine, within the Pyrenean mountaines. Thus two Princes contend for Moldauia, the one ſupported by the Polonian, and the other by the Turke. But behold, a third Prince commeth in and pretends a title, being ſonne to one Ianicolo who had commanded there. This B man had beene a priſoner in the blacke tower at Conſtantinople, to which he was committed by the Sultan Amurath, for that he had loſt a battell in the yeare 1601, againſt Michael, who then poſſeſt Moldauia; who eſcaping from thence, wandred through diuers countries; and at laſt comming into England, his Majeſty of Great Brittaine pittying his miſerable eſtate, recommended him by his Letters to Sir Thomas Glouer his Majeſties Embaſſador, then reſiding at Conſtantinople, with commandement to aſſiſt him, and to ſolicite his reſtitution with the Grand Seigniour. Vpon the receipt of which Letters, he retyred this wandering Prince into his houſe at Pera, where he entertained him, with many of his friends and followers which repaired vnto him, for a long time; and in the meane time he ſolicited the Grand Seigniour for his reſtitution, hauing good acceſſe vnto him, by reaſon that he ſpake the Tur- C kiſh tongue perfectly, and needed no Dragoman, or Interpreter. To whom the Sultan ſtill gaue good anſwers, but with delaies, that it was not yet time; but he ſhould haue ſatisfaction. His Competitor (who was in poſſeſſion of Moldauia) hearing of this practiſe, made friends at the Great Turks Court, and corrupted ſome of the Baſſaes by bribes, (they being all by nature very couetous) to the end they might croſſe his deſigne, and make him away if it were poſſible: and among the reſt he had won Murath Baſſa the grand Viſier, a man of great power and authority, who practiſed many means to get the Moldauian into his hands. Firſt, he ſent word vnto the Embaſſadour, That the Sultan hauing a meaning to reſtore him, deſired to ſee the man, if he were capable of the place or no: but being aduertiſed of their intent, and well acquainted with their practiſes, he refuſed to ſend him. After which, he wrote vnto him, That D it was the Grand Seigniors pleaſure he ſhould ſend the Moldauian vnto him, that he might confer with him. To whom the Embaſſador made anſwer, That vnleſſe he might ſee a Warrant vnder the Grand Seigniors own hand, he would not deliuer him. Murath Baſſa ſeeing that none of theſe practiſes could preuaile, reſolued to fetch him out by force. For the effecting whereof he drew together two thouſand Ianizaries. The Embaſſadour hearing of his intent, fortified his houſe, and armed his people with the Moldauians which were with their Prince, meaning to ſtand vpon his defence. Murath Baſſa deſirous to know what the Embaſſador did in his Lodging, diſguiſed a Ianizary like vnto a Greekiſh Sheepheard; who entering into the Embaſſadors houſe, found them all in armes: then returning vnto the Baſſa, he told him that he had to do with a mad man, and if he proceeded in his enterpriſe, he would hazard the E loſſe of many Ianizaries: whereupon he gaue it ouer. After which, the Embaſſador being called home into England, the Moldauian deſpairing of reſtitution from the Turkiſh Sultan, he turned Turke; and being preſented to the Grand Seignior, was made Bey of Burſia in Aſia: the which he enjoyed not long; for Naſſuf comming from the Perſian wars, diſcharged him. Thus Moldauia hauing many pretented Souereignes, ſuffered many miſeries, and was a prey to Turke, Tartarians, and Polonians, all partiſans to theſe Souereignes.

Troubles in Moldauia.

Theſe were the troubles which the Turks cauſed at land for the ruine of the Chriſtians. But behold what he ſuffered at ſea by the gallies of Florence, Malta, and Naples; the Florentines made their enterpriſe apart. The Great Duke of Tuſcany being aduertiſed, That the Caraua which tranſported the tribute of Ægypt to Conſtantinople, prepared to put to ſea, he re- F ſolued to diuert this tribute, and by the valour of his armes to bring it to Ligorne: and for the effecting hereof, he ſpeedily armed foure gallions, vnder the command of Beauregard a Frenchman, who was Admirall. The firſt was called the new gallion, in which the ſaid Admirall went: the ſecond, the great Ligorne, commanded by Brandequedor, Generall at land, and allied to to the Duke; and the other two were commanded by two French Captaines. Beauregard hauing receiued commandement, to paſſe with this fleet into the Leuant, to meet with the Carauan, he bent his courſe towards Candy, a fertile Iſland inhabited by the Græcians: Being arriued in the Port of Caliſmene to water, he continued there ſix daies. Leauing this Iſland, he ſailed towards Cyprus, which is held by the Turks, and ſo coaſting Siria, they learned of a ſhip of Marſeilles, that the Carauan was yet in the Port of Alexandria, where they prepared for their voyage to Conſtantinople. To attend them the Admirall Beauregard went and caſt anchor at the fort of Sidon, called Sarepta, gouerned by Emir, or Armil Facardin, a Rebell to the Turke, and a great friend to the Florentines, where he ſtaied twelue daies, to take in Bisket, fleſh, and other neceſſary refreſhings. And hauing made a more ſtrickt league of friendſhip with Facardin, he honoured him with a coffer full of arms, wherby the Florentines ſhips came as freely into thoſe parts, as into their owne country.

The voiage of the Gallions of Florence, againſt the Turks.

Beauregard hauing well victualled and munitioned his gallions, hee returned towards the Iſle of Cyprus, wheras he found a Chriſtians ſhip called the flying Dragon, which came from Damietta, by whom he was aſſured that the Turks army, conſiſting of a great number of gallies, was gone out of the Port of Rhodes, and had taken a Flemiſh ſhip. Theſe newes made him thinke that he ſhould meet the fleet, and that he muſt of force defend himſelfe. Wherefore he made all things ready, and preſcribed the order which his Captaines ſhould hold during the fight; cauſing his ordnance to be mounted as if they were to joyne. He had foure as good gallions, and as well furniſhed, as any were in the Leuant ſeas, either of them being armed with 40 pieces of ordnance, and 400 good ſouldiers. Betwixt the Iſland of Cyprus and Caramania they encountered this Turkiſh fleet, conſiſting of forty gallies and two galliaſſes, vnder the command of Baſſa Muſtapha Grego, who was Generall of this fleet, which was in ſight of the Florentines ſhips: the galliaſſes aduance to take view of them, and to find how far their cannon would reach; and in the meane time the gallies put themſelues into the forme of a Croiſant, ready for the combat. Beauregard an old ſea Captaine, and well practiſed in ſea fights, would not make a ſhot againſt the gallies, but attended vntill the whole fleet came cloſe vp to him; which being neere, he ſaluted them ſo furiouſly with his cannon, giuing them the broad ſides, as the Turks (who expected no ſuch reception) were all amazed, and making a ſtand, would proceed no further. Their Generall hauing well obſerued the reſolute countenance of the Florentines, diuided his gallies into two ſquadrons; giuing charge to the one to giue an aſſault to the Florentines gallions; and in the mean time the reſt ſhould prepare themſelues to fight.

The Florentines meet with the Turks fleet.

Being thus diuided, they came one after another to the aſſault, the which continued for the ſpace of ſix houres, and yet could not boord them; Muſtapha ſeeing fiue of his gallies ſunke by the enemies cannon, with the loſſe of all the men that were within them. But ſuddenly the wind changed, and proued fauorable to the Florentines, who embraced this aduantage, giuing chaſe to the Turks gallies, forcing them to ſeeke their ſafety in the hauen of Famaguſta, the chiefe fort of Cyprus; ſo of aſſailants (being beaten) they became run-awaies: ſo inconſtant are the accidents of war; and eſpecially at ſea, whereas the good or bad ſucceſſe many times dependeth of a little winde.

Fiue Turkiſh gallies ſunke.

The Turks put to flight.

This Turkiſh fleet, hauing loſt fiue gallies, and recouered a Port in Cyprus, the Admirall Beauregard ſeeing his deſigne againſt the Carauan diſappointed, he reſolued to return towards Ligorne with his gallions: being at ſea, he encountred a Turkiſh veſſell called a Caramouſall, which came from Rhodes, to goe vnto Cyprus: they chaſed it, and in the end ouertooke it; which they preſt ſo with their ordnance, as they ſlew 130 Turks, and tooke 300 ſlaues. The booty was very rich, being valued at 140000 crownes. After this prize, their victuals beginning to faile, hauing beene ſo long at ſea, they bent their courſe for Ligorne: but the winde falling contrary, they were forced to ſtay eight daies in the Iſland of Scarpante, paſt the bar of Meſſina, and hauing giuen chaſe to certaine gallies of Tunes, they arriued at Ligorne the fifteenth of Iune, where there was great joy for their returne, and the prize which they had brought, the which according to the cuſtome was to be diuided; one third to the ſoldiers and mariners, and the other two parts imploied for the entertainment of the ſhips, and the paiment of the Captaines.

The Florentines take a rich ſhip of the Turks.

This

This Caraüan which goes from Ægypt to Conſtantinople, is euery yeare attended for, not only by the gallions and gallies of Florence, but by thoſe of Malta and Naples, and by all the Pyrats of the Mediterranean ſea: like vnto the Engliſh and Hollanders, who yearely lay in wait for the Indian fleet before the concluſion of the peace and truce with the Spaniards. And although their principall deſigne was to take ſome part of the Caraüan, yet they had other enterpriſes vpon the Turks Countrey, beſides the ſpoile of merchants which they met by chance, which many times payed the charge of their voiage; and ſomtimes, they that thought to take, were taken, and loſt both their ſhips and liues.

The gallies of Malta, commanded by the Bailife of Venouge, and thoſe of Naples by the Marquis of Saint Croix, joyned together ſoone after, with a deſigne to ſet vpon the Caraüan which carried the reuenue and tribute of Ægypt to Conſtantinople, or els to put in execution the enterpriſe which they had long before projected, vpon certaine places of Albania, or to ſurpriſe or ſpoile ſome Iſland in the Archipelague which might pay their charges. But the firſt failing, they met with a Venetian ſhip laden with merchandiſe, to the value of 100000 crownes. The Spaniards who commanded in the gallies of Naples ſeiſed vpon this ſhip, but the Generall of Malta would by no meanes conſent vnto it, nor ſuffer any of the merchandiſe to be put into his gallies, for that he would not vnjuſtly violate the friendſhip which was betwixt his Order and the State of Venice. This example did touch the Spaniards conſciences, ſo as within few daies they ſent away the Venetian ſhip, but in courteſie they had vnloden all the merchandiſe.

The Chriſtians gallies go to the Iſland of Lango.

After this prey of a Chriſtian ſhip, the fleet diſcouered two ſailes at ſea, ſending preſently after them, they were two barks, the one comming from Candy loaden with wood, and the other from Scarpante charged with wine, the which being brought vnto the Generals, gaue them to vnderſtand, that the Caraüan of Ægypt was not yet paſt, being aduertiſed that fifty Chriſtians gallies attended them in their paſſage. Vpon this aduice, the Chriſtian Generals being out of hope to ſurpriſe the Caraüan, preſently reſolued to vndertake a more great and glorious enterpriſe, and to ſurpriſe the Iſland and caſtle of Lango in the Archipelague, vpon the coaſt of Natolia; and about ſeuen of the clocke at night they ſet ſaile with a good winde, but being changed in the morning, they were forced to return to the Iſland of Porcherne: from whence they parted againe at eight or the clocke at night, and continuing their courſe, in the morning they diſcouered three Florentine ſhips, who told them, that they had entred into the Iſle of Nigropont with ſeuen gallies; but hauing beene diſcouered, they could not effect any thing; and that their gallies were ſeparated from them in the chaſe of foure galliots. The Chriſtian fleet continuing their courſe, they arriued about eleuen of the clock in the morning at S. Iean de Seruaë, where hauing caſt anchor, there was a Councell called in the Admirall: where they reſolued to petard the caſtle of Lango, toward the ſea: for the execution whereof they ſhould land 200 men; viz. thirty Knights and fifty ſouldiers out of the gallies of Malta, and 120 Spaniards out of the gallies of Naples; and that they ſhould carry two petards with them, the one giuen in charge to Captain Beaulaigue in the troupe of them of Malta, and the other was conducted by the Spaniards; the reſt of their men which they ſhould land, ſhould go and aſſault the towne of Lango. With this reſolution they parted from S. Iean de Seruaë, with a good winde, and arriued at the Iſland of Lango on the ſixt of Iune, an houre after midnight, whereas they landed three miles from the towne: they that were appointed for the enterpriſe, marcht on with their petards, according to direction, but the night being very darke, the troupe of Malta ſtraied from their guide, but their valour brought them directly to the walls of the Towne; where after many turnings and windings to finde a fit place to plant the petard, (notwithſtanding they were diſcouered and much ſhot at) Beaulaigue ſet it to a Port next the ſea, well flanckt with the Caſtle, the which he forced, and his men entering with fury, went from ſtreet to ſtreet, and put all to the ſword that made reſiſtance. The Spaniards on the other ſide made another breach with their petard, and entered the Towne; notwithſtanding that at their firſt approch, the Turks (hauing diſcouered them) played vpon them with their great ordnance and ſmall ſhot. The troups being joyned together, hauing cut all the Turks in pieces they met with, they came to the place before the Caſtle, which they thought to ſurpriſe: but the bridge was drawne, and they lay open at the mercy of their ſhot; ſo as there were fifteene Knights of Malta hurt, one ſlaine, with a Spaniſh Captaine, Lango forced by the Chriſtians.

Captaine, and ſome ſix and thirty ſouldiers of the gallies of Naples, and as many wounded. Day being come, the Bailife of Venouge Generall of the gallies of Malta, came vnto the town with the foreward, wherein were 150 Knights, and 450 ſouldiers: the Marquis of S. Croix followed him with the two ſonnes of the Viceroy of Naples, and 1500 Spaniards, who ſpoiled the towne and ſuburbs, and tooke all that were liuing captiue: but the Caſtle being well fortified they found it impoſſible to force; whereupon embarking their men and ſpoile, they reſolued in their return to Malta and Naples, to make an enterpriſe vpon ſome towns of Albania: but vpon the way they were aduertiſed, That the Turks had diſcouered the intelligence which the Spaniards and Knights of Malta had with the Grecians of the country; whereupon they tooke reuenge vpon them, putting many of them to death, and amongſt others a Patriarch, who being accuſed to haue practiſed the Chriſtians reuolt againſt the Turks, was cruelly fleied aliue, and his skin ſent to Conſtantinople. So dangerous a thing it is to ſeeke for liberty with this Mahometane nation.

The Carauan of Ægypt was ſtill in the port of Alexandria attending a paſſage, and to be freed from ſo many Chriſtian gallies which lay in wait for it; and it ſtaied the longer by reaſon of the great plague wherewith Conſtantinople was afflicted. But in the end of October, Mechmet Baſſa of Caire (who would conduct it in perſon) hauing a conuoy of fifty gallies well armed, put to ſea, and arriued at Conſtantinople without any encounter. At his landing, this Baſſa cauſed to march before him 60 mules, euery one laden with 20000 ſequins in kind, being a whole yeares tribute of the Kingdome of Ægypt, the which he cauſed to be carried to the Sultans Serail. This mony was welcome to the Port: for the former wars both in Hungary, Tranſyluania, in Aſia againſt the Rebels, and in Perſia, had ſo waſted the Emperours treaſure, as it would hardly entertaine one of his armies. The Baſſa who had gathered this tribute together faithfully and with great diligence, was at his comming to the Sultans Port honored with the charge of Baſſa of the ſea, (he who had it before, being aduanced to the dignity of Viſier) and moreouer the Sultan promiſed him his daughter in marriage, being but three yeres old.

The Carauan of Ægypt arriues at Conſtantinople.

Newes came to the Port, that certaine ſhips, gallies, and galliaſſes of the Chriſtians, to the number of fifty, came neere vnto the Helleſpont; which put the Turks in great feare: and complaints being brought vnto the grand Seignior, That certain Caramouſals had bin taken by the Chiſtian gallies; he ſent preſently for the captain Baſſa or Admirall of the ſea, demanding of him, Whether the report of theſe loſſes were true or no? To whom he anſwered, Yes. Why are not you then at ſea, ſaith he? He anſwered, For that I can get neither men nor money. Whereupon the Deftardar or Treaſurers was ſent for, who had loſt his head, had not the Aga of the Grand Seigniors women entreated for him.

Graſſehoppers at Conſtantinople ſpoile the Country.

This Summer Conſtantinople and the Countries thereabouts was ſo plagued with ſuch clouds of graſſehoppers, as they did ſhadow the very Sunne beames, and fell vpon the City and country round about. The Turks conſulted with their Wiſe men, what it might portend: Who anſwered, That they did foreſhew great plenty to follow. But indeed they left not a greene hearbe nor a leafe in all the Countrey adjoyning, nor in the city, where they entered into their very chambers, and annoyed them much, beeing almoſt as big as dormice, with red wings.

Violent raine in the city.

And ſoone after there fell ſuch extraordinary great haile in Conſtantinople and Gallata, with ſuch abundance of raine, as the violence of the water did ſuddenly ſhut vp one of the gates of the city, and ſo rebounding filled their ſhops and houſes, that very many were in great danger of drowning. Some houſes fell downe, and ſome people were ſlaine; the pauements of the ſtreets were torne vp, and the ſtones carried together into great heapes.

We haue formerly made relation of the Perſians victories, and of the defeat and death of Cicala Generall of the Turks army, in the yeare 1605. And that the yeare following, the Sophy hauing recouered whatſoeuer the Turks had taken from his Predeceſſors, had extended the bounds of the Empire vnto the blacke ſea, from whence he ſent an Embaſſadour vnto the Grand Seignior, to let him vnderſtand, that hauing recouered what had beene vnjuſtly vſurped from him, he would proceed no further, but deſired to liue in peace; the which might now be the better aſſured, the one holding nothing from the other. Moreouer, this Perſian Embaſſadour hauing remained ſeuen moneths at the Sultans Port, was in the end forced to

retyre

A retire into Persia without audience. And lastly, That Amurath Serder the grand Visier was afterwards forced to conuert his arms against Gambolat and the rebels of Asia, and to neglect the war in Persia.

Notwithstanding the Persian war, there arriued this yeare at Constantinople an Embassador from Persia, who according to the Turks maner was attended on by a great troup of Chaoux on horsebacke, Capigies, Ianizaries, and other Captaines, sent by the Sultan to conduct him to his lodging. Within few daies after his arriual, there was a great shew made in Constantinople by the seuerall trades of the city, euery one marching by themselues before the grand Seigniors Serail, and representing vnto him their maner of marching in the warres, and the order of their prouision, some carying on their shoulders sheep, others lambs, calues, beef, B &c. All which was don in policie, to daunt and dis-hearten the Persian Embassadour, and to encourage their own people; and withall to let him know, that there should be as great plenty in their campes, as he saw at that present. And to abuse him still with the imagination of their great preparation, the Chimacham or Visiers Lieutenant sent the next day for this Persian Embassador, and during their conference had taken order, that the Emperor of Tartaries brother (who was then in the Sultans Court) should come in: at whose entrance the Chimacham arose from his place, saying, O, I know for what you are come, it is for mony for your soldiers; you shall receiue it at such a place. Which words were heard by a Dragoman to the English Embassador, then present: which was don to terrifie the Persian Embassador; and the same time and to the like end they sent ouer diuers troups of soldiers to Scudaret, as if they had been ready C to march with an army.

1611. A Persian Embassador comes to Constantinople.

The Turks great armies are not raised in hast, neither do they march in post; when as the Spahi, which make the greatest part of his army, and haue no other pay or entertainment than the reuenues of certain land, are discharged, they must haue a whole year to recouer their reuenue, and to put themselues in equipage; and moreouer, it is threescore daies march for an army, from Constantinople into Persia.

Also in the years 1609 and 1610, the Turks had not attempted any thing against the Persian, who still solicited him for peace. The greatnes of the Othoman empire could not resolue to make a peace, hauing receiued so great defeats; they would giue it but as victors, not as vanquished. But this year Achmat resolued to send a puissant Army of aboue 150000 men, D against this antient enemy of his House, vnder the command of Amurath Serder his grand Visier: but before the army entered into Persia, it was without a commander, by the death of Serder, in the end of Iuly; so as they were forced to stay and attend the Sultans pleasure from Constantinople.

It was suspected he was poisoned by Nassuf Bassa, one that stood out in rebellion against the grand Seignior, and yet he had many friends in the Turks army. Wherfore to preuent all mutinies, and consequently the ouerthrow of the whole army, Amurath Bassa in his sickness aduised the grand Seignior (by letters which he sent vnto him) to make Nassuf Generall of the whole army, and so by faire meanes to draw him home, and then to dispose of him at his pleasure. The Sultan with the great Bassa's at Court approued wel of this aduice, and chose E him grand Visier, and General of the Army. Who hauing receiued the Seal and authority, did forthwith put many of Amuraths friends to death, and with their mony paid all the souldiers, which wanted pay, whereof some had beene without fiue yeares before. Hee also sent vnto the Grand Seignior threescore and ten mules loden with money of Amurath his Treasure, and threescore with goods; all which the Sultan gaue to Amurath his Wife and children.

It is strange to reade, how the Grand Seignior doth tyrannise ouer his subiects, and how seuerely he doth punish the least omission in any of his officers: for I find it obserued, that the seuenth of Ianuary in the end of this year 1611, the grand Seignior being abroad in the snow, and not wel prouided for of fuel, he caused Stambol Aga who had that charge, to be stript na- Seuerity of the Sultan. F ked, and set in the snow four or fiue hours. Indeed this winter was very rigorous, and there fel aboundance of snow throughout all Turky, with great stormes: many houses were beaten downe; and amongst others, the French Consull of Aleppo was slain with the fall of his own house.

Naſſuf marching with his army to the frontiers of Perſia, committed ſuch ſpoils, as the So- G phy was conſtrained to draw all his forces together to preuent the ruine of his country, being then about the midſt of Auguſt. But when they were come to a battell, the Perſian finding himſelfe too weak for him, offred conditions of peace, and promiſed to giue the Turk a quantitie of ſilk which ſhould make the charge of 200 camels, for a yearly tribute, in acknowledgment of ſome Countries which he had conquered from the Othomans. Theſe offers were accepted at Conſtantinople: but there was added, That the Perſians ſon ſhould be called Baſſa of Tauris; and that the Magiſtrat or Iudge of that city, called the Cady, ſhould be ſent from Conſtantinople. We ſhall ſee in the following year the effects of theſe propoſitions, by the Embaſſador of Perſia, whom Naſſuf ſhall bring to Conſtantinople: in the meane time let vs return to the Mediterranian ſea, take a ſuruey of the valiant exploits of the Knights of H Malta againſt the Turks.

On the 26 of April, a Turk hauing lent a good ſum of mony to a Chriſtian, to be paid at a certain day; he came before the appointed day with another Turk, and willed the Chriſtian to pay the mony to that other Turk when the day came. Which the Chriſtian promiſed to doe, and performed it accordingly; but the Turk denied the receit therof: wherupon he to whom the mony was properly due came and demanded it. To whom the Chriſtian anſwered, That he had paid it to that party to whom he had aſſigned it. Wherunto the Turk replied, That if it were ſo he were ſatisfied; but yet the other Turk denied it. Wherupon the matter was examined before the Iudge, and the Turk who had receiued the mony, taking an oath to the contrary, the Chriſtian according to the Turkiſh juſtice was inforced to pay the mony again: the I which he did; but withal prayd God to ſhew ſome publique ſigne which of them had don the wrong. And therupon the Turk going forth to repair home to his own houſe, fel downe dead in the ſtreet.

The Great Maſter Vignancourt continuing his generous deſignes againſt the Turke, had an enterpriſe againſt Navarrin, a place importing this common enemy of Chriſtians: for execution wherof he ſent the fiue gallies of his Order vnder the charge of Vaqueras, great commander of the Order, and chief of the nation of Prouence. They came within ſome miles of the ſhore, but found their landing very difficult, for that they had bin diſcouered by one of the caſtles of Navarrin, which had giuen the alarm vnto the whole country, ſo as they were forced to paſſe on to ſome more eaſie conqueſt, to the end their voyage might not proue vnprofita- K ble: wherfore they ſailed into the Archipelague, and came neere to the coaſt of Morea, tenne legues from Corinth, where in the night they landed 800 men vnder the conduct of the commander Cremeaux General at land. This troup marched towards Corinth, and an houre before Corinth ſacked by the Knights of Malta. day were at the town gates to force them. Some of the Turks took armes, but their weake reſiſtance could not ſtay the Knights from entring with their troups: they ſackt the town, and hauing taken what ſpoile was portable, they caried away with them 500 ſlaues. After this triumph, the Chriſtians made a happy retreit, & in good order, notwithſtanding al the attempts of the Turks horſe and foot, who were drawn together in great numbers, making 10000 ſouldiers, for the country is very populous; in view of whom they imbarqued their ſpoil & ſlaues. Herby it appears, that this was one of the moſt deſperat enterpriſes that hath bin of long time E ſeen. For to attempt a place ſo far from their retreit, in ſo populous a country, which vpon the leaſt alarm may draw together ſo ſtrong a power; and to make their retreit with ſo ſmall a number, againſt ſuch great troups as purſued them: doubtleſſe wee muſt confeſſe, that as they ſhewed great valor, & had good fortune, ſo they vndertook a very dangerous enterpriſe. Thus the Knights of Malta vanquiſhed; whom we might tearm the maſters of the Mediterranean ſea, if the reuenues of their Order would ſuffer them to ſet forth ſhipping and forces equal to their valor.

But to follow the variable courſe of the hiſtory, let vs obſerue the different occupations of Chriſtians. At Prague the Germanes entertained themſelues with the conſideration of a Crowne, which appeared in the firmament ouer that City about the middeſt of the moneth M
October, giuing a very great light; and about it Armies of men fighting, as if it were who ſhould haue it. At that time the Emperour Rodulphus was vpon the Weſt, or declining of his dayes; and Matthias who ſucceeded him in the Empire, then King of Hungary, was vp-

on

of the ſun riſing of his triumphs. Many expounded this heauenly apparition as a preſage of happineſſe and good fortune to Matthias; he enioyed the crowne of Hungary already, and by deſignation that of Bohemia; and now they did prognoſticate vnto him that of the Romans. Doubtleſſe men which aſpire after great fortunes do rather adore the Sunne riſing than ſetting; and mans life when it declines taſtes of the lees. The flouriſhing glory of Matthias, his age, and his actions in the Warres, did adde nothing to the authoritie of other men in the country, but did mightily ſettle his owne. Three Sunnes which were ſeene in the firmament ouer Vienna the chiefe city in Auſtria, confirmed the Germans more in this their hope, that he ſhould haue the third Crowne of the Romans. This laſt apparition hapned the yeare following.

B About the end of the yeare, ſome of the Engliſh Embaſſadours men entring into quarrell with certain Iamoglans of the next Serail, from words they fell to blowes. During which tumult one of the embaſſadors men threw a ſtone, and ſmote a Iamoglan on the forehead, whereof he died within few hours after. The Aga of the Serail complained herof vnto the Viſier, who preſently ſent the Subbaſſa of Galata to make inquiry of the fact. The Embaſſador went himſelfe to the Serail, and ſent for his men which had bin in the quarrell, willing the Turks to deſigne the party which had thrown the ſtone. Who all with a ſhout ran vpon one Simon Dibbins, a man that was newly come from Candy, where he had ſerued in the Venetian garriſons, and was now entertained into the Embaſſadors ſeruice. This Simon was not he that threw the ſtone; notwithſtanding the Turks would none but him, on him they laid hands and dragged him away. The Embaſſador interpoſing himſelfe, and offering to pledge for him, was thruſt away by them, his men beaten, and one of his pages wounded. Wherupon he complained to the grand Viſier, but preuailed little; for to priſon they dragged this Simon, and there kept him a whole month; neither could he be releaſed, albeit the Engliſh nation offered great ſums to ranſom his life; for the Turkes would needs haue bloud for bloud. The day of execution being appointed, the Embaſſador ſent his Chapleine to the priſon where this Simon was, to prepare him for death: vnto whom (examining him how he had formerly liued) he confeſſed, that in England ſome few years before he had killed a man; for which fact he fled thence into Candy; from whence he came to Conſtantinople, where he was to ſuffer for that which hee did not: the iuſt iudgement of God purſuing him to the ſhedding of his bloud in Conſtantinople among the Turks vndeſeruedly, for the bloud which he ſhed in England wilfully. He was hanged at the Embaſſadors gates: his head and heels the next night were ſtoln away by the Turks, as it was thought, to vſe in ſome kind of Sorcery; the other parts of his body they had leaue to take down and bury.

This year 1612, they did celebrate at Conſtantinople a double nuptial feaſt; for the mari- 1612.
ages of the Baſſa Mehemet, ſonne to the deceaſed Cicala, with the Sultans ſiſter; and the Baſſa Mechmet Admirall at ſea, he whom we haue ſeen lately return from Egypt, and bring to Conſtantinople the reuenues of that rich kingdom, with the eldeſt daughter of his Emperor. For the feaſts of yong Cicala the Spahi made courſes on horſeback with battle-axes and barres, in the open place neer vnto the Serail; where they made diuers fire-works of very great charge, E but of ſmall inuention; and they gaue preſents to aboue 20000 perſons, beſides the charge of the banqueting ſtuffe, which amounted to aboue 20000 crowns. The pomp was double; for the Sultans women celebrated that day with the greateſt ladies of the Port; & the men apart in other places did celebrate it in like manner. But the magnificence of the marriage of the Baſſa Admiral at ſea with Achmats eldeſt daughter had far more luſtre at the port. The ceremonie was performed the 30 of Iune, twenty daies after the other; and the order of this great pomp, as wel as ſome other which we haue deſcribed in this hiſtory, requireth a particular relation.

The day before the conſummation of the marriage, they ſent the brides moueables and jewels, from the Serail to the bridegroomes lodging, in this order and ſtate following. Firſt,
F there marched fiue hundred Ianizaries on foot, beeing followed with the grand Prouoſt of Conſtantinople, and the general Surueyor, both on horſebacke, and attyred in cloth of gold; the Aga or Colonel of the Ianizaries very proudly adorned, and inuironed with ſome Ianizaries, marched alone on horſebacke: after theſe, two hundred men of qualitie well mounted, and richly attyred, followed with a ſlow pace. The laſt which marcht in this pompe or ceremonie, monie, were the Taliſmans, Centons, Emirs, and other miniſters of Mahomets Clergy. And G preſently after followed the Baſſa Achmat, Deftarda or Treaſurer; who conducted the moueables, as choſen by the Sultan to be Godfather or Sagois to the Bride, beeing inuironed with twelue footmen attyred in long robes of gold. After him followed the moueables, apparell, and jewels, which made the brides truſſe, hauing in the head excellent muſicke after the Turkiſh maner, of hoboies and kettle-drums on horſeback.

Theſe moueables conſiſted of 27 preſents: the firſt was a little hat al of gold, couered with pretious ſtones, and pantofles or womens ſhooes after the Turkiſh faſhion of pure gold, inriched with Turquoiſes and Rubies: a booke of Mahomets Law, the couer wherof was of maſſie gold all ſet with diamonds; many bracelets and other rare deuices for women of pure gold, with many pretious ſtones: a little coffer a cubit long, and halfe as broad, all of rock chryſtal, H hauing the corners of gold, in which were to be ſeen great diamonds and huge pearles, to the value of 80000 pounds ſterling. After this pretious coffer were caried many ſmocks imbroidred with gold and pearle, and head-bands for the forhead, with many robes of cloth of gold. All this was diſtributed into 27 preſents, as we ſaid, and caried with great pompe by 27 men on foot.

After theſe preſents followed 11 Caroches full of yong maidens, ſlaues to ſerue the bride: theſe Caroches were couered and ſhut, and either of them attended by two eunuchs Moores. After theſe followed 28 virgins ſlaues, attyred in cloth of gold, and accompanied by 28 black Eunuchs, al on horſeback and richly clad. After which were ſeen 240 mules loden with tents of tapeſtry, cloath of gold, ſattin, veluet, with the ground of gold, with many cuſhions which I are the chairs the Ladies of Turky vſe; with many other rich and ſumptuous mouables. Such was the truſſe which this yong princeſſe brought to her ſpouſes houſe. Doubtleſſe this equipage was ſtately, and did wel become the pompe and greatnes of the Othoman houſe, from the which ſhe deſcended, the mightieſt and richeſt of all the royal houſes of Europe, yea of the whole world.

Achmat his daughter royally maried.

The mariage day being come, the bride was conducted to her husbands lodging with no leſſe pomp and ſtate than her moueables. The Ianizaries marched firſt, as they had formerly don, being followed by the grand Prouoſt, the Surueyor their Aga, and many other Officers of the Port. The Emirs (who are deſcended from Mahomet, and alone carry greene turbants) marched after to the number of 80. This name of Emir is as much to ſay as Lord: they which K wear them anſwer not, and obey none but their Chiefe, called Mirabachi; and their voyce in judgment ſtands for two. They were followed by the Taliſmans or Prieſts of Mahomets Law, and by a great number which ſtudy it, and aſpire vnto the office of Cadies or Iudges, of Cadileſquiers or Mufti. The Viſiers or ſupream Iudges of the Turks eſtate, who iudge of all affairs in councel, came after with the grand Viſier, who is Lieutenant Generall to the Turkiſh Sultan thorowout his whole empire, and keeps the ſeals of the empire: he had on his left hand (which is the moſt honourable rank in Turky) the grand Mufti or ſupreame Biſhop of their Law. The muſick followed after on horſeback, conſiſting of thirty men with drums and hoboies, being followed by eight Egyptians which caried Biſcan tabors, and did a thouſand Apiſh tricks. Theſe were followed by forty muſitians marching two and two, ſome playing on L citerns, others on harps, and ſome on lutes after the Turkiſh maner. A foole, held for a Saint among them, being muſled with a cap and a cloak couered with mutton bones, danced & ſung with theſe inſtruments: 50 of the chief officers of the Arſenall marcht after him, and 30 men with hammers and other iron inſtruments, to break down whatſoeuer aduanced too far in the ſtreets, & might hinder the free paſſage of two trees of an immenſe height, laden with diuers ſorts of fruits all of wax, carried by many men, and ſupported from the top and the midſt with ropes. After theſe trees came 20 officers belonging to Achmat Baſſa the high treaſurer, godfather to the bride; and he himſelf alone richly attyred and proudly mounted. After whom came two great torches light, carried by many ſlaues, and then a third torch of a wonderfull bignes, all couered with plats of gold, and ſhining more with pretious ſtones than the flame M that burnt. The Raiſſer Aga with fifty of the Princeſſes officers followed theſe lights, and after them was caried a great canopie of crimſon Veluet, and after it another greater, couered with plates of gold, whoſe curtaines being ſhut on all ſides hung down to the ground. Vnder this canopy was the princeſſe on horſeback, with ſome of her blacke eunuchs, her caroch followed lowed couered with cloth of gold, and drawn by foure great white horſes, wonderfull beautifull. Then followed eight other caroches, in which were a great number of the brides maids, with many Negroes gelt; and finally, 25 virgins ſlaues, choſen amongſt the faireſt, all on horſbacke, hauing their haire confuſedly hanging vpon their ſhoulders. Such was the pompe of this marriage: but many times the nuptiall feaſt is intermixt with funerall mourning. For not many daies after, the Sultans ſecond daughter, promiſed to Naſſuf Baſſa, was carried to her graue without any pompe or honour: for the Turks make no great eſteeme of women. The death of the Sultans daughter.

The day after the marriage, the Grand Seignior did cruelly beat his Sultana, the mother of this daughter, whom he had married to the Captain Baſſa; he ſtabbed her with his handjarre or dagger through the cheeke, and trod her vnder his feet. The reaſon was, becauſe ſhee had ſtrangled a fauorit of his, which was one of his ſiſters ſlaues, whom the Grand Seigniour hauing ſeene, and being enamored with her, ſent for her. The Sultana hearing thereof, cauſed her to be brought to her lodging, where ſhee ſtript her of her apparrell, ſtrangled her, and put her clothes vpon one of her owne ſlaues, whom ſhe ſent to the Sultan in ſtead of the other, and at her returne ſtrangled her alſo; as ſhee had done many others when they once appeared to bee with childe by the Grand Seigniour.

The plague beginning furiouſly to ſpoile the City of Conſtantinople, the Sultan was forced to return to his country palace, called the Serail of Darut Baſſa, to auoid the danger of this violent contagion: the which makes mee thinke, that the Turkiſh Emperours for their owne profit diſpenſe with ſome articles of their faith; for as we haue ſaid before, The Turks are ſo obſtinatly tied to the beleefe of Predeſtination, as they will not vouchſafe to turne from a peſtiferous body, when it is carried to the graue, and much leſſe forbeare to viſit his friends, being ſick of the plague, for that (ſay they) if we muſt needs die of this contagion, it is in vain to flie it, for it will find vs whereſoeuer; if not, our health ſhall neuer be impaired, although we conuerſe with thoſe that are ſicke of this diſeaſe. But their Sultans know well how to flie the danger; yea and to cauſe them to be led vnder the arms that come to kiſſe his hand, leſt they ſhould offer him ſome violence. Thus we ſee the defect of falſe religions, when as we ſee this marke of vniuerſalitie in the faith taken away; for there euery man beleeues according to his priuat intreſt, as wellas among many others which haue ſeparated themſelues from the truth, to canton themſelues in their errors, where we doe often trie the diuerſitie of their beleefe. A great plaghe at Conſtantinople.

Sultan Achmat being in his palace of Darut Baſſa, and going to viſit a ſtately Moſque which he cauſed to be built there, a Deruis or religious Turke thruſt on by ſome deuilliſh fury, caſt a great ſtone at him to beat him downe; but the blow of this deteſtable traitor, fell vpon his ſhoulder, and hurt him but lightly. Achmat commanded they ſhould draw from this wretch the confeſſion of his confederates: but the officers of the port cauſed him to be executed the next day, ſomewhat too ſuddenly, and by a death too honourable, for a crime ſo ful of abomination, for they cauſed his head to be cut off. A Deruis of the ſame order had in former times ſought to murther the Emperour Mahomet the ſecond.

On the 14 of Aprill, the Lady Anne Glouer, wife to Sir Thomas Glouer, Embaſſador reſiding at Conſtantinople for the Engliſh, was buried with very great ſolemnity, the like had not bin ſeen in that countrey, ſince the Turks conquered Conſtantinople. There were preſent at this funerall of moſt nations in the world; the ſermon was preached in a large garden vnder a Cypreſſe tree: and although but few of thoſe preſent did vnderſtand it, yet it wrought this effect, that whereas the Ieſuits and Friers had formerly poſſeſt both Iewes, Turks, and other people, that the Engliſh nation ſince the change of their religion, had neither churches, nor any form of diuine ſeruice; hereby they perceiued, that they had both, and ſerued God far more decently and deuoutly than they themſelues; inſomuch that the Ieſuits being aſhamed of their impoſtures, and ſlanderous vntruth, durſt not for a while after walke the ſtreets, for feare of the Turks, who threatned them for ſo much belying the Engliſh. The Sermon being ended, the body was caried from Pera vnto the Engliſh graues, which were almoſt a mile from the place; it was cloſed in lead, and laid in a Caroch couered ouer with blacke veluet, and the horſes with blacke cloth. The Dutch Embaſſador, the Hungarian Agent, the French Colonell with a great number of all nations both men and women followed her to her graue. The tomb was of faire marble, built foure ſquare almoſt the height of a man, hauing an Epitaph engrauen thereon. The funerall of the lady Glouer, the Embaſſadors wife.

The castle of Lango taken by the Florentines.

We haue seene the yeare before, the Island and towne of Lango spoiled by the gallies of Malta and Naples, but the Castle was saued from ruine, by the resistance it made against the Christians attempts: but this yeare in Iune the great Duke of Tuscans gallies running ouer the Archipelague, assailed it so furiously, as they forced and spoyled it, carrying away twelue hundred prisoners. Mechmet Bassa Admirall at sea, whom we saw euen now busied at his nuptiall pompe, with the Emperours eldest daughter, being aduertised of these spoyles of the Florentines, by the dayly complaints of the Turks which lost their shipping, and of many other enterprises attempted vpon his Masters countries lying neere the sea shore; he departed from Constantinople in August with three and thirty great gallies, hauing commanded all the Beyes of the Islands and townes in the Archipelague, to ioyne with him, with as many gallies as they could make, to stop the Christians courses in the West. But whilst that he is busied in those seas, the Pirats of Rascia descending into the Euxine sea, by the mouthes of those riuers which discharge their waters into the sea, ouerran and spoiled the Turks coasts of those parts.

At the firme land Constantine one of the pretending Princes in Moldauia, annoyed all that had any dependance vpon the Turke. A part of that great army of the King of Polands, which had mutined for their pay, spoiled Podolia; and a Prince of the Tartarians discontent for that Achmat had preferred a cousin of his before him in the inuestiture of the realm of the Tartars Precopians, with 5000 souldiers spoiled the riuers of Moldauia vnder the Turks dominion, and he did the like in the gulph of Nicopolis.

Troubles in Moldauia.

This was at such time when as miserable Moldauia was the theatre, wheras the Turks, Tartars, and Moldauians acted a bloudy tragedy, at the costs and charges of the poore countreymen. For Tomsho hauing been chosen Vayuod or Prince of that Prouince by the Turke, Constantine who could not endure that he should reigne, armed the country, ouerran it, spoiled it, and made hauocke of all, detaining two Capigi prisoners, whom the Sultan had sent to him, with commandement to obey his will, and a prohibition not to trouble Tomsho in the possession of his Prouince. But this was a message of hard digestion to Constantine; hee could not with patience yeeld to this cession of Moldauia: and in stead of sending these messengers back to the Turke with an answer, hee carried them with him into Polonia, whither he went to demand succors, and caused them to be guarded as prisoners. In the meane time by the support and aid of Potosly Gouernor of Velin his brother in law, he obtained from the King of Poland, that he should be supported against Prince Tomsho his competitor, whom the Turke had aduanced; and to make his entry into Moldauia more easie, they resolued to send an Embassador vnto Constantinople, to intreat Achmat to call backe Tomsho to his Port, that Constantine might quietly enioy Moldauia; and to acquaint him with the right and interest the Polonians had by their capitulations with the Turks, to name a Vayuod or Prince of that Prouince, to the end no wrong might be done vnto them.

This Polonian Embassador being arriued at Constantinople (thinking to be presently dispatched, either by a grant or denial of his demand, & not to stay aboue fifteen or twenty days) being visited at his arriuall by all the Embassadors of Christian Kings and Princes which remained there: in stead of audience, after six weekes attendance, hee was arrested and detained prisoner, vnderstanding from the Turks, that he should haue no liberty vntill that the two Capigi, whom Prince Constantine carried into Poland were released.

The troubles and diuisions among Christians, neighbours to the Turke, haue alwaies serued as a bridge for this Infidell to inuade them, and by this aduantage to vsurpe such townes and countries as lie fit for him. Now that Valachia, Moldauia, yea and Transyluania, are tost and turmoiled with continuall disorders and combustions; the Sultan seemes to embrace this occasion, to make himselfe Souereigne of those Prouinces, and to get possession of al that lies betwixt the riuer of Danow, the mountains of Sarmatia, the riuer of Tibiscus, and the Euxine sea. Hee emploies all his thoughts and inuentions vpon this subiect, to bring his designes to effect. He armes and drawes forces about Belgrade, vnder the conduct of Bassa Mahomet Bellergi: He commands the Tartarians to enter into Moldauia, and he sent a nauall army towards the mouth of the riuer of Danow, which made the frigots of Rassia to dislodge, the which had continually made inroades and spoyles vpon his lands. Battori Prince of Transyluania was at that time before the towne of Cromstad, which he had besieged, but the tediousnesse of this siege

A siege made him resolue to send an Embassador to Constantinople, to demand succours from the Grand Seignior, to the end he might be able to continue this siege, and to take the towne: he gaue this charge to Andrew Giezy, and sent him to the Sultans Port: but in stead of seruing his Master faithfully, hee practised a detestable treason against him, to put the Turke in full possession of Transyluania, and to make him absolute Souereign. The practise was concluded after this manner, That the Bassa Mahomet Belzergi should enter the Prouince with his army, and that Giezi should ioyne with him certaine troupes, and should deliuer vnto him Veradin, Lippa, and some other strong and important places; and for recompence hee should inuest him in the Principalitie of Transyluania, in the place of Battori, and vnder the authoritie of Achmat.

B This treason might haue drawne this miserable Prouince into ruine, and it may be the rest neere adjacent, if it had taken the effect which the trecherie of Giezy had promised vnto himselfe. But the Bassa of Buda vnderstanding that Battori had some vent of the practise at the Port, and that being now in great feare and perturbation, hee had raised the siege from before Cromstad, and was ready to cast himselfe into the armes of the Palatine of Hungary, and to craue reliefe from him; the crafty Bassa knowing that this course would be prejudiciall for the Sultan, and finding that the deposing of Battori would be more difficult than they expected, hee diuerted Mahomet Bassa from attempting any thing against Battori or Transyluania. This act shewes sufficiently, that Christian Princes which thinke to shelter themselues vnder the shadow of the Turkish crescent, are very ill assured: for he neuer failes to stir vp enemies a-
C gainst them, to make them sue for succors, and himselfe necessarie: Then in the end hee expels them, and becomes absolute master of their countries. It was also said, That the Bassa Mahomet would not attempt any thing in Transyluania, by reason of the election of the Emperour Matthias, whereof the Bassa of Buda was assured by the Embassador which the said Emperor sent to Constantinople, to carry the Presents vnto the Sultan, which Embassadour was honorably entertained at Buda by the said Bassa, and from thence conducted safely to Constantinople.

But not to keep these Turkish troups idle, Mahomet Bassa being aduertised that Constantine the pretending Prince in Moldauia, had been in Poland to craue some assistance from thence, he resolued to imploy his forces that way, to dispossesse him and to settle another.

D But the better to vnderstand the beginning and successe of these Moldauian warres, wee must make a repetition of that which past some yeares before. In the yeare 1608, Ieremie Mohyla Prince or Vayuod of Valachia. died: committing the gouernment to his brother Simeon, during the minoritie of his three sonnes, Constantine, Alexander, and Bougdan, the eldest being but eight yeares old. He left three daughters married to three generous Princes of Polonia, Potosky, Visinousky, and Corresky. Prince Simeon continued in the gouernment vntill the yeare 1611; after whose decease the young Prince Constantine by the persuasion of his mother, that he might safely take vpon him the gouernment of Moldauia, and not attend any confirmation from the Sultan, for that Prince Simeon who had been confirmed by the Turke which then reigned, was but Tutor to his Nephew; entred the gouernment. At E this time there remained at Constantinople, one Stephano or Tomsho, who had of long time practised the fauour of one of the Visiers called Mehemet, an Eunuch of Georgia (who was then Chimacham, or Lieutenant to the Grand Visier) and of some other Bassaes, as well by money as by other practises, suggesting falsly that he was sonne to Prince Aaron, who had been Vayuod of Moldauia before the deceased Ieremy: and he preuailed so by his practises and corruption (whereunto the Turks are more subiect than any Nation in the World) as he was admitted to the Principalitie by the Grand Seignior, and hauing giuen him to vnderstand by the Visier, that Constantine had thrust himselfe rashly into the gouernment, and that hee would not acknowledge him for his Lord and Souereigne, nor pay the yerely tribute, which was 40000 chequines, hee sent Fousseyen Aga with 20000 Turks and Tartarians to F settle Stephen or Tomsho in Moldauia, and to expell Prince Constantine. Which army marched so secretly, as they had in a manner surprised him; yet drawing together a head of 10000 men, hee resolued to attend the euent. The Aga sent to acquaint him with his commission, and among other things threatned him, that if he would not suffer him to proclaime Stephen Vayuod of Moldauia, and yeeld him the City of Yas free; he would cut him in pieces.

Where-

Whereunto Constantine made answer, by the aduice of the Prince Potosky his brother in law, That the Grand Seigniour had been abused: for if hee had vnderstood, that his predecessor had granted vnto the deceased Prince Ieremy his father, and to Prince Simeon his vncle, That he should succeed his said father in the gouernment: it was not credible that he would seeke to dispossesse him by force, without hearing, and install in his place an vnknowne person, who had falsely supposed himselfe to be the sonne of a Prince of Moldauia: neither should they finde, that he had refused to acknowledge the Sultan for his Souereigne Prince, or denied to continue the same tribute which his father and vncle had paid; but if the Aga would proceed without any respect of his offers, he did hope that the true God of battel would maintain him in his iust defence, and would not suffer an vsurper to preuaile ouer a lawfull Prince. Fousseyen Aga, who had no will to capitulate with Prince Constantine, being corrupted by Stephen with Presents and promises, aduanced with his army, so as the next day they ioyned battel; but the Moldauians oppresst with multitudes of Turks, Tartarians, and Valachians, could not make it good. Wherefore Potosky entreated Prince Constantine to saue himselfe, and to suffer him to finish the battell: but he could by no meanes persuade him, still resoluing to attend the euent. Whereupon they went both again to the charge with such troups as they had left, and defeated many of the Turks forces; but being oppressed with a new supply of 2000 horse which the Aga sent by Stephen, they were constrained to yeeld themselues to the mercy of their enemies. Prince Constantine fell to the Tartarian share, either for that he had been taken prisoner by some of them, or else was giuen them by Fousseyen Aga, to draw a ransome from him, and be in stead of their pay. But they made no great vse of him; for as they led him away, passing the riuer of Niestre, hee leapt into it, thinking either to saue himselfe by swimming, or vnwilling to suruiue his disgrace. And as for Prince Potosky, he was carried to Constantinople, and was put into the blacke tower, which is a prison appointed for men of quality, where he continued vntill the yeare 1616. The losse of this battell by Constantine, gaue an easie entrance to Stephen into Moldauia, no man daring oppose himselfe against the Turks forces, so as Fousseyen Aga caused Stephen to be proclaimed Prince of Moldauia in the city of Yas, and then dismissed his army, and returned to Constantinople. Such was the fortune of the Prince of Moldauia, ruined by the Turks, and such was the disorder and confusion of his miserable countrey.

This Summer Constantinople and the countrey round about, was annoyed with aboundance of Grashoppers, as it had been in the former yeare: but to free themselues from this deuouring vermine, about the middest of Iuly, the Patriarch of Constantinople, and Alexandria, with diuers other Bishops, and Calloires attyred in their copes and other ornaments, went forth in solemne manner at the gates of Andrianople, being the North gate of the City. Whereupon (said the Greeks) they all perished: and indeed about this time infinit heapes of them were found dead; but not by reason of their curse, for most were dead before they cursed them, and were to be seene dead vpon euery bush and twigge of a tree before their curse, and many liued after their curse, and contiuued vntill the next Summer. The cold deawes which fell this Summer (being extraordinarie) were thought to bee the naturall cause thereof; God causing those dewes to fall, to free the countrey from these deuouring creatures.

The troubles of Transyluania.

Let vs now describe the miseries of the Transyluanian, and of his Prouince, a table so often represented in this Historie. Gabriel Battori who gouerned Transyluania, as lawfully descended from the Souereigne Princes thereof, hauing made himselfe a tributarie vnto the Turke, and by his impious actions mingled Mahomets impietie with the Christian Religion; and moreouer, exceeding in his crueltie, became a memorable example to all posteritie, that Princes which carry the glorious name of Christians, when they haue once laid aside all feare of the Souereigne of Princes, cannot attend, but a miserable end in their reigne, conformable to the course of their enormities. So Gabriel Battori holding it a law of State, to settle his affaires with the ruine of religion, allyes himselfe with the Turke, and with him afflicts the Christian Prouinces. But seeing many factions made against him, as wel by the descendents of Botscay, as by Giezi, Bethlem Gabor, and some other, hee supports himselfe with the forces of Andrew Nage, the head of the Rebels in high Hungarie, who came vnto him to the siege before Cromstad to assist him in his affaires. Battori entertained him with all

shewes

A shews of curteſie inuited him to dinner in his Tent; and for a greater demonſtration of friendſhip, after dinner they two went to take the air on horſeback. Nage had drunk after the Hungarian maner; Battori intreated him to run his horſe a career, and he refuſed it: the which Battori taking for an offence, ſpake many words of contempt vnto him, and hee anſwered him in the ſame manner, being more inflamed with wine, than gouerned by reaſon. Battori wonderfully offended, that a man of no ſort, being but a poore ſouldier of fortune, crept vp to ſome authoritie amongſt the ſouldiers but by degrees of rebellion, ſhould giue him ſuch words of indignitie, gaue him three blows on the head with a battle-axe which he held in his hand, and ſlew him. Thus Nage ſwimmes iuſtly in his own bloud, hauing wickedly, and to the ruine of his countrey, floted in the waies of vnconſtancie and popular tumults, and ſo he died as he had
B liued.

Battori kills Nage.

But Battori found himſelfe daily oppreſt with many affairs, which draue him inſencibly to his ruine. Peter Decaci kinſman vnto the deceaſed Botſcay, annoied him on the one ſide with troups of ſoldiers. Andrew Giezi (who had betrayed him in his embaſſie to Conſtantinople) leuied forces to proſecute him: and Bethlem Gabor a nobleman of Tranſylvania, aſſiſted by the Turk, took many places from him, after that Giezi had forced him to raiſe his ſiege at Cromſtad, and generally all Tranſylvania reuolted againſt this Prince. To ſee more plainely in the obſcuritie of theſe confuſed diſorders, you muſt vnderſtand that this prouince is peopled by three ſeueral nations, the Sicules, Saxons, and Hungarians. The Sicules, deſcended from the Scythians, came with Attila King of the Hunnes, in Pannonia, now called Hungary; and ta-
C king their way toward their country, they inhabited that part of Tranſilvania which lies next to Moldavia, and diuiding themſelues into ſeuen colonies, they built the towns of Kiſdi, Orbai, Scipſi, Cykuduarheh, Aranios, and Maros. The Saxons mutinying againſt the gouernement of Charlemaign King of France, for certain impoſitions wherwith he had charged them, retyred into Tranſylvania, and by force ſeiſed vpon that part of the country which confineth vpon Valachia; where they built the towne of Hermenſtad (otherwiſe called Cibin) Cromſtad, Nezen (or Biſtric) Meduviſch, Scieſpourg, Clauſenbourg, and Alba Iulia. The Hungarians inhabited this prouince from the time of S. Stephen King of Hungary; and hauing maſtred the other nations, they obtained ſuch preheminence amongſt them, that ſince their ſucceſſors haue cauſed themſelues to be called Nobles of Tranſylvania, and the Vayuods or D Princes of the Countrey haue bin taken from among them. The Towns of Varradin, Deuer, Zilahi, Gela, and ſome others, owe their beginnings vnto them. The greateſt part of theſe three nations which inhabit Tranſylvania, were reuolted againſt Battori; but particularly the Saxons had taken vp arms againſt him, his great crueltie hauing forced them to this extreame remedie.

Parties againſt Battori.

Battori being thus abandoned by his ſubiects, proſecuted by his Nobility, and forſaken of all the world, knowing not whither to fly for ſuccour, and not daring to truſt vnto the Turke, who openly fauored Gabor; he reſolued to try if he could by preſents draw the Emperor Matthias to his aid. Wherfore he ſent Embaſſadours vnto him to promiſe all ſubiection and obedience: his preſents were, a long robe or ſacerdotal cloak of gold, ſet with pearle and pretious
E ſtones, certain plumes of blacke Herons adorned with pretious ſtones, a Turkiſh ſword, the ſcabberd being of ſiluer richly ſet with jewels, ten black horſes with rich furniture embroidered with gold and ſiluer, and a Turkiſh horſe, hauing halfe the body and legs of the color of gold, with his furniture of crimſon richly embroidered. He laboured to haue the Emperour giue notice to the Baſſa of Buda, That this attempt of the Turks againſt Tranſylvania was a breach of the peace. But the Baſſa made anſwer, That his Emperor was not to be blamed if he ſeiſed vpon that prouince, and kept it quiet from the practiſes of others, as belonging to himſelf. But Battori relying not wholly vpon this ſupport, but deſiring to haue more ſtrings to his bow, ſent Embaſſadours to the Sultan with rare and rich preſents; who had ſecret treaties and councels with the Baſſa's. The which Negronius the Emperors Embaſſador reſiding at Con-
F ſtantinople diſcouering, he ſent word vnto the Emperor, that he entertained a monſter among men.

About the ſame time there came Embaſſadours from the Saxon townes of Tranſylvania, complaining much of the crueltie and tyrannie of Battori. The Saxons (ſaid they) liuing many many years in Transylvania, and beautified the prouinces with townes, villages, and markets, G and had by their vertue obtained many priuiledges from former Emperours: but Battori, against his promised faith, and the oath which he had taken, had depriued them of their priuiledges, and afflicted them in such sort, as they were in a maner ruined. That from hie first entrance, he had sought to root out the antient family of the Saxons: That he had afflicted them with imprisonments and miserable seruitude, and had detained Iohn Benner three years in prison, for no other cause, but for that he knew hee had brought a great estate out of Germanie. He had depriued honest widowes of their estates, and had oppressed others with vniust exactions: he had surprised Hermstad the chiefe City of the Saxons, and suffered the Haiducks to spoil it, and to commit all sorts of insolencies. That he had expelled the Magistrates, banished honest citisens, rauished women, slain the parents, to depriue the children of their inhe- H ritance, and commited all the barbarous cruelties that could be deuised. That hee had sent three hundred Captiues to the Sultan for a present: many he cut into small pieces, some hee had thrown down from the tops of high mountains and towers, some he had hung vp by the feet, others he had drawn in pieces with wild horses & trees; and to conclude, he had practised all kindes of barbarous cruelties. That hauing expelled religious Princes out of Moldauia and Valachia, hee had made them subiect to the Turke: for no other end, but that getting an occasion to circumuent the Christians, he might wast all with fire and sword, hauing multitudes of Barbarians to second him. And for a conclusion of his notable crueltie, hauing fired the town of Gaudin, he had made choice of twenty of the principall inhabitants, and giuing euery one of them a pike, he forced them in his presence to kil one another in the middest of I the market place.

Cruelty of Battori.

But God reuengeth his excesse in his ruine, whereinto we shall presently see him run headlong miserably: for Bethlem Gabor his capital enemy, hauing joined his forces with those of Bassa Serder, they both entred together into Transylvania, forced Lugasti, tooke Deue, and strooke a great terror into the whole Country. Ogli Bassa on the other side surmounteth the difficultie of the waies, and lodgeth with his troups in the suburbs of Cromstad, and from thence went and camped ouer all the tract of Barry or Barsac. Thus Battori sees himself oppresst by an enemy, from whom he can expect nothing but his miserie and ruine. He attended succors from the Emperor, vnder the conduct of the Palatine of Hungary and Fortgatsie; they came, but not such as were able to resist the Turks. This made him write to Trinau for the le- K uying of soldiers, but the hatred they bare him generally, deceiued his hopes, no man would march vnder his ensignes. This refusall makes him distrustfull, he dares not confer with any man touching the affairs of the war. A treaty of peace seemes most fit for his affaires: hee makes an ouerture to his most familiar friends, & tels them he holds it necessary to purchase his peace with Serder Bassa, at what price soeuer, yea were it in deliuering into his hands the places of greatest importance. But hee receiues no other answers from them, but that they had rather die than aduise him to it. Thus he sees himselfe void of all hopes of safety in his affairs: he wanted mony, his subiects, yea euen his soldiers hated him, as a prince abandoned to all crueltie; and for his last remedy, and the most ordinary in base and cowardly mindes, he fel into dispair, intreating one of his seruants to kill him: but the other refused him that L honor, suffering him to draw on his miserable life, vntil that within some few daies after, going forth to view where his troups were lodged, being in an open chariot, accompanied only with two gentlemen, fifty of his soldiers which attended him in an ambush, shot at him, slew him, and hurt those that did accompanie him. This accident happened in the yeare 1613. when as this vnfortunat Battori went to giue an account vnto God of the bad gouernment of his estate.

Bethlem Gabor made prince of Transylvania.

Some few dayes after, Bethlem Gabor was openly declared Prince of Transylvania by the Bassa Serder; who gaue him this aduertisement at his introduction; Battori shall serue for an example to bad Princes; I doe not thinke that you will follow his steps. Beware that you attempt not any thing without the priuitie of my Master. Maintaine peace with your neighbours, and make men of ex- M perience and honesty of your Councell. Transylvania did yet feare the continuance of a storme of a fatall Warre; when as in lesse than forty daies it saw it selfe setled in the calme of sweet peace, by the general acknowledgement which all the Townes made vnto Bethlem Gabor, and the oath of fidelitie which they tooke vnto him as to their elected Prince; notwithstanding that the Emperor had imploied all his credit to hinder it. But the desire of peace, and feare of the Turks armies, drew all the Gouernors of towns to acknowledge Gabor. Such were the affairs of Transylvania, disordred by the Turk. Now let vs make an end of the remainder of the year 1612, the which we haue deferred, for that we would not interrupt the relation of the affairs of this prouince.

the

We haue said elswhere, That the King of Persia had offered conditions of peace to Sultan Achmat, much to his aduantage, seeing that he yeelded himselfe the Turks tributary, in regard of certain lands which he had conquered from him. Now the Visier Nassuf, General of the army against the Persian, brings his Embassadour to Constantinople to conclude this peace. Nassuf ariued with his army and the Persian Embassador at Scudaret, right ouer against Constantinople, whither most of the Bassa's of the Port went to salute him, and then returned. But the grand Visier staid there two days; on the third he past ouer to Constantinople, where hee was entertained at the water side by all the Bassa's that accompanied him; an infinit number of Ianizaries going before with their pieces, and some of them in armor; after whom followed their Aga on horseback: then came a great number of Iamoglans, and the Emirs or kindred of Mahomet with their green turbants, with many blind men shouting aloud: These holy men caried the banner (as they say) of Mahomet, and the people standing by kissed it with great deuotion as they past. After them came the Chaoux on horseback, the Bassa's, & then the chief Mufti, and last of all Nassuf Bassa himself: after whom followed the treasure he brought with him for the Emperor, being 234 Mules loden with gold and siluer. The Visier as he past by the Sultans window bowed himselfe very low vnto him, from whom hee had a nod with his head, and so set spurres to his horse and rode away fast, as the manner of the Turkes is when they salute a greater man than themselues, presently to run or ride away apace. The Visier being come to the Serail, went in to the Sultan to kisse his hand; where hee continued a whole houre, the rest of the Bassa's attending without. There were present at this daies pompe the Emperors Embassador, the French, the English, Polonian, Low-Countries, and Venetian; the Persian remaining stil at Scudaret. The grand Visier as he past by the Emperors Embassador, put off his hat and saluted him, but not the rest. The same day Tomsho, who had bin lately made Prince of Moldauia by the grand Seigniour, sent many Polonians to Constantinople, whom hee had taken in the Warres. All which (notwithstanding they threw downe their Caps and offered to turne Turkes) were put to death. And within few daies after, the Visier Nassuf sitting in the publique Divano, had three robes sent him from the grand Seignior to grace him.

A Persian Embassador comes to Constantinople.

Achmat hauing a will to let the Persian see the magnificence of his Court, went out of Constantinople; and vnder pretence to go take the aire at his Country palace called Darut Bassa, he takes occasion at his return to make a stately entry into his Imperial city. The generall Surueyour being aduertised of his will, caused all the waies from his palace of Darut vnto the City to be couered with sand, the which containeth two French leagues, or four English miles. This done, the Emperour parted for his retinue, and entred in pomp into Constantinople. The order of his entry was in this manner. A great number of men at Armes marched first on horseback, and after them some troups of foot, the Cadies of Constantinople or men of justice; and all the Talismans, or those of Mahomets Law, in very great numbers followed after: and after these followed the Visiers and Bassa's in very great pomp. After whom followed the Sultans houshold, that is to say, ten men leading in their hands tenne goodly horses richly caparisoned, the last of which had the bridle and saddle all couered with pretious stones: the Sultans Target was made fast vnto the saddle, and vpon it did hang euen almost to the ground a great tassel of pearls; and ouer all this, a long horse-cloath or couering for an horse, the which was embroidered so thicke with pearle, as the ground could not be discerned. After which followed the rest of the Emperours houshold in diuers troupes: first, fifty Ianizaries on foot, euery one of them leading dogs in leashes, Mastifs, or Irish greyhounds: the goodliest of all were those which the French Embassadour had presented vnto the Sultan. Secondly, the grand Seigniors footmen, called Pelks, who were Persians by Nation, all wel attired, wearing on their heads bonnets of siluer and gilt, in form of pots. Thirdly, Achmats stately entry into Constantinople.

threescore

threescore archers on foot, in the middest of which the Sultan came, attired in a rich robe of cloath of gold imbroidered with pearles and diamonds: his slaues were inricht after the same maner: his turbant couered with fiue plumes of black herons feathers, inricht with great Diamonds, and a chain of the same stones about the lower part of his turbant: vpon his little finger he had a diamond of a large bignes and inestimable price, which gaue a maruellous great light. He was proudly mounted vpon a goodly horse richly caparisoned, the saddle was embroidred with gold, pearle, and Diamonds, the stirrops of pure gold set with many diamonds, and from the horses neck did hang great tassels of pearle, which were so great, that they were exceeding pretious. After the grand Seignior followed three men on horsebacke, carrying in their hands, the one his arms, the other his cloak, and the third his Imperial turbant; & these were attended on by certain Esquires and gentlemen all on horsebacke. Then came the musick after the Turkish maner, consisting of threescore men on horsebacke, which played vpon Fifes, Clerons, and trumpets. Next followed an hundred pages of the Sultans brauely mounted, and followed by many Eunuchs; fifty of which pages caried euery one a falcon vpon his fist, hauing their heads inricht with diamonds; and these were followed by thirty gards of the Port. Then came fifty falconers and huntsmen richly attyred and wel mounted; four whereof had either of them before him vpon his saddle bow a Leopard couered with cloath of gold: with a great number of other Pages who were very beautifull, chosen amongst the infants of the tribute, and vnfortunatly appointed for the filthy and vnnatural pleasures of their master; whose garments after the Turkish maner were pretious, and made of rich cloth of gold curled. They were followed by a great troup of yong men plainly attired in cloath, hauing vpon their heads yellow caps pointed in form of a sugar loafe, and these were ordained to serue the Sultans pages.

There were moreouer diuers Beglerbegs attending the Sultan in this pomp; as of Bosna, Buda, Romania, Natolia, and others; euery company going distinct, both of horse and foot, with the Bassa's seruants all gallantly attyred & wel mounted. And after them followed Nassufs attendants, being fiue hundred in number richly armed. There were also the Kings Firemen, Calkers, Azappes, the Rices or officers of gallies with spears in their hands: all that belonged to the Arsenal, the Carters which gouerned the carts going to war, and their captains; then the shot-men with their banner, and the Armorers all in armor with their banner. There were also the banners of the grand seignior Mahomet, and of the grand Visier, euery one in his order before the grand Seignior: and after all followed the Capigies and officers of his Kitchen. The number of all sorts of attendants in this pomp was so great, as they were reckoned to be forty thousand persons.

The Persian Embassador, for whose sake Achmat had made this stately shew, to the end he might carry back into his country a pattern of the Othoman state and greatnesse, caused to bee cast out before his lodging, when as the Sultan passed by, 100 pieces of silke, the which were gathered vp by the archers of his gard, wherof they made good purchase. All these magnificences, added to those we haue formerly related at the mariages of the Sultans daughter and sister; with other pomp celebrated in France, Spain, Naples, and Germany, for the mariages of Lewis 13, King of France, with Anne of Austria Infant of Spain; and of the Prince of Spaine with the Lady Elizabeth of Bourbon the Kings eldest sister; and for the coronation of the empresse, and the Emperors entry into Noremberg, may giue vnto this yeare 1612 the title of magnique or stately.

The Persian presents to the Sultan.

Foure daies after Sultan Achmats entry into the Imperal city, the Persian Embassador had audience, and was admitted to kisse his hand. He presented vnto his Maiestie in the behalfe of the King of Persia his master, foure hundred Balls of silke, a Besonard stone as bigge as a mans fist, with some others that were lesse; nine bags of leather ful of Turquoises, the which were a foot and a halfe long, and aboue foure fingers broad; a great number of Tapestries of Wooll, Silke, cloath of gold and siluer, with many other things of great price, and very rare. Their complements being ended, they began to treat seriously of a peace betwixt two great and antient enemies, the Turk and the Persian; the which after some difficulties was concluded vpon these conditions: That the Persian King should pay yearly vnto the Turkish Emperor by way of tribute, a quantitie of silk to the burden of two hundred camels: that the King

of

A of Persiahis sonne should be called Bassa of Tauris,and that the Cadi or Souereigne Iudge of that towne should be sent from Constantinople.This peace thus concluded to the Turks aduantage,the Persian Embassador returned vnto his Master, hauing left most of his traine dead of the Plague at Constantinople.Being arriued at Tauris,the King of Persia seeing this peace to be so dishonourable,and burthensome for him,he caused his Embassadours head to be cut off; and sent backe the Chiaux, who was come from Constantinople to see him sweare the peace. Some write that he did him some indignities,which made these two great Monarchs returne againe to armes.

The Grand Visier Nassuf,after his returne to Constantinople, to shew his great power and authority, procured meanes to haue the Chimacham (who had formerly supplied the place B of the Grand Visier in the absence of Amurath Bassa, and vntill the returne of Nassuf) to be depriued of his Bassaes place,and sent presently ouer vnto Scudaret, vnder pretence of preferring him to a gouernment neere vnto Trebizond in the confines of Turky, but with an intent to depriue him of his head. The friends of this Chimacham, (who were many and great in Court) seeing him so disgracefully sent away, and doubting Nassuf his purpose, procured leaue of the Grand Seigniour to haue him sent for backe againe, for that hee was an old man, and might from thenceforth liue at home in quiet; and for his former seruices done, a thousand Aspers a day allowed him for his entertainement: which Nassuf tooke very discontentedly.

The Emperour Matthias sends an Embassador to Constantinople

During the Persian Embassadours abode at Constantinople, the Emperour Matthias (suc- C cessour to Rodulphus his brother) sent an Embassadour to the Sultan, to complaine of the enterprises which were made dayly vpon Transyluania, a Prouince which he said belonged vnto him, as a dependance of his Realme of Hungary. This Embassadour called Negroni was receiued at the Court, and admitted to kisse the Sultans hand: but his Presents were little esteemed, for that they were of lesse value than those which they had lately receiued from the Persian. His demands to haue the Prouince of Transyluania,were grounded vpon an Article inserted among those of the peace betwixt the Emperour and Botskay, at that time chosen Prince of Transyluania; that is to say, That Botskay dying without issue male, Transyluania should remaine at the disposition of his Imperiall Majesty. This Article being read by Negroni in the Turks Councell, whither he had beene admitted; the Muphti or Souereigne Priest of D Mahomets Law, answered, That it was contrary to his Law: so the demands of this Embassadour touching Transyluania were reiected, seeing that Botskay had no power from the Sultan (said the Grand Visier) to treat with the Emperour, and to giue him Transyluania after his death. Negroni grounded this gift of Botskay (mentioned in the said Article) vpon the eighth Article of the peace betwixt the Turke and the Emperour, concluded in the Isle of Dannow,by Amurath Visier,and the Deputies of his Imperiall Majesty, in these words;That all which had beene granted in the treaty of peace made at Vienna,to Botskay, should be duely and faithfully obserued. Nassuf the Grand Visier replied, That the Bassa Amurath being then Visier, might erre in signing these Articles of the peace vpon the Dannow: and at the same instant he shewed forth some other Articles,whereas that was not inserted; saying, That the Sultan E would faithfully performe those and no others, pressing the Embassadour Negroni to signe them; the which he refused to do: so as Nassuf vsed some threats to terrifie him; but Negroni replied,That he was in their power,and that in this case he had rather lose his life,and die gloriously for the good of his masters affaires, than to haue it taken from him at his returne to Vienna,with shame and infamy,hauing signed those Articles. Finally,he promised to aduertise his Imperiall Majesty, and to certifie them of his pleasure: which promise for this time ended the contention.

The malice and falshood of the Turks.

In the beginning of this yeare, Sultan Achmat, after the reception of the Persian Embassadour, and the stately entry hee made into Constantinople, went to lie at Adrianople, where his Ianizaries and Spahies began to mutiny, spurning at their Bread and Rice which F was giuen them for their dayly entertainement: and being demanded the reason of their insolency; they answered, That no Emperor before him had so carried out his men in the depth of Winter: which answer did much offence Nassuf Bassa. This Visier was in such credit with the

the Grand Seigniour, as during his abode at Adrianople, hee came three times in person priuately to visit him, who grew so powerfull ouer his masters affections, as he obtained a priuiledge, That it might not be lawfull for any man to speake with the Grand Seigniour priuatly, but himselfe. Being returned to Constantinople, there hapned a great fire, in which there were fiue hundred houses burnt. The Visier Nassuf comming to see it quenched, and finding some Ianizaries more carefull to breake open lockes, and rifle shoppes, than to doe any good seruice, he strucke out the braines of one of them with his mace, and brake the arme of another.

It had beene an antient custome in Constantinople, that the owner of the house with all his family where the fire began, should be put to death for their negligence: but it happening that the Emperors owne Seraill, in the time of Mahomet father to Achmat, being set on fire, Cicala Bassa presented a petition vnto him, that this custome might be abolished, holding it vnjust that other men should be put to death, and the same let passe in the Emperors owne house: whereunto he yeelded, holding it reasonable. And soone after there hapned another great fire, at which the Visier caused many of the Ianizaries to be hanged; finding them too busie in rifling houses; and he went vp and downe the streets with his scimiter in one hand, and a Ianizaries head in the other, which he had cut off. The Grand Seignior sent Holy Water vnto the Visier, wherein he had dipt a piece of Mahomets garment, the which being poured into the fire, the Turks said, it ceased presently; yet by the report of visible witnesses, it burned foure houres after. The Grand Visier Nassuf was a cruell enemy to the Ianizaries, of whom he sent sixteene thousand away into Asia, and would not suffer any moe to be made, but onely Spahies: and ouer such Ianizaries as remained he made his owne seruants to be Churbagies, and Agaes or Captaines ouer fifties and hundreds; fortifying himselfe by all meanes he could deuise, against the future time, to preuent his sudden ruine; but all this could not preserue him from a shamefull fall, as you shall hereafter heare.

Troubles in the Realme of Fez and Moroco.

In the meane time let vs passe vnto Affricke, to obserue the troubles which fell in the Realmes of Fez and Moroco; the quarrels betwixt Prince Xerif Muley Cidan, and the Xerif Muley Achmet, Ben-Abdalla his nephew, and the victories of Cidan against Abdalla. The Family of the Xerifs Princes of Fez and Moroco, tooke its beginning some hundred and foure yeares since, from Mahomet Xerif, borne at Tigumedet in Dara, at this present one of the Prouinces of Moroco: he was Alfaqui or preacher of Mahomets Law, who seeing the diuisions betwixt the Souereigne Princes of those Realmes, and that the Portugalls had seised of the chiefe Forts of Moroco, he began with three of his sonnes, Abdalla, Hamet, and Mahomet, to lay the foundation of a new Monarchy, supported by three pillars. That is to say, by a counterfeit piety and disguised Religion; vpon a godly pretext to make warre against the Portugals Christians which were in Affricke; and vpon a passionate desire to retire the Mahometane Moores which were in their pay, to the end they might by that meanes weaken them, and chase them with more ease out of the territories of Moroco. The King who at that time held the scepter of Fez (seeing nothing but the outside of the Xerifs designes) suffered his three sonnes to display their standard against the Christian Portugals in the Realme of Moroco: Innouations and nouelties are commonly pleasing to the common people. At this beginning, these three leaders were followed by a great number of souldiers; they vanquished in many encounters, and the bruit of their new victories flying into the Realme of Moroco, retired the Moores from the Portugals seruice, whom they defeated soone after, with their Commander Lopes Bariga. True it is, that it was to their losse; for Abdalla the eldest of these three brethren lost his life in this combat. But they seised vpon the great towne of Taradente in the Prouince of Sus, and of the Prouinces of Herra, Ideuaca, Vbideuaca, Cuz, Guzule, and in a manner of the whole country betwixt Moroco and mount Atlas, setling their principality in Taradente, whereas the Xerif their father carried the name of the Gouernour of the Prouince of Sus.

The King of Moroco fearing the greatnesse of these new Conquerours, dissembled the desire hee had to bring them vnder, assuring himselfe that time would present him some good occasion: so suffering them to enter into Moroco: but they preuented him, they tooke

away

away his life by poyſon, and ſeiſed vpon his Realme. The King of Fez, who had by an indiſcreet ſimplicity ſuffered them to take arms, and by that means to open the way to a great fortune, hee ſaw afar off the tempeſt of theſe vnjuſt ſpoilers to fall vpon Moroco and other places. The feare of the like calamity did much afflict his minde: but the Xerifs entertained this idle Prince with faire ſhewes; they abuſed his bounty, and with the fourth part of the rich ſpoiles which they had taken in ſo many townes and Prouinces, they lull his diſtruſt aſleepe: moreouer, they ſend him the tribute due for the Realme of Moroco. Hamet takes vpon him the name of King of Moroco; Mahomet that King of Sus, in the towne of Taradente; and by a good intelligence betwixt them, they make themſelues fearefull to all thoſe countries; ſo as they haue nothing more to feare, than the threats and vengeance of heauen. They then began to contemne the King of Fez, and plainly to deny the tribute of Moroco; pretending for their reaſon, that they were iſſued from the line of Mahomet. This contempt made the King of Fez to open his eies; he finds the faults paſt, by the intereſt of the preſent: he ſees the Xerifs had abuſed the liberty which hee had giuen them: whereupon hee went to field with an army of 18000 men, and planted his ſiege before Moroco; but as his enemies party was ſtronger than his, ſo he was chaſed away, and his army defeated at the paſſage of a riuer. Thus the Xerifs became peaceable poſſeſſours of Moroco. The peace of the country made theſe men idle, and idleneſſe drew the two brethren into quarrell; they muſtred vp their forces and came to fight, where after two bloudy battels, Mahomet being victor, he tooke his eldeſt brother Hamet, depriued him of his Realme and liberty, and made him end his daies miſerably in priſon. Thus God doth puniſh the vnjuſt ſpoiler of another mans good: we ſhall ſee in their poſterity the continuance of the ſame quarrell.

The King of Fez beſiegeth Moroco, and is defeated.

Mahomet ſettled ſouereigne in Moroco by bloud and fratricide, as monſtrous in ambition as in cruelty, he turned the ſame armes wherewith hee had beaten and vanquiſhed his eldeſt brother, againſt the King of Fez (whoſe improuidence had ſuffered Mahomet and his brethren to take armes, vnder the deceitfull title and pretence of making warre againſt the Chriſtian Portugals) he aſſaulted him with great forces, vanquiſhed him, tooke him priſoner, and depriued him both of Realme and life. Thus the Xerifs in the perſon of this Mahomet became Souereigne Princes of Fez ond Moroco. The victory ſo happily gotten of ſo many nations, made him fearefull; but by his cruelty hee drew vpon his deſcendents the juſt judgement of him who puniſheth the exceſſe and enormity of crimes vnto the fourth generation. His poſterity was miſerable, the vnjuſt deſire of reigne (one ruining another) entertained the brethren in perpetuall diſcord. For Cidan now King of Fez and Moroco, was lately expelled by his brother Kequi; but afterwards Fortune changing her inconſtant fauour, Kequi was purſued by Cidan, defeated, and forced in the yeare 1610 to ſaue his life in Algarbe in Portugall. Abdalla the ſonne of Kequi ſeeing his fathers affaires thus deſolate, retires himſelfe towards the mountaines in the Prouince of Sus: where finding opportunity to annoy his vncle Cidan, he made daily incurſions vpon his territories, with ſome troups of Arabians who had joyned with him being 200 horſe and 200 foot. But finding this to be a long courſe to attain vnto the conqueſt of the Realme from whence he had been expelled, he bethought himſelfe that ſome certaine counterfeit fiction in Religion, had in former times brought in his grandfather, and made him abſolute Lord of a great country; wherefore he made vſe of a propheſie forged in his ambitious ſpirit: and to worke an impreſſion in the peoples minds (eaſie to be moued with a paſſion of Religion) he ſent certaine religious Mahometans through the country, with a ſhew of holy ſimplicity, who went preaching from place to place, That one Falquere a man of holy life, had giuen vnto a ſonne of his a Drumme of an admirable power and vertue, commanding him expreſſely, to keepe it carefully, vntill that a Prince called Abdalla ſhould come into Moroco, being expelled by the injuſtice of his owne bloud: and that then he ſhould beat this Drumme, and that the people at the ſound thereof might go to the war with all ſafety; that it ſhould be helpefull to them, giue peace vnto the Realme, and ſettle all the cuſtomes and antient lawes to their common content. Thus they preached this propheſie, the which they ſaid was now accompliſhed, ſeeing that this propheticall Drum had beene found, that Abdalla the eldeſt Prince of the houſe of the Xerifs had cauſed it to be beaten, exhorting all men to follow the war for the common good of the country.

A propheſie inuented by Kequi, and preached by religious Turks.

Theſe vanities being preached by theſe ignorant and malicious Religious Turks, increaſed the number of Abdallaes party: whereof Cidan being aduertiſed, he ſent a great army againſt him into the Prouince of Sus, vnder the command of Alcas Elmye, to hinder the progreſſe of his deſignes; But Abdalla finding theſe forces to approch, retired himſelfe towards the mountaines, from whence he might charge the enemies army; the which he did ſo happily, as within few daies he cut off fiue thouſand of his men, This ſucceſſe did ſo aduance his affaires, as his troups encreaſed daily, ſo as Cydan was forced to go with new forces to fight with him, the which was the cauſe of his ruine: for at this time he was inueſted, and notwithſtanding the good ſucceſſe of his falſe propheſies, lightly grounded vpon the ſound of a Drum, he was defeated and ſlaine in this yeare 1612.

Abdalla defeated and ſlaine.

Gotardus, diſcourſing of this miraculous King of Mauritania, whom he cals Muley Hamet, writeth that he was charmed with diueliſh incantations, and freed from all outward force, carying himſelfe for a Diuine Prophet: That with one hundred and eighty horſe, and two hundred foot, he went to make head againſt Cydan King of Moroco, hauing forty thouſand men: That his ſouldiers (who were ſo few in number) being ready to fly, he perſuaded them with a cunning ſpeech to prepare to fight: That comming neere to Cydans campe, they might ſee a great Army of enemies fighting againſt them, in which there were fiue thouſand of Cydans Army ouerthrowne, and the reſt put to flight, and yet Hamet had not aduanced with his troupes: That within few daies after, comming with his troupes tyred to a riuer ſide, hee commanded them not to drinke nor waſh in that riuer, which if they did they would die: but ſome neglecting his command, thinking to quench their thirſt died ſuddenly. He tooke many places in thoſe mountainous Regions, which no man had formerly ſubdued; his forces encreaſing dayly, hauing fiue and twenty thouſand men, and vowing to goe againſt the Chriſtians, more came vnto him: ſo as he went againſt Cydan with a good Army, who likewiſe attended him. Hamet perſuaded his ſouldiers that no ſhot could hurt them; ſo as they aſſaulted Cydans campe with ſuch fury, as within leſſe than an houres ſpace they had ſlaine aboue ſix thouſand men, and put the reſt to flight. They write that Hamet loſt not aboue foure or fiue, and that ſuch as were ſtrucke with any bullet, ſhewed markes but no wounds; aud that the great ordnance either ſhot ouer them, or the pouder vented out at the touch hole, and wrought no effect. Cydan hauing loſt his brother in the fight, fled with all his treaſure, to recouer new forces, and in the meane time Hamet made himſelfe maſter of the whold Countrey. There were certaine Hollanders admitted vnto him, whom they found ſitting vpon a carpet made of the barke of trees, hauing a white ſhirt, and a long garment vpon it, a red cap on his head, bare thighes, and red ſhooes, a bag about his necke, and in it he had his Alcaron, a ſhort crooked ſword and a dagger hanging by him. Being ſaluted by the Hollanders, hee willed them to ſit downe by him, telling them that hee was ſent from Heauen, to purge the World from euill, and to prepare the Law of God; to expell Cidan out of his Kingdome, and to reſtore peace vnto the World: wherefore hee aduiſed them not to haue any commerce with Cydan, nor to aſſiſt him in any ſort. They obſerued many markes vpon his body, he had one blew tooth, all the reſt beeing white, haire vpon either ſhoulder, a red circle in the palme of his right hand, and the proportion of a ſpurre vpon his right foot. Hauing gotten ſome victories againſt Cydan, and taken the towne of Moroco, in the end his diuelliſh art failing him, he was ſlaine as you haue heard. Such were the affaires of Affricke, in the Realme of Fez and Moroco.

The miraculous King of Mauritania.

Cydan King of Fez ouerthrowne.

But in Algier a wonderfull drought had cauſed cruell combuſtions; it had ſo deuoured the fruits of the earth before their maturity, as there followed a wonderfull famine throughout the whole land. The Turks attributed the cauſe of their miſery ſometimes to their ſins; then to the comming of the Moores, who had beene expelled out of Spaine, as a pernicious vermine; and ſometimes to the licentiouſneſſe of Chriſtians, which liued in thoſe places. Wherefore in the beginning of May this yeare, the Iudge of the towne ordained, That all the Turks ſhould make their deuout praiers to Mahomet their Prophet to obtaine raine, ſo neceſſary in that country; that the Moores ſhould depart the towne within three daies vpon paine of death; and that all the Chriſtians, as well free as bond ſlaues, ſhould cauſe their heads and their beards to be ſhauen, this was ſpeedily executed; for the Turks decrees require a

A great drought & ſterility at Algier.

prompt

prompt obedience. But the miserable Moores which could not get out of Algier within their three daies prefixed, detained either by sickenesse, or some other impediment, were all cut in pieces. For thirteene daies, there was nothing seene within the towne but processions of Turks without Turbants, crying and howling after their manner to obtaine raine from their false Prophet: but he which commands Souereignty ouer times, from whose hand proceed faire weather and raine, and which makes the earth fruitfull, held the pipes of Heauen yet stopped, to open them at more religious and holy vowes than the superstitious clamours of these Infidels. For Bernard Murroy, of the Order of the redemption of captiues, hearing that the Turkes meant to reuenge their miseries vpon them, and to ruine a little Chappell which the Christian slaues had in the prison, for the pious exercises of their Religion, obtained (by the means of Bius Consull of the French in Algier) permission for the Douan, or Turkish Iudge, to make processions, and to pray vnto God to send them the dew of Heauen, which was so necessary for them. All the Christian slaues which were prisoners, continued their deuotions for the space of fiue daies: but on the fourth day being the eighth of May, there fell such abundance of raine vpon Algier, as these poore Christians seeing their praiers heard in the middest of the enemies of their faith, gaue infinite thankes vnto God for his great mercy and grace.

The deuout praiers of the Christians obtaine raine.

These miserable Christian slaues were still detained in yrons and cruell seruitude, by this accident. This Murroy of the Order of the Redemption of captiues, accompanied with two others of the same Order, had redeemed to the number of one hundred thirty and six: but when he was ready to embarke them, their euill fortune would haue it, that the gallies of Genoa running alongst that coast, landed some men neere vnto Algier, where they tooke the Bassaes sonne of that towne, with many other Turks, and amongst this number a Virgine of Algier, of a very noble Family, and of as rare a beauty, for the misery of these slaues: for that when as the Bassaes son and the others were redeemed by a Frigot which the father had sent, the faire Algerian Virgine was still detained by a Captaine of the Genowaies, who had retyred to Caluy an Island adjoyning, there to satisfie his desires with more ease, vpon the fraile and fading perfection of this faire slaue, which had depriued him of his liberty. In the meane time the Bassa of Algier seeing his son returned with the other Turks, and not the Algerian Virgine, commanded that the hundred thirty and six slaues should be put againe into yrons, with the three Religious men which had redeemed them. Thus this feminine beauty, or rather the passion of the Genowaies, who holds the possession so deare, makes a great number of Christian soules to suffer by insupportable seruitude, howsoeuer they of his Nation (flattering his disordered lust) say that his desire was, to win her to God, and to make her a Christian, caused him to keepe her so carefully.

These suffered in Algier the losse of their liberty: But a Capuchen Frier, a Florentine by Nation, endured at Tunes the losse of his life, by the cruelty of the Moores chased out of Spaine, and retired into those countries. This religious man being a slaue among the Turks, attended dayly from Florence, or from some other place, mony to redeeme his liberty: but it hapned one day disputing in a Barbars house with a Morisque, concerning Christian Religion; the zeale of his faith transported him so far, as to say among diuers Turks, That his Religion was better than that of Mahomets. These words tooke criminously in that place, were reported by the Morisques to the Cadi or Iudge of the towne, whom they prest with such horrible clamors and cries, as he pronounced sentence of death against this Capuchen. He was deliuered vnto them, and they stripped him naked, leading him with infamy through Tunes, some spitting in his face, others casting durt at him, and so they led him out of the towne, where they tyed him vnto a post, and they being cruelly insenced by a speech which a Morrabour or religious Turke said vnto them, That he among them that gaue him not one blow with a stone, should be no good Turke; they stoned him to death, where afterwards they burnt his body, and threw the ashes into the winde.

A Capuchen of Florence in captiuity at Tunes.

He dies gloriously for the faith.

The martyrdome of this Capuchen, was followed by the constant confession (amidst the violence of torments) of a penitent Renegado, a Florentine by Nation, and Captaine of the chiefe gallie of Chio; foure Frenchmen being slaues in the Island of Chio, in the patron or chiefe gally, belonging to the Bey or Gouernour of the Iſland, they reſolued to recouer their liberty with the hazard of their liues, to returne into France, and carry into ſome Port of Chriſtendome that gally, being the beſt appointed in the whole hauen. They drew vnto their party the Captaine which commanded, being a Florentine Renegado. Their enterpriſe ſhould haue beene executed when as they ſhould goe to land to cut wood. But whether that the ſcribe were trecherous to his companions, or tranſported with ſome raſh indiſcretion; being on land, hee ſpake theſe words aloud, the which ouerthrew both the deſigne, and them that projected it; Hoe, we will returne into Chriſtendome. A Turke which was neere, taking hold of theſe words, reported them vnto the Patron; who preſently layed hold vpon the Scribe, and drew from him the confeſſion of all the enterpriſe. He preſently ſends an hundred men towards the gally, to ſeiſe vpon the foure French ſlaues and the Captaine. But theſe fiue made ſuch a generous reſiſtance, as if the other ſlaues, who were for the moſt part Moldauians, or of the Prouinces which border vpon the blacke ſea, had had the courage to fight for their liberty, without doubt the French mens enterpriſe had ſucceeded happily. But what could fiue men do againſt an hundred? yet they ſlew fifteene, and wounded many: the foure Frenchmen were all ſlaine, and the Florentine Captaine was taken aliue, and reſerued to the rigour of a cruell death. For they continued him ſix houres together in moſt violent torments, hee ſtill calling vpon the holy and ſacred name of Ieſus Chriſt, euen to the laſt gaſpe, and deteſting the errours and falſhood of the law of Mahomet. This hapned in October this yeare.

An enterprise of foure slaues.

The Vnited Eſtates ſend an Embaſſador to Conſtantinople.

A little before, the Eſtates of the vnited Prouinces, and Count Maurice ſeeing the loſſes which the ſhips of Holland ſuffered in the Mediterranean Sea, many of them being taken by the Turkiſh gallies, and a great number of their men made ſlaues: to the end they might bee freed from that danger, and haue a ſafe paſſage for their ſhips, and procure liberty for their captiues, they reſolued to make a league with the Turke. Wherefore they ſent Cornelius Hage to Conſtantinople: who not onely willingly accepted of that Embaſſie, but performed it with ſuch diſcretion, as hee purchaſed great credit and commendation to himſelfe, and much profit to the Prouinces. He had reſolued at firſt to paſſe through Hungary; but he found ſo many croſſes and obſtacles, by ſome that were Creatures to the Pope and Spaniard, as he was forced to turne out of the way, and fetch a great circuit. Firſt of all, he fell into the hands of the Archduke Ferdinand, who cauſed him to be examined, and admoniſhed to deſiſt from his purpoſe: After which he was toſt at Sea, and in the end hauing ſurmounted all dangers, he recouered Conſtantinople, the firſt of May. Hee had expreſſe charge from the Vnited Eſtates to labour for three things. The firſt was, to treat of the deliuerance of the Hollanders that were ſlaues. The ſecond, to make a league with the Turke. And the third, to obtaine from him a free nauigation for the Hollanders, throughout all the ſeas and ports of his Empire.

Preſents ſent from the Vnited Eſtates to the Turke.

This Embaſſadour was brought to kiſſe the Sultans hands, and was fauorably receiued: he preſented vnto his Majeſty in the name of the Eſtates of the vnited Prouinces, his Letters of Embaſſie, with the Preſents which follow: Three birds of Paradiſe of rare & precious plumes, wonderfull goodly to behold, and valued at eight hundred pound ſterling: two veſſels of Chriſtall wonderfull rich and beautifull: foure other veſſels made of fiſhes bones, whereas the Art ſeemed miraculous in the grauing: forty pieces of cloath of gold of diuers colours: fiue pieces of ſilke, fiue of Damaske, fiue of ſilke watered, and fiue plaine: A ſtaffe of an Elephants tooth grauen with admirable induſtry. A Parret ſhut in a cage of Chriſtall, ſo artificially done, as no man could diſcerne the entry: and many faire and rich table-clothes of Holland cloth, moſt part powdred with floures to the life, and wrought in their liuely colours. The which the Sultan did accept with admiration. All theſe things ſhew ſufficiently, That the Eſtates from the beginning or ſoone after haue raiſed handy-workes as well as traffique and nauigation to the higheſt point of perfection.

A league betwixt the Turke and the Hollanders.

The ſixth of Iuly following, the league was ſworne betwixt the Othoman Emperour, and the Vnited Prouinces of the Low-Countries, by the which Achmat promiſed to cauſe to be ſet at liberty, all the Hollanders that were detained ſlaues within his Empire: That the traffique

A traffique ſhould be free forthe Hollanders ſhippes throughout all his ſeas and hauens: and moreouer hee granted, That the Eſtates ſhould haue an Embaſſadour reſiding at his Port. This alliance with the Turke, for the which they haue ſo often, and with little reaſon blamed the French, hath beene affected and ſought by the Engliſh and Spaniards, as we haue ſaid elſewhere; and now by the Hollanders, whoſe Eſtates proceed in all their affaires with ſuch weight and meaſure, as it ſeemes they doe nothing but with great reaſon, and to good purpoſe.

The Moriſques chaſe the Iewes out of Pera.

About the end of this yeare, the Iewes whoſe long ſlauery thoughout the Word, reprocheth their wretched and miſerable obſtinacy, receiued at Pera neere Conſtantinople the weight of a furious tempeſt which fell among them, ſtirred vp againſt them by the malice of B the Moriſques Granadines chaſed out of Spaine, and retired into the Leuant. Theſe hauing by Preſents wonne the fauour of the Cadi, or Iudge of the place, who was a Negro newly ſetled in that charge by the Grand Viſier Naſſuf; they obtained power from him to thruſt all the Iewes out of Pera, and to ruine their Synagogues. This power they executed with all violence: And yet theſe miſerable Iewes durſt not make their complaints vnto the Magiſtrate, except one of their ſect which dwelt in the Iſle of Chio, who being then at Conſtantinople, and ſuppoſing hee had more credit than the reſt, went to complaine to this Cadi Negro, who preſently cauſed to bee giuen vnto him fiue hundred blowes with a cudgell, in ſtead of doing him juſtice; ſo dangerous a thing it is to haue to doe with ſuch vnjuſt Magiſtrates.

C The inſolencies of the Moriſques tranſported them further: for after they had expelled the Iewes out of their dwellings, they threatned to doe vnto the Chriſtians at Pera, as much as had beene done vnto them in Spaine: and they bragged, That they would ſeiſe vpon their Churches, and eſpecially of that of the Franciſcan Friers, the which was reaſonable faire for the place. But the French Embaſſadour, hauing made his complaint to the chiefe Viſier, he prohibited them to make any attempt againſt the Chriſtians, vpon paine of rigorous puniſhment. This prohibition ſtaied their fury: but they did not forbeare in all other occaſions to ſhew the cruell hatred they owe vnto Chriſtians: ſo as through all the Leuant, in all encounters where they come, they do a thouſand times more miſchiefe than the Turks themſelues.

The Turks army for Tranſyluania.

D At the ſame time the Sultan Achmat had drawne together a mighty army to go into Tranſyluania; he cauſed it to campe in tents neere vnto Conſtantinople, about his palace called Darut Baſſa, whither the people of Conſtantinople went to walke, and to ſee his forces: within few daies after, he went to Hadrianople; meaning from thence to proceed in his voyage, carrying with him all the chiefe men of his Port, except the Baſſa of the ſea, or Admirall, who remained at Conſtantinople, to haue a care of the city. And for the greater ſafety thereof, this Baſſa cauſed an edict to be publiſhed, That no man ſhould go out of his houſe, nor keep any light in it after the ordinary cry, which is made an houre within night, when as the Taliſmans crying from the tops of their Moſques, inuite the people to make the Sala, or prayer. After the publication of this ordinance, he ſent certaine Chiaux to entreat all the Embaſſa-
E dours reſiding at the Port, not to ſuffer their people to goe out by night, to the end that their liberty might not ſerue as a dangerous example to others. But notwithſtanding all the Baſſaes entreaties and prohibitions, three Engliſhmen of the Embaſſadours traine, went out by night into the ſtreet, where they were met by the Prouoſt of Pera, who tooke them, and preſently (without reſpect of the quality) cauſed either of them to haue an hundred and fifty blows with a cudgell, and then committed them to priſon, the dores whereof are neuer opened but with a ſiluer key: ſo ſtrictly do they obſerue in Turky the orders of the Princes Lieutenants, without exception of Perſons.

About the end of the yeare, the Patriarch of Conſtantinople (by reaſon of diuers complaints made againſt him) was depriued by the Grand Viſier, and one Cyrillus, Patriarch of F Alexandria, (a learned and religious Biſhop) was (much againſt his will) preferred to the place. The former Patriarch hereupon excommunicated all ſuch as had wrought his ouerthrow; but he himſelfe was baniſhed into the Iſle of Rhodes. In his paſſage, the barke wherin he

he went was caſt vpon Mytilene, in which place he renounced all right and claime to the Patriarchſhip before the Biſhop of that place, and reſigned it to the Biſhop of Patras: whereupon the Biſhop came from Patras, to Conſtantinople, and laboured with the Viſier Naſſuf for the place: who vpon promiſe to pay him fifteene thouſand Chequines (which is ten thouſand more than they were wont to pay) made him a Grant thereof: which Cyrillus the late elected Patriarch vnderſtanding, he came with all the Grecians to expoſtulate the buſineſſe with the Grand Viſier: Who anſwered, That he was to do what he could for the Emperours profit, and nothing againſt it; wherefore if they would giue ſo much as the other had promiſed, Cyrillus ſhould continue in the place. Which the people were very willing to performe; but Cyrillus refuſed it, and ſo the other was made Patriarch: who preſently ſent for the old Patriarch to come from Rhodes to make peace with him, for that they held not his excommunication juſt, being not depriued by a Councell, but only by the King. About the ſame time, Naſſuf the Grand Viſier ſent for the foure Embaſſadors, of England, France, Venice, and the States of the Low-Countries; and the reaſon why he ſent for them was, to raiſe their cuſtome on the hundred more than the Merchants had formerly payd. G H

The enterpriſe of the Great Duke of Tuſcany vpon Agliman.

Whileſt that the Sultan Achmats Army drew neere to Tranſyluania, and fortified the places which hee held in thoſe Countries, Coſmo de Medicis Great Duke of Tuſcany bent his generous deſignes againſt the Fort of Agliman in Caramania, in old time called Cilicia, a Prouince which in the writings of Antients hath beene honoured with two famous Cities, that is to ſay, Tharſis the Countrey of Saint Paul, and Seleucia, the Fort and Port whereof is called Agliman, a hauen which in old time hath continued within it's boſome the fearefull forces of the Pyrats of thoſe daies: from thence in former times hath come forth a powerfull army of pyrats with a thouſand ſayle, ſo proudly rigged as many of them had their ſayles of purple, the tackling of gold thred, and the oares garniſhed with ſiluer, markes of the ſpoiles of aboue foure hundred cities ruined by thoſe pyrats, who ſtroke a terrour euen to the Romans, and forced them, to auoid their fury, to ſet to ſea that great fleet whereof Pompey the Great was Generall. I

The number of the Dukes gallies, and the commanders.

1613 The trophy erected vpon the walls of Agliman, of the heads of forty Florentines, loſt in a Ship called the Proſper, by the ignorance of the Captaine which commanded in it, made the Great Duke to ſtudy to haue his reuenge for this afront; and his deſire to abate the pride of the common Enemy, eleuated his minde to generous enterpriſes. In the end of March this preſent yeare 1613, he armed ſix Gallies vnder the command of the Admirall Inghirami, the which hee manned with ſix companies of foot commanded by Iulio de Conty, called Montano, Generall at land, beſides forty Knights of the Order of S. Stephen, and a good number of Gentlemen aduenturers, among the which was Don Petro de Medicis. This fleet parted from Ligorne, and came to Ciuita Vecchia: in the beginning of Aprill they tooke in many Noblemen and Gentlemen of France, which attended them, and would be partakers in the enterpriſe; the which were, the Earle of Candale, eldeſt ſonne to the Duke of Eſpernon, Cipierre, Themines, De Vic, Monterrault, De la Tour, and his brother Boiſſiere, Villandre, Vernegue, Du Pleſſis, Dea la Motte magnus, Anenes, Del Tour, Sainct Cyre, Monplaiſir, and Loyres. About the middeſt of Aprill the gallies landed in the night neere vnto a little towne in Aſia the leſſe, called Ieronda, held for that Geronda of the Antients: but their diſcent was fruitleſſe, they found it deſart by the flight of the Inhabitants, who had preuented all ſurpriſes. They returned againe to their gallies, and ſailing towards the Eaſt, they encountred three veſſels like vnto their Caramouſſals, the which they ſet vpon and tooke: and about the fifteenth of May, hauing ſcoured the Leuant ſeas, they reſolued to attempt Agliman. Vpon the way they tooke a Veſſell called Grippe, which inſtructed them of the eſtate of the Fortreſſe: they vnderſtood there were two Gallies of Cyprus in the Port, that the place was well furniſhed with all things neceſſary, and guarded without by a good number of horſemen, and that within few daies after, one of the ſaid gallies ſhould come out of the Port of Agliman, and go to the Iſland of Papadula, to fetch a new maſt. Inghirami thought to preuent it, carrying his whole fleet thither, the which he layd cloſe in the Iſland to ſurpriſe the Turkiſh Galley; but it hauing diſcouered his fleet, put out to ſea, and with ſpeed returned to the Port of Agliman; K L M

to

A to giue the alarme vnto the country. Notwithstanding the Christians resolued to assault it, they went with their fleet to the port Caualier, twelue miles from Agliman, from whence they sent a long boat to discouer: the which brings them word that the whole country was in armes. These newes might well haue danted the courages of some that had been lesse generous; yet they passe on and about three of the clocke in the morning they came neere the shore, being couered with the silence of the night, so as before six of the clocke they had made their landing about a mile and a halfe from the port. The Seignior of Montano and the Earle Candale with some few choice men landed first, to discouer: a mile from the shore they encountered the Turkish horsemen, yet notwithstanding Montano commanded they should finish their landing, leauing twenty men for the guard of euery gally.

The Christians land at Agliman.

B This fort of Agliman is seated vpon a little pleasant hill, which looks towards the South: It extends from the hill vnto the sea shore: the forme is ouall; that part which is next to the Sea is altogether Meridionall, and the other which riseth vp to the top of the hill, lookes towards the North. The wals are built of good stone and lime, the which are fiue saddome high, and one broad. Within there was a wall drawne from the East to the West, which diuides it into two vnequall parts, the which they enter by a port set in the midst. The circuite of the wall is fortified with eight towers, whereof fiue be whole, and three are but halfe towers: those which be whole are of a square forme, and haue fiue saddome in breadth on either side: the halfe towers haue the same greatnesse on the one side, and halfe as much on the other; their height exceeds not the wall, vnlesse it be that which is built on the top of the hill, C which is raised aboue eight foot aboue the wall. Within the place were aboue three hundred fighting men; with store of victuals, munition for war, and many pieces of ordnance: without, there were an hundred horse scouring vp and downe for the safegard of the place: and within the port there were two gallies, a Caramousall, and a Greeke Brigandine, with some hundred and fifty fighting men. The order of the combat was diuided after this manner, by the Seignior Montano Generall at land: for the principall port, and that of the retreat, he sent two companies of foot, which were those of the Admirals gally, of the captains gally, and of Saint Stephen, with the petards, all vnder the charge of the Earle of Candale, who leading this forward, discouered a Corps de gard of Turks, horse and foot together: whereof he presently aduertised the Generall, sending him word that he would march on towards the fort, and if the D Turks came to charge him, he would cut them all in pieces. Many aduised him to returne to the gallies: but Montano allowed the resolution of the Earle of Candale, who past on without charge vntil he came within an hundred and twenty paces of the wall, where he was charged before by the musket shot of the fort, behinde by the gallies, and in flanke by them of the mountaine, with such horrible howling and crying out, as the mariners which carried the Petards being wonderfully amazed and terrified, let them fall to the ground and fled away. The Baron of Mont-terault, and Tiel, a souldier of Langueza tooke them vp. They continued their way vntill they came within fifteene paces of the walls, when as twenty Turks sallyed forth with a shew to make head against the earle of Candales troups: but seeing themselues too weake, they fled presently backe againe into the towne. The Earle aduanced to enter with E them, but the port was so soone shut as they were in: wherefore they must of force set the Petard to worke. But whilest they were making it fast vnto the gate, there fell a showre of great stones vpon the troupe, wherewith Don Pedro de Medicis (who would needs bee present) was ouerthrowne and halfe slaine; Callonge, Mont-terault, La Tour, Dauanes, and Deltour had taken vpon them the charge of the Petard, euery one carrying a part, to put it speedily in execution.

The description of Agliman.

Whilest they were thus busied to force the Port, the Sergeant Major came vnto the Earle of Candale and told him, that there was a troupe of three hundred musketiers come to charge him: these were two Beyes which came out of the gallies with their troups, by reason of the bad guard which the two companies that Montano had left to hinder their landing, had F kept. The Earle of Candale had left part of his troupe with the Petard, and turned head with the rest against these Beyes to charge them: but they had no meaning to fight, but onely to make a shew, and seeing they should be forced if they staied longer, they tooke their way towards the mountaine, and in their retreat made many shot. The Christians pursued them not,

The Turks come from their gallies to charge the Christians.

not, holding it fitter to returne to the Petard, the which plaied so happily, as it made a breach capable for three men to enter in front. G

The squadron of the Knights of S. Stephen, commanded by the Commissary Lenzoni, and the company of the gallie of S. Mary Magdalen, with two ladders were to assault the high tower. The company of the Admirall gally with one ladder, had charge to force the Port of the retreat; and the company of the Gally S. Iean was to fight with the gallies and vessels in the hauen: all these troups (being led by the Generall Montano, and by Captaine Alexander of Tarentum, Sargeant Major) marched in order towards the fort. But the petard hauing effected as we haue said, the Earle of Candale entered first with all his troup, and suddenly ran vnto the port of the retreat, there to apply a petard, the which also very fortunately made a breach. The Turks amazed at the noise and forcing of their gates, fled vnto their walls; some retiring into their towers, and others into the barricadoes which they had made in the street. H At the same instant they planted two ladders on the lower part of the towne somewhat neere adioyning to the sea, whereof one was broken with the losse of them that were vpon it: by the other (notwithstanding that the Turks horsemen charged them behind) a good number of Christians got vp to the wals, making their way by their arms, whilest that the rest put the Turks to rout: hauing taken their Cornet, they forced the rest for to flee vnto the mountaines. The squadron of Knights with the company of the gallie of Saint Mary, hauing had a longer way to march, came not to the tower vpon the hill, vntill that after the petards had wrought their effects: so as the Turks being retired thither, they found very great resistance, besides the attempts of the enemies horse which charged them behinde; thrice they planted their ladders I against the wall, and could not make them hold. Wherefore the Commissary Lanzoni, hauing performed as much as a braue and resolute man could doe in that extremity, resolued to leaue that place, and go to some other where he might be more necessary: but being the last to make the retreat, hee was shot through with two musket bullets, and suddenly slaine. The company of the gally S. Iohn, vanquished the two gallies in the port, whereof Inghirami the Admirall at Sea went to take possession as soone as they had giuen him a signe, hauing the other two vessels at liberty.

A bloudy combat within the fort.

Within the fort in the towers, and at the barricadoes, the combat was hot and dangerous, the Turks had despaire and the aduantage of the place on their sides. The Christians thrust on by their valour and constant resolution, prest them on all sides; there was nothing to be K seene but bloud, wounded, or dead men; but much more of the Turks side than of the Christians. In the end after a combat of foure houres, the Turks fainted, some were taken, many were slaine, and the Christians obtained an absolute victory: but as it could not bee made without losse of their enemies, who made great resistance: so there were fiue and fifty Christians wounded, of which number De Vic a French Gentleman was one, who had a musket shot through his thigh, going to charge a troupe of Turks which were retired into a tower: and some Gentlemen were slaine; amongst the which was young Boissierre, a French-man, whose valour in this action made them that saw him fight so generously, conceiue a certaine hope that hee would haue prooued a valiant Captaine, if Heauen had lent him longer life. The sorrow for his death was generall; as well among the Italian troupes, as among those L of his owne Nation. Vernegue and Villandre, two other braue French Gentlemen were also slaine. The dead and wounded were carried vnto their Gallies: they emptied the Fort of all the Artillery, munition for warre, and victuals; the trophy of forty Florentines heads was beaten downe and all the houses set on fire. Agliman beeing thus ruined, they shipped their booty, with three hundred and fifty Turkish slaues, hauing freed about two hundred and forty Christians which were in yrons. The two Turkish Gallies were drawne out of the Port, and carried away with eight other vessels. In this triumph as the Admirall Inghirami bent his course towards Ligorne; vpon the way a Turkish Caramousall came into the middest of the fleet, as into a toyle: It prepared to defend it selfe, the patrons gally inuested it, but not without losse; for the Turks made so great resistance, as there were aboue foure score M Christians hurt or slaine; the Earle of Candale fighting alone at the prow of the Gally, by the permission of the Generall. But this Caramousall being taken, and the Florentine mariners entered, it split and sunke suddenly. The great Dukes gallies encountered some other smaller

The Christians get the victory.

A smaller veſſels, the which they tooke, and afterwards arriued happily at their Port.

The twelfth of Auguſt following, Octauio of Arragon Generall of the gallies of Sicily, by the commandement of the Duke of Oſſunna, Viceroy in that Realme, parted from the hauen of Palermo, with eight gallies well armed and manned, to ſaile into the Leuant. His firſt touch was vpon the Iſland of Cerigo, where he vnderſtood that the Admirall Baſſa of the ſea was gone from Conſtantinople with thirty gallies, bending his courſe to the Iſland of Negropont, whereas ſixty others attended him in the hauen; and moreouer, that the gallies of Rhodes prepared to goe and joyne with him, all which Nauall fleet was to fall vpon Soria, againſt the Turks Rebels. The Voyage of the gallies of Sicily in the Leuant.

Notwithſtanding theſe news, Octauio continues his courſe vnto the Iſland of Nicaria, where B he vnderſtood by a Greeke veſſell, that the Turkiſh Admirall meant to ſend twelue gallies to Rhodes, to guard certaine veſſels of the fleet, which came from Alexandria by the Channell of Samos. True it is, that of twelue which were together when they parted, two were ſent by the Bey or Captaine which commanded them, into the Iſland of Chio, ſo as there remained but ten together. Octauio reſolued to charge theſe ten, cauſing his fleet to row that day, and almoſt a whole night as ſecretly as they could, along the ſhore of the firme land of Natolia, and at the breake of day hee arriued at the cape of Coruo, twenty miles from Chio; from whence hee ſent his long boat to diſcouer. But in the meane time he himſelfe eſpied the ten Turkiſh gallies not far from him; at ſight whereof he ordred his gallies for battell, with ſuch diligence, as at Sun riſing he was about the enemies gallies, and had inueſted them. At his firſt C approch he diſcharged all his ordnance, and then with his Admirall gally he joyned with the Turks gally which carried the ſtandard; the Spaniards entered, ſlew and maſſacred all that made reſiſtance: the combat began at the prow, from whence they went to the poope, whereas the Bey or Commander of the ten gallies ſtood, whom they forced to yeeld. In the meane time the other gallies of Sicily charged the Turks ſo furiouſly, as they tooke fiue, all great veſſels carrying lanthornes; two fled towards the land, hoping to ſaue themſelues, but the Turks had ſcarce leiſure to leape to land, and to fly into the country, abandoning their veſſels to the Spaniards, who purſued them; the other three gallies hauing gotten ſome aduantage eſcaped by flight: ſo ſeuen only came into the Spaniards power, in the which they had a very rich booty, freeing aboue a thouſand Chriſtian ſlaues, which were at the chaine, and by a D ſtrange change of fortune, putting into their places the Turks which had inchained them. Among the moſt remarkeable of the priſoners, were the commander of the ten gallies called Sinan Bey of Grigna in the Iſland of Cyprus; the Bey of Alexandria (ſonne to Piall Baſſa, who was defeated in the battell of Lepanto, by Don Iohn of Auſtria) and ſome Raiſe or Captaines, and Patrons of gallies. They ſet vpon ten Turkiſh gallies.

This Summer the Emperor Matthias being gone to an aſſembly of the States at Presburg in Hungary, in the meane time Sigiſmund Battori, who had beene Prince of Tranſyluania, and ſo great a terrour and ſcourge vnto the Turks, as hee made Sinan Baſſa, hauing an army of one hundred and fifty thouſand men, to fly thrice within ten daies from before him, and would neuer endure the ſight of him, hee hauing but forty thouſand men in his army. But afterE wards being the author of his owne misfortunes and miſeries, by his inconſtant humours, he came and liued a priuat life at Prague, and there died of an Apoplexie. The Eſtates aſſembled at Presburg, conſulted of the fortifying of their Frontier towns, and manning them with good garriſons, knowing the infidelity of the Turks, and doubting that they would not obſerue the truce. But there was ſome queſtion in the aſſembly, touching the admiſſions of Germans into their garriſons: for that the Hungarians maintained they had a decree to the contrary; and yet they could not defend themſelues without the aſſiſtance of Germanes: but in the end it was concluded, that the Germans ſhould be admitted equally with the Hungarians into their garriſons, but all other ſtrange ſouldiers ſhould be excluded. The Turks in the meane time had burnt and ſpoiled many villages in Hungary and Tranſyluania, carried F away many Chriſtians captiue, and committed many other acts of hoſtility, ſo as all men feared a new warre in Hungary; but by the prouidence of God it was diuerted. For Sultan Achmat marching towards Tranſyluania with a mighty Army, hearing vpon the way that Bethlem Gabor was acknowledged Prince, vnder his protection, he turned head towards Conſtantinople, Sigiſmund Battori Prince of Tranſyluania dies at Prague.

ſtantinople. But rather for the affaires of Aſia, whereas the Rebels of Natolia had ſpoiled G and burnt many places; and a certaine Arabian had reuolted againſt him, and vſurped the title of King, hauing drawne vnto his party fifty thouſand Rebels, the which did ouerrun and ſpoyle the Countrey which yeelded obedience vnto him, threatening his Dominions with a greater ruine. Moreouer, the Portugals and Spaniards had made many incurſions vpon his places joyning to the Red Sea, and had taken and ſpoiled Aden, a place of importance: ſo as all theſe diſorders haſtened his returne into Thrace, to ſend forces againſt his Turkiſh Rebels, A great Plague in Conſtantinople. and his Spaniſh enemies. But approching neere vnto the Imperiall city of Conſtantinople, the Plague was ſo violent, as hee ſtaied at Adrianople vntill the end of this yeare, when as that horrible contagion ceaſed. Hee then came vnto the City, whereas he made a very ſtately entry; before him there marched his ordinary guard of fiue and twenty or thirty thouſand H Ianizaries, all the Baſſaes of the Court following him in very great pompe, and before him there marched on horſebacke two of his ſonnes, the pillars and hope of his affaires, the el-deſt beeing about ſeuen or eight yeares old. Paſſing before the Moſques, the Taliſmans or Prieſts of his law, made ſacrifices in his preſence for his proſperity, they ſlew ſheepe and oxen vpon Altars erected for that purpoſe, then they cut them in pieces, and gaue them vnto the people.

The Grand Seigniour beeing returned to Conſtantinople after the great Plague, not-withſtanding the Turkes hold a firme opinion of Predeſtination, and that they ſhall not die before their appointed time, and that the time of their death is written in their fore-heads; yet apprehending the infection, by the aduice of ſome about him, hee commanded I
All the Dogs ſent out of Conſtantinople. all the dogges in the City of Conſtantinople, to bee tranſported vnto Scutary in Aſia (a Towne antiently called Chriſopolis) and for the due execution thereof, euery houſholder was to bring in his dogge firſt to the Cadi (which is the Iudge of the place) and to receiue from him a Tuſcany or Ticket for his paſſage, or elſe hee was to pay foure Chequines; by which meanes there were tranſported to the number of fifty thouſand dogges. The reaſon of his ſending them away, was, for that reading the Acts of his father, hee found that thirty yeares before, hee had ſent away all the dogges for feare of the infection. The Sultan commanded allowance of bread and fleſh to be carried euery day to ſuſtaine them, which not ſuf-ficing, the inhabitants were much oppreſſed, and ready to fall into mutiny; but by the ad-uice of his Muphti, they were at length tranſported from thence to an Iſland that was not K inhabited, ſome ſixteene miles from Conſtantinople, where they all periſhed. Before their ſending away, the Grand Seigniour had propounded to his Muphti, to haue them all ſlaine: who made anſwere, That euery dogge had a ſoule, and therefore it was not fit to kill them.

The care of the Turkes to win men to their Religion. The Turkes are wonderfull glad when they win any one to their Religion, and ſeeke by all meanes to ſeduce them either by force or by faire perſuaſions; whereof you may ſee an aſſured proofe, by a Iew, who being turned Turke, ſoone after buying of grapes of another Turke, fell at variance with him about the weighing of his grapes: from words they fell to blowes, and the Iew-Turke beat the other, which hee endured very patiently to encourage him as it ſeemed in his new Religion. Soone after, another Iew came to the Turke who had L beene beaten, and demanded of him why hee had ſuffered himſelfe to be ſo abuſed? Who anſwered, You ſhall beat me as much as you will, turne Muſulman: ſo zealous they are to winne Proſelites.

A ſeuere puniſhment of a drunkard. This yeare in October, the Turks obſeruing their feaſts of Bairan (which is our Eaſter) the which they obſerue twice a yeare; a Turke hauing drunke Wine too freely (the drinking whereof is forbidden amongſt them, although they loue it well, and drinke in priuate) was apprehended, and carried before the Grand Viſier: who ſeeing the fact verified, inflicted this puniſhment vpon him, to haue boyled lead powred into his mouth and eares, the which was ſpeedily executed.

Bethlem Gabor as you haue heard was ſeated quietly in the Principality of Tranſyl- M uania, the Sultan ſupported him, and had ſent Sarder Baſſa with an Army againſt Gabriel Battori who was then in poſſeſſion; but weake both of men, money, and friends, hee was not able to make head againſt them; ſo as beeing abandoned of his friends, and hated of his ſubjects,

A subiects for his tyrannie, he grew into despaire, and was slaine by his owne souldiers. Whereupon the countrey yeelding obedience to Gabor, Sarder Bassa retired out of Transyluania with his Turks. Yet afterwards, some neerly allyed to Battori (desiring to reuenge his death) caused some alterations; and others seeking to get a Prouince from the Emperour, had surprised Huſt and other places in his name. The Sultan hearing this, wrote his Letters to the Noblemen and States of the Prouince. They were not ignorant he said, that since the time that Transyluania yeelded obedience to his predecessors and him, they had alwaies liued in peace vnder his protection, and had often desired and obtained succour against their enemies: That when as Botscay had been annoied by the Germans, assisting him with great forces, he had shaked off the yoke: That when as Battori his successour had liued after his owne will, they sent
B Bethlem Gabor with complaints to his Court by their generall consent, and did easily obtaine forces to free the Prouince from tyrannie. Hee being taken away, now a wished day began to shine, the clouds of tribulation being all dispersed: That he had held Bethlem worthy to succeed Battori, and to enioy that Prouince. Wherefore he had commanded all the Noblemen to submit themselues vnto him, and to enioy a wished peace: That Bethlem had sent to aduertise him of the new practises of the Germans; wherefore he had giuen charge to the Bassaes of Temeswar and Agria, and to the Prince of Valachia, to be watchfull to repell all these iniuries; admonishing the Noblemen to yeeld speedy obedience to Bethlem: to which end hee had sent them those letters, that vpon the sight therof they might be admonished of their duties; and if the Germans should attempt any thing, they should make resistance till the com-
C ming of his forces: and following Bethlem in al things, they should acknowledge him for their true and lawfull Prince, and continue constant in their fidelitie, lest they should prouoke his wrath against them, and draw vpon themselues some great misery: writing much more to the like effect; concluding, That he had fully purposed and resolued not to spoile any one village or any Fort in Transyluania, nor to do any wrong to any man, nor suffer it to be done by any other, but would defend that Prouince from all oppression. Wherefore he would haue the Emperor aduertised, that if he meant to haue the peace inuiolably kept, hee should cause the said places of Transyluania to be presently restored vnto the Prince, or signifie his mind vnto him by letters.

Emir Facardin abandoneth Sidon.

Of these Rebels of Asia, whereof wee haue made mention, the Gouernour of Sarepta or D Sidon in Syria, called Armill or Emir Facardin, he who gaue entrance into his Port to the Florentines, and receiued them in their courses to the Leuant; hearing that the Bassa of Damas, and the Bassa of the sea, with the gallies which he brought from Constantinople, and the threescore which he tooke at Negropont (whereof wee haue made mention) came to fall vpon him with a mighty and fearfull army, hee left his eldest sonne within Sidon with forces to command there, and in other Forts about it, and flying from a furious tempest of enemies, hee went to sea with three ships, to retyre himselfe into Europe, with his foure wiues, ten children, seuenty Turks, and fourteene thousand pound weight in gold. Hee arriued at Ligorne, and went from thence to Florence, vnder the protection of Cosmo de Medicis great Duke of Tuscanie, whose hands hee kissed, presenting vnto him a Cuttelas very curi-E ously wrought, and enriched with stone, and two jewels to the great Dutchesse, to the value of six thousand Crownes. This Turke though hee had no faith, yet he found faith with this Prince of Tuscanie. Cosmo receiued him, defrayed him and all his traine, furnished him with money, whether it were by way of gratification, or that Emir had consumed his owne: and by all kinde of courtesies made this Infidell see what difference there was to flie vnto the protection of a Christian Prince, or to haue recourse vnto a Mahometane. They say that Emir had many goodly ouertures for the setling of the Christians in Asia: but to attempt it with a good and happy successe, it should be necessarie that most of the Christian Princes would ioine their wils and armes together for the generall good of Christendome. It is true, that the great Duke Ferdinand deceased, and Cosmo his successour had made proofe of their F good intentions, by many generous enterprises against the Turke. But one Prince alone cannot do all.

A horrible tempest in the Mediterranean sea.

These things past in the yeare 1613. the end whereof concludes with the fury of terrible tempests in the Mediterranean sea. The tenth of Nouember a fearefull tempest full of lightning, thunder, and furious winds, was the cause of the losse of many gallies and ships in the port of Genoa, with a great number of persons which were miserably drowned. Which G losse was valued at aboue 800000 crowns. The port of Naples was not free from this storm; and the gallies of Malta, with a great number of other vessels receiued great losse.

The grand Signior hauing this year and the year before sustained great losse of his gallies and frigots in the Mediterranian sea, by the gallies of Naples, Malta, and Florence, and in the black sea by the Cossacks, who had taken two gallies well manned and richly laden; hee now imposed a great tax vpon all his Christian subiects, towards the reparation of that losse: so as he charged the Armenians to build him nine gallies at their owne costs, and the Grecians twenty. Such is the Turks tyrannie, as he suffers not the poore Christians to enioy any thing, but he finds means to pull it from them.

The grand Visier Nassuf held his credit with the Prince: at whose returne from Adriano- H
ple, many of the Ianizaries (to whom he was very odious) conspired to kil him as hee should enter in at the North gate comming from Adrianople: and had placed themselues there for the effecting of what they had intended: but comming neer the gate, the Sultan (ignorant of what was plotted against the Visier) called for him to speake with him, keeping him by him vntil he was entred into the city, by which means he escaped the intended practise. Soon after Nassuf inuited the Sultan to a sumptuous feast; and within few daies after the Emperour feasted the Visier; who presuming vpon his great credit, caused all the crosses in the Church of S. Sophia (which is one of the goodliest monuments in Constantinople) to be cast downe, and all the images to be defaced: the which had stood entire euer since the Christians Gouernment.

Cruelty of the Persian King. The year before, the King of Persia had put to death 1200 Armenians, vpon a false sugge- I stion as if they had intended to reconcile themselues to the Pope; as hating the Papists, yet suffering diuers Iesuits to liue in his dominions. The English Embassadors Chaplein desiring to know the reason of the Persians cruelty, conferred with the Patriark of the Armenians which resided at Constantinople (for there are two Patriarks, one vnder the Persian, and the other vnder the Turk) who told him, that it was true he had miserably slain many of their nation, by the cunning practises of an Armenian, who had counterfeited letters from the Patriark of Armenia to the Pope; by which the Patriark with his whole church of Armenians offered to reconcile themselues to the Church of Rome, and to acknowledge the Pope for their head; intreating the Pope to write to the king of Persia to giue them leaue to doe it freely. K Which letters the Pope receiuing, he rewarded the messenger bountifully, and returned Letters by him to the Persian king; wherby he intreated him to suffer the Armenians in his country to vse their consciences freely. The King of Persia hauing receiued these letters, grew into a great rage, causing many of them to be put to death; saying, That if they would be obedient to the Pope, he could expect no seruice nor obedience from them. Although the Papists say this was don directly by the Patriark, the Armenians affirm it was the practise of a counterfeit rogue. Soon after there arriued three Embassadors at Constantinople; the one was a Circassian, the second a Georgian Bishop, and the third a Mingrelian; all of them complaining of the Persians oppression and cruelty, and imploring succors from the grand Signior for their support. Presently after there arriued a Persian Embassador, whom the Sultan would not admit to au- L
dience, vntil all controuersies were concluded betwixt himself and the Emperour, which was then in question; the Sultan hauing sent one Gasparo (somerime a seruant in the English Embassadors house) to treat with the Emperor; by whose means at length all matters were reconciled betwixt them.

1614. The fall of Nassuf. The year 1614 began by the horror of great prodigies, which were seen in diuers parts of Hungary and Silesia. Ouer the strong town of Vienna in Austria, the heauens grew so red and fearfully darkned, as they feared that either the last day was come, or else there would follow some horrible effusion of bloud. But all these signes had no other effect this year, but the ruine of the fortune and prodigious authoritie of Nassuf Bassa the great Visier of the Turkish Empire; formerly one of the greatest and most fearefull enemies which had caried arms M in Asia against the soueraigne power of their Sultan. But to comprehend more plainly the fall and declining of his fortune, let vs behold him in his beginning and first rising. He was the sonne of a Greek Priest, borne in a little village neere vnto Solonica; and hauing beene taken by the Tribute, which the Turks exact from Christians vpon their miserable children,

The beginning & progresse of Nassuf fortune.

A taking one of three; hee was carried very young to Constantinople, and there sold for three Chequines or Sultanines (euery one of which is not aboue eight shillings sterling, to an Eunuch of the Sultans, who nourished him and bred him vp vntill hee came to the age of twenty yeares, and afterwards sold him to a steward of the Sultana's house, to serue him in his charge. Who finding this slaue to haue a spirit capable of greater affaires than the household, employed him in the ouersight and building of a rich and stately Mosque, which the Sultana caused to be erected at her charge. In this place he gaue such proofe of his wit and judgement, to the Sultana's content, that soone after she gaue him the gouernment of her household.

The Sultan had a will to imploy him in his seruice, and retyred him from the Sultana's
B house into his Seraglio, where he was honored with the charge of the Capigi Bassa or Captaine of the Porters or Vshers of the Seraglio: from thence he was aduanced to the dignitie of the Bassa of Aleppo, and soone after hee was made gouernour Generall of Mesopotamia. The commodity of his gouernment, frontiring vpon Persia, stirred vp his ambitious thoughts and his disordinate desire to become Soueraign of that countrey, and made him to entertain many practises with the King of Persia, an antient enemy to his master. The report of his practises came to Constantinople, the Sultan is aduertised thereof, he knowes the ambitious and
C stirring spirit of this Nassuf, and findes that he is very profitable for his seruice, if hee can by any milde course withdraw him from his disloyalties and intelligences with the Persian. Wherefore he dissembled the knowledge of his treacherous designes, and to gaine him the more powerfully, he gorged his ambitious appetite with the greatest dignitie of his empire. After the death of Murath Bassa hee honoured him with the place of grand Visier, and gaue him a great part of his goods, and in his place made him Generall of the army against the Persian, with promise to giue him his daughter in mariage. Thus was Nassuf aduanced by his dexteritie, wit, diligence, and treacherie, to the greatest charges of the greatest Empire of the World.

He entred into Persia as Lieutenant General of his masters Army, with the which he made so great a spoile, that he forced Ka Abbas King of Persia then reigning, to demand a peace. And after that he granted him a surcease from armes, he brought his Embassadour to Constantinople, to conclude this peace to his masters benefit, as we haue formerly obserued. He
D enters in pompe, presents a million of gold vnto his Emperor, is wel receiued at the Seraglio, much made of by the Bassa's, but more by the Sultan, who caused him to marry his daughter. Fortune hauing thus aduanced him to the height of greatnesse, not being possible to climbe higher, she ouerthrowes him, and doth precipitate him to the lowest degrees of miserie. The Sultan fears his spirit, too head strong by reason of his ambition, he grows jealous of his actions, and about the end of the year concludes his ruin and death. The commandment is giuen to Bostangi Bassa, that is to say, the Sultans chief gardiner, and ouerseer of his Seraglio and all his houses, one of the goodliest dignities in the court. Nassuf was at that time sick in his house; Bostangi goes thither to visit him, and to cause him to bee strangled, being accompanied onely with seuen or eight men; for that he would not giue any suspition of the commanE dement he had receiued from his master. Being come vnto his lodging he demanded to speak with him, and Nassuf excused himself by his seruants, by reason of the discommodities of his health. But the Bostangi (who would needs execute his commission) replied, That hee could not return to the Sultan (who had sent him to haue certain newes of his health) before he had seen him, to be the better assured. At this reply Nassuf grew distrustfull, and would without all doubt haue bin far from thence in some place of Mesopotamia: but beleeuing whatsoeuer hapned to him was ineuitable, he commanded them to suffer the Bostangi to enter: who at his first approch entertained him with many complements of curtesie; and hauing demanded some questions of him concerning his health, he drew out of his pocket a commandment from the Sultan to Nassuf, to deliuer vnto him the seales of the Empire. The which beeing
F presently don, he drew out another commandement vnto him, by which hee was injoined to send him his head. Then Nassuf cried out aloud, and desired to speak with the Sultan; but the Bostangi answered, That he had no commission to conduct him to the Seraglio, but to cause his life to be taken away presently. Vpon this refusall hee intreateth him to giue him leaue to waſh himſelfe in the next chamber, to the end that his ſoule (ſaid he) ſhould not depart the world in the ſtate of pollution, according to the Turks beleefe, who hold the waſhing of the body for a true purification. This fauour was alſo denied him; hee ſaw there was no remedy in his miſery, nor any hope of grace. Boſtangi Baſſaes followers (which were ſeuen or eight Capigies) being come to take away his life, and enuironing his bed, which was an vndoubted ſummons that he muſt die; in the end hee reſolues, and turning himſelfe vnto theſe executioners, hee willed them to do their duties: whereupon they fell to worke, and caſting themſelues vpon him, they put a cord about his necke, and ſought to ſtrangle him; but ſeeing that the fatneſſe of his repleat body would not ſuffer them to take away his life preſently, they cut his throat with a knife. His death could not be diſpleaſing to the Chriſtians, ſeeing that all his deſignes tended to their ruine: he had perſuaded his Maſter to breake the peace with the Emperour, the French King, and the Venetians, promiſing him to make him ſouereign Monarch of the whole world, to the end he might keep his ſpirit in action, and make himſelfe neceſſarie to his Maſter, and liue more ſafely in combuſtions than in a calme; whereas the enuy and malice of his enemies gaue him a thouſand furious aſſaults. Thus Naſſuf Baſſa ended his dayes and fortune; before Gouernour of Meſopotamia, Generall of an Imperiall army, and Grand Viſier of the Turkiſh Empire, aduanced to theſe ſupreme dignities by the great actions of his mind, but ouerthrown ſhamefully to his ruine by his boundleſſe ambition. Doubtleſſe it is a difficult thing for a fauorite that is inſolently audatious, to continue long in grace with his Prince; eſpecially when his vnreſtrained ambition hath once broken the bounds which reaſon preſcribeth to thoſe that Fortune aduanceth by the fauour of her blaſtes; and that hee followes obſtinately that pernitious curioſitie to know by experience how high Fortune can aduance him: for then the deſire to enioy that which is aboue his condition, blinding the eyes of reaſon, he doth precipitate himſelfe by his raſh and inſolent actions, to the loweſt ſtep of ſhamefull ruine. The riches of Naſſuf were ſo great and proportionable to his fortune, as after his death they found about two buſhels of diamonds and pearles. Doubtleſſe this rich and ſtately ſpoyle deſerued to be enioyed by ſome great Prince. So the Emperour Achmat ſeiſed thereon, and applyed it to his Chaſna, or Treaſurie.

Naſſufs throat cut.

Another diſcourſe of Naſſufs death.

This death of Naſſuf is related after another manner by one who was then preſent in Conſtantinople, the which I haue thought good to ſet downe as I haue receiued it from him. The Grand Seignior being much diſcontented with his Viſier, whither inſenced with ſuch as were neere about him, who both hated and feared Naſſuf, or doubting his great power; hee diſſembled his ſpleene, vntill he might find ſome opportunitie for reuenge: yet it was not ſo ſecretly carried, but Naſſuf had diſcouered the Sultans diſcontent, and laboured by great gifts both to the Sultana and others to pacifie him, prouiding notwithſtanding in the meane time for his owne ſafety, ſending horſemen dayly ouer into Aſia, meaning to paſſe himſelfe when he had gathered together a ſufficient ſtrength. But it fel out on the ſeuenth day of October, it being the Turks Sabbath, that the Moone about eight a clocke at night was much eclipſed, which made the Turks expect ſome great accident. The Grand Seigniour hauing formerly cauſed it to be bruited, That hee would about that time paſſe to viſit a new Moſque which was then in building; whereupon all the ſtreets were hanged with cloth and arras, and as the cuſtome was, a crie went before, that The King commeth; at the noiſe whereof, Naſſuf (being then in his houſe) could not but deſcend to ſalute the Sultan as he paſſed by: But it was not the Grand Seigniour himſelfe, but his Boſtangi Baſſa, whom he had cauſed to be attyred like himſelfe, who being come before Naſſufs dore, and finding him ſtanding there, hee ſuddenly leapt vnto him, and told him that the Sultans pleaſure was he ſhould deliuer vp his ſeal: wherat Naſſuff being amazed, demanded what the Sultan meant to do? to whom the Boſtangi Baſſa replyed, That he knew not what the Princes pleaſure was, but if he would not deliuer it, he would returne with that meſſage vnto him. Whereupon Naſſuf drew the ſeale out of his boſome, and deliuered it. Then the Boſtangi Baſſa ſhewed him a warrant for his head, whereunto he preſently ſubmitted himſelf, and then two Iamoglans ſtrangled him: his head was preſently cut off, and carried to the Grand Seigniour, and his body thrown into the ſtreet to be trampled on.

It

A It was thought that his death was procured by the wife of Cicala Bassa of Babylon, who had been manzoled or deposed from his gouernment there by Nassuf, and was a little before returned to Constantinople, but could not be allowed by Nassuf to haue any accesse vnto the grand Seigniors presence. Wherupon he wrot a letter vnto the Sultan, wherein hee accused Nassuf to haue conspired with the Persian to kill him; charging him with many things that were capitall. This letter he sent by his wife, who was sister to the grand Seignior; who comming to his speech (although she was watchfully obserued by Nassuf who was then present) left the letter in his chamber, and so departed. The grand Seignior finding this Letter, and reading it, was much insenced against Nassuf, and neuer quiet in mind vntil hee had his head. He writes, that there were found in Nassufs house eighty bags of gold, each bag containing ten
B thousand Chequines. After Nassufs death, Mechmet Bassa Admirall at sea (who had married Sultan Achmats eldest daughter) was made chiefe Visier. He was born in the Imperial City of Constantinople, and the first naturall Turk that was euer chiefe Visier since Constantinople was won.

You haue heard in the last yeares relation, of some combustions which were growing in Transylvania; and how the Sultan had written his letters of an imperial stile vnto the Nobilitie and States of the Countrey; which letters were fixed vp in form of a Mandate thorow-out all Transylvania, and in places that were neerest vnto those noblemen which held the Emperors party against Bethlem. At the same time Bethlem defeated certaine troups of the Garrisons at Lippa and Genoa, which ouer-ranne and spoiled the Countrey; so as the gouernors
C of those places were forced to send to Vienna, to demand succors of men and money. A Chiaus arriued at that time at Lintz, bringing letters vnto the Emperor from the grand Seignior: The first point contained in them was, That his Imperial Maiestie should haue a care, that the peace made betwixt them for twenty yeares should not be violated; and that for his part he desired to obserue it faithfully. 2. That in the name of his Imperial Maiesty they had seised vpon certain places in Transyluania, a Prouince which had been alwaies vnder his protection; which receiued her Princes from his hand, and the which he was bound to defend against all her enemies. 3. That the tyrannie of prince Battori had constrained him to giue forces to Bethlem Gabor, to dispossesse him of the principalitie of Transylvania. That after the death of the said Battori, he had inuested Bethlem to gouern it in peace. 4. That since, he D had bin aduertised, how that some troups of souldiers in the name of his Imperiall Maiestie, contrary to the articles of peace concluded betwixt them, had by force seised vpon the forts of Hust and Viuar, and the townes of Nagipan and Tonase. 5. That hee had giuen charge to Bethlem, not to suffer any enterprise, no not vpon the least village of his principalitie; to the end that nothing should be separated, and that he should repel the iniury of the aggressor by force. 6. That hee exhorted his Imperiall Maiestie, if hee desired the continuance of the peace, to command his people to make restitution of the places vsurped; or to signifie his intention by the same Chiaus which he had sent vnto him, to the end he might be fully assured: for the mischiefe increasing daily, the affection which hee bare to the good of peace might grow cold.

Achmats Letters to the emperor.

E The Emperour receiued this Chiaus at Lintz very honourably, and gaue him an answer of his Letter, wrapped in a piece of cloath of gold. The sence whereof was, That this businesse being of great importance, his Imperial Maiestie desired to confer with the Princes Electors and States of the empire to heare their aduice: after which he would acquaint him with his last resolution. And finally, That hee should rest assured, that for his part hee would not attempt any thing contrary to the peace. In the meane time there was a petty Warre in Hungary, the incursions and spoiles betwixt the Christians and the Turks beginning the same againe. The Turkes of the garrison of Agria going forth, tooke a great number of cattel from the Christians. Eight hundred Haiduckes aduertised of this spoile, pursued them so speedily, as they ouertooke them before they came within halfe a league of their retreit; when F they made them to leaue their prize, and put them to flight. The Bassa of Agria aduertised of the defeat of his out-riders, goeth forth with a thousand souldiers, to recouer the bootie from the Haiduckes, which they had but newly before taken from his men. But after a sharp incounter, hee lost his horse and two hundred of his men, and was forced to make his retreit.

From thence the Haiduckes went and ſpoiled the Countrey about Solnoc: ſome others holding the waies of Strigonium or Gran, took a Turkiſh Bride with her baggage, who was going from Gran to Buda; and foure hundred Boot-halers (ſome of them Haiduckes, and the reſt Turkes, men which hold no party but their owne, to robbe with the more impunitie) ſeiſed vpon Balaſter, Micolut, and Felak: but at the recouerie of them they were ſo ill intreated by the Hungarians, as that moſt of them loſt their liues there, and the reſt were taken priſoners. G

But the Emperor, who deſired to be reſolued in the important buſineſſe of Tranſyluania, aſſembled the Eſtates of Bohemia, Auſtria, Stiria, Carinthia, Carniola, Sileſia, Luſatia, Morauia, and Hungarie, his hereditarie countries; whom hee gaue to vnderſtand, That the peace was violated in Hungarie by the hoſtilities of the Turkes vpon the Chriſtians: to whoſe preiudice Sultan Achmat had ſubiected vnto himſelf the prouinces of Valachia, Moldauia, and Tranſylvania: this laſt being vnder the gouernment of Bethlem Gabor, who had made himſelf his Vaſſall. That the Sultan had ſent word vnto his Imperial Maieſty, That hee ſhould not pretend any thing there, to the end this countrey might bee wholly vnited vnto the Turkiſh Empire. Whereupon he earneſtly exhorted the aſſembly to conſider wiſely: Firſt whether Tranſyluania ſhould be left wholly in the Turks power: Secondly, why the Sultan would not conſent to the ratification of the Truce: Thirdly, of the means to make war, if the neceſſity of his affairs ſhould force him: Fourthly, to what end the Turke would hinder his Imperiall Maieſty, that he ſhould pretend no right to Tranſyluania: Fifthly, that the Turke had ſent him an Embaſſador, who contrary to the articles of peace, had not brought any Preſents: Sixthly, if they ſhould make a new accord with the Turke, to conſider aduiſedly, what aſſurance they might take, ſeeing that he would not conſent vnto the ſixth article of the peace. H I

The reſolution of the Eſtates.

There opinions were diuers vpon theſe propoſitions; but all ioyntly conſented to maintaine the authoritie of the Imperiall Maieſtie. The Hungarians only intereſſed in their reſolutions to warre, by reaſon of the ſpoyle of their countrey, as a paſſage for all their troupes, they beſought the Emperour, that if hee meant to ſend any forces into Tranſyluania, they might haue commandement to march ſome other way, and not ouer their lands. Bethlem Gabor in the meane time laboured to recouer thoſe places which had been loſt. Wherefore he prouided himſelfe to make ſome attempts vpon Lippa, and other places; as at Borene, Genoë, and Arach. The Gouernours of theſe places gaue aduice vnto Forgatſi Lieutenant Generall to the Emperour in high Hungarie; repreſenting vnto him the eſtate of their garriſon, and the feare they had, that if Bethlem ſhould once get them into his poſſeſſion and power, he would deliuer them ouer vnto the Turke: That if they would ſend them ſuccors, they would rather endure all extremities than yeeld them to the enemie. Yet for all this, they make no haſte to ſend them ſuccours: and Sander Baſſa according to the commandement hee had receiued from the Sultan, hauing brought forces to Bethlem, the ſiege of Lippa was reſolued in the Eſtates of Tranſyluania. On the fiue and twentieth of October the Cannon being drawne out of Veradin to batter the Fort; Bethlem went to inueſt it, made his approaches, and battered it ſo furiouſly, as hauing made a reaſonable breach, it ſerued firſt for a paſſage for foure hundred men to eſcape, who left the Gouernour with very ſmall meanes to defend the place, and without hope of ſuccours from Hungarie; which made him come to a parley, promiſing to yeeld the place, to haue their liues and goods ſaued. The Forts of Genoë and Arach, were deliuered by the ſame capitulation. That theſe three places ſhould not be put into the Turks hands, but ſhould remaine perpetually vnited to the principalitie of Tranſyluania: and to take all intereſt from the Turks, the Eſtates of the Countrey ſhould pay vnto Sander Baſſa the charges and entertainment of his troups. Theſe places thus gotten by Bethlem, he manned them with new garriſons: the Imperials which were within them, being retyred to Forgatſi the Emperours Lieutenant in high Hungarie. But the Eſtates of Tranſyluania being aſſembled at Veradin, diſputed diuerſly, whether they ſhould reſigne theſe three places into the Sultans power: ſome repreſented the diſcontentment hee would haue if they were refuſed, and the inconuenience that might enſue: others were not of opinion that the Prouince ſhould be ſo diſmembred, giuing

The deſignes of Bethlem vpon diuers places.

He receiues forces from the Turks, and beſiegeth Lippa.

K L M

the

A the most important places thereof vnto the Infidels. Thus without consenting, or refusing to deliuer these places vnto the Turk, the Estates concluded that prince Bethlem should do therin what he held most necessary for the tranquilitie of the country; beseeching him most humbly to free them from the Imperials, who had seised vpon Hust and Viuar. Such were the affairs of Transylvania this year; a prouince distracted from the Emperors power by the Turks practises.

The Sultan causeth a platforme to bee made at Constantinople.

At Constantinople, Sultan Achmat being desirous to beautifie the outward part of his Seraglio, with a goodly and spacious place vpon the sea shore, he caused a platforme to bee made within the sea, beeing eight hundred paces long, and one hundred and twenty broad. The Prouost of Constantinople caused this his resolution to be proclaimed; when as presently euery house sent forth a man, and the chiefe of families themselues laboured there in B person. There might you see the Bassa's serue as the ouerseers of the Workmen, and the Ianizaries and Spahies carrying scuttles with a wonderfull alacritie; and at all houres of the day there was musicke of diuers sorts of instruments to ease their labour, and to incourage them to continue. The Visiers going to view the Workemen, caused a largesse of pieces of siluer to be cast among them. Thus the Sultan being serued with admirable diligence in this his worke of pleasure, hee saw it finished in three moneths, hauing beene begun in October this yeare.

Certain Iesuits go to Mingrelia or Cholcos.

Whilest that the Sultan imployed his leisure after this manner in the structure of a platform within the sea at Constantinople, certain religious men departing from Pera, had a de- C signe to build another in the waues of infidelitie, but more profitable for the health of souls. This was an imployment of the Iesuites into the country of Mingrelia, in old time called Cholcos. Lewis Grangier a priest of this societie, and two others of his order, with an Armenian for their Interpreter, parted from Thrace with this godly resolution, to preach to the people far from God, the truth of his holy Word, and to guide them happily in the way to heauen. He passed the Bosphorus of Thrace, and the famous castles of Leander and Hero, and cut thorow those waues, whereas he that could not quench the fire of his passion, quenched the flame of his life: he passed beyond Pompeyes pillar, or rather that of the most happy Daniel Stylita, who erected his toward the mouth of this sea; and about the sixt of Iune this year they arriued at Verna, a famous town in Thrace; whereas a company of French soldiers (whom the D violence of necessity had some years since forced to leaue the Emperors seruice in Hungary) were in garrison for the Turke, to defend his subiects against the incursions of the Cossacks: yet these Frenchmen do stil obserue the Catholique Religion inuiolably. From thence hee sailed toward Cordula, and by the incounter of a little gallion he entred into the port of Trabizond. Within few daies after, he was caried in the same vessel to Erissa in the countrey of Laxia or Lassia, which on the one side lookes toward the countrey of Georgia, and the other that of Trabizond. The Christian religion hath bin for a long time planted amongst those people, but very ill manured; for the fathers to free their miserable children from the tribute wherewith the Turkes doe oppresse them, cause their children to be circumcised after the Mahometan manner; and for the same consideration they marry their daughters vnto Ianizaries. Moreouer, they abandon themselues to the Mahometan impietie, to the end they may E be deliuered from their insupportable oppressions, and their Turkish yoke. The Iesuits found there a good subiect to worke vpon for the help of soules: during their abode there, for certaine dayes they catechised the men, baptised the children, and aduertised the women married vnto Turks, what they were to do for the maintenance of their faith. But for that their commission or charge was to goe vnto Mingrelia or Cholcos, they went againe to sea, and sailed towards Gouea, which is the farthest corner of the Black sea. This hauen being verie vnfit to cast anchor in, they followed the gallies which caried a Bassa called Oneze from Constantinople, who should treat of a peace on the behalfe of Sultan Achmat with the Prince of the Mingrelians, and dispose him to pay a certain tribute. With these Vessels they went F into a port called Macrogalo, nine miles from that of Gouea, holding this place more safe than the other. But doubtlesse there is very little assurance whereas the waues and windes command soueraignty. A North-west wind rising about midnight on the fifteenth of September, draue their gallies neere vnto the shelfes and rockes, whereas one was broke and cast away.

The shipwracke of certaine gallies.

away. This tempeſt continued many daies, and during the violence therof another gally was G
loſt, in which the Ieſuits had bin, but by good aduice they retired to land during the fury of the ſea and winds. The Ieſuits imputed the cauſe of this loſſe to the prohibition which Oneze the Baſſa had made vnto them, Not to paſſe into Mingrelia before the peace was concluded betwixt the Princes of that country; the which grew long, by reaſon of the difficulties which hapned in the treaty. In the end thoſe princes reſoluing to pay the tribute to the Turk, it was concluded.

The libertie of trauel followes peace; Grangier and his Companions proceeded in their journey: twenty daies after they departed from Macrogalo, they arriued at Satrapella, a place of Georgia; wheras the princes Viſier came to viſit them, and after the Georgian maner ſaluted them bare headed, and kneeling vpon one knee. Gorel Prince of the Georgians (who was H then at Barlet, wheras the Court was to paſſe the feaſt of Chriſtmas) being aduertiſed of the arriual of theſe new Chriſtian and French preachers, ſent for them, receiued them fauorably, and ſaluted them bare headed and kneeling. After that he had made them to bleſſe his court, he held many diſcourſes with them of the truth of the Roman church, & of the Popes power as Father of all Chriſtendom: being mooued partly thereunto, by a feeling of pietie to the Church, and partly from the inſtructions he receiued from the Ieſuits; ſo as inlightned with a new beam of the true light, he intreated Grangier to craue abſolution of his ſinnes from the Pope, the which (ſaith he) he may giue me by the power hee hath from God; promiſing to ſend him his confeſſion in writing. But vnderſtanding that the Ieſuite had power from the Pope to abſolue him, hee purged his conſcience of all his ſins, by a generall confeſſion of his I life. Without doubt the zeal of theſe ſoules, ſo far from ſuccor, ſhews plainly what the harueſt would be, if ſo many labourers were ſent as were neceſſarie. A Monke of Georgia, who had liued at Rome for the ſpace of twelue yeares, had in former time planted pietie there, the which they of this miſſion did now alter. This Prince Gorel intreated the Ieſuits to ſend him ſome of their company at their return into Europe, promiſing to make great eſteem of them, and to giue them a Church, an houſe, and all things neceſſarie for their maintenance. The prince offered them ſiluer, which they refuſed, modeſtly excuſing themſelues vpon the rules of their inſtitution, which forbids them to receiue any temporall recompence for the adminiſtration of holy things. Thus they parted from this prince, who commended much their maner of liuing, and cauſed them to be conducted to Satrapella, to continue on their journy K into Mingrelia.

The third of February, in the yeare of our Lord God 1615, they parted from this towne with the Turkes who came to conclude the peace; and paſſing by the banks of Faſſo (a riuer which doth water the Countrey of Cholchos, now called Mingrelia) they arriued at Herailcano, otherwiſe called Heraclea, and from thence they went to Margoula, whereas the Prince of the Mingrelians, called Dodran, then remained, being buſie in the reception of Threbis Cham King of Georgia, who was come thither to viſit him, being expelled his Country by the king of Perſia. The Ieſuites were brought to kiſſe the hands of prince Dodran, and of Lipartia his Vncle, who was Regent for the Realme during the time of his minoritie. They both promiſed them aſſiſtance in their affairs, ſending them to the towne Macaurie, to make their abode L there whileſt they were buſied in the affaires of their Countries, the which at that time were ſomewhat confuſed. The Biſhop of that place entertained them with very great demonſtration of loue, and ſoone after making a feaſt to Threbis Cham, or Prince of the Georgians, he would needs haue the Ieſuites aſſiſt at this banquet, for a great teſtimonie of his loue. It is the manner of thoſe of Cholchos or the Mingrelians, as well as the Georgians, to ſing at their meat. The Threbis Cham deſired, that the Ieſuites might ſing ſome note when it came to their turne, whereof they excuſed themſelues diuers times: But there was no remedy, they muſt do as others haue done: whereupon they ſung the hymne of Plange Lingua, &c. appointed for Holy Thurſday. Being thus fauourably entertained in Mingrelia, they make their reſidence at Mocaury, with hope to labour profitably for the health of ſoules, which erre in M that countrey through the darkneſſe of ignorance, for want of men to teach them the way of truth. They are Chriſtians of the Greeke profeſſion, vnder the commandement of diuers Princes, alwaies in warre either againſt the Turke or the Perſian: They carry the name

The Mingrelians cuſtome at their feaſts.

of

A of Cham,which is as much to say, as King or Souereigne Prince: The Sophie had dispossest Trebis Cham chiefe King of Georgia of all his countries, in the yeare 1613, who had retyred himselfe into Mingrelia, as you haue heard.

The Historie of Sultan Iacaia, held by many to the Emperour Achmats brother.

Whilest those men labour to sow the seeds of true doctrine of the Apostles in the soyle of Mahometisme,a Turke passing out of Asia,comes into Christendome to seeke the light of truth,and demands fauorable assistance and succors from Christian Princes, to enter into the possession of the Empire,wherunto his birth and the degrees of a lawful succession seemed to cal him by a iust title.The discourse of his birth,of his fortunes,and of his pretensions to the Turkish Empire,is comprehended in this following relation.He termed himselfe the son of Mahomet the third,father to Achmat,now sitting in the Imperiall Throne at Constantinople; B he maintained,that his father by foure wiues or concubines had had foure sons;viz.Mustapha who was strangled,for that he would haue dispossessed his father of his kingdom;Iacaia(which was himself) Achmat now reigning,and Osman:yet it seems by the sequell of the Historie,that he had another Mustapha: that hauing bin sent for to come out of Magnesia to Constantinople,his mother(who had bin a Christian,and baptised vnder the name of Hellen,but was afterward ingaged in the company of Mahomet the third, for the worth of her beauty, and knowne in Turky by the name of Sultana Lalpare)could not conduct him to his father,for that he was dangerously sick of the small pocks.And this Princesse desired much,to find some fauorable occasion, wherby she might be freed from the damnable errors of Mahomets law,and return to the wholesome way of the Christian faith, and retyre her sonne Iacaia farre from the power of C those bloudy lawes,which sprinckle the Imperiall Scepter of him that comes to the Crowne with the bloud of his brethren;she well foresaw that Iacaia being but the second of Mahomets sonnes, should one day by his death secure the life of Mustapha his elder, and that the onely meanes to preserue him, was to retyre him into Christendome. Wherefore she laboured seriously in this designe,and made vse of a fauourable fiction; giuing it out,that her sonne Iacaia was dead of the small pockes; and hauing supposed in his place the son of an Eunuch dead of the same disease,assisted at his funerall,and by her constrained teares subtilly disguised her designe. An Eunuch called Astam Mehemet was the faithfull secretarie of her enterprise; with him she leaues Magnesia,a Prouince in Asia,and vnder pretext to goe vnto certain baths there by, shee gets her downe to the sea side, passes into Europe, and transports her son into Mo- D rea, sometimes called Hellespont, and lodgeth him (as vnknowne) in the Bishops Palace in the towne of Miclo. Iacaia was aboue nine yeares old; she held him not secure at Miclo,but transported him into Macedonia, vnder the habit of a Greeke Monke,and retyres him into the towne of Cassandria; where she discouers vnto the Archbishop of Thessalonica, a man learned and of a holy life, the qualitie of her sonne, and the desire shee had to make him a Christian: intreating him in charitie to take them both into his protection. This Archbishop lodgeth the mother in the Monasterie of Religious women of our Lady of Thessalonica, and giues the custody of the sonne vnto an Abbot of Saint Michael, a man learned in all Sciences, vnder whom hee profited wonderfully, as well in the Greeke Tongue as in many goodly arts. I do well know this to be true,for that I haue conuersed with him for the space of E six moneths, and haue seene him often in the companie of learned men speake the Greeke with as great facilitie as his Turkish and mother tongue. He continued in this Monastery vnder the care and gouernment of this learned Abbot, vntill the age of seuenteene yeares; that is to say, for the space of eight whole yeares; during which time, his Mothers tears,the holy instructions of the Abbot (but rather the Diuine fauour) made him to enter into the way of his soules health,and become a Christian.The Archbishop of Thessalonica clensed his soule from the pollutions of the Law of Mahomet,and baptised him in the Church of Saint Anastasius, without the City of Thessalonica; yet secretly, for feare lest the Eunuch comming to discouer this misterie, should abandon him, and publish abroad the place and estate of his solitarie aboad,and so be miserably taken. Thus Iacaia calling himselfe Sultan,being already F in some assurace of the Crowne of heauen by the promises of Holy Baptisme, whilest that hee was in the beginning of his pretensions to that of the Turkish Empire, he leaues the Monasterie where hee had been instructed; and in the companie of the Eunuch trauels vp

and

and down Greece, passing away (in the length and varietie of his voyage) the impatiencie of his age & desires, for that he would not be known, he takes vpon him the habit and the license of a Dervis or religious Turk. But when he came to the city of Siopia, hee vnderstood of the death of the Emperour Mahomet the third his father, and the rejoycing for the new aduancement of Sultan Achmat to the Empire; learning at the same instant, that Mustapha his elder brother had bin strangled by the commandement of his father. The displeasure which hee conceiued for that he had not bin bred vp at Constantinople with the rest, to receiue so rich a Crown as that of the Turkish Empire, made him to wauer in diuers resolutions; somtimes he would go into Persia to haue succours from him, and with him to make warre against his brother: somtime he would serue for a support and countenance to the Rebels in Asia, and justifie their party.

After many discourses with the Eunuch touching his affairs, he sends him vnto the son of Peri Bassa, a Rebell against Achmat: the Eunuch treats for his master, and receiues from him the Rebels oath; and returning to Tarlis, where the Sultan Iacaia remained, he conducted him to Peri Bassa, to be the head of his troups. Iacaia arriues, and sees himselfe obeyed by an army ready to fight: for the Deftarder or Treasurer beeing sent against the rebell Peri, with seuen thousand horse, and three thousand foot, was already vpon the banks of the riuer Bardate, ready to giue him battel. The Bassa's troups (being lesse in number of fighting men) went to assail him. There was a sharp incounter, but in the end the Deftarder was victor, & the troups of Peri Bassa defeated, and Iacaia being wounded in four places of his body, was forced to saue himselfe on the other side of the riuer, where wandring vp and down the fields, hee found relief with a poore countrey peasant, and soone after with an Abbot there by, who entertained him, and caused him to be cured; holding him to be one of the Deftarders pages, as he himselfe said.

His wounds being cured, Iacaia returnes again towards Greece, where he finds his mother, conferres with her, and soone after with the Eunuch, of the estate of his affaires; and concludes with both of them, to send to Constantinople, to the Visier Deruis (who at that time was discontented with the Emperor Achmat) to sound his disposition, and to see if hee might gaine him to his party: The Eunuch vndertakes the voyage, he speaks with the Deruis, and finds him disposed to entertaine the offers of Iacaia: The conspiracie was concluded, and they sweare to kill Achmat, and to settle Iacaia in the Imperiall Throne. Hereupon he transports himselfe to Constantinople, in a disguised habit: but when as they were ready to execute their enterprise (say they) the Deruis died; be it that the Emperor Achmat had discouered their designe, or otherwise. Thus Iacaia being frustrate of his hope to effect any thing by this means, he left the City and fled towards the blacke sea, and then wandred into the countries of Valachia, and Moldauia, following the Carock of a Poland Embassador on foot, vntill he came to the City of Cracouia, whereas Fortune had laid a snare for him, which brought him in danger of his life; for a Chiaus being come from Constantinople, and knowing him, he desired the King of Poland in his Masters name, to stay him, assuring him that by this meanes he should strictly bring vnto him the affections of Sultan Achmat: the King refused his vniust demand, holding himselfe much honoured to see his Court the refuge of vnfortunate Princes. After this refusal the Chiaus flies to trecherie; he corrupts certaine Tartarians of the Kings guard with money, who promised to murther Iacaia; and doubtlesse they had performed it, if a Flemish Embroiderer had not aduertised him, and lent him his lodging for certain daies to hide himselfe; after which he freed himself from danger, and past to Prague towards the Emperor Rodulphus who was then liuing.

In this Imperiall Court hee found relieue, and meanes to ease his forepast miseries: The Emperour furnished him with all things necessarie: Hee spent a whole yeare there, and was acknowledged during his abode, by many Turks which came to Prague, for brother to their Emperour Achmat. There wanted nothing but succours to effect his designes: But hee finds nothing but good words and faire wishes at Prague; so as hee was forced to seeke the effects elsewhere. Certaine Saxons that were his friends, aduised him to passe to Florence to Ferdinand the great Duke of Tuscanie: hee takes directions from that Princes

Embassador

A Embaſſador reſiding at Prague, and goes on his journy: but entring into Italy, he heares that Ferdinand was dead; theſe mournfull news made him to reſolue to ſeeke ſome other place, if Coſmo ſucceſſor to Ferdinand, and the great Ducheſſe his mother, had not called him backe. He came then to Florence, where he was honorably entertained, and lodged for the ſafety of his perſon in the Fort of S. Iohn, where he was ſupplied with all ſorts of commodities. The great Duke Coſmo gaue him the title of Excellencie, appointed him horſes and caroches, and ſuch companie as he delighted in, for the pleaſure of hunting. He had not ſtaid long at Florence, but he ſaw himſelfe aſſiſted with ſuch forces as he deſired. The great Duke Coſmo cauſed his gallions to be armed, ſending them into the Leuant, vnder the command of the knight Beauregard, where hee had conference with Naſſuf Baſſa, at that time chiefe of the Rebels of B Aſia. He offers him men, armes, any money, if he would come to land, and march towards Perſia, whither many Rebels were retyred. But he who commanded the Florentine gallions, had no commiſſion to leaue him in the hands of Naſſuf: wherefore hee carried him backe to Florence to his Highneſſe.

During the time that Iacaia was aboord the gallions, the great Duke ſent diuers perſons into many parts of the Leuant, to informe themſelues carefully of theſe things which he had deliuered, not onely touching his owne perſon, but alſo of his Mother; and they all brought backe certaine proofes of the truth of his diſcourſes. This gaue the great Duke ſubiect to impart this faire occaſion vnto Spaine, to labour for the common good of Chriſtendome: He wrote vnto the Catholique King, and informed him of the quality of Iacaia, to the end that
C contributing ſuccours to his perſonage, they might vndertake ſome happy enterpriſe againſt the Turke. The King of Spaine was content he ſhould be ſent to Naples: commanding the Viceroy to giue him a reception fit for his quality. Iacaia went on his journy, being accompanied by ſome, by the great Dukes commandement: but according to the newes which he receiued from Naples, he ſtaid at Auerſo, where he was receiued by the Gouernour with much honour. The Viceroy came to viſit him, gaue him the right hand, and the title of Excellency. But as the councell of Spaine was tedious in their reſolutions, and delayed too long (as Iacaia ſuppoſed) the ſuccours which he expected; hee parted from Auerſo to go to Millan, and from thence in a diſguiſed habit paſt again into the Leuant, to ſound their wils that might aduance his pretentions, and bring them to a happy end: but he preuailed as little as he had don before.
D Beſides all theſe voyages which we haue deſcribed, to the end he might leaue no means vnattempted to aduance his affaires, he went to Rome to kiſſe his Holineſſe feet. Cardinall Bellarmine receiued him, gaue him the right hand, and the title of Excellencie: the Pope aſſured him of his affection and ſuccors; but it was neceſſary the ſecular powers ſhould begin to leuy men, and make the firſt ouerture to war.

Since, we haue ſeene him at France and at Paris, vnder the protection of the Duke of Neuers, entertained by the bounty of this Prince, and aſſiſted by his Councell: and doubtleſſe if the troubleſome combuſtions of a ciuill war had not diuerted the armies of this duke, we had ſeen ſome happy ſucceſſe of the affairs which he treated in Loraine, Germany, and other places, to the ruine of the Turks, and the good of Chriſtendome. Finally, as for this Turke called
E Iacaia, terming himſelfe eldeſt brother to the Emperor Achmat now reigning at Conſtantinople, and for ſuch acknowledged by many: yet ſome affirme (yea ſuch as haue conuerſed in the Eaſt) that Sultan Mahomet had but three ſons, which were Muſtapha, Achmat and Oſman: Notwithſtanding it is hard to diſcouer in this perſonage any ſignes of an impoſture. I haue often frequented with him, and carefully obſerued his carriage and actions: and haue alwaies noted in him a carriage and minde borne to great matters. This is all that wee could learne of this man.

Stephano or Tomſho, of whom we haue made mention in the yeare 1612, hauing ouerthrown Conſtantine the lawfull Prince, and made himſelfe Vayuod of Moldauia, by the ſupport and tyrannie of the Turke; as he held it by vſurpation, without any iuſt title, ſo he gouerned with F all cruelty and inhumanitie, preferring crueltie before clemencie, and imitating that tyrant, who ſaid openly, That he reſpected not the loue of his ſubiects, ſo as they feared him. Euen ſo this Stephano at his firſt entrance plotted how hee might root out all the Noblemen in the Countrey, whom in their language they call Boyers, with all others of credit and authoritie Tyrannie of Stephano.

in

in the countrey, both for that they ſupported Conſtantine, as for the jealouſie he had of them, being beſt able to reſiſt his tyrannous deſignes: being alſo the common diſpoſition of ſuch as vſurpe any eſtate by wicked practiſes, to be alwaies in feare to be diſpoſſeſſed, and to be entreated according to their merits. He began firſt with the Lord of Botacan brother to the Princeſſe widow to Ieremy, whom he cauſed with two others of the chiefe Noblemen to bee miſerably and inhumanely empailed, as if they had been two notable theeues and murderers; and not content herewith, ſoone after, hee cauſed threeſcore and fifteene Boyers to be apprehended, cutting off all their heads; and would not pardon any one, notwithſtanding the great inſtance that was made by their kinsfolkes; charging them with the crime of treaſon, as if they had conſpired againſt his perſon, hauing no proofe at all: but theſe his cruelties did nothing daunt the Boyers, as Stephano had perſuaded himſelfe; but contrariwiſe they were the more inſenced, and many of them tooke armes openly, and had then ſeiſed vpon him, bin reuenged of his cruelties and ſet their country at liberty (which had not been ruined as it was afterwards) if he had not bin aſſiſted by the Citiſens of Yas; whom he conjured to ſecond him in this occaſion, promiſing them immunities of all ſubſidies: In regard of which promiſe, theſe poore wretches preferring their priuat profit before their publique ſafety, imploied themſelues in the ſeruice of this tyrant, and fought valiantly againſt the Boyers, who were come to aſſault him in the City of Yas; But finding that he was better aſſiſted than they expected, after ſome light skirmiſh they retyred as well as they could, whereof many were taken priſoners, whom the tyrant cauſed to be ſlain in cold bloud, or empailed to terrifie the reſt.

The Boyers which eſcaped from this defeat, knowing that there was no hope of mercy in Stephano, who was full of reuenge; nor by conſequence any ſafety in Moldauia during his gouernment, they reſolued to haue recourſe vnto the Princeſſe (widow to Ieremy) who had fled into Polonia when as ſhe receiued news of the taking of her ſonne Conſtantine. This Princeſſe vnderſtanding from the Boyers of the tyrannous gouernment of Stephano, and that moſt of the Moldauians were reſolued to ſhake off the yoke of his tyranny, and deſired to haue prince Alexander in his place, remembring the good vſage they had receiued from the deceaſed Prince Ieremy his father. Theſe conſiderations, together with a deſire of command vnder her ſonne (who was then but ſixteen yeares old) were ſtrong motiues to perſuade both her and her ſonne to imbrace this occaſion, the which they imparted to Prince Viſinouiskie ſonne in law to the Princeſſe; and to Prince Coresky, who at that time aſpired to marry her yongeſt daughter: Theſe Princes not only allowed of this deſigne, but they offered themſelues willingly to accompanie Prince Alexander into Moldauia, and to take the whole care of his army. This reſolution being taken, they preſently imploied all their credit to leuy men, and had within leſſe than two months drawn together ten or twelue thouſand foot and horſe, Polonians, Coſſacks, and Tranſyluanians: whereof the Vayuod Stephano being aduertiſed, he preſently leuied what forces he could, of Moldauians, Tartarians and Valachians, hauing drawne together an army of almoſt 20000 men, which hee kept about Yas, and there reſolued to attend the Princes of Polonia.

The Fort of Cochina yeelded vnto Prince Alexander.

Prince Alexander being aduanced with his army within two leagues of Caminithe in Podolia, hee was much troubled to paſſe the riuer of Nieſtre, which diuides the countrey from Moldauia, fearing the Fort of Chochina, in the which there was a ſtrong garriſon of Moldauians, and ſtore of munition to defend the paſſage of the ſaid riuer: but it fell out happily for Prince Alexander; for the Captaine which commanded in the ſaid Fort, being much diſcontented at the cruelties of the Vayuod Stephano, came voluntarily of himſelfe to offer his ſeruice to Alexander, and brought him the keyes of the Fort, leauing all to his diſpoſition; ſo as hee paſt his army eaſily into Moldauia, and in ſigne of ioy diſcharged many vollies of his great Ordnance, which made Stephano diſtruſt the affections of the Moldauians, and to feele a pricking in his conſcience, which doth neuer abandon tyrants and vſurpers.

1500 Tartarians defeated by the Coſſackes.

Prince Alexander making ſome ſtay with his army at Cochina in the yeare 1615, aduanced towards Yas, and being come within halfe a daies journey, he ſent forth eight hundred Coſſackes (choſen out of a great number) to diſcouer the countenance of his enemies army: but they were not farre aduanced, before they encountred 1500 Tartarians, ſent by

Stephano

A Stephano to giue some charge to the Polonians. Although the Cossackes were fewer in number, yet finding the Tartarians in disorder, they charged them so resolutely as they defeated a great part, and put the rest to rout. After which exploit they brought word to Prince Alexander, that Stephano's army might be about the number of fifteen thousand men; but they were such as were gathered vp in the country, and not trained vp to armes, who were rather drawne to it by constraint than of their free will, and therefore were not much to be feared. This happy successe, together with the report made by the Cossackes, did greatly encourage Alexanders army, being also much insenced against Stephano for certaine letters which he had written to their Prince, full of threats, as if both he and they had been already at his mercy, the which did the more encourage the Polonians, and made them resolute rather to die fighting, than to
B fall into the hands of this cruell tyrant. The same day there came certain deputies of the Moldauians to Prince Alexander, without the priuity of Stephano, to know what his designe was, and to intreat him to take pitty of Moldauia, which was threatned with a speedy ruine if the war continued any longer: to whom the Prince made answer, That his intent was not to oppresse Moldauia, but to free it from the tyranny of Stephano; that he had beene inuited by a great number of the Boyers, who had come vnto him into Polonia to that end, and had giuen him assurance, that it was the common desire of the Moldauians. That vpon this confidence he had marched with what forces he could draw together, and that if he did preuaile in his designes (as he assured himself with their assistance) he would gouerne them with no lesse mildnesse than his father Prince Ieremy had done, whose sonne and lawfull successour he was. The
C deputies returned well satisfied with this answer, and hauing published it in diuers places, many Moldauians came and joyned with the Prince his army, and assisted him faithfully in this action.

In October Prince Alexander aduancing about three leagues with his army, hee made a stand in a faire Champion where there were good Springs to refresh them, and in the meane time he called a Councell at warre, to resolue what course he should take, and when he should draw the enemy to fight. In the meane time he had sent a troupe of Cossackes to discouer the army; who brought word that they were ranged in battell, and that they had twenty cannons ready in front, the which did not much amaze Prince Alexander, for that some daies before, the Generall of Stephano's artillery had sent to assure him, that if he gaue battell, he would
D annoy his men as little as he could, hauing a desire to serue the Prince, and by this meanes be reuenged of Stephano, who had caused his brother in lawes head to be cut off, vpon a false suspect which he had conceiued against him being innocent. The which should teach Princes, that nothing doth procure them more secret enemies than cruelty, and that at one time or other they in whom they most rely abandon them when as they least expect it. The Vayuod Stephano meaning to make a second discouery of the Princes army, sent 1200 Tartarians, and two or three hundred Moldauians, who being seene a far off (for that it was in a plaine champaine) the Prince sent 500 Cossacks with 400 Polonian lances to encounter them: The Tartarians perceiuing it, made a shew at the first as if they would retire, to draw them by little and little from the campe; and being about a league off, they made a stand, thinking that they
E durst not charge them: but they were soone deceiued, for the Polonians fell vpon the Tartarians with such fury, as they ouerthrew them, and slew most of them, so as there escaped not aboue fiue or six hundred, who retyring to their campe caused a great amasement. The Princes army was much encouraged by this exploit, and increased daily in number, as it is vsuall in ciuill war to follow that party which hath the first aduanced.

The Generall of Stephano's artillery resolues to betray him.

Presently after this execution, the Prince meaning to aduance his army towards the enemies campe, his forewardnesse was staied by a battalion of one thousand horse, who had the night before seised vpon a narrow passage, betwixt a poole and a marish, by the which they knew the Polonian army must passe: but this obstacle was soone taken away, by the aduice which was giuen by certaine Moldauians, to send a company of horsemen by a way vnknown
F to the enemy, by which meanes they might surprise them behinde, before they should be discouered. The execution of this stratagem was giuen to the Cossackes, who speedily went, being guided by certaine Moldauians; who comming within fifty paces of the enemy vndiscouered, they charged them, and were seconded so fitly by the foreward, that staid on the other side; as of one thousand horse there returned not aboue fifty to their campe, to carry newes of their bad successe. G

Prince Alexander hauing happily opened this passage, he aduanced with his army within cannon shot of Stephano's campe. Prince Visnouiskie was of opinion, that they should make a kinde of inclosure with their carts, which might serue them as a fort, hauing no place of retreat within ten leagues; the which being discouered by Stephano, hee shot certaine vollies of cannon through their fort, so as there were some souldiers slaine, and some hurt: and the Prince answered him with the like, but to small effect, for that night surprised them, neither had they aboue eight small pieces. Prince Visnouiskie spent the night to encourage his souldiers, letting them vnderstand that they had no reason to be amased, although their enemies were more in number, for that most of them were peasants, neuer trained vp in armes nor seene battell; whereof they had had good proofe in many encounters, where they had euer beene victors ouer their enemies, although they were inferiour in number: That they were so many testimonies and assurances that God did fight for them, and would vse them to punish the tyrannies of Stephano, and his cruelties against Moldauia. Finally, if they were victors (whereof he doubted not, if they did their duties) there was not any one but should returne loaden with rich spoiles and recompences from Prince Alexander. This did so encourage the souldiers, as they protested all with one voice, rather to die than to faile of their duties. Moreouer, the Princes gaue the Collonels and Captaines to vnderstand of the intelligence they had with the Generall of Stephano's Artillery, wherewith they were much comforted. H

The disposition of the two armies.

The next day being the eleuenth of October, they began to put their Armies in battell, during the which there were diuers skirmishes, wherein Alexanders party had still the aduantage, so as it seemed they were so many presages of good Fortune which should befall them that day. The Princes army was ordered by Visnouiskie, to whom Prince Alexander had giuen the charge of Generall, as most capable, hauing sundry times giuen sufficient proofes of his sufficiency and valour in other battels. This Generall seeing Stephano's horsemen diuided into three squadrons, and the Tartarians most aduanced, he appointed the Cossackes to encounter with them: the which was judiciously and discreetly done, for they both goe freely to the charge, neither are they couered with any armes, but only with the skinnes of certaine beasts, wherewith they make themselues to seeme as fearefull as they can, obseruing no order in their fighting, and vsing cries which are fearefull to such as are not accustomed vnto them; and being once broken, they seldome returne againe to their charge. The Polonian Lanciers called in their language Houssarskie, being about one thousand and fiue hundred men well armed, made the second battalion of Alexanders army, led by Prince Coreskie, and were placed on the right hand against three thousand Tartarian, Valachian, and Moldauian horsemen. The Hungarian foot being about three thousand men were in the middest of Prince Alexanders Army, with the cannon, vpon a little hill of some aduantage; and on the left hand was the rest of the Chaualry, who were led by the Princes Alexander and Visnouiskie; and the baggage was a little behinde the foot of the campe where they lodged the night before. I K L

The battell betwixt Prince Alexander and the Vaynod Stephano.

The tyrant Stephano hauing disposed his Army into diuers squadrons, began about nine of the clocke in the morning to play with his cannon vpon Alexanders Army, who found that the Generall of the Artillery had kept his promise, for most of the bullets flew ouer his men and hurt them not; vpon which confidence hee commanded the Cossackes to charge the Tartarians which were aduanced, whom they soone defeated. At the same instant two thousand light horse gaue charge to the Hungarian footmen which guarded Stephano's cannon, and in an instant cut most of them in pieces, and the rest yeelded themselues; so as Alexander became master of his cannon. The tyrant seeing his Infantery in danger to bee defeated, and his cannon lost, caused a battalion of three thousand Valachian and Moldauian horsemen to aduance, who without doubt had recouered the cannon, but the generous Prince Coreskie with his Polonian Leunciers charged them so furiously in the flanke, as that they slew almost the one halfe of them vpon the place, and put the rest that remained to rout. Presently after this followed another squadron, the which Coreskie perceiuing, M

he

A he wisely retyred towards his campe, seeing his men wearied and tyred with the slaughter of their enemies, and not able to maintaine the fight without some rest. Then came Prince Alexander, and Visnouiskie who was his faithfull guide, with the rest of his horsemen to encounter this last battalion of the enemy, whereunto they went with greater courage, for that they were assured the Vayuod Stephano was there present; which charge continued for the space of a quarter of an houre, during which time Prince Coreskie had leisure to take breath, and to gather together what possibly hee could of those of his party, to succour them that were then in fight, who were almost tyred, and Prince Alexander farre ingaged. But seeing these vnexpected succours, hee and his men recouered their forces, and their enemies were so much amased at it, as that all them that remained aliue were put to rout and Stephano's army defeated.

B fled.

But Stephano (being naturally a coward) apprehending blowes, had retired himselfe to the rest of his footmen, who had not yet come to fight, making a shew that hee would rather die with them than fly away; but seeing the euent of this last charge, and his horsemen all in rout: he soone resolued to saue himselfe by flight, hauing neuer giuen one stroke in this battel. The footmen which remained being about foure thousand men, seeing the successe of the battell, yeelded to the mercy of the victors, and cryed out, God saue Alexander Vayuod of Moldauia. The day of the victory Prince Alexander made his entry into the City of Yas, hauing the Princes Coreskie and Visnouiskie on either side, after whom followed his whole army. Entering into the castle he was there proclaimed Prince and Vayuod of Moldauia by all the No-

Alexander proclaimed Prince of Moldauia.

C bles and Boyers of the country, the which he would neuer accept vntill that time. The next day Prince Alexander vnderstanding that a great number of the chiefest of the inhabitants of Yas were fled into the mountaines and forrest to attend the euent of these troubles, he sent certaine Boyers to inuite them to returne backe againe (with all assurance) to their houses, causing part of his Army to dislodge, and to be quartered in the country thereabouts; and there were one thousand and fiue hundred foot, and fiue hundred horse (vnder the leading of Prince Coreskie) sent to the city of Vasselloy, for that Stephano had fled that way, and might returne backe againe into Moldauia. As for the Artillery, some were sent into Polonia, and some were put into the fort of Cochina, the which is as it were the Arsenall of Moldauia.

Embassadeurs sent by Prince Alexander to the Grand Seigniour.

D At the same time Prince Alexander knowing that it was no lesse glory to preserue than to get, hee called the chiefe Noblemen of his Court to Councell, to resolue what was fit to doe to maintaine him and his estate, which hee had newly gotten by the sword: where it was concluded among other things, that hee should speedily send an Embassadour to the Grand Seigniour, to let him vnderstand that hee had neuer any intent to take armes against his Majesty, nor to withdraw Moldauia from his obedience; but that hee had beene sought vnto being in Polonia, and inuited by the Boyers of Moldauia, for the vnspeakeable cruelties of the Vayuod Stephano, who had resolued to root out the Nobility of the said Countrey, hauing put many of the chiefe to death without any occasion. They had also charge to giue the Sultan to vnderstand, That when his Majesty aduanced Stephano to

E be Vayuod of Moldauia, he had falsely suggested that hee was sonne to a Prince of Moldauia; that hee was not truely aduertised by his Bassaes and Counsellours, that his predecessour had promised to the deceased father of Prince Alexander, and to Prince Semeon his vncle, that after his decease his sonnes should succeed him in the said estate, if they shewed not themselues vnworthy, and did pay the yearely tribute of forty thousand Chequines; which tribute since the death of Ieremy had beene offered by Prince Constantine, his eldest sonne, to Houssine Aga, when as hee was sent to settle the said Stephano: as also that Prince Alexander promised to pay it hereafter; and if need should be, he would giue Prince Bougdan his brother as a sure and certaine pledge for the performance of his promises during the first yeare.

Prince Alexanders Embassadours put to death by Stephano.

F The Embassadours hauing receiued these instructions, they tooke their journey speedily to Constantinople: But in stead of passing through Thrace which was their directest course, they were forced to goe by Transyluania, fearing to be hindered by the men of warre which then troubled all Thrace. Comming to Buda they went to ſalute the Baſſa which commanded there, who being a ſpeciall friend to Stephano, put them in priſon, violating the Law of Nations obſerued by the moſt barbarous; and afterwards he ſent them to Braille whither the tyrant Stephano had fled. They ſay he gaue fifteene thouſand Chequines in recompence to the Baſſa, and to reuenge himſelfe in ſome ſort of Prince Alexander in the perſons of his Embaſſadours; he cauſed their heads to be cut off one night after ſupper, and their bodies to be caſt into the Danowe. The death of theſe Embaſſadours was very prejudiciall to Prince Alexander, by meanes whereof the Grand Seigniour was not truly aduertiſed of what had paſt in Moldauia, not receiued the complements, offers, and ſubmiſſion of Prince Alexander, ſo as he was wonderfully inſenced againſt him, and ſware his ruine, as you ſhall heare hereafter.

Stephano hauing receiued foure thouſand men from Michna Prince of Valachia, and gathered together the reliques of his ſcattered army, he marched towards Valachia; wherof Prince Alexander being aduertiſed, he ſent Prince Coreskie with ſix thouſand horſe, Polonians and Coſſackes to Ticouch a ſtrong frontier towne, to guard that paſſage: And Prince Alexander and Viſnouiskie, they ſtaied at Yas with the reſt of the army to preſerue the country, and to preuent all alterations in fauour of Stephano, who had ſome intelligencers. Within few daies after, the Prince had newes that the Inhabitants of Horreoua (a Countrey in Moldauia conteining about fifteene or ſixteene French leagues in circuit) were in armes, and had joyned with a great troupe of Tartarians to come and inueſt him, knowing well that Prince Coreskie was otherwiſe emploied with part of the Polonian army. Alexander ſtaied not to haue theſe Rebels come to Yas; but ſent Viſnouiskie his brother in law with ſuch forces as he could draw together to encounter with them. They met together within two leagues of the city, where Viſnouiskie charged the Tartarians with ſuch fury, as halfe of them were ſlaine vpon the place, and the reſt of them fled: there were a great number of priſoners taken, and all the poore inhabitants of Horreoua were brought vnto Yas in token of triumph. The dead being numbred, there were found about eight hundred Tartarians and others ſlaine, and of the Polonians only fifty, and ſome hundred hurt.

Stephano returnes into Moldauia.

Prince Alexander hauing receiued newes of this defeat, was wonderfully glad, and went preſently to horſebacke with his company of French, which hee had onely reſerued about him, to goe and meet with Viſnouiskie, and to congratulate his happy victory. This being done with many complements and embracings, he caſt his eie vpon the poore inhabitants of Horreoua, whom they led like a troupe of ſheepe; and had ſuch commiſeration on them, as he preſently ſent them backe againe, hauing taken their oath of fidelity, hoping that this his clemency would draw the moſt factious to obedience, hauing formerly tried the oppreſſions of a moſt cruell Prince. Prince Alexander hauing giuen thankes to God for this new and vnexpected victory, he ſent a Gentleman vnto Prince Coreskie, to aduertiſe him thereof, who at the ſame inſtant was buſie to diſpoſe of his troupes to meet with Stephano, who returned into Moldauia. The encounter was in a plaine Champaine, hauing on the one ſide the riuer of Sirette, the which diuides Moldauia from Valachia: the skirmiſh continued from tenne of the clocke vntill it was noone with like aduantage; but Prince Coreskie being aduertiſed that Stephano was in a ſquadron of horſe which was ſome two hundred paces diſtant from him; he joyned vnto his troupe foure hundred Gerbeyes, who were well armed, and led by a very valiant Captaine, with the which he charged him with ſuch violence and fury as hee forced them to giue backe, yet fighting in ſuch ſort as the euent ſeemed to be doubtfull: the which being diſcouered by another of the Princes Captaines, who led a troupe of foure hundred light horſe: hee came ſo fitly to ſuccour him, as Stephano and his horſemen were forced to fly, whom the Prince purſued and cut in peeces. Stephano eſcaped with a troupe which he had reſerued rather for the guard of his perſon, than to fight. Prince Coreskie at his returne from the chaſe of his enemies, cauſed the dead to be numbred, where he found that of Stephano's ſide were three thouſand and foure hundred men ſlaine vpon the place, beſides thoſe that were priſoners and wounded; and of his part only three hundred and fifty.

Stephano defeated the ſecond time.

Preſently

A Presently after this victory, the season of the yeare being cold (it beeing the twelfth of Nouember) Prince Coreskie put his troupes into garrison, and returned with one hundred and fifty horse to Yas, where hee was receiued with much honour and joy. The princesse mother to Alexander, was yet in Poland, but being aduertised of her sonnes fortunate successe, shee returned to Yas, and brought with her Prince Bougdan her youngest sonne, with Alexandrina her daughter, who was yet to marry. At whose arriuall there was great feasting and joy; then they began to treat of a marriage betwixt Prince Coreskie and the princesse Alexandrina, the which had beene then consummated, if Bellona had not opposed it, stirring vp new and more powerfull armies than the precedent, to exercise the vertues and valours of the said princes, and to try the patience of the two louers, who loued one another reciprocally from B their youth.

To continue the deduction of new affaires which troubled the quiet of the said Princes more than euer, you must vnderstand that about the end of Nouember this yeare 1615, they were aduertised that Michna Prince of Valachia with a Bassa called Hebraim, came against them with an army of forty thousand men, Turks, Tartarians and Valachians, to succour the Vayuod Stephano: and moreouer, that Bethlem Gabor prince of Transyluania, had charge from the Grand Seigniour to arme against them, and to assaile them; which in effect was a false alarme; for the said Bassa had beene sent by the Grand Seignior to bring Caphtanes (which are robes of cloath of gold which the Grand Seignior doth vsually send in fauour to Princes that are vnder his power) both to Michna and Stephano, who he held to be in peaceable possession of Moldauia; but not with any army, nor with an intent to make war against the said Prin-
C ces; for he was yet ignorant what had passed against Stephano. Notwithstanding the Princes holding this aduertisement to be true, assembled a Councell of the chiefe Noblemen in Court, where it was resolued, That an Embassador should be speedily sent to Prince Michna, both to know his intent, and to discouer whether he marched toward Moldauia, and with what forces. This charge was giuen vnto a braue Gentleman of Polonia called Boyartskie, who parted presently from Yas, and being entred into Valachia, he vnderstood that prince Michna was then in his towne of Bonza, some twenty French leagues distant from the frontiers of Moldauia. The Embassadour being arriued demanded audience before Michna, by whom he was sent vnto the Bassa, who at his first enterance (without hearing the subject of his Embas-D sage) demanded, who had made his master Alexander so bold, as to carry armes in the country of the Grand Seigniour without his authority; for the which hee should be punished, and those that did assist him: commanding the Embassadour presently to be put in yrons, as if he had beene a theefe or some miserable caitife. The Embassadors seruants seeing how they entreated their master, escaped as they could, fearing the like; who returning to Yas, enformed prince Alexander what had passed, assuring him that Michna had no army ready, nor any intent to enter into Moldauia at that time. The Bassa disdaining to speake any more to the said Embassadour, he gaue charge to some of his officers to examine him particularly of all matters concerning Alexander, and what forces he had: and within few daies after he returned to Constantinople, leading the said Embassadour thither with him. But as soone as they were
E arriued, they sent the Embassadour vnto the Diuano, where he was againe examined by a Visier, and in the end he was condemned by him to the gallies there to remaine perpetually. So little account do these barbarous people make, to violate the Law of Nations, especially with Christians, presuming that all the World should bow vnto them, as if they were gods vpon earth.

An Embassador from Prince Alexander to prince Michna.

There was another Embassadour sent by Prince Alexander vnto Bethlem Gabor, who was prince of Transyluania, being at Fureuar or Alba-Iulia, whom he receiued very courteously; to whom the Embassadour deliuered the subject of his charge. That Prince Alexander his master had beene aduertised that he made some leuie of men to joyne with Michna prince of Valachia, and to make war against him; the which he could not easily beleeue, for that he
F had made profession of friendship to his deceased father, and had no cause now to leaue it; entreating and conjuring him, not to meddle in the affaires which hee had to decide with Michna; and that in requitall (if any occasion were offered to serue him) he would employ all his meanes. The Embaſſadour hauing ended his ſpeech, he deliuered his Princes letters of credit: To whom Bethlem Gabor made this anſwer, That hee neuer had an intent to take armes, nor to attempt any thing againſt Prince Alexander, whoſe father was his true friend; neither would he euer giue any cauſe to diſcontinue this loue and friendſhip betwixt them, wherefore he would giue good proofe in all occaſions, eſpecially in this ſubject now in queſtion. The Embaſſadour was much ſatisfied with this anſwer, the which was alſo confirmed by letters; yet he afterwards leuied forces againſt prince Alexander, but he would not joyne with Michna his army. G

Prince Alexander sends an Embassador to Bethlem Gabor.

To returne to the courſe of our Hiſtory; preſently after the Baſſa his departure from Cicouch to returne to Conſtantinople, prince Michna ſent an Embaſſadour to Alexander with Letters, by the which he excuſed himſelfe for the ill vſage of his Embaſſadour by the Baſſa, proteſting that he was much grieued, and that it was not with his conſent that he had carried him with him, promiſing to employ his beſt meanes to mediate his deliuery. Moreouer, that hee was not ignorant what authority and power the Grand Seigniour had ouer him, whom he might not reſiſt, nor by conſequence his Baſſaes; that he had no army on foot, as he was giuen to vnderſtand, and that his deſigne was not to ſupport the cauſe of the Vayuod Stephano, vnleſſe he were forced by the commandement of the Grand Seigniour. And whereas he entreated him to deliuer his enemy Stephano into his hands, hee could not do it, vnleſſe hee ſhould violate the lawes of hoſpitality, in betraying his friend who had fled vnto him for ſuccour, and withall hee ſhould incurre the indignation of the Sultan, and be in danger to be diſpoſſeſſed of his owne eſtate, hauing no ſufficient meanes to maintaine himſelfe againſt ſo great a power. Prince Alexander hauing heard this Embaſſadour, and receiued an anſwer from the prince of Tranſyluania, by the aduice of his Councell diſmiſſed all his footmen, and part of the Coſſackes, retaining only fiue or ſix thouſand men with him during the Winter. H I

Prince Viſnouiskie poyſoned by a Prieſt.

About this time there was one of the moſt curſed and impious acts committed that euer was heard of. Prince Viſnouiskie who was a Proteſtant of the Greeke Church, hauing prepared at Chriſtmas to receiue the communion after their manner, the Prieſt (who had vſually ſerued him in that deuotion, being corrupted with money by his enemies) poyſoned the bread; which the prince hauing receiued, he ſuddenly fell ſicke, and his torments were ſo violent, as he died the next day. This bred a ſuſpition that he had beene poyſoned; whereupon the prieſt was apprehended, who preſently confeſſed that he was guilty, and had beene prouoked by his enemies. As his offence was terrible, being committed by a man of that Coat, who had made vſe of ſo reuerend a Sacrament, to poyſon a prince beloued of all men for his rare vertues; ſo his puniſhment was very ſeuere and long: being bound in a chaire made of copper wire, and a fire made round about him, ſo as he was heard for twelue houres crying out fearefully for the inſupportable paines which he endured. Whileſt that prince Alexander and his whole Court mourned for this fatall and vnexpected accident, there arriued a ſpy which hee had ſent into Valachia to obſerue the actions of prince Michna, who gaue him to vnderſtand that there was a Baſſa arriued called Skinder, with a great and powerfull Army, and that Stephano was there in like manner, who preſſed them dayly to march into Moldauia; and to begin the warre, hee ſent foure hundred men to ſurpriſe the Towne of Berlada, whereas prince Coreskie had left part of his men in garriſon during the Winter: who keeping bad guard, were ſurpriſed and moſt of them cut in pieces; which ſo puffed vp Stephano with pride, as he aſſured himſelfe of an eaſie victory. But Prince Alexander hearing of this defeat, hee ſent foure hundred Coſſackes, who made ſuch ſpeed, as within three daies after they arriued at Berlada a towne not walled, no more than the reſt, where hauing ſet fire in many places, they forced his men to come forth, cutting them in peeces, and the reſt were burnt; ſo as there eſcaped not aboue fiue or ſix to carry this bad newes vnto their maſter, who was much afflicted. K

Skinder Baſſa comes with an army againſt Prince Alexander. L

At the ſame inſtant, when as the Coſſackes were ſent vpon this expedition, prince Coreskie deſiring to be reuenged for the defeat of his men, tooke two thouſand fiue hundred choice horſe, and put himſelfe ſpeedily into Vaſſelloy, fearing the garriſon he had left there would M

be

A be in like manner ſurpriſed: whereof the Baſſa being aduertiſed, by ſome of the countrymen, he ſent his ſonne (being twelue or thirteene yeares old) and gaue him an old Turke of great experience for his conductor, with ſeuen thouſand men, holding this a good occaſion to get reputation to his ſonne. Prince Crreskie being aduertiſed of his march by ſome Moldauians, and that they ſhould ſurpriſe them early in the morning, knowing that they were of neceſſity to paſſe a bridge of wood ouer a riuer that runs by the towne, he diſpoſed his men in ſuch ſort as that the enemy could hardly diſcouer them: ſome of them were lodged within Vaſſelloy, and the reſt were couered with a little mountaine that adjoyned vpon the towne: when as ſome of the Turks had paſſed the bridge, two ſquadrons ſallied from the towne, and charged their foreward ſo furiouſly, as they were in a manner all put to the ſword, and amongſt
B them the conductor of the whole troupe, the which was no difficult thing to execute; for that the Turks who had marched in a maner all night, to arriue early in the morning, were benummed and halfe dead with cold; the reſt of the Turks which had not yet paſt, hearing the noyſe of this hot alarme, durſt not aduance, but retyred ſpeedily, fearing perchance that the Baſſaes ſonne might be loſt as well as his conductor. Prince Coreskie purſued them vnto a village foure leagues diſtant from Vaſſelloy, killing and taking priſoners all he found in the way. Among the priſoners there was one who gaue it out that he was neere kinſeman vnto the Baſſa, who being brought to prince Alexander, he receiued him very courteouſly, and gaue him a garment fit for him, hauing beene ſtript of his owne, he alſo gaue him a horſe, and ſent him backe vnto the Baſſa with a good conuoy, to whom he ſent a letter, by the which he in-
C treated him not to aduance in fauour of Stephano, promiſing that if the Grand Seignior would ſuffer him to enjoy Moldauia quietly, hee would be moſt faithfull vnto him afterwards, and pay him the yearely accuſtomed tribute: whereof the Baſſa made no great account; for hee was wonderfully inſenced, both for his ſons bad ſucceſſe in this enterpriſe, and for the death of the Turkiſh captaine.

Vpon the day of this victory, prince Alexander ſent fifteen hundred horſe to fortifie prince Coreskie, whereof eight hundred were lodged in a certaine Borough ſix leagues from Ticouth, whereas the Baſſa and Michna were then with their army; being about fiue and twenty thouſand men. Theſe eight hundred men neglecting their guards, did nothing but drinke drunke, and moleſt their hoſtes with all kinde of inſolencies, and forcing their wiues and daughters,
D which made them take a reſolution to be reuenged, and to that end they called vnto them certaine Boyers out of the country, who chuſing their time, cut all their throats when they were aſleep, and moſt of them drunke.

About the end of this yeare prince Alexander called a generall councell, whereas the princeſſe his mother, prince Coreskie, and all the chiefe noblemen and captaines aſſiſted: where it was reſolued that they ſhould returne to Chochina, being thirty French leagues off; for that it was the ſtrongeſt place and the beſt furniſhed of all Moldauia, and withall they ſhould be far from their enemies, and neere vnto Polonia. According to this reſolution, prince Alexander parted the next day with his whole army, and came in foure daies march to Cochina, in the extreameſt cold ſeaſon that could be; hauing lodged his troups, the princes ſent di-E uers Gentlemen to all their friends and confederates, to conjure them to come ſpeedily to ſuccour them; and in the meane time they gaue order to make prouiſion of victuals, and of all other things neceſſary for their army. The Baſſa being aduertiſed of this retreat, he marched with Michna and Stephano towards Yas, notwithſtanding the extremity of the cold, which was ſo violent that many died vpon the way; whereupon they ſtaied vntill the time was more milde.

Prince Alexander returnes to Cochina.

In the beginning of March, the Lord of Tiſcheuich came vnto prince Alexander with 3500 Coſſackes, and within few daies after arriued the Lord Potoskie, nephew to him who had been taken at the firſt battell, and carried priſoner at Conſtantinople, who brought with him a troupe of fifteene hundred Polonians well armed: there came alſo other ſuccours vnto him,
F ſo as by the end of that moneth the princes army was ten or twelue thouſand ſtrong foot and horſe.

Succours come to Prince Alexander.

Prince Alexander hearing of the enemies approch, he ſent forth a thouſand horſe with his company of French Caualliers to diſcouer the enemies army, who ſtaying to refreſh themſelues ſelues within halfe a league of the towne of Eſpanocha, whereas Michna his Tartarians were lodged: they were diſcouered and preſently inueſted by them and by a great number of Turks; and although that there were little hope to reſiſt ſo great a multitude, yet Alexanders men (who had alwaies beene accuſtomed to vanquiſh) behaued themſelues very valiantly, deſiring rather to die, than to yeeld baſely without giuing proofes of their valour. This fight continued from ten of the clocke in the morning, vntill night; and of the whole troupe there eſcaped but twelue, ſeuen Polonians, and fiue French, the reſt were either ſlaine or taken priſoners, among the which was the captaine of the French company called Mounteſpin, whom they would haue ſent with the reſt to the Grand Seigniours gallies: But Stephano preſerued him, vpon promiſe that he would doe him good ſeruice. Heere Fortune (which had hitherto beene fauourable vnto Prince Alexander) began to ſhew her inconſtancy, to teach Princes not to runne raſhly into dangers, although they haue had ſome aduantage ouer their enemies. G H

1616 Ieſuits at Conſtantinople accuſed.

At Conſtantinople about the end of Auguſt this yeare 1616, Enuie, the moſt furious of all the windes that ſhake the affaires of the World, ſtirred vp a horrible tempeſt, whoſe violent guſts fell dangerouſly vpon the Ieſuites ſettled at Pera by the Sultans permiſſion, at the perſuaſion of Henry the fourth, the French King; and labours to caſt them vpon the rocks where they might ſuffer ſhipwrecke, ſhamefull to their Order, and prejudiciall to the Chriſtians which liue in the middeſt of Mahometiſme. And to ruine them without all hope of helpe or reliefe, they accuſed them before the Grand Viſier, to be ſpies to Spaine; to giue abſolution to renegadoes; to baptiſe Turks, to conceale fugitiue ſlaues, and to ſend them into Chriſtendome; and withall they objected the doctrine of killing of Kings, if they were tyrants, the which had beene raſhly written by a Spaniard of their Coat: all which crimes are commonly puniſhed at Conſtantinople with death. They ſeiſed vpon their perſons, and lodged them in a dungeon, they were ſix in number, that is to ſay, Francis Bouton, Denis Guilier, Dominick Maurice of Chio, and Iohn Baptiſta Iobert their ſuperiour, all foure Prieſts, and two aſſiſtants, and with them a Franciſcan Friar, Vicar to the Patriarch of Conſtantinople. A ſuſpition of danger in an eſtate is eaſily beleeued vpon the leaſt accident. In the meane time the Emperours Embaſſadour came to Conſtantinople, to renew the truce; they entered with their drummes beating, and their enſignes diſplaied. They which thought to erect trophies to their glory by their ruine of the Ieſuites, made vſe of this entry, and gaue falſe aduertiſements to the Seraglio, that there were in Conſtantinople, and at Pera many thouſands of Chriſtians diſguiſed in the habites of Greekes and Turks, which came with this Embaſſadour, with an intent to put that in execution which the Ieſuites had projected. Moreouer, they enformed the Grand Viſier, and the Muphti, that the Churches in Pera, and the Embaſſadours houſes were full of armes; and that now when as the Turks eſtate, and eſpecially Conſtantinople, was vnprouided of forces, hauing employed their armies in diuers places, and at one inſtant, as in Poland, Perſia, and both the ſeas, that they meant to draw the Greekes into rebellion, and giue an entry to the Coſſackes, by the blacke Sea. The Sultan and his Baſſaes tooke an alarme, they commanded euery man to weare the habit of his owne Nation, with a prohibition to weare any hat except the Frankes, and they to weare a Grecian habit; They alſo inrolled all the Chriſtians in Conſtantinople and Pera. But the Sultan did not thinke his Imperial City of Conſtantinople free from the danger of ſurpriſe by this diligent ſearch, but he would ſeeke his aſſurance in the bloud of the Chriſtians, ſo as he commanded that all the Frankes ſhould be ſlaine without exception. But yet this commandement took no effect, by reaſon of the remonſtrances which the grand Viſier and the Mufti made him, repreſenting vnto him, That by this cruelty he ſhould draw vpon his eſtate a dangerous Warre from all the Chriſtian princes in generall. But all this freed him not from fear; he walks all night vp and down the City, contrary to his vſuall cuſtome, and he cauſed a Frier, Vicar to the Patriarch, who had beene taken with the Ieſuits, to be executed in his preſence; and hee doth expreſſely forbid the paſſage from Conſtantinople to Pera, and from Pera to Conſtantinople. I K L M

During this prohibition, the French Embaſſador had paſt from Pera to the city, to ſolicit the Ieſuits libertie. At his return he had found the paſſage ſtopt; he goes vnto the Mufti, and

leaues

A leaues his people in the meane time at the sea side (for it is the custome, to goe to the Soueraigne of Mahomets law with a small traine) during the time of his being there, a multitude of people ran downe to the shore, to see these men, thinking for certaine, that they went to put them to death: They lamenting their miserable fortune, and the Turks charging them furiously with injuries, as the men whom they thought practised by conspiracy their ruine. But the grand Visier hauing written with his owne hand, and sent one of his people to them that kept the passage, the Embassadour with his whole traine was suffered to passe to Pera, but he found the storme as raging at Pera as from whence he came: for one night after, the people of that place fell into such a fury, as it was to be feared the law of Nations would haue beene violated by the insolency of some furious people, although the subject were of small importance. About fiue hundred paces from the French Embassadours quarter, there fell out a dispute in a lodging, betwixt some who spent the night in some kinde of emploiment: the Turks that dwelt neere, being awaked with this noise, ran to armes, and trouped together in the street, beeing in all a thousand men armed, crying out, that this noise came from the Franckes, (that is to say from the Christians in the West, as Italians, French, Spanish, English, and others) who meant to rise; and they resolued to force the Embassadours houses, and to put all to fire and sword, if some better aduised of the troupe had not persuaded them to delay the execution vntill day, the which being come, the French Embassadour had meanes to get the Sultan to interpose his souereigne authority, to bridle the insolency of a multitude inconsiderately insenced. Such is the danger in the which many times the ministers of C Christian Princes find themselues, who for their Masters seruice liue at the mercy of a Nation barbarously furious, as the Turkish.

A tumult at Pera.

The Iesuites in the meane time continued prisoners in the dungeon, vntill that the Baron of Sansy Embassadour for France, had let the Grand Visier see their innocency, and procured their liberty, and the Sultan by his letters Patents did publish the falsehood of the malicious accusations inuented against them: but to auoid the fury of a multitude blind in their passions, and dangerous in their fury, they went to sea to returne to France: but after they had sojourned sometime at the Dardanels, they were againe committed to prison, by reason of some certaine aduertisement that was giuen to the Sultan of the same substance: the Sultan informed himselfe truely of their probity, gaue them their liberty, calling backe to Pera, to D liue there, with the same priuiledges they formerly had, and suffered the rest to returne into France.

The Iesuits set at liberty.

Alexander Prince of Moldauia hauing lost a thousand horse neere vnto Cochina, the last yere as you haue heard, the Bassa and Stephano were puft vp with this good successe; but Michna had no joy of it, who hearing that the Princes attended him at Chochina, with a resolution to defend themselues, remembring that a certaine Italian making a profession to foretell future things, had told him, That if he euer came to fight with the Polonians, he would be in danger of his life. Wherefore by the aduice of his Chancellor and Campe-master, called Spaterlecha, he pretended that he had receiued news from his Lieutenant, that there was a great troupe of Tartarians entered into Valachia, and spoiled the country; vpon which pretext he tooke leaue of the Bassa and returned, leauing all his souldiers in the army, reseruing only an hundred horse for his guard. Being in Valachia, Stephano wrote vnto him, that he had defeated the Polonians in battell, in the which there were slaine six thousand men vpon the place, and had taken a great number of prisoners, which they meant to send to the grand Seignior: all which was but a meere inuention to mocke Michna, and to make him sorry that he was not in the action: whereupon he was so much discontented, as he caused the heads of his Chancellour and Camp-master to be cut off for their bad counsell, charging them that they had some secret intelligence with the Polonians.

About the end of March, the Bassa with Stephano, and a Tartarian Prince called Monoza, resolued to aduance with their whole army (being twenty thousand men) towards Chochina, and being within two leagues, they made a stand a whole day to refresh their men. In the meane time the Princes put their army in order of battell, in a little plaine within a quarter of a league of Chochina, leauing a thousand choice horse within the towne vnder the command of Prince Coreskie, assuring themselues that the Turks would not faile to campe betwixt the towne and the Princes army, that if they were defeated they might haue no meanes to retire into the fort, which was held impregnable. The Princes drew eight pieces of cannon out of the fort, which they planted within a trench which was couered with a wood. The Bassa on the other side thought that he had the Princes at his mercy, being aduertised that they had not halfe so many men in their Army; early in the morning hee caused his men to march in good order, who arriued neere to Cochina by seuen of the clocke in the morning, where hauing made a stand to discouer the Princes army, he went and encamped betwixt them and the towne, as it had beene foreseene. His men being put in order, the Tartarians who had a great desire to be reuenged of the Cossackes, who had defeated them in many encounters, intreated to haue the point: the which was granted, and the trumpets sounding, they aduanced towards a battalion of Cossackes, nothing distrusting the cannon which was planted on that side, and not seene. Comming within the shot, they presently plaied vpon them, and ouerthrew a great number of the Tartarians, and terrified the rest, the which the Ccossakes perceiuing, they charged them furiously, and cut the rest in peeces, and so returned towards their army, seeing another squadron of Valachians and Moldauians come to succour the Tartarians. The Lord of Tischeuich with his troup of fifteene or sixteene hundred horse well armed, went to encounter the said squadron, which aduanced brauely towards the Princes cannon. The combate was long without any shew of aduantage, which made the Marshall of the Turks Army to send three thousand Turks to succour them: and the Princes caused a squadron of Cossackes and Moldauians to aduance, who carried themselues so valiantly, as they forced the Turks to retire aboue an hundred paces. Then Prince Alexander cryed out, Now my companions, behold the enemy is in disorder, let vs charge them resolutely, and the victory is certaine. After which he aduanced with the rest of his Army, commanding two cannons should be shot off together, for a signe to Prince Coreskie that he might sally forth, and charge the Turks rereward, as it had bin resolued: But he staied not for the signall, being already aduanced aboue three hundred paces, fearing that the party would be ended without him, or that he should fayle at need.

The Bassa and Stephano defeated at Cochina.

of

The Bassa seeing this stratagem, which he feared not, and the bad successe of his men which he had sent to fight, and that he was charged both before and behinde, he began to be amased, and hauing caused a squadron of two thousand horse, Turks and Valachians, to aduance, to second his troupes, he retyred apart with Stephano (who was no lesse afraid than himselfe) with the rest of the Turkish Cauallary, to attend the euent of the battell. There was neuer a more furious combat seene (which continued for the space of two houres) full of fearefull howlings of Turks, who in the end fainted, seeing no succours come vnto them: whereas if the Bassa and the cowardly Stephano had joined with them, they had without doubt fortified their carriages and renued their forces, and by all apparance woon the victory, which they lost beyond all mens expectation. When as the Bassa and Stephano saw that their forces were in rout, and no meanes to draw them againe together, they began to make a retreat with aboue two thousand horse, which had not yet fought. In the meane time the Princes Tischeuich and Coreskie (like two thunderbolts of warre) cut all in peeces they could meet; and fearing lest they should make a new head, the Princes drew all their men together, and made a stand vpon the place of battell, not suffering their souldiers to go to the spoile, before they were assured that the enemy was retired in great haste, fearing the Princes would haue pursued them, the which they would willingly haue done, if their men and horses had not beene almost tyred in the former battell, in which there were slain aboue twelue thousand men besides the wounded and prisoners.

Flight of the Bassa and Stephano.

Prince Alexander being returned to Cochina with the other Princes and Noblemen, they gaue thankes to God for the victory they had obtained against the Turks and their confederates; and there was much joy with the Princes and all the Ladies, who were retired into the fort, attending the euent of this fearefull battell. Prince Coreskie burned with desire to enjoy his Mistresse, whom he loued as his owne life; so as by a free consent of all parties, they were married within two daies after the victory, to the great content of all the Court.

Prince Coresky marries with the Princesse Alexandrina.

Whilest

A Whileſt that the Princes began to enjoy the fruits of their victory, the Baſſa and wretched Stephano returned to Yas, but finding no ſafety there, they parted preſently; the Baſſa to Conſtantinople, and the tyrant into Valachia to Prince Michna, who was his onely ſupport, notwithſtanding that he had mocked him apparantly. But before this wretch departed from Yas (hauing no hope euer to returne againe) he cauſed the towne to be ſet on fire in many places; ſo as of two and twenty thouſand houſes, there were not aboue ſix hundred vntouched. The Princes hauing aduice hereof in the beginning of Aprill, they marched ſpeedily thither, where finding it ſo deſolate, they reſolued to purſue Stephano into Valachia, and puniſh him according to his deſerving. The next day they marched towards Valachia, being
B to paſſe the riuer of Siretta, there being on the other ſide a Borough in which Michna had foure hundred men in garriſon, to keepe the Frontiers. The Princes arriuing at this place, the garriſon put themſelnes in defence, but they were ſoone forced and cut in pieces, ſo as there eſcaped not one, and as for the inhabitants, they were well entreated, hauing made no reſiſtance, and withall they hated Michna for the vexations they receiued from the ſaid garriſon. The Army hauing reſted there three dayes, aduanced with all ſpeed towards the City of Bonza, whereas Michna then remained with wretched Stephano, who had no care but to make good cheere. The Army beeing come within a league of Bonza, it was diſcouered by ſome countreymen who ran to aduertiſe their Prince, wiſhing him to ſaue himſelfe ſpeedily, for that they had diſcouered the Polonian Army neere the City. Michna was ready to
C ſit downe to dinner, hauing inuited Stephano to accompany him: but he was ſo amaſed at this vnexpected comming of the Princes, as hee ranne himſelfe to his ſtable, and mounted vpon the firſt horſe hee could finde, without ſaddle, and ſo tooke his way towards Tergouiſt, beeing followed by few of his people, one of which gaue him his owne horſe, which was better furniſhed, and as for Stephano hauing ſaddled his owne horſe, he fled all alone towards Nicopolis.

Prince Michna and Stephano fly from Bonza.

The Princes being entered Bonza without reſiſtance, they were wonderfully grieued that they had not found Stephano, which was their whole deſigne, and that Prince Michna (to whom they intended no harme) had beene ſo amazed. The Army at the firſt enterance ſpoyled the city, which the Princes could not hinder, nor yet the rauiſhing of many wiues and virgines, which drew the wrath of God vpon them, and in all appearance was the true cauſe of the D miſeries which afterward befell the Princes. During their abode at Bonza to refreſh their men, many Boyers or Noblemen of the Countrey (deſiring to ſhake off the yoke of Prince Michna's command, who gouerned inſolently) came vnto Prince Alexander, beſeeching him to ſtay in Valachia, promiſing that the whole Nobility would willingly yeeld him all obedience and fidelity. But the Prince (hauing no intent to diſpoſſeſſe Michna) thanked them for their good will, the which the Boyers vnderſtanding, they told him, that they would bee glad (ſeeing he refuſed it) that Prince Cherbanne (who had beene their Vayuod before Michna, and had beene expelled Valachia by Bethlem Gabor, and forced to retire into Germany to the Emperour) might returne and take vpon him the gouernment of Valachia, entreating him
E to giue him paſſage through Moldauia if he preſented himſelfe, the which Prince Alexander willingly granted, deſiring much that Prince Cherbanne were reſtored, for that Michna fauoured his enemy, and had himſelfe a deſigne vpon the eſtate of Moldauia, which in the end he obtained.

Prince Alexander refuſeth the eſtate of Valachia.

Prince Michna being come to Playa, which is betwixt Bonza and Tergouiſt, he ſtayed ſome dayes there attending his traine, during the which he ſent ſpeedily to his wife being at Tergouiſt, willing her to goe with all ſpeed to Nicopolis: for that he feared the Princes would ſeiſe both vpon them and their eſtates, as they might eaſily haue done, if they had foreſeene what afterwards befell them. Michna being come to Tergouiſt, he preſently ſent an Embaſſadour to Prince Alexander, to know vpon what deſigne hee had entered Valachia with an Army, hauing no cauſe; but contrariwiſe, that he had giuen good teſtimony that
F he was his friend, for that hee would not aſſiſt the Baſſa and Stephano, when they purſued him to Cochina, notwithſtanding that they were much ſtronger in ſhew; That if his intent were onely to ſeiſe vpon Stephano, hee aſſured him that hee was not with him, but was fled another way; promiſing that if he could euer take him, he would deliuer him into his hands:

intreating

intreating him withall to retire out of his eſtate, not ſuffering his army to ſpoyle it any more, and that they might continue good friends. Prince Alexander receiued this Embaſſadour very courteouſly, who hearing the ſubject of his Embaſſie, made anſwere, That hee had the day before ſent vnto his Maſter to informe him of his intent, which was not to attempt any thing againſt his perſon nor eſtate, but onely to purſue Stephano who had ſet fire on the City of Yas before he parted: and to let Michna know, That he meant not to wrong him, nor to enrich himſelfe with any thing that was his, he had ſent him backe his plate, with all his rich mooueables. Michna's Embaſſadour hauing thanked Prince Alexander, returned to Tergouiſta, and found all true that the Prince had ſaid; the which freed Michna from further feare. G

1500 Tartarians defeated by Troianoskie.

Before Prince Alexanders departure from Bonza, he ſent the Lord Troianoskie with two thouſand horſe to purſue Stephano: but it was without effect, for he vnderſtood that he had paſſed the riuer of Danow with his wife, and a ſmall traine. At the ſame time a troupe of fifteene hundred Tartarians, being aduertiſed that the Polonians purſued Stephano onely with a thouſand horſe, and that they were tyred with their long marches, aduanced to charge them; but it was not with that ſucceſſe they expected: for Troianoskie diſcouering them a farre off in a plaine champion field, had leaſure to put his men into foure ſquadrons, and there attended them, who approching neere to diſcouer the number of the Polonians, would gladly return without blowes, but it was too late: for Troianoskie commanded two of his ſquadrons to charge them ſuddenly, ſo as within leſſe than a quarter of an houre they were defeated, and aboue foure hundred ſlaine vpon the place, the reſt fled the ſame way that they came: of the Polonians there were not aboue fiue and twenty ſlaine, and about fifty hurt. H I

The Princes had reſolued to leaue Valachia, forbidding all Captaines and ſouldiers vpon paine of death to carry away any Valachian of either ſex with them, hearing they had ſeiſed vpon ſome, and meant to draw a ranſome from them: after which they began to march, and being vpon the way, they were aduertiſed that the inhabitants of Horreoua were againe reuolted and in armes, refuſing to acknowledge Prince Alexander, or to pay the accuſtomed tribute, vnleſſe he would make it appeare that he was confirmed by the Grand Seignior. Prince Coreskie was ſent thither with fiue thouſand men, whoſe comming did ſo amaze them, as they yeelded without any reſiſtance. This Prince being loath to loſe any time, laid ſiege to the towne and fort of Bialigront, ſeated vpon the riuer of Bohou, the which was held by the Tartarians Præcopences, in which fort there was a garriſon of Ianizaries, and many Boyers of Moldauia, who defended themſelues valiantly, and made many ſallies, in which they ſlew aboue three hundred of the Princes men, and he himſelfe was in danger to be taken, if he had not beene ſpeedily deliuered by the Lord of Tiſcheuich and his troupe, who charged the Ianizaries ſo reſolutely, as they forced them to retire, leauing many of their men dead vpon the place. The Prince ſeeing there was no hope to take the place without cannon, raiſed his ſiege and returned to Yas to Prince Alexander. K

Soone after, Hebraim Baſſa wrote to Prince Alexander (as if he had beene his friend) giuing him to vnderſtand, That from thenceforth hee ſhould liue quietly in Moldauia, for that the Grand Seigniours Lieutenant Generall or chiefe Viſier (from whom Stephano had alwaies drawne his chiefe ſupport) was in diſgrace, promiſing the Prince to employ himſelfe for him to his Maſter: the which he did either to make him careleſſe of his owne ſtrength, or to draw ſome recompence or reward from him, if the Grand Seigniour ſhould confirme him in Moldauia, as there was ſome likelihood, ſeeing that Stephano had made himſelfe altogether vnworthy; as well by his flight, as by his wicked actions, which made him in the end ſo odious to the Grand Seigniour, as hee reſolued to ruine him. So as ſoone after they were aduertiſed, That the Grand Seigniour had giuen commandement vnto the ſaid Baſſa to ſeize vpon Stephano, who had retired himſelfe to Brahile, and to bring him vnto him aliue or dead, with whatſoeuer did belong vnto him: the which he executed after this manner: the ſaid Baſſa marched with all diligence towards Brahile, carrying a Chiaux with him, and being within foure or fiue leagues of the towne, he ſent one of his people to aduertiſe Stephano of his comming, and that he meant the next day to dine with him. Stephano (who diſtruſted nothing) L M

Stephano in diſgrace with the Sultan.

A nothing) holding the Visier to be stil his friend, parted early in the morning to meet him, and comming neer him he alighted from his horse to do him reuerence, and the Bassa did the like; where after some little conference together, he drew out the commission he had to seise vpon his person, and to cary him to Constantinople. The which Stephano perceiuing, he turned him to his seruants, and willed them to shift for themselues, for that hee saw hee went to his death. His men being retired, the Chiaus who had his mace in his hand gaue him a blow betweene the shoulders, and then caused him to be bound hand and foot, and cast into a cart drawne by four good horses, and in this maner they caried him to Constantinople: where being ariued, to auoid the punishment he had deserued, he denied his faith and became a renegado, & withall he became very poor and miserable; for at the same instant when he was taken, the Bassa
B sent to seise and carry away whatsoeuer he had at Brahile & Nicopolis, where his wife remained; so as he had nothing left him but remorse of conscience, which tormented him continually, for the barbarous cruelties he had practised in Moldauia. Some of his men returned to Yas, and there declared what had befallen Stephano in their presence, for which they generally gaue thanks vnto God, and were very ioyfull.

Soon after, newes came to Yas, That the Sultan had appointed prince Michna to succeed Stephano in the principalitie of Moldauia (which is far better than that of Valachia) and that he sent Skinder Bassa his General in Europ, with a powerfull army to settle the said Michna, and to expel Alexander. The which proued so true, as on the 25 of Iune this yeare 1616, the said Bassa came to Tergouist, where prince Michna attended him, with great preparatiues
C both to receiue him and to refresh his army. The Bassa entring into Tergouist, had amongst other things of note, thirty or forty musitians on horseback, playing vpon certain instruments almost like to gitterns, which made but silly musick; he had also many pages, who in stead of cloaks ware the skins of leopards, lions, and tygers, as if they meant to terrifie the world; and his army consisted of about 20000 men, some Turks, some Tartars; to whom Michna joyned his forces, hauing 10000 horse and foot which he had drawn from Valachia and the neighbor countries. The Bassa being entred the castle wheras prince Michna attended him, after many complements they entred into a great hall wel appointed, where the Bassa presented him with his letters patents, and a robe which his master had sent to Michna, which hee caused to be put on in the presence of all the noblemen of his court, proclaiming him prince of Mol-D uia, with many ceremonies too long to relate. After which, prince Michna led the Bassa into another great hall, where a feast was prepared, both for himselfe and such as hee would admit to his table; Michna offering to serue the Bassa, but he would not suffer him, causing him to sit down right against him. On the second of Iuly they departed from Tergouist, and marched into Moldauia: whereof the Polonian princes were aduertised; but the princesse mother to Alexander maintained, that the Bassa came only to bring the patents to her son. Which dangerous opinion of hers grew by reason of the letters which Hebraim Bassa had sent to prince Alexander; not remembring that it came from a Turk his sworn enemy, and therefore not to bee credited, especially in a matter of that importance; so as she was the cause of their vtter ruine.

Michna proclaimed Prince of Moldauia.

About this time, the General of the king of Polonia's Army, called Zolkelchy, enuying the E honor which the Polonian princes had gotten by so many victories, and withall drawn by his own priuat interest, writ to prince Michna and the Bassa, That if they would promise to procure the Sultan to aduance the eldest son of the deceased prince Simeon (who liued with him) to be Prince of Valachia (whereof his father had bin formerly Vayuod) he would so weaken the Princes army, as they should be forced to yeeld or flie. Whose demand being easily granted, this traitor writ to certaine Captaines of the Cossacks, that they should leaue the Princes army, and come with all speed into Poland, to accompanie Vladislaus their Kings son, who had been chosen Duke of Muscouie, and meant to go thither with a great army by reason of some crosses; and that they should be very well paid. The Cossackes (who depend vpon the Crowne of Poland, seruing those that promise) most began to mutiny, saying plainly, That if
F they had not money speedily, they would retire into their countrey, yet concealing that they had bin called to any other seruice; and without any long stay, there parted early in a morning about 8000, carrying with them great store of oxen, sheepe, and other cattell, with all the spoyles they had gotten in the precedent victories.

The Cossackes mutinie and leaue Prince Alexander.

After their example, Bicho General of Prince Alexanders army, whether corrupted by bribes, or for that he had an apprehenſion of this powerfull army that came againſt them, retired al- G

ſo ſecretly toward Michna and the Baſſa, being followed by 2000 horſe. This much amaſed the princes army, & yet as if they had bin inchanted by ſome diuelliſh charms, they could not reſolue to make a retreit while they might haue don it without danger. Many aduiſed prince Alexander to this courſe, yea prince Michna by letters perſuaded him to return into Polonia, before his army came neerer to Yas. Which he did for fear of the ſucceſſe, wherof his falſe prophet had forewarned him, as is formerly noted. Wherupon Alexander went to councel the 25 of Iuly, but they could not reſolue; the commaunders and ſouldiers being much diuided, moſt of them demanding their pay, elſe they would not fight; the which they took for a pretence of their retreit. In the mean time the Tartars, who made the vantgard of prince Michna's army, approched; which made the princes to leaue Yas, & to march toward Cochina: but H they could not do it ſo ſecretly but the Tartars heard of it, who paſt ſpeedily thorow the city and charged them in the reare. In which incounter George Potoskie, Nephew to him that was taken with Conſtantine, hauing fought valiantly, & ſlain many Tartars with his own hand, was in the end ſhot thorow the body with an arrow, wherof he died preſently. The lord Tiſcheuich came ſpeedily to the charge with a troupe of Coſſacks which he had ſtaied, and charged the Tartars ſo furiouſly, as he ſlew 800 vpon the place and put the reſt to rout.

Alexander hauing receiued the forementioned letter from prince Michna, made anſwer, that contrary to his promiſe to continue his friend, & neuer to take arms againſt him, he had craued aid of the Turk to diſpoſſeſſe him of Moldauia, to which his predeceſſor had neuer pretended, neither could they according to the fundamentall lawes of the country, and the con- I uentions accorded by the grand Seignior when as the Moldauians ſubmitted themſelues vnder his ſoueraignty, by the which no man could be Vayuod of Moldauia vnleſſe he were born in the country. Moreouer, he ſhould remember that it was in his power to diſpoſſeſſe him of Valachia, when as he entred Bonza with his army in purſuit of Stephano: the which he would not do, nor detain any of his pretious moueables, but had ſent them all vnto him. That if hee abuſed the power which he then had, God would not ſuffer ſo great an ingratitude and vſurpation to paſſe vnpuniſhed. And although his army were far inferior to his, yet he ſhould know hee neither feared him nor the Baſſa, putting his chiefe confidence in the Almighties aſſiſtance, who had in many occaſions vſed them to abate the Turkes pride, which hee ſhould abhor if he were a true Chriſtian, rather than to join with them to ſatisfie his ambition. K

Prince Michna hauing ſent this letter to Skinder Baſſa Generall of the Turks army, he was ſo inſenced, as hee preſently commaunded his Lieutenant to purſue the Polonians with 12000 choice men, they being then at Cotnard betwixt Yas and Cochina. Prince Alexander beeing aduertiſed hereof, he ſuddenly cauſed his army to aduance towards the fort of Cochina. At the ſame time Prince Cherbannes Chancellour, who came with a hundred and fifty horſe vnto prince Alexander, to aduertiſe him that his maſter was comming to his aid with fiue or ſixe thouſand men, was purſued by the Turks neer vnto Yas, wheras he thought to haue found the ſaid prince; and of all his troupe only himſelf and one more eſcaped, ſo as the prince could haue no certain news of the ſaid Cherbanne. Prince Coresky, who had ſtaied with 2500 horſe not far from Cotnard, was alſo incountred with a great troup of Turks and Tartars, which he L could not wel diſcouer by reaſon of a little mountain that couered them. The prince ſeeing ſome of them appear, charged them; but finding that as he defeated one troup, a freſh ſucceeded in his place, he was forced to retire, with this aduantage, that he had ſlain almoſt 6000 of his enemies, hauing not loſt aboue 250 of his owne men. But the prince was wounded with two arrows, one in the thigh, and the other in the backe, which was a great diſaſter for himſelf and for the whole army. He which commanded this troup of Turkes being very much amaſed at this vnexpected incounter, hauing gathered his men together, and joined them to fifteen thouſand others whom the Baſſa had ſent, he being yet at Yas, he cauſed this army to approch within a quarter of a league of the Polonians; where hauing incouraged his men in what he could, he told them, That to ſhew his affection vnto the Sultans ſeruice in this occa- M ſion, he was reſolued to ſend a challenge to prince Coresky, whom hee confeſſed to be the moſt valiant man of all the Polonian army. So as he preſently diſpatched one of his Captaines to go vnto the prince, and to call him in the behalfe of his Generall. The Captaine comming to Alexanders camp, demanded to ſpeak with prince Coresky; who being brought vnto him, de-

Prince Coresky challenged by the Turks Generall.

liuered

A liuered the charge he had from the Generall. The prince, although he were neither able to ſtand, nor to ſit on horſebacke, by reaſon of his wounds, yet would needs haue accepted this challenge, if prince Alexander and the chiefe noblemen of the army had not conjured him to excuſe himſelfe by reaſon of his indiſpoſition; letting him know, that the euent of ſuch a combat did not only import him, but all thoſe of his party, who had their chief hope in him. Wherunto the princeſſes added their inſtant intreaties, and among others his deare Spouſe, who was much afflicted for his wounds. The Lord Tiſcheuich a braue and valiant Gentleman being then preſent, earneſtly intreated prince Alexander to giue him leaue to accept of the challenge for prince Coresky his couſin: the which being eaſily granted, he ſent a Gentleman with the ſaid Turk, to know if the General would yeeld thereunto. Which he did willingly,
B not being ignorant of the qualitie and valour of the ſaid Tiſcheuich. It was agreed, That the combat ſhould be betwixt both armies, lying in an open field, within a quarter of a league of one another, with promiſe that neither party ſhould be aſſiſted.

Theſe two braue warriors hauing taken leaue of their friends, came to the place appointed in view of both armies. The Turks General being about fifty paces from his army, cauſed water to be brought, with which he waſhed his mouth, eies, noſe, ears, and priuy parts; beleeuing (according to his Law) that this waſhing would ſerue as a purifying: then turning toward the
C Eaſt he made his prayer, after which he went to horſeback, being richly armed and furniſhed, and then marched ſoftly toward his aduerſarie, who attended him well mounted and armed, and ſo began the combat; their chief arms being bows and arrows, which they ſpent without hurting one another; til at laſt Tiſcheuich hauing a petronel, ſhot the Turke thorow the body and ouerthrew him; who ſtriuing to riſe again, Tiſcheuich paſſed ouer him with his horſe, and wounded him in his right arm, and at the next blow ſlew him: after which he cut off his head and caried it to prince Alexander.

The Polonians were very ioyfull of the happy ſucceſſe of this famous combat; and the Turks being much amaſed, aduertiſed the Baſſa and Michna, That they ſhould bring the reſt of the army and their cannon, if they would be reuenged of the Polonians. In the mean time the traitor Bicho, who had abandoned prince Alexander, with a troup of two thouſand Tartari-
D ans and Moldauians found means to get before the Polonian army, and to cut off the way betwixt Cotnarde and the town of Bothocan ſix leagues off. The Valachians and Tranſylvanians led by the General of Michna's army inueſted them vpon the right hand, and the body of the Turks army followed behind: ſo as there remained nothing but vpon the left hand a wood of timber trees, which might fauor their retreit.

The princes of Polonia inuironed by their enemies.

Skinder Baſſa hearing the ſucceſſe of the combat, commanded his army to aduance preſently with ſixteen canons. The Princes ſeeing themſelues inuironed by ſo many enemies, they reſolued to fortifie themſelues with their carts and carriages, and to defend themſelues. But what could fiue or ſix thouſand men preuail againſt two or three and twenty thouſand; for ſo many were thought to be in the Turks army. True it is, they expected daily prince Cherbanne & the lord Boſſi, who were within two dais journy, and brought with them ten or 12000 men. This made the Baſſa and Michna to aduance, to force the Polonians to yeeld or to fight. Com-E ming neer vnto their camp, and ſeeing themſelues inueſted on all ſides but toward the wood, they approched their cannon, which had been able to haue ſpoyled their Campe, but that it was not their deſigne; for they only deſired to take the princes and princeſſes priſoners, with the chiefe Noblemen and Captaines of the Army. Whereupon they ſent to ſummon the Polonian ſouldiers to deliuer into their hands the ſaid princes and Lords, promiſing that the reſt of the Army ſhould depart with bag and baggage. Whereunto they would not yeeld, but made an anſwer with one conſent, That they would rather die than commit ſuch baſenes and treacherie. This being reported to the Baſſa and prince Michna, they commaunded that ſome of their canon ſhould be charged with ſmall bullets, and diſcharged through the Polo-nian army, wherby a great number were ſlaine and wounded. The princes who had but ſome
F ſmal pieces, made certain vollies, but to ſmall purpoſe: neither had they any more bullets left, and little pouder, for that by il chance part had bin burnt ſome few daies before: ſo that all things ſeemed to foretell their ruine at hand. The Lord Tiſcheuich hauing diligently obſerued, that remaining in that incloſure he could not eſcape death, or at leaſt captiuity, reſolued with 500 horſe, the moſt valiant amongſt the Polonians, to force thorow three or four ſquadrons which were ſet in gard by the wood ſide, to the end none might eſcape, that place beeing moſt ſuſpected by the Turks. The which they executed with ſuch fury, as they ouerthrew all they incountred; ſhewing that it is a very dangerous thing to make head againſt thoſe who are reduced to that extremitie as they muſt either vanquiſh or die. Prince Coresky would not haue failed to haue made the like retreit, and to haue carried prince Alexander with him; but he could not ſit on horſeback by reaſon of his wounds: and beſides, he had rather haue died, than to leaue his wife in that extremitie. His laſt refuge was to diſguiſe himſelf as well as he could, giuing it out that he was eſcaped with Tiſcheuich, that ſo he might paſſe for a common ſoldier if the priſoners were put to ranſom. In like maner the Princeſſes diſguiſed themſelues for the like intent. G H

The Turks cannon hauing ouerthrown many of their cariages, which ſerued as a Rampier, two ſquadrons, one of Tartars, another of Turks, preſented themſelues at one inſtant, in two ſeueral places to force the Polonian camp; who ſeeing no means to make reſiſtance and to repel their enemies, laid down their arms, and yeelded. Wherat their enemies were exceeding glad, deſiring nothing more than to take theſe noble princes priſoners, and to diſpoſe of the reſt at their pleaſure. The Turks and Tartars hauing entred their camp, making ſpoil of all, and ſeiſing vpon what they could lay hands on, beginning to ſhare their priſoners, the princes Alexander and Bougdan, with their mother, were deliuered vnto Skinder Baſſa, who led them to Conſtantinople, wheras ſoon after their arriual they forſook their God, denied their faith, and became renegado's, for fear of perpetual impriſonment wherewith they were threatened. For which infidelitie Bougdan was preſently puniſhed, for hauing cauſed himſelf to be circumciſed according to the Law of Mahomet, he died, and the Princeſſe his mother was confined to the old Seraglio. As for prince Coreskie, in this generall ruin of a Chriſtian army (being forced to yeeld and ſubmit it ſelfe to the Turks tyrannie) he had ſo diſguiſed himſelfe, that hee paſt for a time vnknown, and was led to Yas among the common ſoldiers; where he was afterwards diſcouered by a ſoldier of his own party, who obtained his libertie by this baſe trecherie. The Turkiſh Captaine who had gotten the Prince, hearing of his qualitie by the aforeſaid Villein, he led him vnto Skinder Baſſa the Generall, who recompenced him well, and made both him and the ſouldier that diſcouered him, to take ſolemne oathes not to impart it to any man: for he had an intent to draw ſome great ranſom from this prince, and to reſtore him to his former libertie; knowing wel, that if he caried him to Conſtantinople the grand Seignior would confine him into his priſons, by which means he ſhould make no vſe nor benefit by his taking. But it hapned, that another Perfidious of the Polonian army aduertiſed Michna of Coreskies captiuitie, and in whoſe hands he was; who was ſo jealous, as he croſt and ouerthrew the good deſigne of Skinder Baſſa, telling him plainly in the preſence of many, That hee knew for certain prince Coresky was among his ſlaues, and that he ſhould beware he did not eſcape, for that the grand Seignior would call him to account. The General anſwered, That he would be glad if it were ſo, but he had not yet any notice of him, thanking Michna for his good aduice. But fearing that if he did what he intended, ſuffering prince Coresky to eſcape for a ranſom, the Sultan comming to the knowledge therof would be much inſenced, and puniſh him with diſgrace or death; the next day he told prince Michna plainely, that the aduice that hee had giuen him was true, and that Coresky had bin found diſguiſed among his other priſoners, whom he would preſent vnto his maſter, with the princes Alexander and Bougdan; as he did, of whoſe deliuerie you ſhall heare hereafter. The yong princeſſe wife to Coresky, hauing diſguiſed her ſelfe and diſ-figured her face with her nailes and other helpes, fel into the hands of a Tartarian captain, with many others; who caried her into Tartarie, wheras ſhe was inhumanly intreated. I K L

The Princes taken priſoners.

In the Mediterranian ſea Coſmo great Duke of Tuſcanie continued his enterpriſes this yeare againſt the Turks: his gallies part from Ligorne and runne into the Levant, in queſt of ſome occaſions to anoy theſe infidels. They drew neere vnto Cerigo, in old time Cytherea, the twenty fift of April, where meeting with certaine Chriſtian ſhips, ſome Venetians aduertiſed them, That in the Iſland of Chio the Turkes had prepared two gallies to paſſe into Barbarie. Inghirami Admiral to the great Duke reſolued to ſet vpon them: beeing on the way, M

he

A he turned with his fleet where they were to paſſe, and being couered by the night, hee caſt anchor vnder caſtle Roux. But as he attended a fair occaſion, the Moone ſhining diſcouered him vnto the Turks; and the gards hauing aduertiſed the Turkes Gallies, they preſently began to flie, the one rowing amaine towards land, and the other continuing her courſe at ſea with all ſpeed. Inghirami with his Admirall gally got before that which was going to land, inueſted it (being followed by the gally called S. Stephen) and three houres within night grapled with it, and labored to enter it: but the Turks (who were all good ſouldiers) defended it valiantly, ſo as they were aboue an hour faſtned together, hewing one another furiouſly: yea the Turks entring Inghirami his gally, fought valiantly vpon the hatches, but in the end the Florentines had the victorie, and took this gally, yet with much loſſe of Chriſtian bloud. It was the Pa-

B tron gally of that famous pyrat Amurath Raiſe, which was commanded by the ſon of Mammi a Portugall, called Muſtapha Celebi, who was taken aliue, but ſore wounded. The other Galley which was fled to ſea, and was the Captaine galley of the ſaid Amurath Raiſe, commanded by the Bey of Mitylene, nephew and ſon in law to the ſaid pirat, called Amurath, who had married his daughter, being his mothers ſon, was inueſted by the gallies of S. Mary Magdalen, and the Patron S. Coſmo. This combat was no leſſe furious than the other, the Turkes making a wonderful defence: but in the end, the bloud on either ſide being abundantly ſpilt, the Florentines had the victorie. Amurath Bey of Mitylene was ſlain, and Muſtapha, whom theſe Turkiſh gallies carried to Algier in Barbary. They were of twenty fiue bankes a piece, carrying lanthorns, and furniſhed with all things neceſſary, manned with 420 Ianizaries, all men of a-

C ction, and practiſed in piracies with that pirat Amurath Rais. In this prize the Florentines took 240 Turks, and freed 430 Chriſtians: among the artillery of theſe gallies they recouered a cannon and two facres of the gally of S. Iohn, and a ſail belonging to the great dukes captain gally, which the pirat Amurath Rais had formerly ſpoiled. Theſe Turkiſh gallies were loden with great ſtore of rich commodities, the which were valued at 200000 crownes. But this conqueſt was got with the loſſe of much bloud; for of the Florentines two hundred twenty three men were wounded, and 35 ſlain in thoſe two combats: which made the Admiral Inghirami to reſt ſatisfied in this voyage with the taking of two gallies, after which hee returned to Ligorn.

Turkiſh gallies taken by the Florentines.

We haue formerly made mention in the Ieſuits buſineſſe, being preſented at Conſtantino-

D ple, of the Emperors Embaſſadors entry into that city: and this was the effect of his Embaſſage. The peace concluded at Situa Torok, Anno 1606, betwixt the Emperour and the Sultan, was ſomewhat altred by the diuers interpretations and explications which they made of the articles therin contained; but this year 1616, in the month of March, the Embaſſadors of both their Imperial Maieſties aſſembled at Vienna: namely the Cardinall Forgatſie Archbiſhop of Strigonium and Chancellor to the Emperor, Cardinal Kleſſel Biſhop of Vienna, the Baron of Rainek, Count Adolph Althem, the Earle of Solmes, the Earle of Thoron, and Pauli Apponi Nagi, for the Emperor: Hali Baſſa of Buda, Achmat Tybaia, and Gaſper Gratſiani for the Turk. Where they concluded theſe following articles, to take away all pretext of controuerſie, in the explication of thoſe which were agreed vpon at Situa Torok. But it was after that

E Embaſſadors had been ſent on either ſide, as well to Conſtantinople as to Prague, with royall and rich preſents.

Articles extracted out of the Letters Patents of Achmat Emperor of the Turks.

1 FOraſmuch as many things haue hapned on either ſide, contrary to the peace concluded at Situa Torok, it hath bin neceſſary to confirm it anew, and to reduce it into the right courſe. Wherfore this holy peace made and concluded at Situa Torok ſhall be obſerued for twenty yeares compleat, to begin at

F the date of theſe preſents. Giuen in the month of Chomazilabil, in the year of the Prophet 1024.

2 That the Peace hertofore concluded at Situa Torok ſhall remain firm in all the articles, according to the treaty which the Emperor Rodulphus did ſend vnto vs, ſigned with his hand, and ſealed with his ſeal; the which we haue receiued willingly, and the ſame treaty we alſo ſent back confirmed to the Emperor of the Romans; the which he receiued in like maner. And this treaty which was sent vnto vs, bare date the G ninth of December, in the year 1606, of Iesus of reuerend and happy memory: and that which wee sent vnto the Emperor of Romans, wherwith he was satisfied, was dated in the year of the Prophet 1021.

3 Since the time that Agria, Canise, Alba-Regalis, Pesth, Buda, Solnoc, Hatwan, and other places haue bin taken, that the villages which were of their appurtenances shall hereafter remain annexed vnto them. But those villages which since the peace of Situa Torok, haue bin hindred from paying of their tribute on either side, or haue bin held by force, contrary to the treaty of peace, that those villages shall bee viewed by Commissaries appointed by vs and the Emperor of the Romans, and presently shall bee set at libertie, and restored to their Lords and right owners. As for the villages which pay tribute to either part, those which are scituat vpon the frontiers of the Emperour of the Romanes, toward Novigrade and other H places, shall be viewed by Commissaries thereunto deputed, who shall take a register, to the end those villages may not be molested by their neighbors. In like manner the Commissarie shall make a register of the villages that pay to both sides, lying neer the towns of the Emperor of Romans, of Strigonium, and other places; to the end they may take notice what villages are bound to the one or to the other party, that hereafter there might grow no controuersie. And for that which concerned the 158 villages about Strigonium, for the which there was some controuersie; the 60 lying neereſt vnto the said towne shall be adiudged as it hath bin agreed, and the Commissaries of either side shall take order for it. The foresaid villages lying neer to Strigonium, and all other of the realm of Hungary, which shall be adiudged to the one or other party shall not in any sort be disquieted, more than of antient custome, and there shall nothing bee exacted from them more than the tribute.

The Iudges of villages shall pay vnto the Lords the tributes according to the antient custome; If the I Iudges do not bring the tribute, the Bassa or Beg of the place shall summon the Inhabitants thrice, to the end their Iudges may come and pay their tribute: and if they do it not after these summonings, hee shall write vnto the next Gouernor for the Roman Empire, that the Iudges of the villages may be sent to him with the tribute. And finally, if after all these formalities it be not payed, the Bassa or Beg may vse force to fetch in these Inhabitants and make them slaues. The which shall be obserued thorowout all the villages which owe vs tribute in the realm of Hungary; yet nothing shall bee exacted or demaunded of them, more than they haue been accustomed to pay in antient times. The Commissaries deputed, shall view and set down by a ioynt consent, the limits and bounds of the lands and signiories which are held by either part in the vpper or lower Hungary, and in the realms of Croatia and Sclavonia.

4 They that shall break the peace of either part, if they canot be conuicted and punished instantly, we K haue decreed, That there shall be order taken on either side, and justice shall be don within three moneths. All prisoners of war, and others that haue bin taken since the peace of Torok, shall be set at liberty without ransome.

5 Achmet Tahaia hath presented vnto vs a Roll of places built and fortified since the peace, for the retreat of soldiers. Wherupon we haue ordained, That information shall be taken of all fortifications made on either side since the peace of Situa Torok; and if it be found that any fortification hath bin made contrary to the peace, it shall be visited within three moneths, by the captains on both sides, or by a Nobleman of either party, and the fortifications which shall be found to haue bin thus made contrary vnto the peace, shall be demolished.

6 And for that some wicked and malicious spirits haue attempted many things vniustly, to infringe L this holy peace and good amity, we haue ordained, That if hereafter any person on either side shall attempt or practise any thing that is wicked and lewd, contrary to the peace and mutuall correspondencie, wee will aduertise the Emperor of Romans therof: and in like maner the Roman Emperour, King of Hungary and Bohemia, shall write vnto vs to our Court, and no credit shall be giuen to the reports of such persons.

7 The Priests, religious men, and Iesuits, among the people of holy Iesus, which follow the Popes Religion, may build Temples in our Realms, there to say diuine seruice after their manner, and read the Gospell. We will yeeld them all fauor, and will not suffer any one to disturb them contrary to law and equitie.

8 It shall be lawfull for the inhabitants born in the realm of Hungary of either part, to re-edifie the villages ruined and laid wast; and after they are inhabited, they shall pay tribute to the one and the other, if they be such villages as haue bin accustomed to pay to both.

9 Merchants shall haue free leaue to traffique, passing from our port into those Countries; and the M transport of merchandise shall be free to such as shall take letters from the Gouernours of the frontiers, or from the Receiuers of the thirties; the which they shall represent in passing; and the Lord of the place, or

the

A the Receiuer shall atteſt the ſaid letters by his manual ſigne or ſeale; for the which they ſhall take nothing of the Merchant. If he be to paſſe by any dangerous place, they ſhall giue him a ſufficient conuoy to conduct him in ſafety; and after that the Merchant hath payd of either ſide the thirtieth, which is the full due, no man ſhall moleſt him, nor hinder him to go where he pleaſeth.

10 The Merchants which would paſſe from the realms and ſigniories of the Emperour of the Romans and the houſe of Auſtria, into our kingdom, with merchandiſe or mony, ſhal come vnder the enſigne of the Emperor of Romans, and ſhall haue his letters patents to vs, without the which they ſhall not be ſuffered to paſſe. And if they enter without enſigne or patents, the Agents and Conſuls of the Roman Emperour may ſeiſe vpon their veſſels, merchandiſe, and mony, and ſhall giue aduice thereof vnto their Emperor. Wherfore all the Merchants of the Emperors countries, of the houſe of Auſtria, and of the King of
B Spain, both as well thoſe of the Low-countries, as his other realmes, may come with all aſſurance into our realms, with their ſhips, mony, and merchandiſe, paying three in the hundred. And as for the Agents and Conſuls of the Roman Empire, they ſhall pay vnto them two Aſpers for the hundred: and in doing ſo, the ſaid Agents and Conſuls for the Roman Emperor ſhall haue a care of the merchants affairs. If any merchant ſhall chance to die, the Emperors Agent and Conſul ſhall cauſe his goods to be ſealed vp, and ſhall take them into his poſſeſſion, to which our Treaſurer ſhall haue no colour of pretenſion. And when as the merchants haue payd the cuſtom of three for the hundred in one place, they ſhall not be bound to pay in another for the ſame merchandiſe. If the Merchants haue any controuerſies amongſt themſelues or with others, the Cadi or Iudge of the place may take knowledge of the cauſe, if it exceed not the value of 4000 Aſpers, but it ſhall be iudged by the Cadi of our Port.

C 11 As long as this holy peace ſhall continue, the Poſts which ſhal be ſent with letters from the Baſſa's, Begs, Lords, and Agents, or by the Viſiers on our behalfe to the Emperor of the Romanes, and reſpectiuely from him to our Court, ſhall be honorably entertained by our officers: and if the way bee dangerous, they ſhall giue them aſſiſtance to conduct them into a place of ſafety with their letters. And if the agent which is with vs deſire to write any particular letter vnto the Emperor, and not ſend an expreſſe meſſenger, that this letter ſhall be caried by the poſt, and deliuered ſafely where it is directed. That the meſſengers of the Baſſa's and Begs ſhall go no more into the villages, but the Iudges ſhall bring the tribute and deliuer it where they ought.

An Accord for the execution of the Articles touching the villages in con-D ## trouerſie, and the raſing of fortifications.

TO conclude all differences touching the diuiſion of Villages, and demolition of fortifications made in preiudice of the peace of Situa Torok; we the Commiſſaries deputed had agreed vpon the time of four moneths. But for that all controuerſies cannot be decided within that time, by a common conſent we haue concluded the time of twelue moneths, for the expedition of all that ſhall remaine vndecided; all things remaining in the ſame eſtate during the time. For the ending of theſe affairs on the behalf of the Maieſty of the Roman Emperor, ſhall be ſent the noble Lord Adolph of Althem Earle of the ſacred empire, with others according to his Maieſties good pleaſure. And on the behalfe of the Othoman Emperor hath been named the noble Lord Ali Viſier Baſſa.

E For the greater aſſurance of theſe things, we the ſaid Commiſſioners haue cauſed ſix copies of this treaty to be diſpatched in the Italian, Hungarian, and Turkiſh tongues. And we the director or Preſident of the priuy Councell to his Imperiall Maieſty, and Cardinall, with other Counſellours of his priuy Councell, and Commiſſioners, hauing full power and authoritie, haue confirmed theſe preſents vnder our hands and the ſeals of our arms.

As alſo we Ali Baſſa of Buda, Viſier to the moſt powerfull Sultan Achmat, Tyhaia Mutafaraga, and Gaſper Gratiani, Embaſſadors for the Turkiſh Emperor with the Imperial Maieſty of the Roman Emperor, hauing full power and authoritie to conclude this treaty, haue ſigned it with our hands, and ſealed it with our ordinary ſeals: wherof there were three copies deliuered to either party. Giuen at Vienna the firſt of March, 1616.

F This new declaration of the Othoman Emperor, vpon the firſt Articles concluded at Situa Torok, ſhewes plainly how much the Turks are of late daies refined from their antient barbariſme and rudeneſſe, hauing made themſelues capable of great affairs. And theſe frequent meetings meetings betwixt the Emperor of the Romanes and the Sultan, by their Embassadours, as an holy watering of the Oliue tree of peace, seemes to make it so flourishing, as the sweet sauour may pierce farther, and make vs hope that God wil make vse of this peaceful vnion, to prepare vnto himselfe some means for a new harueſt, or a healthful conquering of soules, wandring amidst the falshoods of the Alchoran. G

Prince Coresky his wife caried into Tartary.

Alexandrina wife to prince Coresky, hauing bin taken at that vnfortunate ouerthrow of the Polonian Princes in Moldauia, by Skinder Bassa and prince Michna; she was carried away (as you haue formerly heard) by a Tartar captaine, and led captiue vnknowne to Bialigrot, where she receiued many indignities being with childe; yea during the time of her lying in, beeing fiue or six months after her taking. All which time she bethought her selfe of a means to hasten her own deliuery, and withall to free a Polonian soldier called Iaques, who had bore arms vnder prince Coresky. This man although he knew the Princesse well, and might by her discouerie haue purchased his own libertie, yet he would not do it: wherfore the Princesse hauing tried his fidelitie, taught him a meanes how to work his owne libertie, and hers in the end, by his care and diligence. The Tartar one day being absent, Alexandrina took occasion to talke with this Iaques; telling him, That hauing found him faithfull vnto her, she would direct him a course wherby hee might redeeme himselfe out of captiuitie, so as he would principally obserue what she did prescribe. Iaques hauing promised to execute whatsoeuer this lady should enjoin him, though it were to the hasarding of his life; she then said vnto him, You know the Tartarian whose captiues we are hath an elder brother a very rich man, who of late is become blind and deaf, by reason of a great catarrhe and defluxion which is fallen down into his eyes and ears, wherwith his brother seems to be much afflicted. I haue a jewel which my Lord and husband gaue me when we were made sure; the which I haue kept carefully, hiding it sometimes in my hair, somtimes in my old tatterd rags which I haue worn since my captiuity: the which I haue much esteemed, for that my deare spouse assured me, that the stone which was set in this jewel had many and singular vertues; and amongst others, that it would restore the sight which was lost by defluxion, and cure deafnes, so as it were not natural or too inueterate. I am resolued to take out the stone and deliuer it to thee: after which thou maist sound the Tartarian, whether he wil set thee at libertie if thou cureſt his brother; making him sweare solemnly not to retain the stone, but to suffer thee to carry it away, to the end thou mayst restore it vnto me without his knowledge. Hauing resolued vpon this plot, the lady said vnto him, You must also demand of the sick man an horse and some mony, with pasports to go into your country, to the end thou mayst go speedily to my deare husband, whereſoeuer thou shalt hear of him, and deliuer him my letters and bring mee an answer if it be possible. Iaques hauing sworn to perform whatsoeuer the lady commanded him, beeing at libertie, the princesse deliuered him the stone, he swearing to restore it vnto her again so soone as hee had done his cure, if it were not taken from him by violence. H K

The Polonian attended with impatiencie, vntil that the Tartarian did talk vnto him of his brothers infirmitie: who finding him one day much afflicted, took occasion to tel him, that he knew a certain means how to cure his brother without any pain, or taking any thing inwardly. I beleeue nothing (replied the Tartar) for all the physitians in the country canot do it: but if he could effect his saying, he promised to set him at liberty without ransom, and to giue him wherwithall to conduct him into his country. It is the recompence (said the prisoner) that I meant to demand, and that you swear vnto me by your great God, not to faile of your promise when I haue performed mine, and not to detain, nor suffer any one to take from me the thing I shall vse in the cure. The Tartarian hauing solemnly sworne, and laid his right hand vpon his heart, the Polonian took a time to make preparation for his cure. The Tartarian although he distrusted his new physitian, yet he acquainted his brother with the project; who beeing desirous to recouer his sences, intreated his brother not to neglect the offer, promising to saue him harmlesse, both in respect of the ransom which he expected from the Polonian, and the mony he should giue him. The day appointed being come, the Tartarian prest his prisoner to perform his promise. To whom the diseased man also promised an horse, with 50 chequines to return into his Countrey, taking the same oath which his brother formerly had done. All things being now readie, hee applied his physicall stone, binding it fast vnto one of his eyes L M

for

A for the ſpace of ſeuen hours, after which being taken away he ſaw clearly, and in like manner he recouered his other eie, and afterward his hearing by the like application. Wherat the Tartars much rejoiced, giuing vnto the Polonian what they had promiſed, and procuring him paſports from the Gouernor, without which he could hardly get out of the country.

Iaques ſeeketh out Coresky.

The Polonian before his departure told the Tartarian captain that he had a ſuit vnto him, which was, That the Polonian woman which was alſo his priſoner was his neer kinſwoman, intreating him, that in reſpect of his good office he had don vnto his brother, he would vſe her and her little infant better, & that as ſoon as he were returned into his country, he would take a courſe for her ranſome, and perhaps would bring it himſelf. The Polonian hauing acquainted the Lady with what had paſt, and deliuered her jewell faithfully vnto her, hauing receiued
B her letters to prince Coresky, and vowed to find him out, he took his leaue. This Polonian trauelling toward his country met with one of the ſame nation, who hauing bin taken priſoner with prince Alexander, made an eſcape. Theſe two diſcourſing freely of their aduentures, Iaques inquired carefully what was become of the princes who had bin caried priſoners to Conſtantinople by Skinder Baſſa, and eſpecially of Coresky; and hearing that he was in the priſons of the Black ſea, he inquired by what means he might ſpeake with this prince, or at leaſt how he might conuey ſome letters vnto him. To whom he anſwered, that it was very difficult, for that he was ſtreitly garded: but he vnderſtood that the French Embaſſadour had ſometimes leaue to ſend to viſit him, wherof he might inform himſelf more particularly. After this, Iaques entreated his countryman to deliuer certain letters which the princeſſe had written vnto
C her kinsfolks; the which he promiſed to perform faithfully, and ſo they parted. Iaques comming to Conſtantinople, grew acquainted with one of the French Embaſſadours men, who was ſomtimes imploied to viſit the Prince, & cary him mony & other neceſſaries; by whoſe means he had acceſſe to the Prince, and deliuered his letters, the which he receiued very ioyfully, hearing of his wiues health. Eight daies after, the Polonian comming to viſit the prince he receiued from him an anſwer to his wife, & ſo took his leaue: who after many troubleſome incounters returned to Bialigrot; where finding the lady all alone (the Tartarian and his ſeruants being gon a hunting) he gaue an account her of his negotiation, and deliuered his letters, wherat ſhe much rejoiced, hearing that he was aliue; though infinitly grieued at his captiuitie, vnderſtanding that the grand Seignior had refuſed to put him to ranſom. After their D diſcourſe, the Princeſſe aduertiſed her faithfull Agent, That ſince his departure the Tartar grew jealous of her qualitie, and had inquired of her what her husband, her kinsfolk, and their eſtates were. To whom ſhe had anſwered, That her husband was a Captain who had been taken priſoner with prince Alexander, and carried with him into Turky; and as for her other kinsfolks they were all ſoldiers, who had bin ruined during the wars of Moldauia. Deſiring the Polonian to remember it well, leſt they ſhould be found to differ when they ſhould come to treat of her ranſom. The Tartarian returning ſoone after to his houſe, he found Iaques the Polonian there; whom he entertained very kindly, both in regard of the good offices hee had done for his brother, and for the hope he had of his priſoners ranſome, remembring that Iaques had told him that ſhe was his kinſwoman, and that it might be he would bring it. After ſome
E little diſcourſe, Iaques asked him what ranſom he would require for his Polonian priſoner. To whom the Tartarian anſwered, That he would haue 6000 chequines for her and her ſonne, vnleſſe he would giue him the ſtone with the which he had cured his brother. To whom the Polonian replied, That as for the ſtone, it was not in his power, hauing reſtored it to a Nobleman whom he had followed when he was taken priſoner. And as for the ranſom which he demaunded for his priſoner and her child, it was more than ſhe and all her kindred were worth, ſhee being wife to a captain who had bin taken priſoner at the defeat of Alexander, and for want of means was ſtil detained. The Tartarian interrupted him, ſaying, That he vnderſtood ſhee was of noble extraction, and that ſhe had rich kinsfolks, who would not ſuffer her to ſpend her life in captiuitie. I confeſſe, ſaid the Polonian, that ſhe is iſſued from noble parents, but they are F ruined during the troubles of Moldauia; adding withall, that he would not haue returned, if he had thought he would haue demanded aboue 1000 Chequines, the which he offered him, intreating him to accept it, in regard ſhe was his kinſwoman, and for the good office hee had don for his brother. You haue bin ſatisfied, replied the Tartarian, and haue no cauſe to complaine,

plain. Notwithstanding after some contesting, by the mediation of the Captaines brother who had bin so wel cured, the ladies ransome was set at three thousand chequines, wherof her faithfull agent gaue present intelligence to prince Charles brother to prince Coresky, who sent this sum with all possible speed: and so the princesse and her little infant were redeemed from captiuity, and conducted into Polonia by her faithful solicitor. From whence she aduertised the prince by letters, of her deliuery. This relation was written by a Frenchman, who by his report was present in all the troubles of Moldauia. But as touching her deliuery by meanes of the cure, I canot warrant it, but leaue it to the censure of phy sitians and Naturalists, who can best iudge of the vertues of stones, herbs, and plants; but it is certain that she was imprisoned and ransomed as an vnknown person. G

Prince Coresky his wife redeemed from the Tartars.

In the year 1617 there came to Paris a Chiaus a Spanish Renegado, called Solyman, sent from Constantinople with letters from Sultan Achmat to the King, for the deliuery of twentie eight slaues, who had redeemed their liberty for mony in diuers ports of Italy, and in their return to Constantinople had bin taken by the ships of Marseilles. The King caused them to be set at liberty. But the Chiaus had charge also to intreat his Maiesty to cause justice to be done vpon the Moores Granadines, expelled out of Spain, and wronged in their goods & persons vpon their passage into France: wherin he had what contentment he could expect of justice. Notwithstanding he did witnesse openly his amasement at their long delaies, in the dispatch of suits; saying plainly, That France which had the reputation thorowout the world, to maintaine euery mans right inuiolably, did no justice but after long and tedious pursuits; and that the execution of decrees was many times longer than the suit it selfe. Whereas the Turks justice (said he) was speedily administred to euery man, & within eight daies they saw an end of the greatest and most important suits. This Chiaus was fauorably entertained, and defraied with his train for the space of six or seuen moneths at the Kings charge. H I

As the Turks estate hath not growne great but by combustions, so it is ordinarily full of troubles; wherby it seems the preseruation thereof depends in making war vpon others, or to support it, when as neighbour princes seeke to recouer that which they had vniustly wrested from them by the Othoman force. So this great Estate entertained this yeare foure great Armies, two at land, the one against the Persian his antient enemy; the other (consisting in a maner all of Tartarians) against the king of Poland, as supporting the part of the Vayuod of Moldauia against the Turke, who had setled another in that prouince. And two navall Armies, the one in the Black sea against the Cossacks and Rassians, who made daily incursions into the Othomans country; men wholly giuen to arms, who go to sea in small boats, able to carry but fiue or six men, made of the bodies of hollow trees; but they are in a maner inuincible with these kind of boats: for when as the disaduantages of a combat forces them to sound a retreit, they retyre neer vnto the land, and in such places where the Turkish gallies canot approch, and so they easily preuent a totall ouerthrow. Finally, in case of necessitie they carry their vessels with them: for in the end of the last yeare, finding the passage of the blacke sea stopped at the mouth of the riuer of Danow, by the Turkish gallies, they put their boats into carts, and taking the way by the mountains brought them easily into the sea. Their fourth army was in the white sea, as they call it, imploied either to conduct the Carauan which brings the tribute from Egypt to Constantinople, or in search of the gallies of Malta and Florence, which scour those seas continually to anoy the Turk. The army against the Persian was led by Haly Bassa successor to Mehemet Bassa, he who fled into Persia after hee had lost sixty thousand men in a set battel: after which being sent for to come to Constantinople, fearing that the Sultan would take reuenge of so great a losse vpon his life, hee retyred to the Sophy and there remained. K L

The Turkes being much annoyed both at sea and land by the Vscoques, made great complaint to the States of Venice, with whom they were in league, being greatly grieued at their thefts, and complaining much, that they could not passe by sea without danger of seruitude or death: adding withall, That these pirats hauing gotten away into Turky by the Venetian territories, they were by them made slaues and slain in their own countries; and although they went not from their houses, nor vndertook any voyages, yet they were stil in alarm and subiect vnto ruin. That the small resistance which was made gaue great cause of jealousie that there M was

A was ſome ſecret intelligence betwixt the ſubiects of the Seigniory of Venice, and the Vſcoques, and that they diuided the ſpoyle betwixt them. Finally, that in what ſort ſoeuer the matter paſt, they held them inſupportable to al men, but eſpecially to themſelues. The Turks threatned to take their iuſt reuenge, the which being impoſſible to effect in the countrey of the Vſcoques (for that by the letters of the commonwealth of Venice their paſſage was ſtopped) they reſolued to be reuenged vpon their ſubiects, and recouer a part of their goods which they had loſt. Finally, they prepared to come into the gulph of Venice with a mighty army, the which without doubt had brought that State into great extremities, and been very prejudiciall to many Prouinces of Chriſtendome. But for that the inſolencies and thefts of the Vſcoques had like to haue ingaged the Venetians in a dangerous war againſt the Turke with
B whom they were in league, it ſhall neither be vnpleaſant nor vnprofitable to make a little digreſſion, and ſhew what theſe Vſcoques were. About the yeare 1550, there aſſembled together The beginning of the Vſcoques. in certaine plains neere the ſea belonging to the Princes of the houſe of Auſtria, people (who were cruell, violent, and infamous) from diuers parts of the countrey of Chimera, Dalmatia, and the other confines of Hungarie, and ſuch as had been baniſhed from the State of Venice; whoſe delight was onely to liue vpon ſpoyle and bloud. All theſe theeues being thus gathered together (whom they called by a generall name Vſcoques) as enemies to all art and induſtry to liue honeſtly by their labours, retyred themſelues into a deſart country, receiuing no pay from the Princes of Auſtria who commands there. Being thus by their naturall in-
C clination giuen to ſpoyle, adding thereunto the ſpurre of pouerty, nothing mooued them to ſtay in thoſe places, but all libertie was left them to rob and ſpoyle: whereupon they applied all their minds and forces; ſo as hauing made certaine light foiſts, they began to make courſes at ſea, with the moſt barbarous and impious crueltie that euer was practiſed amongſt the Scythians, Tartarians, or any other inhumane Nation whatſoeuer. And for that it is an ordinarie courſe for any one that will commit a great villanie, to ſeeke out ſome goodly pretext to couer it: ſo they concluded among themſelues, to ſhadow their inſolencies and thefts with a colour to goe againſt the Infidels. Wherefore in the beginning, there were no Merchants, were they Turks, Iewes, or ſubiects to the Turke, although they were Chriſtians, but if they entred into the gulf either to traffique or to furniſh Venice with prouiſion and merchandiſe, they were taken by them, their goods diuided amongſt them, and they forced to pay a great
D ranſome, or to die miſerably. All the ports of the State of Venice, both of Iſtria, Dalmatia, and the Iſlands from whence they receiued their victuals and prouiſion, were ſoon after ſhut vp by theſe pyrats, who not content to ſpoyle the Turks (which trafficked no more by reaſon of their great dangers and loſſe) allured by the rich ſpoyles which they tooke, and the deſire they had to encounter them, they began to ſet vpon the Venetian ſhips, forcing the merchants whom they tooke to confeſſe by torments, that the goods belonged to Turks, although in effect their chiefe booty came from Chriſtians. Hauing drawne many vnto them of their owne humors, and thinking their ſpoyles at ſea not ſufficient to ſatisfie their couetous deſires, nor the Preſents which they were to giue to others, to be fauoured and ſupported in the Courts of Princes, they ſtaid not long before they entred with all violence into the Turks countrey, E through the Venetian territorie, to whom they were as hurtfull as to the Turks; from whence they carried away rich ſpoiles and many priſoners. There was nothing that was precious, rich, or good, but was ſubiect to the inſatiable greedineſſe of thoſe pitileſſe theeues and pyrats, if paſſing by ſea they came neer vnto the maritine coaſts. Whereupon grew the great complaint you haue heard made by the Turks, threatning to be reuenged vpon the Eſtate of Venice for the inſolencie of the Vſcoques, which afterward bred a cruell war, betwixt that State and the Archduke Ferdinand of Grets, now Emperor, who ſeemed to ſupport them, thereby to ingage the State in a war with the Turke. But for that the ſucceſſe thereof doth not belong to our Hiſtory, we will leaue it to them that haue written it at large.

On the fifteenth of Nouember this yeare, Sultan Achmat Chan hauing liued thirty yeares, The death of Achmat.
F and gouerned that great Empire of Turky fifteene, died. When hee came to the Empire, he was but fifteene yeares old; he was of a good conſtitution, well complexioned, and ſomewhat enclined to be fat, ſtrong and actiue, which appeared by his exerciſe in caſting of a horſmans mace of nine or ten pounds weight, wherein hee exceeded any one of his Court; in memorie whereof

wherof there are two pillars set vp in one of the courts of the seraglio at Constantinople, with G an inscription, as marks of his dexteritie. He was by nature ambitious and proud, which some hold qualities befitting his great estate: he was not so cruel as many of his predecessors, but was much giuen to sensualitie and pleasure, for which he entertained three thousand Concubins and virgins in a Seraglio; being the faireſt daughters of the Christians. His mother was a Christian of Bosna or of Cyprus, and therfore it was thought he was somwhat fauorable to Christians. He was much delighted in hawking and hunting; and namely for hawking hee kept in Grecia and Natolia forty thousand falconers, who attended his comming in their seueral places of charge, and had good yearly pensions. Neither were his huntsmen much fewer in number, or of lesse charge. As the Turkish Emperors are bound by the law of their religion once euery day to practise some manual trade, so Mahomet his father gaue himself to the ma- H king of arrows, and Achmat to the fashioning of horn rings such as the Turks wear when they draw their bowes. This they do in the morning after they are ready and haue said their prayers, then they call for their exercise; but it is onely for fashion-sake: for they scarce make an arrow or a ring in a whole year.

Christian Princes of the same time with Achmat.	Emperours of Germany	Rodolphus the second,	1577. 35
		Matthias,	1612.
	Kings	Of great Britain, James the sixth, Of England	1602.
		Of great Britain, James the sixth, Of Scotland	1567.
		Of France Henry the fourth,	1589.
		Of France Lewis the thirteenth,	1610.
	Bishops of Rome	Paul the V.	1605.

Nought but affliction thundring out of heauen, makes men on earth to any goodneſſe giuen.
Nor longer than ſhe thunders, any fear that any heav'n holds any Thunderer.
So Muſtapha, while Heaven reſtrain'd his ſtate, and held him fetter'd in his brothers hate,
To vertuous actions did his ſtudies driue, was curteous, pious, and contemplatiue.
But when his brother could no longer liue, and Libertie did to him Power giue;
Then Pride and Tyrannie his horſes were,
And driue him alwaies paſt Heavens loue or fear;
Greatneſſe, on Goodneſſe loues to ſlide, not ſtand, and leaues for Fortunes ice, Vertues firm land.
Honor had rather be with danger driuen, than ſtay with Vertue on the hand of Heauen.

Muſtapha

MVSTAPHA THE FIRST OF THAT NAME, NINTH EMPEROVR OF THE TVRKS.

C

Osman the eldest son of Achmat beeing not aboue twelue years old, Mustapha the brother of Achmat being 25, was drawn out of a Cell where he then liued as it were religiously and in contemplation, and proclaimed Sultan Mustapha Chan. They write of him, That he grew cruell, causing yong Osman to be kept vnder sure gards, putting his brethren to death. Hee also did many indignities to the Christian Embassadours. And to confirme him in his Throne, hee gaue great sums of money to the Ianizaries and Spahi; and sent a messenger to Vienna to the Emperor, to assure him that hee would maintain inviolably whatsoeuer had bin concluded betwixt him and his deceased brother Achmat. But growing odious by reason of his tyrannie, the grand Visier came out of Persia with an Army and deposed him, forcing him to turn to his cel, setting prince Osman at liberty, & seating him in the Imperial throne. But for that it may seem strange, that Mustapha should be preserued aliue during the reign of his brother Achmat (contrary to the custom of the Othoman Emperors, who do vsually kill all their brethren at their first comming to the crown, thinking thereby the better to assure their estates) it shall be fit to make mention therof. Mahomet the third of that name, dying in the year 1602, and leauing Achmat and Mustapha his sonnes by the Sultana Flatra a Lady of Cyprus, some say of Bosna, Achmat the eldest was sent for speedily out of Magnesia, by the Bassa's, to take possession of his fathers crown, being the first Emperour of that name. And for that the custom of the Turkish Emperors was (as wee haue said) to haue neither brother nor nephew aliue, vnlesse they could saue themselues by flight; yet the Visier Bassa's and other officers of the court concluded in Councel, That it was not fit that Mustapha brother to Achmat should die: grounding their opinion vpon a good reason of state, For that their Emperor being but fifteen years old, they feared, that dying in his nonage without children able to gouern, the Empire might fall into combustion, and ruine it selfe by reason of ciuil wars: wherupon they decreed, That Mustapha's life should be preserued, but with that caution and restriction, that he should remain still a prisoner in some chambers of the Emperours Seraglio at Constantinople.

Mustapha obtains the Empire, but is soon after deposed.

D

E

F

During Achmats minoritie, and before hee had children, there was no cruel decree made against Mustapha, but he onely continued in his contemplation without any liberty. But when as the Emperor ſaw himſelfe fortified with iſſue, and remembring the cruel cuſtome of G his predeceſſors, he many times propounded the putting of his brother to death to his counſell. The which may ſeem very ſtrange it took not effect, hauing beene often concluded. Among others it is written, that his death was concluded one euening, and that it ſhould haue beene put in execution the next day. But Achmat was ſo frighted in the night with apparitions and fearefull dreames, that morning being come, he ſaid, Seeing the onely reſolution of putting his brother to death had ſo terrified him, hee did beleeue that his torments would much encreaſe if he ſhould put it in execution. And therfore he commanded that his brother ſhould liue, more in regard of the terror of his mind, than for any brotherly affection. Another time Sultan Achmat being in one of the windowes of the Seraglio, beheld his brother Muſtapha, who by his permiſſion was walking in the gardens with his gard. Some one of the H Baſſaes or other officers that were neere vnto him, and willing to flatter his humor, told him, That it was a matter of great conſequence to ſuffer him to haue ſo great libertie. Achmat (mooued with jealouſie and diſtruſt) grew into a rage at his words, and thereupon tooke his bow and arrow (being a very expert Archer, as all the Turkiſh Nation generally are) and aimed at his brother to kill him: but at that very inſtant he felt ſo great a paine in his arme and ſhoulder, as not able to let looſe his arrow, nor to perform what he had intended, hee ſaid with a loud voice, That Mahomet would not haue Muſtapha to die. This prince had three chambers in the Seraglio, where he remained a priſoner fifteen years, and ſpent his time in a contemplatiue kinde of life, after the manner of the Muſſulmans: his whole delight was to reade the Arabian bookes of their doctors in diuers ſciences. The grand Seignior gaue him I leaue ſometimes to take the aire of his gardens with his Gard, and admitted him of his counſell in diuers affaires of ſtate; taking his aduice many times, for that he knew him to haue a ſound judgement.

After a long impriſonment, and a daily apprehenſion of death, the Emperour Achmat falling grieuouſly ſick in Nouember, as is before ſaid; the great Baſſa's of the Court and other Counſellors about him, ſeeing the great danger he was in, perſuaded him to take ſome good courſe for the ſucceſſion of his Empire. He had children by the Sultana, but they were all ſo young, that they were not capable to gouerne the Empire. Moreouer, this Sultana was dead, and the children left friendleſſe, hauing none to ſpeake for them. But on the other ſide, the Sultana Flatra mother to the Emperour Muſtapha was yet liuing, who thought that if the K Baſſa's ſhould vndertake to gouern the State during the minoritie of the Emperors children, her honour would be much eclipſed: wherfore ſhe fauoured Muſtapha, and perſuaded the dying Emperour to make him his ſucceſſor. On the fifteenth day of Nouember, Achmat ſeeing his end draw neer, called for his brother and told him, that ſeeing death approch, he deſired to prouide for the preſeruation of the Empire, and therefore had made choice of him to ſucceed him; intreating him to take the gouernment vpon him preſently after his death. Muſtapha was much amaſed at his ſpeech, and anſwered him with words full of feare and humility, That he might not accept of the honour which he did him, ſeeing that the Empire did rightly belong vnto his eldeſt ſon. Achmat diſabled his ſon for ſo great a gouernment, both for his age and capacitie, being neceſſarie for the maintenance of ſo great a monarchie; and ſaid that he L for his ripe yeares and deep iudgement, ſhould take vpon him the managing thereof: recommending the children he had by the Sultana, vnto him, intreating him to vſe them in the ſame manner that he had vſed him; leauing the other children which hee had by concubines being his ſlaues, to his diſcretion. Soon after theſe words Achmat died, and Muſtapha was generally acknowledged for ſucceſſor to the Turkiſh Empire. Who at the firſt was ſo amaſed, as he had thought he had bin in a dream, to ſee himſelfe aduanced to ſo great a power and ſoueraigntie, from a ſtreit priſon and a daily apprehenſion of death. At his firſt comming to the empire he cauſed the Perſian Embaſſador to be ſet at libertie, whom his brother Achmat had cauſed to be reſtrained, contrary to the publique faith, for that newes came to the Court, of ſome combuſtions raiſed by the Perſia. After which, he ſent ſpeedily to the Baſſa of Bu- M da, commaunding him to entertaine the treaty of peace made by his predeceſſor with the Emperour inuiolably. Yet notwithſtanding, he carried himſelfe during the ſmall time of his reigne,

A reign inſolently and cruelly; for violating the Laws of Nations, he had il intreated the Baron of Mole or Sancie Embaſſador to the moſt Chriſtian King, ſetting gards vpon him as a priſoner, hauing cauſed his people to be put in priſon, and tortured after their maner. The reaſon of this indignitie which Muſtapha did vnto the French Embaſſadour and to his people, grew vpon an occaſion which will require an ample diſcourſe, for the better vnderſtanding of that which hath gon before. After the ouerthrow and taking of the princes of Moldavia, Prince Coresky, as you haue heard, was brought by Skinder Baſſa to Conſtantinople, wherat the grand Seignior was wonderfully wel pleaſed, for that he was held, euen by his enemies, for one of the moſt valiant and redoubted princes of Chriſtendom. Wherfore he was ſent away priſoner, and confined to the towers of the black ſea, which are diſtant fiue miles from Conſtan-
B tinople; a place appointed for the gard of priſoners of great qualitie and importance, ſuch as he was. He was ſhut vp with a French captain called Rigaut, in a little chamber which was on the top of one of thoſe towers; in which Chamber there was a window capable for a man to paſſe thorow, and yet it had no bars, for that the height of the place freed it from al ſuſpition. This Prince was much ſolicited by the Turk to become a Renegado, as the princes Alexander and Bougdan his brothers in law had don: but hee reſiſted it with a generous reſolution, reſoluing rather to die in that tedious captiuitie, than commit ſo baſe an act againſt God and his conſcience. The which being made known vnto the King of Polonia, it mooued him to compaſſion, and cauſed him to write to the French Embaſſador, and to intreat him to be a means that this Prince might be put to ranſom, and freed from captiuitie, at what price ſoeuer. The C which the Embaſſador durſt not vndertake (although he deſired it much) for that hee had no charge from the King his maſter. The Emperours Embaſſadour did what poſſibly he could, knowing how much the liberty of this prince might auail Chriſtendom. For which conſiderations the Turk would not yeeld in any ſort to ſuffer him to be releaſed; ſo as the friends of this captiue prince were out of hope euer to ſee him at liberty. But moſt commonly in ſuch extremities the Almighty works by the ſecret inſtruments of his diuine prouidence, & giues aſſiſtance vnto them that feare him, when as all humane helpe and hope faileth; as you may vnderſtand in the ſequell of this hiſtory, whence grew the Embaſſadours affront which hee receiued.

About the ſame time there had bin a Lady taken out of Podolia, with a fair yong daughter
D of hers, and a maid ſeruant, by the Tartarians, who ſould them vnto a Turke, and he brought them vnto Conſtantinople to make his profit. This Lady who was a Chriſtian, hearing nothing from her husband for the ſpace of nine moneths, went accompanied with her daughter to the French Embaſſadors houſe which was at Pera, to craue his aid and aſſiſtance. Where his Secretary (who was called Martin) mooued with compaſſion and loue, promiſed vnto them all ſeruice; and afterwards aſſured the mother, That if ſhee would promiſe hee ſhould marry her daughter, he would indeauor to redeem them from captiuitie. Wherto the Ladies yeelded, and paſſed their promiſe in writing vnto the Secretary. Whereupon he payd two thouſand and fiue hundred Crownes for their ranſome, and ſent them home into their owne Countrey. Being returned, the Lady made her husband and the reſt of her friends acquain-
E ted, how they had been freed from captiuitie, and of the contract of mariage which was paſt between her daughter and the French Embaſſadors Secretarie. But the father did altogether diſlike of this mariage, for that Martin, as he ſaid, was no gentleman, and had not an eſtate to entertaine his daughter according to her qualitie. The mother aduertiſed Martin ſoon after of the fathers refuſall; proteſting vnto him, that he alone was the hinderance. And as for the mony which he had diſburſed for their ranſome, they would ſend it vnto him if he pleaſed to Conſtantinople with intereſt. Martin was much diſcontented, and diuers letters and expoſtulations paſſed betweene them, but hee could not obtaine the execution of his deſire, and their promiſe: whereupon he grew full of griefe and melancholy, and thereupon went to viſit Prince Coreskie, who was in the blacke tower, to make his complaint vnto him, and to take his F aduice, what courſe he were beſt to follow. Hee made his excuſe, That hee was ſent by his maſter to carry the Prince ſome mony, as he had don at other times. Who making the prince acquainted with his diſcontent, (for that he knew theſe Podolians, and had formerly allowed of the ſuit which he had made to this virgin) he comforted him, ſaying, That if hee might

by

by any means get out of priſon, he would willingly ſupply the defects which they obiected a- G
gainſt him, and would maintaine him againſt all that ſhould oppoſe themſelues againſt the accompliſhment of his deſires. This made Martin ſtudy by what meanes hee might free the Prince, to the end he might bind him to ſuccor him when he was at liberty; and Loue, which is many times the author of many goodly inuentions, ſuggeſted one vnto him which was very ſubtil, and difficult to execute: which was, to ſend vnto Prince Coresky a bottom of packthred in a little pie; which hee ſent him with other meat, aduertiſing him by a letter, That vpon a certain night concluded betwixt them, he ſhould put downe the packethred at his Chamber window, wherunto a ladder of cords ſhould be tied, by the which hee might deſcend from the tower. The which was afterwards punctually effected, not by Martin himſelf, but by a Greek Prieſt who liued in Conſtantinople, to whom hee had imparted his enterpriſe, and had inga- H ged him vpon hope of great reward from the Prince. In the mean time Martin, doubting that he ſhould be ſuſpected to practiſe this eſcape, reſolued to be gon, and took leaue of the Embaſſador, whom hee gaue to vnderſtand, That hee had ſome preſent vrgent affaires which did preſſe his ſpeedy returne into France: and therfore he left the execution of his deſigne to the Greek prieſt, who failed not at the time appointed to do as the Secretary had directed him.

Prince Coresky eſcapes out of priſon.

The Prince hauing drawn vp this ladder of ropes with the help of his packethread, and beeing come to the foot of the tower with his chamber fellow, he found the Greek prieſt attending for them; who told him that he had charge from Martin, to conduct them to a certain Caue which was is a great rock a league from thence, where they muſt remain all that day; and that in the euening he would not fail to come vnto them, and bring them habits like vnto his own, M that being ſo diſguiſed, he might conduct them to his lodging in Conſtantinople, and there conceal them ſo long as they ſhould think fit. This deuice pleaſed them wel, and ſo they went all three vnto the ſaid caue, wheras the two camrado's hid themſelues, and the prieſt returned to his houſe.

At the break of day, it being the 23 of Nouember 1617, ſome of the gards entring the priſoners chamber, ſaw that they were eſcaped, and found the ladder of ropes which they had vſed, tied to the window; wherat they were much amaſed, knowing wel that they ſhould ſmart for it. Notwithſtanding he who had the charge of the priſons, ſent ſpeedily to Conſtantinople, to giue notice of their eſcapes. So ſoon as this was known, they ſent poſts ſpeedily to all parts, to make inquiry for theſe fugitiues, eſpecially at the ports and paſſages, giuing them L ſpecial charge to obſerue all men that paſſed, if there were not one of them who had the little finger of his right hand ſhrunk vp, as Prince Coresky had by a wound which hee had receiued. Within few daies after, the Turk ſeiſed vpon the ſeruants of the Baron of Sancy or Mole, Embaſſador for the French, torturing two of them after their manner; which is to lay the party vpon a table on his belly, and to giue him three or four hundred blowes with a ſtaffe vpon the ſoles of his feet, the calues of his legs, and his buttocks: yet could they not make them ſay any thing that might charge their maſter, as theſe Turkiſh tormentors did hope. Not contented herewith, they did as much to a poor Turk, who was a weauer by trade, and dwelt neer vnto the Embaſſador; thinking to force him by this cruel torture to depoſe falſly, that he had ſeen the Secretary Martin going and comming to his maſters lodging vntill the time of the priſoners K eſcape: but God would not ſuffer the weauer to depoſe any thing but the truth, notwithſtanding all the miſerable and cruel torments which hee had ſuffered. The which is worthy the obſeruation, for that the Turks do generally hate the Chriſtians mortally, and do greatly rejoice at their diſaſters. As for the gards of the towers, ſome of them were impaled, and ſome were pouned or beaten to pieces in great iron mortars, wherin they vſually poun their rice to reduce it into meal.

Three daies after, the Chiaus Baſſa had charge to ſeiſe vpon the perſon of the French Embaſſadour; the which he performed very ſeuerely and vnciuilly, without any reſpect vnto his qualitie. Hauing taken him, the ſaid Chiaus led him vnto the Viſier Baſſa's houſe; where hauing beene examined vpon many circumſtances touching the eſcape of the prince Coresky, I they left him as a priſoner in the hands of the ſaid Chiaus, where hee continued for the ſpace of three daies. During the which time, the ſaid Embaſſador deſiring to write to ſome of his friends, and alſo to ſpeak with the Mufti, which is the Turks high prieſt, to acquaint him with his

The French embaſſadour impriſoned by the Turks.

A his iuſt grieuances, he could obtain leaue, but by giuing two thouſand crownes vnto his Iaylor. True it is, that this preſent made the Chiaus tel the Embaſſador, That if he would obtain any fauor from the Mufti, he muſt procure it with mony. According to which aduice he gaue three or four thouſand crowns; wherupon the Mufti became tractable, acquainting the grand Seignior Muſtapha with the Embaſſadors iuſt complaints, and of what importance his detention was, ſeeing there was nothing found to charge him, that he had fauored the eſcape of the Prince Coresky, as it was ſuſpected; and that his Secretary who had practiſed it for his owne priuat profit, had left his maſter aboue ten or twelue daies before the ſaid eſcape, with an intent, as he ſaid, to return into France. Finally, That all the world would taxe him to violate the law of Nations: and that no Chriſtian prince nor other would herafter put any confidence
B in him; and it was to be feared, that they would all joine together, and make war againſt him. And in truth the Embaſſadours, both the King of Englands and the Low-Countries, were much diſcontented at this vnworthy vſage of the French; proteſting openly, That if he were not ſpeedily ſet at liberty, they would retyre themſelues into their countries. All which conſiderations repreſented by the Mufti, mooued the grand Seignior to command, that the ſayd Baron of Mole or Sancy ſhould be ſent back vnto his houſe without any further diſpleaſure. But all this could not free his houſhold ſeruants from their impriſonment, but he was forced to pay two or three and twenty thouſand crowns for their redemption; elſe had they beene ſo tormented, as that their liues had been in danger: for ſo they were threatned. Soone after, the grand Viſier hearing of the tyrannous gouernment Of Sultan Muſtapha, returned from Perſia
C with his whole army toward Conſtantinople, where he forced him to leaue the Empire, and to retyre into his Cel, hauing reigned but two moneths and ſome odde daies.

But to returne to prince Coresky, whom wee left with Captaine Rigaut in the lodging of the Greeke prieſt at Conſtantinople, wheras they lay hidden for the ſpace of two moneths, vntil that their good hoſt got leaue from the Patriark of Alexandria, as well for himſelfe as for two others (who he ſaid were of his ſocietie) to goe and confine themſelues in the deſarts of the Archipelagus, with many hermits who liued there after the maner of the antient Anchorits. Hauing gotten this leaue and paſport, they imbarqued, being diſguiſed like prieſts, and arri- Prince Coresky eſcapes from Conſtantinople.
ued at Etchut, where they found an Engliſh ſhip ready to ſet ſail for Meſſina in Sicily: from whence he went by land to Naples, where he made himſelfe known to the King of Poland his D Embaſſador, who was wonderfull glad of his liberty, leading him to the duke of Oſſuna, then Viceroy of Naples, who furniſhed him with all things neceſſarie, and a good conuoy to go to Rome; where the Pope receiued ſingular content to ſee him, and to hear of his ſtrange aduentures. From thence he paſt to Vienna, where the Emperor entertained him according to his merits. After which he retyred to his own houſe, full of honor, gotten by his valour and conſtancie in his afflictions. Some ſay he eſcaped by the black ſea, and ſo into Polonia.

Osman, thy gentle nature far declin'd from Turkish tyrannie and pride of mind;
Which made heauen raise thee, and extirpat them,
the proud Vsurpers of thy Diadem.
O! would all Princes, when their States are blest with Power and Empire, think their interest In those their blessings, held but by the grace
Of Gratitude and Goodnesse; and no place
Is held without them long: they soone would trie, that Truth preuailes past all their Policie.

OSMAN THE FIRST OF THAT NAME, TENTH EMPEROVR OF THE TVRKS.

1618.

PRince Osman beeing set at liberty by the Grand Visier, hee caused him to be proclaimed Sultan, and seated in the Imperiall throne of the Othomans, with the generall applause of all the Bassaes and army. The French Embassadour beeing by the same meanes freed from this guard, aduertised the King his Master, how barbarously he had beene entreated by Mustapha, entreating his Majesty to reuoke him from that charge. Whereupon the King sent two Gentlemen to Constantinople to the new Emperour Osman, to demand reparation of the indignity done to his Embassadour and Secretary; and to let him vnderstand, that hee could not send any other Embassadour to his Court to condole the death of Sultan Achmat his father, nor congratulate his comming to the East, vntill that he had receiued satisfaction from him befitting his dignity, and the wrongs he had receiued in his Embassador. The Grand Visier and the Muphti hearing this Embassie, and considering of the actions which had passed, aduised the Emperour Osman to send an Embassador to the most Christian King to confirme the league, and to testifie both by words and letters how much he was displeased for his discontent.

The French king sends to Constantinople.

The Grand Seignior by the aduice of the Visier and others, sent Vri Chiaus into France, to confirme the articles of peace betwixt the French and the Turks. At his first audience he presented a Letter vnto his Majesty with this superscription.

To the most glorious and puissant Prince of the Beleefe of Iesus, arbitrator of all the differences which happen among the Christian Nations, and of all the most noble, and the most antient, the Emperour of France, to whom we wish the end of his daies to be happy, and his desire accomplished.

Osmans letter to the French King.

KNow, that I send vnto you the capitulations and treaties of peace which are betwixt our majesties: giuing you to vnderstand, that there is not any thing firme or stable in this world, neither King nor beggar, although they liue long: that which pleaseth God cannot faile. If all mens desires should succeed, without doubt all men would goe to heauen. Man whatsoeuer he doeth, or in what dignity soeuer hee be, shall not remaine in this fraile life, wise men know it, and it is apparent to the learned. By that which we haue said, we desire to let you know, that he who was in health, hath encountred death, and is gone to a goodlier place, to Paradise, my father Sultan Achmat Chan; the God which hath no resemblance haue mercy on him. No man shall remaine in this lying World: And in Paradise are the approches to God, where there is no death. Finally he is gone.

Since the beginning of the Othomans vntill this present, the empire of my fathers and their countries from from father and sonne, from hand to hand, and from father to sonne, the inheritance comming so vnto G vs; our Vncle Sultan Mustapha Chan, for that he was elder than our selfe, was preferred before vs to the throne of the Ottomans, and was some daies in peaceable possession of the Empire, yeelding ju- stice equally to all men both great and small. But as he was shut vp many yeares in secret places, praying vnto God continually; so of himselfe he hath relinquished the dignity of the Emperour, and contemned

it. The Empire then belonged to those of our high linage, and for that by right it should come vnto me, the Almighty God by his infinite bounty and mercy hath restored it into my hands, my Visiers, Bassaes, Lieutenants, the Mufti, and other great personages, and they that are in any respect with me: and finally, all my subjects and vassals, by a generall consent haue acknowledged me for Emperor, in the happy yeare 1027. About the first day of the Moone of Ianuary, in a good houre. Wherefore I am seated in the great throne of the Othomans, like vnto that of Solomon, a powerfull and able Emperor: And in all H our countries and cities, all the Musulmans being assembled together in their churches to preach, the greatnesse of my name hath beene proclaimed, and through all the mints of mine Empire they haue grauen it in their stamps, to coyne pieces of gold and siluer. Finally, whereosoeuer there are any Musulmans, and in what places there are men, my name shines like gold. Hereafter injustice nor impiety shall haue no place, but justice shall be done equally. Now we are in joy, and for that our naturall disposition is good, and the antient friendship betwixt vs is perfect, I therefore thought good to aduertise you of all that hath passed here, and to send you our Letters of Imperiall alliance by Vreiu Chiaus who is my antient seruant, hauing had the managing of my treasure, whereof he hath giuen me good account, being arriued at your Court, carrying my said Letter, he deserues to be receiued with honour: swearing and protesting againe vnto you, to obserue in all points the full capitulation made betwixt my predecessors, and your great I grandfathers, and for our part, you may be assured, that the faith promised shall be maintained as it hath beene heretofore by our predecessors. And from the day I entred into my throne, I haue made my will knowne to all the Viceroyes, and other officers which do my justice, and generally to all those of my obedience; entreating you to giue the like commandement to your Gouernours of Prouinces, and other officers of Iustice, as in like manner to all your subjects. And as your grandfathers haue taken the faith of our high family, so it may please you to continue with me, and we desire on both sides it may be good and firme. Know then that for my part it shall be obserued, so as of your side there be nothing done contrary to the promised faith. And if before we came vnto the Imperiall throne, your Embassadour which did your affaires hath receiued any distaste, and hath not receiued the honor and friendship accustomed, in my time he shall be the more honoured and respected as the chiefest Embassadors haue beene: I haue commanded that he shall be greatly fauoured, and our respect shall be vnto him as Quineo, that is to say, K
Gold, and doubt nothing of it: for I do certifie you.

The French King hauing receiued by this action a full satisfaction for the indignity done vnto his Embassador: soon after he called the Baron of Mole or Sancie home into France, sending the Earle of Sezi to succeed him as Embassador at Constantinople.

A battell betwixt the Turks and the Persians.

The war continuing still betwixt the Turks and the Persians, the grand Visier was sent to inuade Persia with a great army, where after many exploits of war, newes came to Constantinople, that the Visier had gotten a great aduantage vpon the Sophy of Persia in a battel which had beene fought, wherein there had been 100000 men slaine. And although the Turks lost L
the greatest number, yet they remained masters of the field, and spoiled the Persian campe, who was retired or fled. For that the manner of the Sophy is to fight with the Turks in retiring or giuing way a little; and with this manner of fighting they haue alwaies made head against the Turks. After this ouerthrow the Visier aduanced with his army, and entred far into Persia, which made many doubt that his returne would proue difficult: yet soone after there came letters to Constantinople, importing that the Turks being in Persia in great distresse for victuals, the Sophy had sent an Embassador to the Visier to demand peace, promising hereafter to satisfie the tributes of silkes which he ought yearely vnto the Turke; and that the Visier (in regard of the necessity of his army) had accepted his offer, and granted him peace, the which Sultan Osman did afterwards ratifie. After the conclusion whereof, the So- M phy sent many Cammels loaden with victuals vnto the Turks army, which was in great distresse and want.

A peace concluded betwixt them.

A comet seene ouer Constantinople.

During the Turks war in Persia, vpon the anniuersary day of Sultan Achmat, there appeared in the night a Comet ouer the city of Constantinople; in forme like a crooked sword, or

A or Turks scimiter: and it was so great, as it extended from the meridian neer vnto our zenith, vnto the horison: the point began to shew it selfe an houre after midnight, and then it appeared little and somewhat whitish, and gaue but a glimpse, after an houre it was more apparant and of a deeper colour, and the more it did rise, the redder it was, and like vnto bloud; but at the breake of day it vanished by little and little in the light: And it was so big when the point approched neere vnto the zenith, as the hilt was hidden vnder the horison; the Mathematicians did obserue, that it followed the motions of the heauens; it did alwaies rise in one place, and the bending of the said sword was towards Crates, more Southerly than it. It did appeare directly in the East a quarter towards the South, the point comming directly towards Constantinople, and the blade extending it selfe to the said East a quarter to the South,
B which is justly the part where Persia is scituated. The edge looked directly towards Constantinople, the which made men discourse diuersly, and many were amazed, fearing that it did signifie the losse and defeat of their army in Persia, whose returne they feared much.

Vri or Husseine Chiaus hauing finished his Embassie in France, came into England with the like charge, and had audience from his Majesty at White Hall, Sir Thomas Glouer being Interpreter, from whom I receiued a true discourse of his whole speech, as followeth.

The Turkish Embassadors speech to his Majesty.

C Hac subhanehu, ve Allahuteale, Saadetlu, ve izzetlu Padishah hazeretlerinung vmriny ve deuletiny ziyad ve berziyad eileie, Amin yah Rabil alemin.

Ziyad e cudretlu ve saadetlu Sultan Ali Osman Chan Padishah Hazeretleri; saadetlu Padishah Hazeretlerine juzbin selamler ve doaler idub, bu namei humaiun saadet maakrunile, Sultanum Hazeretlerine irsal idub: vmidleri oldurchi, maabenilerinde munakid olan sulhu selah, bu anedeghin, ne veczuzre chyvz olundise, halia dachi ol vslub vzre her daim giun- den ginne artirub mucarer olmasina murad humaiunleridur.

Ali Osman, Padishahung dachi Lala, ve Bash vezirazam Bassa hazeretleri, saadetlu
D Sultanum hazeretlerine juz bin selamber idub, bu mektub sherifleri dachi haki pay sherifle- rine irsal idub doaler ider.

Asitanei saadette dachimutemekin olan elezighiz nam Paulo Pinder Cullighiz haki pay sherifterine juz kylyndikdensongra, mubarek aiaghyn pusse idub, bu mektub Sultanum hazeretlerine irsal eiledy ler.

The interpretation hereof is this.

That most true, incomprehensible, and most high God, encrease and multiply your Majesties yeares in E all happinesse and felicity, Amen oh thou Lord of the World.

The most inuincible, most mighty, and most happy Sultan Osman Chan, of the Othoman Empire Monarch, sendeth vnto your excellent Majesty a hundred thousand salutations and greetings, euermore praying the most high God for your Majesties happinesse. sendeth vnto your Highnesse with all possible honour and renowne, this his Imperiall and most noble Letter; and withall hopeth, that the sacred bond of peace, which hath beene hitherto inviolably on your Majesties parts kept and obserued; your Majesty will be well pleased still on your part, with dayly encrease more and more of friendship, earnestly to continue therein. And his Imperiall Majesty on his behalfe is also resolued in the like manner euermore punctually to keepe and obserue the same.

Also the most mighty Emperour his Tutor, and his chiefe Visier Bassa, hath addressed to the dust of F your noble feet, this his most honorable Letter, with a thousand commendations, praying euerlastingly that mighty God for your Majesties long life and happinesse.

Also your Majesties Embassadour at Constantinople, your slaue Paul Pinder, bowing his forehead to the dust of your Majesties feet, and most humbly kissing your Highnesse blessed feet, hath directed vnto your Majesty this his submissiue Letter.

This

G

This that now followeth, is the said Embassadors speech to his Majesty at the taking of his leaue at White Hall.

Saadetlu Padishahum, Nitekim bu kullighiz haki pay sheriflerine effendimuz olan Cudretlu ve adaletlu Ali Osman Padishah Hazeretlerinung name humaiunlerin destimuzile teslin eiledük : Regia ve temenamuz budurki Sultanum hazaretcleri dachi angha giore effendimuze name sheriflerile giouab idub bu killighize teslim ei lemek erzany buiurila ve herdaim saadette ve deulette peydar ola.

H

The Interpretation Verbatim is this.

Most happy Emperor, as I haue with mine owne hands, bowing my selfe to the dust of your Princely feet, appresented vnto your excellent Majesty the most mighty and high Sultan Othoman my Lord and Master his Imperiall Letter, so likewise I most humbly beseech your Majesty, that you will be pleased in conformity thereof, to vouchsafe your Princely answer by your noble Letter, and to deliuer the same into the hands of me your slaue : and be euer partaker of all blessednesse and happinesse.

A Copy of the Letter of Sultan Osman the present Othoman Emperour, written to the Kings Majesty, and presented by Husseine Chiaus.

I

ALthough in this transitory World, if the King or the begger should enjoy the longest terme of life that might be, and obtaine all that his heart could wish, yet it is most certaine, that in the end hee must depart and be transported to the Word eternall; and it is well knowne vnto the wise, that it is impossible for man to abide for euer in this World. The occasion if this prologue is, that the immortall, omnipotent, and only God hath by his Diuine will and pleasure called vnto himselfe our father of blessed memory Sultan Achmat Chan, who in life was happy, and in death laudable ; and departing out of this momentary World to be neerer the mercifull Creator, being changed into perfect glory, and eternall blisse, K hath his habitation on high, and his rest in Paradise. This paternall Empire and Monarchicall kingdome hath almost vntill this present blessed time, beene alwaies hereditary, from grandfather to father, from father to son, and so cursiuely on that manner ; but hauing regard vnto the age and yeares of our great and noble Vncle Sultan Mustapha, he was preferred and honoured to sit on the Othoman Throne, and being settled for some time, tooke care for the affaires of the Empire, and for all that might concerne the people both in generall and particular. But hauing beene many yeares retired in solitarinesse, and giuen to deuotion and Diuine obedience, being also as it were wearied with the cares of the Empire, of his owne accord withdrew himselfe from the Gouernment ; for that the Diademe and Scepter of the Empire of the seuen Climats, was the true right and inheritance of our most excellent Majesty, of the which with L the meeting and consent of all the Visiers, and other Deputies of State, of the Primat of the Mussulman Law, and of the other honourable Doctors, of the souldiers, and of all the subjects both publike and priuat, the Almighty God hath made an high Present and worthy gift vnto vs. And in the happy day in the beginning of the Moone Rebea-il euel of this present yeare 1027, in an expected time, and in an acceptable houre, was our blessed and happy sitting established vpon the most fortunate Othoman Throne, the seat and wisedome of Solomon. *In the pulpets of all the Mosques the congregations of the faithfull, and deuotion of the Mussulmen, throughout all our dominions is read to our Imperiall name the * Hutbeh. And in the mints (where innumerable summes of mony are coyned, as well vpon the siluer as the gold) our happy name and stampe is signed. And our most powerfull commandements are obeyed in all the parts and dominions of the World. And the brightnesse of the light of the Sun of Iustice and equity, hath caused the darkenesse of injuries and molestations to vanish away.* M

* Hutbeh is a prayer only for the prosperity of the King.

Now seeing it hath beene an antient custome of our famous Predecessors to giue notice of the same vnto such Princes as are in sincere friendship, and do continue it with the House of great Majesty and our Imperiall Court : We also haue written these our princely Letters, and appointed for their Bearer the choice among his equals Husseine Chiaus (whose power is great) one of the honoured and respected

seruants

A seruants of our magnificent Port, the refuge of the World, to the end that such newes might cause great joy of our most honourable assumption. And we doe hope that when they shall come to your hands (in conformity of the well grounded friendship vpon the sure league, articles, and writings which hath been established of old with our most royall Race, and permanent Empire) you will manifest infinite joy and gladnesse, and certifie as much to the Rulers and Gouernours of the Dominions and Countries vnder you, that they may know the articles of the peace and league, and the points of the oath which are firme and to be desired on both parts, from the time of our grandfather and predecessour of royall stocke now in paradise (whose soule God enlighten) vndoubtedly during the time of our reigne shall be obsehued with all re- spect. And let there not be the least imagination of any want of due obseruance of the signes of friend-
B ship on our part, or by any manner of meanes on your part, for the violating the foundation of the peace and league.

The Copy of a Letter written by Halil Bassa, chiefe Visier, and Generall in the expedition against the Persian, at his returne from the wars, to the City of Senit in Aprill 1618, vnto Sir Paul Pinder Knight, then Embassador for the Kings Majesty at Constantinople.

The humble Visier Halil Bassa.

C TO the courteous Lord of the Nation of the Messiah, both great and honourable among the people of Iesus, and the true determiner of the Christian affaires; our good friend Paul Pinder, the Eng- lish Embassador, whose later daies be with all felicity. To whose noble presence (after our many kind salutations tending to all good affection and manifestation of joy, worthy and beseeming our friendship) our louing aduice is this; That if you desire to heare of our estate and being, you shall vnderstand, that after we departed from the happy port with the army for the wars of Asia, we arriued and wintered in Mesopotamia, and remouing thence in the Spring with all the Mussulman hoste (alwaies victorious) we went to Van, from which place vntill we came to Tauris, the Mussulman army went on alwaies sacking and destroying all those places and townes of the Persians which we met withall by the way in those parts, where were burnt, pillaged, and ruined, some thousands of villages, and tormenting all those people that came to hand. And when we were come neere to Tauris, the Generall of the Persian forces (of peruerse religion)
D called Carelgai Han (the accursed) retired himselfe into the said Tauris, where beating vp his drums in euery quarter, he made a shew that he had a will to fight: so we sent a little before vs some Tartars and others of our army to hearken out and take notice of the enemy; who meeting with seuen or eight hundred Persians of note, put them to the sword, very few escaping, and that with very great difficulty and hazard. By which the said Generall finding himselfe vnable to resist the power and fury of the Mussulman hoste, or to stay any longer in the said place, the very same day that we arriued there, the said Generall ba-ning spoiled all the city, fled away; so we tooke the place, ransacked it, and burned all the buildings, towers, gardens, and whatsoeuer else we found within it: And thus the great city Tauris by Diuine fauour and grace became ours. Then forthwith we sent after the enemy, the Tartar with some Beglerbegs, who ouer-taking them gaue them battell; and albeit some of ours did fall, yet they which fell on the enemies side E were innumerable. And so going forwards towards Erdeuil (their obscure residence) about ten days journy in the country, we went burning and spoyling it, and killing all the Persians that we met; that indeed there was so much glory and honour won, as that all the antient men of the country do affirme, there was neuer seene the like; insomuch, that from the confines vnto Erdeuill, twenty daies journey of the country was on that manner by vs destroied. Thus afterward the King caused to empty the said place of Erdeuill, and fled into a place called Hulchal, and caused his army to go to the top of a high mountaine, from whence hauing sent three or foure times men of quality vnto vs, seeking and entreating for peace, with promise to giue yearely vnto our Emperor a hundred Somes of silke, and all such places as are vpon the confines gotten in the time of Sultan Solyman, except Der Ne and Der Tink; wherewith we weare contented with the peace, and his Embassador is vpon the way comming toward vs. And so we returning the same F way againe (alwaies spoiling) we came to Erzirum. And thus our present Letter is written vnto you for the respect and preseruation of our friendship: and euen as our amity hath euer beene hitherto sincere and firme, so likewise by the Grace of God at our arriuall in the happy Port, it shall be in like manner maintained and continued, that more cannot possible be. And so God keepe you in health.

The

1619. The wars growing hot in Bohemia against the Protestants, and the Emperour raising what G forces he could to suppresse them, the directors or Gouernors of the country wrote their letters to Bethlem Gabor prince of Transyluania, to acquaint him with the estate of their affaires. To whom he made answer, That his country standing euen in the very jawes of the Turks, whose councels were neuer quiet, but euer working like to the waues of the vast ocean, and alwaies watchfull to embrace all occasions vpon any discord of the Christians, especially now when they had pacified all quarrels with the Persian, and had no rebels in Asia, against whom they might employ their forces; he had propounded to himself to attend the consent and fauor of the Otheman Emperour, whereby he might take from him all occasion to make any irruption into the neighbour countries, and haue the better means to imploy his best means to reconcile the discords among the Christians; wherefore hauing sent to Constantinople to H acquaint the Grand Seignior with his intent, and to craue his fauour, he receiued letters from thence the 17 of August, whereby he was assured of the Grand Segniors consent and faubur. Wherupon he resolued (notwithstanding the opposition of the house of Austria, the Pope of Rome, and others of that faction) to take arms in defence of the Bohemians; promising to be in September following vpon the confines of Morauia vnlesse he found some stay in Hungary. Being aduertised of the state of Bohemia and Morauia, he leuied an army at Clausenburg, and entered into the vpper Hungary, whereas most of the Barons submitted themselues vnto him; only Humanoie a great man in that country opposed himselfe: but not able to make his party good, he fled into Polonia. After which he sent his army (being 18000 strong) and took Filek, Ternan, Vacci, Nouigrade, and others; after which he seised vpon Neuheusall, the Go- I uernour being deliuered bound vnto him. The Palatine of Hungary wrote letter to Redei Generall of the Prince of Transyluania's army, wishing him to consider what the forces of the Kings of Spaine and France were, with the house of Austria and their allies, and that the Electors of the Empire (some excepted) would send aid vnto the Emperor. Who answered, that he doubted not of the power of those Kings, and that the Electors would send supplies vnto the Emperour; yet hoped that before they came, all should be ended, and their dinners should be prouided.

Bethlem Gabor taketh many townes in Hungary.

Soone after, the Prince of Transyluania came to Presburg with his vrmy, a towne of note in Hungary, whereas their Kings are vsually crowned. The newes thereof comming to Vienna, they sent 3000 souldiers with three pieces of ordnance downe the riuer of Danow, who K entred the suburbs on the 13 of October, the night was very stormy and rainy, and the Transyluanians taking this opportunity charged them, and slew the greatest part, their Commander flying away with some few. The suburbs being taken, Bethlem Gabor sent to the Palatine, to know whether he would yeeld the town and castle without force, giuing him some time to resolue; who after consultation with some noblemen, they resolued to yeeld, and so the towne was deliuered into his hands. After which he sent part of his army vnder good Commanders into Austria, to the gates of Vienna, where they committed great spoile, the particular relation whereof I leaue to the History of the Emperours liues, to which it doth properly belong.

In Nouember Bethlem Gabor Prince of Transyluania, and the Estates of Hungary, sent Embassadors to Prague, where they propounded diuers articles vnto the Counsell, and amongst L others, That they should joyntly send Embassadors to the Grand Seignior, & that the prince of Transyluania should negotiate the businesse. And for that the kingdome of Hungary was much exhausted, whatsoeuer should be taken in Stiria, Carinthia, and Carniola, should be vnited vnto it, to the end it might be the better able to resist the Turke: all which tended to the prejudice and ruine of the house of Austria. The Prince of Transyluania hauing taken diuers townes in Hungary, belonging to the Emperor as King of Hungary, and entred Austria in hostile manner in fauor of the Bohemians; knowing that hee had thereby much insenced the Emperor, and the whole house of Austria, and that if he should preuaile ouer the Bohemians, the whole burthen of the war would lie vpon him, he therefore in the end of this yeare sent an Embassador with presents to Constantinople, to craue assurance of the Grand Seigni- M ors aid and support (vpon whose fauour he had alwaies depended) in case the Emperor should inuade Transyluania: where being countenanced by many of the chiefe Bassaes, he had assurance of Sultan Osmans support and protection, the which he confirmed by a solemne oath vnder his hand, as followeth.

The

A

The Great Turks oath to Bethlem Gabor, Prince of Transyluania.

Sultan Osman,

By the grace of God vnconquerable Turkish Emperour, sweares by the Highest, Almightiest, and Almighty Gods Holinesse, by his Kingdome, by the substance of the Heauens, the Sunne, the Moone, and the Starres, by the earth, and by all vnder the earth, by the braines and all the hairy scalpe of my mother, by my head, and all the strength of my soule and body, by the holy Great Mahomet, and by my Circumcision, That I thee my brother and son Bethlem Gabor, succeeding King of Hungary, in no manner
B of way, in thy great and weighty affaires will leaue, though it be to the ouerthrow of my Kingdome, to be brought to nothing, vntill there shall be no more left but my selfe, or foure or fiue Turks at the most, yet will I be still obliged to defend thee, and all those that do any waies appertaine vnto thee. And if thou shalt haue need of me, I will be alwaies ready to goe with thee. And in case this my promise shall in any wise be frustrated, then let Gods justice fall vpon my head and destroy me and my posterity, and wipe away whatsoeuer belongeth vnto me, and gather it together into a rocke of stone, or substance of earth, and that the earth may cleaue asunder and swallow me vp body and soule.

Dated at Constantinople the fifth of Ianuary, 1619.

C

Bethlem Gabor being assured by this oath, of protection made by the Grand Seignior, in the beginning of the yeare 1620, he called an assembly of the Estates of Hungary at Presburg, whither Embassadours were sent from the King of Bohemia, and the States of that countrey, with the incorporate Prouinces, where a perpetuall league was concluded betwixt them, and afterwards concluded at Prague; where among other articles, it was concluded, that forasmuch as necessity did chiefely require, that a peace should be concluded and inuiolably kept with the Turke, therefore a new Embassie should be sent to the Grand Seignior from all the confederate Kingdomes and Prouinces; and that Bethlem Gabor should take
D vpon him the chiefe care of that businesse; but yet in such sort, as the Bohemians and incorporated Prouinces should send their Embassadours with the Hungarians, and beare their shares of all that should be disbursed, as well for the Presents, as for the Embassadours charges. 1620. A League betweene the Bohemians, Transilvanians and Hungarians.

In Iune following, Bethlem Gabor went to an assembly of the Estates of Hungary at Neuheusall, where he propounded diuers heads vnto the States: That he desired nothing more than to restore the Kingdome of Hungary, so miserably afflicted, to liberty; and that they might enjoy their religion and priuiledges: That hee had spared no cost for the lawfull defence of the country; and for a testimony that he desired peace, he had refused the Crowne which the Estates offered him at Presburg: that the ground of peace was to maintaine the E league which they had begun with the Bohemians: that hee had alwaies desired peace with the helpe of other Princes, so as it were sincere and without fraud or deceit, for the obtaining whereof hee had assisted his confederats miserably afflicted: That he knew for certaine the Emperour desired not peace but war, hauing suffered the Cossackes to enter into Hungary, and to spoyle many places with fire and sword, and denied passage for the Embassadours of Bohemia and Austria; for this cause they were not now to treat of peace but of warre, and to consult how it might be begun and maintained: for the leuying of money which is the sinewes of war: for the furnishing of their forts vpon the frontiers, and for the speedy sending of Embassadors to the Turkish Emperor, lest being ingaged in an intestine war, there might be some attempts made vpon these bordering forts. Hauing deliuered his minde vnto the F Estates, there came diuers Embassadours thither from Bohemia, Austria, Silesia, and Lusatia, Venice, Poland, and Turky: The Venetian Embassadour was content their Commonwealth should enter into the league, and the Turke made offer to conclude a perpetuall league with them.

On

Bethlem Gabor proclaimed K. of Hungary.

On the fiue and twentieth day of Auguſt Bethlem Gabor Prince of Tranſyluania was proclaimed King of Hungary by the Palatine, at the inſtance of the Turkiſh Embaſſadour, and with the conſent and applauſe of moſt part of the Eſtates of the country: after which he leuied a great army of thirty (ſome ſay fifty) thouſand horſe and foot, and made many Enſignes with diuers Emblemes and deuices; which being knowne, the Proteſtants of Vienna, with the conſent of the Emperour, wrote vnto him, humbly entreating him to ſpare the city and country, for their innocent wiues and childrens ſake: but in the meane tim e all the citiſens were commanded to make prouiſion of victuals for ſix moneths. G

A viſion ſeene at Medina Talnabi.

There came newes to Conſtantinople of a ſtrange apparition or viſion, which was ſeene at Medina Talnabi in Arabia, whereas Mahomet their great Prophet was buried: to viſit whoſe tombe the Turks vſe to goe in pilgrimage, but they muſt firſt goe to Mecha, which is ſome few daies journey off, and there they take a ticket from the Grand Seigniours Beglerbeg, elſe they are not allowed to goe to Medina. This viſion continued three weekes together, which terrified the whole country, for that no man could diſcouer the truth thereof. About the twentieth of September, there fell ſo great a tempeſt, and ſo fearefull a thunder about midnight, as the heauens were darkened, and thoſe that were awake, almoſt diſtracted; but the vapours being diſperſed, and the element cleare, the people might reade in Arabian Characters theſe words in the firmament, O why will yee beleeue in lies! Between two and three in the morning, there was ſeene a woman in white compaſſed about with the Sunne, hauing a cheerefull countenance, and holding in her hand a Booke: comming from the Northweſt, oppoſite againſt her were armies of Turkes, Perſians, Arabians, and other Mahometans, ranged in order of battell, and ready to charge her; but ſhe kept her ſtanding, and only opened the Booke, at the ſight whereof theſe armies fled: and preſently all the lamps about Mahomets tombe went out; for as ſoone as euer the viſion vaniſhed (which was commonly an houre before ſunne riſing) a murmuring winde was heard, whereunto they imputed the extinguiſhing of the lampes. The antient pilgrims of Mahomets race, who after they haue viſited this place neuer vſe to cut their haire, were much amaſed, for that they could not conceiue the meaning of this viſion: onely one of the Deruices (which is a ſtrict religious order amongſt the Turks, like vnto the Capuchins amongſt the Papiſts, and liue in contemplation) ſtepped vp very boldly, and made a ſpeech vnto the company, which inſenced them much againſt him, ſo as this poore prieſt for his plaine dealing loſt his life, as you ſhall heare. H I K

A Deruice ſpeech vnto the Turkes.

„ The ſumme of his ſpeech was this: That the World had neuer but three true Religions, „ euery one of which had a Prophet; firſt God choſe the Iewes, and did wonders for them in „ Ægypt, and brought them forth by their Prophet Moſes, who preſcribed them a Law, where„ in he would haue maintained them, if they had not beene obſtinate and rebellious, and fal„ len to Idolatry: whereupon hee gaue them ouer, and ſcattered them vpon the face of the „ earth. Then preſently after hee raiſed a new Prophet, who taught the Chriſtian Religion.
„ This good man the Iewes condemned and crucified for a ſeducer of the people, not moued
„ with the piety of his life, his great miracles, nor his doctrine. Yet after his death, the prea„ ching of a few fiſhermen did ſo moue the hearts of men, as the greateſt Monarchs of the world L „ bowed to his very title, and yeelded to the command of his Miniſters. But it ſeemes they „ grew as corrupt as the Iewes, their Church being diſmembred with the diſtinction of the Eaſt
„ and Weſt, committing Idolatry againe by ſetting vp of Images, with many other idle cere„ monies, beſides the corruption of their liues, ſo as God was weary of them too, and not onely „ ſent diuiſions among them, but forſooke them, diſpoſſeſſing them of their chiefeſt Cities Ie„ ruſalem and Conſtantinople: yet God is ſtill the Gouernor of the World, and prouides him-„ ſelfe of another Prophet and people, raiſing our Great Mahomet, and giuing way to our nati„ on, ſo as no doubt we ſhall be happy for euer, if we can ſerue this God aright, and take ex„ ample by the fall of others. But ahlas! I tremble to ſpeake it, we haue erred in euery point,
„ and wilfully broken our firſt inſtitutions, ſo as God hath manifeſted his wrath by euident M „ ſignes and tokens, keeping our Prophet from vs, who prefixed a time to returne with all „ happineſſe to his people, ſo as there are now forty yeares paſt by our account: Wherefore „ this ſtrange and fearefull viſion is a prediction of ſome great troubles and alterations.

For

A For either the opening of this booke in the womans hand, doth foretell our falling away from " the first intent of our law, whereat these armed men departed as confounded with the guilt of " their owne consciences; or else it signifies some other booke wherein we haue not yet read, " and against which no power shall preuaile: so as I feare our religion will be proued corrupt, " and our Prophet an Impostor, and then this Christ whom they talke of shall shine like the sun, " and set vp his name euerlastingly. Hitherto the company were silent; but hearing him speak so boldly, they charged him with blasphemy; and knowing their law, which makes all blasphemy capitall, they presently condemned him, and hauing the Beglerbegs consent and warrant, they put him to death.

The Dervice put to death for his speech.

As their rage against him was violent, so their execution was extraordinary, for they nei-
B ther cut off his head nor strangled him, as they vsually doe to malefactors, but they tortured him by degrees: for stripping him first naked, they gaue him a hundred blowes on the soles of his feet with a flat cudgell, vntill the bloud issued forth, the poore prieft crying continually on the woman that opened the booke. After which they tooke a bulls pizzle, and beat all his body vntil the sinues crackt, and in the end they laid him vpon a wheele, and with an Indian sword made of sinews, they brake his bones to pieces, the poor man crying to the last gaspe, O thou woman with the booke, saue me, and so he died: At which time there was a fearefull tempest. The Beglerbeg sent certain Spahies to the port of Sidon to imbarke for Constantinople, to the end they might aduertise the Emperor of these tidings.

Sultan Osman from the first enterance into his reigne was freed from all cares of forraine
C war, or intestine combustions; for hee had that happinesse (being himselfe young, and not able to gouerne so potent an estate) as by the counsell and assistance of Halil Bassa his grand Visier, he had forced the King of Persia to demand a peace, and to pay the tribute which had been formerly promised. His rebels in Asia were all pacified, and the truce with the Emperour (which had been somewhat interrupted by misinterpretation, or the practise of bad ministers) was newly confirmed a little before his comming to the crowne, onely Moldauia had beene the theatre of war for some yeares, where his father had exercised his armes, and imployed his forces, to aduance whom he pleased to be Vayuod of that countrey, against ano-
D ther party that was supported by the Polonians, as you haue formerly heard. Michna Prince of Valachia, being made Vayuod of Moldauia by Achmat, and the Polonian party wholly ouerthrowne in the yeare 1616, hee enjoyed it not long: but whether hee died of a naturall death, or fell into disgrace with the Grand Seignior, I do not reade: yet I finde that after him there was another Vayuod or Prince of Moldauia, who is yet liuing, but in disgrace with the Sultan, his name is Gasparo Gratsiani: and to the end you may vnderstand, that the Turks neuer respect the birth and quality of any man in their aduancements, I will relate what this man was, from the mouth of him that knew him very well.

This Gasparo was borne at Gretz (a towne of great strength belonging vnto the Archdukes of Austria, by the which a branch of that house is distinguished from the rest, and whereof the Emperour now reigning is the head) but being a man of small fortune, and little expe-
E ctance in his owne country, he went to Constantinople, and put himselfe in seruice with Sir Thomas Glouer, before that he was Embassadour for his Majesty to the Grand Seignior, vnder whom he learned both to write and reade the Turkish tongue. After which he came with him into England, and there by his recommendation was employed to Constantinople for the redeeming of young Sir Thomas Sherley, who was then a prisoner among the Turks. Hauing performed his charge orderly, and being come to Venice with the young Knight, hearing that Sir Thomas Glouer was sent Embassadour to the Grand Seignior, he left Sir Thomas Sherley, and went to Constantinople to his old master, where he was emploied yearely to buy or exchange Christians for Turks, carrying the Christians into Italy, and so returning Turks for them. About the end of Achmats reigne arriuing at Constantinople with a ship full of Turks, which he had exchanged, he acquainted the Visier Bassa with the good seruice he had F done vnto the Grand Seignior; who demanding of what countrey hee was, and his breeding, asked him if he would vndertake a seruice which should be for his aduancement, which was to go vnto the Emperour to reconcile all difficulties concerning the peace, wherein he carried himselfe so discreetly, as Commissioners were appointed, who concluded all difficulties, as you haue heard. But before his returne home, the Grand Seigniour was dead; yet he pressed the Bassa for the performance of his promise, desiring him, that he might be made Vayuod of Moldauia, which the Bassa effected: but the presents he gaue aduanced him more than his merits. Since hee grew into some disgrace; so as the Grand Seigniour making choice of another Vayuod, gaue charge to certaine Capigies, to go into Moldauia to strangle Gasparo, and that they should take foure hundred Turks vpon the frontiers to assist them. But Gasparo hauing good spies at Constantinople, who aduertised him of their designe, resolued to preuent them; wherefore taking some troups with him, he met them vpon the way, and cut them all in pieces; then returning to Yas, hee slew a thousand Turks. After which he fled into Poland with two thousand horse; from whence they write that he hath made diuers incursions into Moldauia, and committed great spoiles vpon the Turks, being assisted by the Cossackes, and keepes possession of the conntry, although there be another Vayuod made by the Turke.

Gasparo made Vayuod of Moldauia.

The Turks preparation to armes.

Sultan Osman seemes to be much insenced against the Polonians, as well for this support, as for former quarrels, making it his colour for the leuying of the greatest army that hath beene seene since that Solyman went vnto the siege of Agria, consisting, as it is said, of three hundred thousand men, hauing drawne downe all his forces out of Asia. God knowes where he will imploy it, but it is much to be feared that he will make vse of this diuision betwixt Christian Princes, who should vnite their wills and forces, to oppose them against the common enemy of Christendome, who watcheth only to get an aduantage, little regarding his word and promise.

The Turke hauing no imployment for his forces by land, sent threescore gallies by Sea, to make some enterprise vpon the Christians. They came into the Mediterranean Sea, and hauing coasted the Island of Sicilie, they sent twenty gallies to land in the Kingdome of Naples, where they surprised the Towne of Manfredonia, and spoiled it, carrying away foureteene or fifteene hundred captiues, and so retyred againe to Sea. The rest of their fleet lay about Vellona in the gulfe, which made the Spaniards jealous that the Venetian had beene acquainted with this enterprise. And since there is newes, that the Gallions and Galliots of Algiers, haue taken Iuisa, a small Island of foure miles compasse, neere vnto Majorca: It is a place of great importance, for that it hath a hauen able to containe much shipping; for the guard whereof the King of Spaine entertaines a great garrison, and it did much annoy them of Algiers. They tooke the towne; but it is not yet certaine whether they haue taken the castle.

The greatnesse of the Turks Empire.

This is all I could learne of the Turks affaires since the yeare 1609 vntill this present. The Reader may obserue, that since the reigne of Ottoman their first Emperor, this great Empire of the Turks is proudly built vpon the foure Monarchies of the World; that is to say, of the Assirian, Persian, Greeke, and Romane. For they enjoy Babylon, and all Chaldæ, with the country of the Medes: We haue seene them in Tauris the capitall city of Persia, Greece is subject to the yoke of their command; Constantinople, sometimes called New Rome, by the transport of the Imperial seat, is now made their Throne, and so many prouinces and realmes which in former times depended vpon the Romane Empire, do now acknowledge their power: they are Masters of the Realmes of Ægypt and Cyprus; the Islands of Rhodes, Mitylene, Negrepont, Chio, and many others acknowledge them, the Empire of Trebisond is theirs; the Realme of Colchos, now called Mingrelia, payes them tribute: they of Tunes and Algiers in Affrica obey them; Dalmatia, the Illyrians, Triballiens, the countries of Transyluania, Valachia, and Moldauia do them homage, and we see them command euen in the chiefe townes of the Realmes of Hungary: But all this power of the Ottomans had neuer bene so great nor so fearefull, but by the discord, diuision, and bad intelligence betwixt Christian Princes, as you may reade in the course of this History, as well in Greece, at Constantinople as in other parts of Europe, whereas these Princes contending one with another, haue furnished matter and meanes to the Turke to dispossesse them of the chiefe peeces of their Monarchies. They measure the continuance of their Empire by the discord

A discord betwixt the Princes of the beleefe of the name of Iesus, and they confesse truely, that this diuision is the onely cause of their greatnesse, the which hath made them beleeue, that among Christians there was a bad Angell enemy to peace, which they call, The strong or powerfull Spirit, which kindling the fire of reuenge and ambition in the hearts of great men, drawes from their affections the good of their beleefe, to entertaine them in perpetuall discord; during the which, they promise vnto themselues a firme and an assured reigne. So the Mufti, and the Talismans praying on Friday in their Mosques, demand of their Prophet the circumstance of this bad intelligence betwixt Christian Princes, to the end they may enjoy the Empire which they haue vnjustly vsurped. Yet their propheties doe not promise them a perpetuall possession; behold one in their owne tongue, which hath alwaies made them feare
B the vnion of Christians:

Patissabomomos ghelur, caiferun menleker alur kenzul almai alur kapze iler ie di yladegh Giaur Keleci cshkmasse on ikigladegh on laron Begbhgheder. Ensi japar, baghi diker bathesai baglar, ogli kesi olar; onichi yldden sora Hristianon-keleci csechar, al Turkei ghereshine Tuschure. A Turkish Prophesie.

That is to say;

C Our Emperour shall come, he shall possesse the Realme of an Infidell Prince, he shall take the red apple, and make it subiect to his power: if at the seuenth yeare of his command the Christians sword doth not aduance, he shall rule vnto the twelfth yeare, he shall build houses, plant vines, compasse in gardens with hedges, and beget children: but after the twelfth yeare that he hath held the red apple, the Christians sword shall appeare and put the Turks to flight.

By the Infidell Prince they vnderstand a Christian Prince (for so they call them) and by the Red Apple an Imperiall towne strong and important; in the which, and elsewhere the Turks shall build houses: that is to say, conuert holy temples to the vse of the Mahometan impiety: The exposition of their Propheste.
D for by this word to build, they that haue commented vpon this propheste, vnderstand vsurpation of the houses of God: Plant vines, by these words they signifie the extent of the Turkish Empire, and the setling of their colonies, as we see in Hungary and Transyluania: Compassing in Gardens, that is to say, they shall fortifie the townes which they haue taken from their enemies: Beget Children, extend the Mahometan religion far in the Christians countries. But after the twelfth yeare, &c. within a certaine time best knowne to God, his diuine Majesty, opening the eies of his clemency vpon the Christians, will vnite the wills of their Princes, kindle their affections with a holy zeale, and blessing their armes, will make them victorious ouer the Turke, whom he will banish out of the East, and chase into Scythia, from whence they came to be a scourge vnto Christendome. These are my wishes, wherein I hope all good E Christians do concurre.

Hauing runne ouer the occurrents which haue happened in the Turks estate for the space of eleuen yeares, I must according to Master Knolles his method, conclude the worke with a description of the Grand Seigniours Port or Court, of his Gouernment, Officers, Riches, Force, and Religion. The Turks (a people of Scythia) hauing like a violent deluge ouerthrowne a great part of the East, and taken diuers Prouinces, being expelled from Ierusalem by Godfrey of Bouillon, and the Christians, their remainder retired to Nicea where they liued without any head or soueraigne commander, vntill that Ottoman about the yeare of our Redeemer 1300, by practise made himselfe sole and absolute Monarch. His sonne conquering diuers Prouinces, remoued his Imperiall seat to Prusia, now called Bursia, the chiefe
F abode of the Kings of Bythinia. Amurath the first (being drawne in by the Emperour of Constantinople to succour him, and allured with the wealth of Europe) turned his armes against him, taking diuers prouinces and townes from him, amongst others Adrianopolis, which he made the seat and residence of the Turkish Emperours, in the yeare 1363. But Mahomet the The beginning of the Turkish Empire.

second hauing taken the city of Constantinople, and expelled the Emperour in the yeare 1453, he made it the royall seat of the Othomans, for which he had great reason, being one of the faireſt and ſweeteſt ſeats of the World. G

Deſcription of Conſtantinople.

Conſtantinople hath in circuit by the opinion of ſome Writers fifteene or ſixteene miles, and is called by the Turks themſelues Stambull or Stambolda, the ſea beating vpon it vpon the North and South ſides: Towards the Eaſt it is diuided from Aſia by a large channell, which runneth from the one ſea to the other, and is about ſeuen miles in length. The City is built vpon the declining of a hill, in which there are many rare ſingularities which I omit being deſcribed elſewhere. There are in this City ſeuen little hils, vpon the which are built ſeuen principall Moſques or Churches, by ſeuerall Emperours, where of the faireſt and moſt ſtately is that of Sultan Solyman. Vpon the North ſide of the City ſtandeth H the Grand Seigniours Palace or Seraglio, commonly called by the name of the Port: The which hath on the one ſide thereof the Sea, and of the other ſide of it the hauen, the other two being towards the City, being about three miles in compaſſe, ſome write of foure. It is walled about, and within it are many gardens, orchards, medowes, and woods. Being entred into the firſt Port (which hath double gates of yron) into a large Court, on the left hand there ſtands a building like vnto a Turkiſh Moſque, which now the Grand Seigniour vſeth for a ſtore-houſe, wherein are great ſtore of armes which are for the defence of his Seraglio. And on the other ſide of this Court are ſeuerall gardens walled in, from which they paſſe to another Court with a gate like vnto the former, where are targuets and ſcimitars hanging, and many Porters attending, as at the former. After this, they paſſe into another large I Court which is planted with Cypreſſe trees, and full of graſſe, where deere feed; but round about it is a cloiſter which is in length about ſix hundred and foureſcore foot, and aboue fiue hundred in bredth, paued with ſtone, and couered with lead, it being ſupported with one hundred and forty pillars of white and gray marble, ſtanding vpon baſſes of copper, with capitals of the ſame; vpon the North ſide whereof ſtands the Diuano, whereas the Viſier Baſſa and the other Baſſaes ſit in Councell, and heare cauſes of importance, whereof we will ſpeake hereafter. In this Seraglio the Grand Seigniour hath many chambers which are richly appointed, wherein hee remaines, and there he hath ſix young men which attend his perſon, and the ſeruice of his chamber, whereof two wait dayly, and at night they watch when hee ſleepes, the one of them at his head, and the other at his feet, with two torches K burning in their hands. In the morning (as Sanzouino Writes) when the Grand Seigniour attires himſelfe, they put into one of his pockets a thouſand aſpers, and into the other pocket twenty duckats of gold, the which if he giue not away that day, is their fee at night, neither (as they ſay) doth hee euer put on the ſame cloathes: and whenſoeuer hee goes to hunting, or to any other exerciſe (beſides the money which hee hath with him) his Caſnadar Baſſa or chiefe Treaſurour ſtill followes him with great ſtore of money to giue away. The office of theſe ſix young men (who are changed as it pleaſeth the Grand Seigniour) is diſtinct, for the one carries his ſhooes, the ſecond his bow and arrowes, the third his veſt, the fourth a veſſell with water, the fifth carries a ſeat, and the ſixth called Oda Baſſa is head of the chamber. L

Attendants vpon the Grand Seignior.

The chiefe officers of his houſe

He hath dayly a great number of perſons reſident in his palace, imployed in their ſeuerall charges, ſome in one place, ſome in another, vnder their ſeuerall commanders. But among all the great men in the Court theſe are of chiefeſt eminency and note.

Firſt the Capi Aga, that is to ſay, the mouth of the Grand Seigniour, by whom the Sultan ſpeaketh to ſuch as haue any great ſuit vnto him: for no Embaſſadour is admitted vnto him, but at his firſt arriuall when he deliuers his letters of credit and his preſents, and when he hath any buſineſſe to treat of, he repaires to the Viſier Baſſa or his Aga.

The ſecond is Caſnadar Baſſa, the chiefe Treaſurour of the houſhold, or ſuperintendent of the Treaſuror.

The third Chilergi Baſſa, chiefe cupbearer. M

The fourth is Seraglio Agaſi, ſteward or maſter of the houſhold.

The fifth is Chiller Agaſi, or Saraidar Baſſa, Querſeer of his Seraglio of concubines, who is alwaies an Eunuch as the reſt be.

The

A The sixth and last is Bostangi Bassa, chiefe Gardener, and ouerseer of all his gardens, Captaine of his Iamoglans, and stearer of his Barge whensoeuer he goeth by water. He hath a Protogero or Lieutenant, and many gardeners vnder him, which are called Bostangi, who when they come out of the Seraglio, become Ianizaries, Solacci, or Capigi, according to their qualities.

These six Officers of the Sultans house aboue mentioned haue no authority out of his palace, yet the greatest Bassaes stand in awe of them, and feare them, for that they haue free accesse vnto the Sultan, and haue dayly opportunity to insence him against them: for by their secret suggestions and false informations, many of the greatest Bassaes are many times suddenly and vndeseruedly cut off in the height of all their pompe and glory.

B Hee hath many mutes or dumbe men attending about him, whereof eight be his dayly companions and play fellowes in the Seraglio, in whose company hee takes great delight: besides many others to the number of forty, which attend vpon him as pages. They are all borne deafe and dumbe, yet by long practise they grow so perfect, as they will vnderstand any thing that shall be acted vnto them by signes and gestures; and will themselues by the gesture of their eyes, bodies, hands, and feet, deliuer matters of great difficulty, to the great admiration of strangers. The Sultans dumbe men.

The Grand Seigniour hath within his palace a Seraglio of young men to the number of fiue hundred, from eight yeares of age to twenty: these are the well fauoured and best proportioned of all the tribute children which hee draweth from Græcia and Natolia, and they C are chosen out of his Seraglio's at Pera, Adrianopolis, and other places, and brought to this to be bred vp, where they are instructed in diuers Arts, according to their disposition, but especially to reade and write, and in the doctrine of their Law, and to ride, there being a great number of horses kept within this Seraglio for their exercises, and for the Eunuches. They neuer goe out of the Seraglio till the Sultan thinkes them to be of fit age to vndergoe some charge, and then he makes them Spacoglani, or Silichtary, and to some he giues greater places, according to their valour, or the fauour they haue gotten with him. A Seraglio of young men.

He hath in like manner about fourescore Mutaferache, that is to say, Launce-bearers to the Grand Seigniour: which carry his Lance whensoeuer he goeth to field, and acknowledge no other commander, and in time by his fauour or their merits, are made Captaines. They that carry his Launce.

D He hath alwaies aboue one thousand Eunuches entertained in seuerall places, whereof some of them are in very great credit with him, and can preuaile much: they are called Hudurni, many of them are employed to attend his Concubines and Virgines in his Seraglio. They are not only depriued of their genitors, but in their youth they haue their whole priuities smoothed off by their bellies, and in their turbants they beare short quils of siluer, thorow which they make water. This inhumane custome wes first inuented by Sultan Solyman, who seeing a Gelding make offer to couer a mare, grew suspitious that they were able to do some small thing, notwithstanding the losse of their genitors. The Sultans Eunuches.

The Grand Seignior hath a Seraglio for his women without his palace, in the which there are alwaies foure or fiue hundred young Virgines, the fairest of the Christians children, which E be gathered vp out of Græcia for tribute. The Sultan repaires sometime thither to make choice of such as he shall like best for his pleasure; wherof they are aduertised the day before by the Eunuches, that they may prepare themselues in their best habits to giue him content. Being all in a roome, and standing vpon either side, the Sultan enters, attended by an Eunuch or two, and viewes them; to her that hee likes, he casts a handkercher, (whereof he hath many hanging at his girdle) and in this maner it may be he makes choice of halfe a dozen, the which his Eunuches obseruing, they put them presently into a Coach, and are carried into another little Seraglio within his palace. In this Seraglio they haue good entertainement, and are apparelled in silke twice a yeare, and are taught to make diuers works by antient matrons, and attended on by the younger sort. They haue many Eunuches with their Aga or Cap- F taine, and they haue one hundred Capigi's and Ianizaries, which keepe their gates. When as the number of these Virgine slaues decreaseth, and they haue not wherewithall to supply them with their tributary children, they send to the market in Constantinople, where they say there are dayly ten thousand slaues of all ages and sexes to be sold: and there they buy the The Sultans Seraglio of women.

faireſt they can get, but they will not haue them aboue eight yeares old, leſt they ſhould be corrupted before they come into the Turks Seraglio. G

The ſtate of his concubines. As for the other Seraglio within the Sultans palace, there remaines the Sultanaes with their children, and ſuch other Concubines as he hath made choice of for his delight. He neuer marries, but when any one is brought vnto him, he giues her an attire for her head of gold, and ten thouſand aſpers, cauſing her to liue in a chamber apart, encreaſing her dayly maintenance. The firſt that beares him a childe, is called Sultana, and is miſtreſſe of all the reſt, and moſt fauoured by him, as the chiefeſt of all his women, the reſt as they are fauoured by the Prince, are brought vnto him to haue his pleaſure, and then returned backe againe: if they chance to be with childe, they are put into the number of the Sultanaes, and are much reſpected by him. Such as the Prince hath had the vſe of, but no children by them, are giuen in marriage to his ſlaues, who are aduanced to dignities, and made Gouernors of countries. H

His guard, footmen, & porters. He hath three hundred Sollacchi, which march continually about his perſon, and make as it were his guard, being vnder the command of the Aga of Ianizaries; they are richly attired, hauing lawne garments hanging downe beneath their knees, and ouer it a quilted waſtcoat with halfe ſleeues of taffata, damaske, or ſatten, and on their heads, caps and feathers like vnto the Captaine of the Ianizaries, and they attend on him with bowes and arrowes. He hath alſo ſtill about him when he rides abroad forty Peichi, that is to ſay, footmen or poſtes which runne wonderfull ſwiftly, and are ſtill at hand to attend his commandements, where hee ſhall pleaſe to employ them they weare long coats of cloth of gold, with a broad girdle of the ſame, and caps like vnto womens thimbles, with a horne of ſiluer and gilt ſtanding vp before. There I are about foure thouſand Capigi's or Porters which continually attend his palace and Seraglioes, they are attired like vnto the Ianizaries, and haue ouer them three Capigi Baſſaes. Theſe men are many times employed to execute the Grand Seigniors commandements, when he will haue any great mans head, or his throat cut, as we haue ſeene of late yeares in Gambolat Baſſa, and in Naſſuf Baſſa, who was Grand Viſier to Achmat.

The Turks gouernment. The Grand Seigniors gouernment is ſo abſolute, as they all tearme themſelues his ſlaues, and no man how great ſoeuer can aſſure himſelfe of his eſtate, no not of his life, but by the Great Turks ſpeciall fauour. He commits the mannaging of his eſtate to ſuch as haue abjured the Chriſtian religion, and haue been brought by way of tything in their infancies from Greece and Natolia, and afterwards for their merits are aduanced to great dignities, as Baſſaes, Beglerbegs, and ſuch other. The Prince hath a court or Councell which they call Diuano, and this is held within the Seraglio foure daies in the weeke; that is to ſay, Saturday, Sunday, Munday, and Tueſday, where they treat of matters of State, and afterwards of the affaires of priuate men. To this councell are admitted the Grand Viſier, eight or nine Baſſaes who are called Viſiers, and are continually reſident at Conſtantinople, (for there are many more which are employed abroad in the conduct of armies or gouernment of Countries) the Beglerbegs and others. At the riſing of the court or councell, the Grand Viſier informes the Sultan of all the proceedings in particular; wherein he dares not diſſemble, for that the Prince hath a window joyning to the Diuano, where he may heare and ſee any thing and not be ſeene. He ſeldome impugnes what they haue reſolued, vnleſſe it be to moderate ſome rigorous ſentence, or to giue anſwer to ſome Embaſſadour, and what he himſelfe concludes is irreuokeable. K L

The Turks Iuſtice. Their ſuits are very ſhort, for they haue no aduocats to breed delaies, as they haue in Chriſtendome; yet commonly he that bribes moſt ſpeeds beſt; for the Turks are the moſt couetous and corrupt Nation in the World, neither will they do any man a kindeneſſe without a fee; and yet they are not ſure to enjoy any thing they get no longer than it ſhall pleaſe the Prince. They puniſh crimes with great ſeuerity, and ſpeedily, the fact being prooued, which doth ſo turrifie them, as by the report of ſuch as haue conuerſed long there, you ſhall ſeldome ſee a murder or a theft committed by any Turke; and if any foule fact be committed, it is moſt commonly done by the Græcians. M

The Grand Viſier. The chiefe of the Grand Seigniors Councell is the Grand Viſier, who weares the Princes ſignet, and is as it were the Lieutenant Generall of the whole Monarchy: he hath authority ouer the other Baſſaes, and they are bound to yeeld him an account of their imployments.

He

A He is still about the Prince his person, and is not sent abroad for any employment, vnlesse it be for an important war, as they haue done of late yeares against the Persian. When the Visier is sent abroad, he makes choice of one of the Bassaes to be his Lieutenant and to execute his authority, and he is called Chimacham.

The Beglerbegs and Sanzackes.

Next vnto the Bassa (which is as much to say as great Lord) follow the Beglerbegs, and haue their places in court next vnto them. They are men of great authority, and haue the command of great kingdomes and armies, vnder whose obedience are diuers Sanzacks which are sent as Gouernors into Prouinces during the Princes pleasure. These are men of great experience, and haue command ouer the Spahi, and Timariots, the Turks chiefe forces on horseBacke, whom they call continually to exercise their armes. There is one Beglerbeg of Greece,
B which hath all the countries in Europe in the Turks dominions vnder his charge, and this is the first of all the Beglerbegs, who hath vnder him aboue thirty Sanzackes. There are six other Beglerbegs in Asia, whereof the first is he of Natolia or Asia the lesse. He hath the gouernment of Pontus, Bythinia, and other Kingdomes, and hath vnder him twelue Sanzackes. The Beglerbeg of Caramania with seuen Sanzackes. The Beglerbeg of Aladuley, vnder whose command are seuen Sanzackes. The Beglerbeg of Amazia and Toccato, hauing foure Sanzackes. There is also one in Mesopotamia, and vnder his command twelue Sanzackes or Gouernours of Prouinces. There is likewise a Beglerbeg of Damas, Suria, and Iudæa, who hath vnder him twelue Sanzackes. And there is one of Caire, who commands ouer sixteene Sanzacks, his charge extends to the Arabians, but they are not so obedient as the Turks other C countries.

The great Turks forces.

As for the Turks forces, they consist of horsemen, footmen, and fleets at Sea. His horsemen consist of Spahi, Timari, Spachoglani, Silictari and Olofagi, who haue assignations of lands for the entertainment of them and their horses. For no man can enjoy any possessions, but he is enjoyned to entertaine a certaine number of souldiers proportionable to the reuenues of the land: so as the Gouernour or Bassa is alwaies bound to haue this number ready to march when they are called. Of these Timariots they are able to raise about an hundred and The Timariots. fifty thousand horse alwaies ready at the first call, for the which the Prince disburseth not a penny; for in regard of the land which is alotted them, they are bound to maintaine themselues, their horse and armes in the war. Whereseuer the Turke conquereth any country, he D diuides it among his soldiers; assigning 4000 aspers yerely (which is little aboue ten pound sterling) to euery one for himselfe and his horse, and so proportionably if he haue more land. These horsemen are much pestered with armes when they go to war: for they haue a jacke, a speare with a little white banner, a caliuer hanging vnder his left arme, a cimiter, a bow and arrowes at his girdle, and a battleaxe at his saddle bow. And of these kinde of horsemen they say there are 80000 in Greece, besides an infinite number in his other countries. This Turkish Cauallery worke two great effects, for they serue as a support to his estate, to suppresse all seditions, and they are ready to vndertake any enterprise. Besides these, he entertaines many horsemen about his person, whereof some are Spahi, and these are Christian slaues bred vp The Spahi. yong in the Princes Seraglio, who by their merits attaine to that degree, and afterwards to E greater dignities. They are alwaies attending about the Princes person whereseuer he goes, being commonly thirteene hundred.

The Caripices & Spachoglans

The Caripices are held for the flower of all his horsemen, being in number about eight hundred, who march still about the Princes person during the wars. The Spachoglani which is as much to say as young men on horsebacke, are aboue three thousand, who haue yerely pensions in mony, which they are bound to receiue yearely at Constantinople, or else they are held as dead men. In the wars they march on the right hand of the Grand Seigniour, and are knowne from the Spahies by the banners of their launces, which haue two points and of diuers colours, the others being painted and all white, but they are armed alike. They are men at armes of a good fashion, and are commonly aduanced by the Sultan to higher places. They haue F a Captaine or Aga of great esteeme, with a Lieutenant, and euery twenty haue a Boluch Bassa.

The Salichtari.

The Salichtari are also horsemen, and lodge vpon the left hand of the Prince, being in number about three thousand: Their breeding is like to the Spahi, and there is no difference betwixt twixt them but in their march, the one hauing the right hand, and the other the left, which is the more honourable among the Turks. G

The Olofagi. There is yet another sort of horsemen, which they cal Olofagi, being about 2000 in number, and they march on the right and left hand of the Prince. These seuerall troupes are as it were a nursery for all the chiefe officers of that Empire; out of which they doe commonly chuse their great commanders. Besides, they haue their mercenary soldiers called Alcanzijs, which come to serue the Turks from Tartaria, Valachia, and Moldauia.

The Ianizaries and their breeding. As for his foot forces they consist chiefely in Ianizaries, into which number they haue not vsed to enroll many of Asia, whom they haue held faint hearted, but those of Europe, who haue alwaies had the reputation to be valiant. Their manner to entertaine this discipline, is, to send euery three yeares into all the Prouinces of Europe, from whence they bring ten or H twelue thousand Christian children as a tribute, making choice of such as haue any shew of magnanimity, agility, or courage, which are parts fit for a souldier. These children being brought to Constantinople and visited, some of them are sent into Natolia, Caramania, and other Prouinces, to dig and weed the ground, where they forget their parents, countrey, and faith, and learne the language and vices of them with whom they conuerse, and so become Mahometans. They continue in those places three or foure yeares, without any charge to the Prince, being entertained by them for whom they labour; after which time they are called home, and put into the Sultans Seraglio's at Pera, Adrianopolis, and other places. But they that haue the best faces and are most actiue, are reserued for their Princes seruice.

The Aiamoglani These children being brought into the Princes Seraglio's, are of two sorts; the one are cal- I led Aiamoglani, that is to say, simple Boy: they are instructed by seuere masters in diuers manuall and painefull exercises, as shoomakers, gardeners, and such like base trades. Their feeding and apparell is very meane; and for the most part they lie in great and spacious roomes, like vnto religious men, hauing a light continually burning, and guards about them. These haue liberty to goe abroad, who after the age of twenty yeares are dismissed; whereof some are sent into the Sultans gardens, which are many and great; others are emploied as car-men to carry wood, hay, water, and other prouision for the palace, and some are sent to the kitchens and stables; yet when places fall they are preferred to be Ianizaries, and haue competent pensions to mainetaine them during their liues. The least hath fiue aspers a day, and none aboue eight, and the Spahies ten. They are attired in long blew gownes girt with a broad girdle, and on their heads they haue long yellow caps without brims, and sharpe like vnto sugarloues: and of these Aiamoglanes there are alwaies aboue twenty thousand which serue to supply his armies. K

The Ich Oglani The other sort of youths, which are bred vp in the Turks Seraglio's or nurseries, are called Ich-Oglani, that is to say, chamber pages, being the choice of all the Christians children for proportion and fauour, and these are better bred vp than the Aiamoglani, and come to better preferment, of whom we haue formerly made mention; for the meanest places these yong men attaine vnto at the first is to be Spahies, or to attend vpon the grand Seignior as his chamberlaines and pages. And many of them hauing extraordinary parts are suddenly aduanced to places of great dignity. Of these the Prince hath euer 5000, who vntill they come vnto the L age of twenty yeares are neuer suffered to goe out of their Seraglio, nor to see any person but such as instruct them and attend vpon them.

The Ianizaries. The Ianizaries (who are the grand Seigniors chiefe strength on foot) are raised out of Christians children, bred vp in these nurseries, as we haue said, where they are taught to shoot with their bowes and arrowes, to vse the harquebuse, and all other weapons fit for seruice; and are at length enrolled among the Ianizaries, and are held the most valiant and resolute souldiers among all the Turks. There are commonly resident at Constantinople and thereabouts twenty foure thousand of these Ianizaries when as the Grand Seigniour is there, (for in his whole estate he hath a far greater number) vnder their Aga or Captaine Generall, which is a place of great credit, but not like vnto any of their Bassaes; the great Turke fearing to joyne M power and authority together. Being once Ianizaries, they are either sent to the wars, or put in garrison, or else they remaine at the Sultans court (which they call port) where they haue certaine spacious places for their dwelling, like to religious houses, where they liue vnder their commanders:

A commanders: and the younger serue the antient with great respect. All the Ianizaries of one squadron eat together at one table, and sleep in certaine long halls, and if any one chance to be absent all night, he shall (the next night) be beaten with a cudgell, which he takes so patiently as he kisseth his hand that hath thus corrected him. They are much respected and feared of all men, and are diuersly imploied in the city; as to see the peace and good orders kept; to looke to the prices of things, to arrest malefactors, and to guard the gates. If they buy any thing they will haue it at their owne rate; they cannot be judged but by their Aga or Captaine. There is seldome any one punished with death by the course of justice, without danger of a mutiny; and therefore they execute them very secretly. They haue many meanes to get mony; for some attend vpon Embassadours and keep their houses; others go with trauel-
B lers, to guard them safely through the Turks estate. They haue a great power in their Princes election; so as to win their loues euery new Emperour at his first comming to the Crowne giues them a donatiue and encreaseth their pay, presuming vpon their valour and multitude. They many times commit strange insolencies vpon any discontents; as in firing of houses, brauing the Bassaes, and sometimes bearding the Sultan himselfe: as you may reade in this History.

The chiefe strength of the Turks forces consist in the Ianizaries; and yet there are other sorts of footmen, whereof some are called Acouizes, which is a forlorne hope, and receiue no pay, but march before the army, and haue leaue to spoile, so as they giue the fifth part of their booty to the Prince. There is another kinde called Azapi: these are souldiers of small effect, Acouices. Azapi.
C and serue rather with the pickaxe and spade than with the sword: they are fitter to tire an enemy with their numbers, than to vanquish them with their valour; and they are accustomed to fill vp ditches with their dead bodies to make a passage for the Ianizaries to ascend vnto a breach. The Grand Seignior hath euer six thousand Gunnars in pay whom they call Topegi. Topegi and Iebegi.
And for the guard of the pouder and shot when the army marcheth, there is alwaies 12000 men in pay, whom they call Iebegi.

The Grand Seignior hath also certaine officers attending on him to the number of 3000, whom they call Chiaus, which are as it were sergeant at armes. These are men well esteemed, The Chiaus.
and are often employed in Embassies to forreine Princes: They also carry letters and commendations from the Prince or his chiefe Visier, and they apprehend offenders. These neuer
D goe to the warre but when the Sultan is there in person. They are commanded by a Chiaus Bassa, who is of so great credit with all men (as Sanzouino writes) that when he is sent by the Grand Seigniour to any Bassa, Sanzacke, or Cadi, with order to haue any mans head cut off, he is obeyed, although hee haue no warrant in writing, as if the Prince were there himselfe, and commanded it.

Thus we haue set downe the Grand Seigniors forces at land, whose numbers are so great, The Turks discipline in their armies.
as in shew they should breed confusion, and ruine themselues; but they keepe very good order and discipline, so as in that point they yeeld not to any. They liue of a little bread baked in the ashes, with rice, and the pouder of flesh dried in the sunne: They may not drinke wine, and there are no women seene in their armies: they obserue a wonderfull silence, and all the soul-
E diers are gouerned by the becke of the hand or any shew of the countenance. Quarrels and thefts are seuerely punished. When they march they dare not enter into any corne fields nor vines. The valiant are assured of preferments, and cowards of punishment.

Hauing spoken sufficiently of their land forces, let vs see what strength he hath at sea: they haue great store of forests for the building of ships; neither want they good shipwrites, for that couetousnesse hath drawne many Christian carpenters into the grand Seigniors arsenal: And he hath great numbers of men trained vp in marine affaires, in regard of the gallies which he hath at Mitilene, Rhodes, Cyprus, and Alexandria, and for the retreat hee giues pyrats at Tunes, Bona, Bugia and Algiers, from whence he drawes commanders and his best mariners, as hath beene seene by experience in the enterprises of Malta, Guletta, and elsewhere.

F To maintaine these great forces, it is requisite he should haue the sinews of war; yet his ordinary reuenues (considering the large dominions) are not so great, as in reason they should be: for some are of opinion, that hee hath not aboue eight millions of gold for his ordinary reuenue; for which they giue diuers reasons: first, that the Turks haue no care but of armes, The Turks reuenues.

the

the which doe rather ruine than inrich a country: secondly, they consume so many men in their enterprises, as they scarce leaue sufficient to manure their land, so as the subjects (despairing to enjoy their wealth and necessary commodities, which they might get by their labour and industy) imploy not themselues to worke nor trafficke, no more than necessity shall constraine them: for to what purpose is it, say they, to sow that another man must reape? or to reape that which another will consume? And for this reason you shall see in the Turks estate whose countries lie wast, and many times great dearth, which growes by the want of men to manure their land; for that the country men for the most part either die in the voyages which they make, or in carrying victuals and other necessary things for their armies; for of 10000 which they draw from their houses to row in their gallies, scarce the fourth part returnes to their houses, by reason of the great toyles they endure. Another reason why the Sultans reuenues be no greater, is, for that when he conquers any country, he assignes the lands to his Timarri, who are bound to maintaine so many men, and so many horses, according to the proportion of land which he giues them, reseruing no rent.

But although his ordinary reuenues be no greater than we haue spoken, yet he drawes great profit by his extraordinaries, especially by confiscations and presents; for being all his slaues, no man enjoyeth any thing longer than it pleaseth him: yea, the Bassaes and greatest officers of that crowne, which oppresse his subjects, and gather together inestimable wealth, in the end for the most part, it comes into the Turks Casna or Treasury. It is not strange there to send for any subjects head, vpon any suggestion whatsoeuer, which no man dare contradict: after which execution, his slaues and goods are sold in the market at Constantinople, and the mony applied to the Princes coffers. His presents also amount to great summes, for no Embassador may come before him without a present, neither may any man expect any office or dignity without mony: no gouernor being returned from his prouince, dares present himselfe to the Sultan empty handed, neither are their presents of small price. The Sultans exchequer is gouerned by two Treasurers called Deftardari, who are more rightly gouernors of the reuenues, for that they keep an account of the Princes Casna or Treasure, the one hath charge of the reuenues which are raised in Natolia, and the other in Europe. Also they draw great profits from their tributary prouinces, especially from Valachia, Moldauia, and Transyluania, where the Princes maintaine themselues by presents and gifts; so as they change dayly, for that they that offer most are aduanced, wherby they are forced to ruine the country, to performe what they haue promised.

The lawes whereby the Turks are gouerned.

But hauing spoken of the Turks forces and reuenues, whereby they maintaine their armies to inuade their neighbours, we must now speake somthing of their lawes wherby the subjects are gouerned, which are institutions and answers of wise men, the which they hold as an interpretation of their Alcaron, which is the ground of their law. These institutions are conteined in twelue volumes, treating of all things belonging to ciuill conuersation. Some prouinces of Turkie are gouerned by customes, and enjoy their priuiledges, and their wise Iudges supply many things which are not written. The Sultan makes choice of the wisest and worthiest person that can be found, of a sincere life according to their law, & he is called Mufti, that is, Interpreter of their Alcaron; he is (as it were) their high priest, attending only matters of religion and faith: he is head of the church among the Turks, and decideth all questions of their law. He is of such eminency, as all the Bassaes are subject to his direction: he abaseth not himselfe so much as to sit in the Diuano, onely passeth through it when he is sent for by the Sultan, who (so soone as he seeth him) riseth from his seat as it were to honour him, and then they both sit downe face to face, and so confer together.

The Mufti.

The Cadilesquiri.

They make triall of the sufficienteſt of their Iudges, before they chuse any, for which there are two Cadilesquiri Talismani, that is, Doctors of the law, and Examiners at Constantinople, or wheresoeuer the Prince remaines; These examine the Iudges or Cadi's of diuers prouinces. The one hath his charge ouer Europe, and is called Cadilesquirie Romly, before whom (after good information of his life, and sufficiencie) he sweares that he will do justice to all men, and yeeld an account of his charge when he shall be called. The othe Cadilesquirie is for Natolia: they are souereigne judges in all causes, and as it were Patriarks. They are of great authority, and haue place in the Diuano with the Bassaes to consult of weighty matters.

There

A There is a third degree of their churchmen, belonging to their law, called Mulli, which are bishops and chiefe gouernors vnder the Mufty; and their office is to place and displace churchmen at their discretion. Next are the Nuderisi, who are suffragans to the Bishops, and their charge is to see the Cadies doe their duties. Next come the Cadi's who are Iudges to punish offendors, of which there is one in euery city vnder the Seigniors command. The Mulli, Muderisi, and Cadi.

Vnder these are another kind of yong Doctors of the law called Naipi, who are not so well read as to be absolute Iudges, but yet supply their places in their absence. The Naipi.

After these are the Hogi, who write their bookes, for that they allow no Printing: and inferior vnto them are the Calfi, who reade vnto them that write. And the yongest of all are called Softi, who are yong students or nouices in their law. The Hogi, Calfi, and Softi.

B These are their seuerall degrees of lawyers or churchmen: for the Turks are gouerned by a kinde of Ecclesiasticall law, according to their Alcaron. They haue colledges (called Medressæ) at Constantinople, and in other places, where they liue and study their law and diuinity, and so they ascend by degrees to the highest dignity of their profession.

As for their religion, it began in the time of the Emperour Heraclius, when as the Empire was much dismembred by the heresies of Arrius and Nestorius. Mahomet borne in Arabia imbraced this opportunity, seeking to ouerthrow the Diuinity of Iesus Christ, which was opposed by the Iewes and Arabians: he was assisted by two hereticks, the one was Iohn a Nestorian, and the other Sergius an Arrian. After which (being assisted by many slaues, to whom he allowed all that was pleasing to the sence and flesh, if they should receiue this law) he obtained many victories. By Mahomets law they make a distinction of cleane and vncleane meats to content the Iewes, and also it maintaines circumcision, but not at the eight day of their birth, as the Iewes vse it, but after the eight yeare, when the infant is able to make confession of his faith, where lifting vp his finger he speakes these words, which are grauen in their temples in the Arabian tongue: There is but one God whose Prophet Mahomet is, one God and equall Prophets. The circumcision being ended, they feast three daies together, and then they carry the circumcised to a bath with great pompe; after which the guests conduct him to his house, and present him with gifts. The women are not circumcised, but only speake the words. If any Christian abjure his faith and indure circumcision (as they often doe by reason of their tributes and vexations) they are led through the towne with great honor and rejoycing of the D people, who do also giue vnto them, and they pay no tributes. Mahomets law denies the Diuinity of Iesus Christ, to please the Arrians who were then powerfull: It is full of fables to please Idolaters, and it giues liberty to the flesh which is pleasing to most men. The Turks religion.

They confesse one God, and honor Iesus Christ, not as the sonne of God, but as a Prophet borne of the Virgin Mary. They neither honor nor allow images. Friday is their Sabbath, as Sunday is ours. They obserue a Lent of thirty daies, which they call Ramadan; during which they eate nothing in the day time, but when night comes all meats are indifferent, but swines flesh; yet they abstaine from wine and women. They haue their Easter called Bayran, which continues three daies, in which they enjoy all pleasures: but this feast is not alwaies prefixed, for that they account not the day according to the course of the Sun, but of the Moone; and E therefore they do carefully obserue the new Moone and salute it.

They haue no bels in their Mosques, neither do they suffer the Christians which liue there to haue any. They put off their shooes when they go into their Mosques, and take them again at their comming forth. Whersoeuer they sit in their churches or houses, they haue tapestry couerlets or mats vnder them: they are not much giuen to contemplation or learning, yet the Turkish women being married and hauing issue, are carefull to breed vp their children, and to be instructed; for the which there are many schooles, where they reade their lawes, to the end they may serue in their Mosques, and be able to gouerne the common-weale.

The Turks by Mahomets law haue leaue to marry as many wiues as they can maintaine; and a Turkish woman being once with childe, her husband neuer toucheth her vntill she be F deliuered, but lies with his slaues out of the house where his wife remaines. They haue a certaine kind of marriage made at pleasure, which they call Kebin, the which is many times practised by strangers, who being out of their country contract with women, whom they are to enjoy during their pleasure, and when they cast them off, they giue them a certaine summe of of mony, and keepe the children. The Cadi's or Iudges allow not this kinde of contract, especially amongst Christians, vnlesse it be with an oath of marriage. A Turke hauing had the vse of a Christian woman, they are both condemned to die, vnlesse she will adjure her faith: the like is obserued betwixt a Christian and a Turkish woman, if they haue been found together. Diuorce is allowed among them in case of barrennesse and incontinency. G

There are foure orders of religious men among the Turks which differ in their liuing, habit, and ceremonies. These be the Terlaques, Deruis, Kalenders, and Huquiemales, and these last are very vicious, and wicked impostors, deceiuing of the common people. The Deruis is a strict order liuing in contemplation, much like vnto the Capuchins among the Romish Papists. The Turks forbeare to blaspheme either God, Christ, or Mahomet, or any other Saint whatsoeuer, and they punish blasphemy seuerely. They conuerse with Christians, and eat and traffique with them freely; yea, somtimes they marry their daughters, and suffer them to liue after their owne religion. But they hate the Iewes, and despise them as the basest people in the World. They haue an assured confidence, that he that shall duely obserue the lawes of Mahomet, shall haue eternall life, and a Paradise full of delights: and contrariwise they that shall breake the lawes of their Alcaron are threatned with hell and eternall death; yet they haue an opinion that hee that beleeues in the Alcaron when hee dies, shall be vndoubtedly saued. H

The disposition of the Turks.

To conclude this relation with some few lines of their humors and dispotions; they write of them, that they are grosse witted, idle and vnfit for labour. They are exceeding couetous and corrupt, aboue all other Nations; for justice is sold to him that offers most. They are humble among themselues, and obey their superiours with great silence. They are proud and insupportable to strangers, thinking none fit to be compared with them. They are giuen to gluttony and drunkennesse, and will spend whole daies together in feasting, and will drinke with excesse if it be in priuate, for that it is forbidden by their law. They are vain-glorious, proud and deceitfull, neuer keeping their words, but when it may be to their profit. They are much inclined to venery, and are for the most part all Sodomites. They are very superstitious, giuing credit to dreames and diuinations; and they hold that euery mans destiny is written in his forehead, which cannot be altered or auoided. I

Thus I haue continued this History for eleuen yeares, hauing informed my selfe out of the best authors and intelligencers I could fide that concerne this subject: I should haue beene glad that some which haue resided at Constantinople most part of this time, would haue assisted mee with their obseruations, which should haue beene for the generall good of our Nation; but I hope notwithstanding the Reader shall finde content and satisfaction. K

***

A

A CONTINVATION OF THE TVRKISH HISTORY, FROM THE BEGINNING OF THE YEARE OF OVR LORD 1620, VNTILL THE ENDING OF THE YEARE OF OVR LORD 1628.

COLLECTED OVT OF THE PAPERS and Dispatches of Sr THOMAS ROWE, Knight, his Maiesties Embassador with the grand Signior during that time.

And since by Him re-viewed and corrected.

BEfore we come to speak of the great preparations made by the grand Signior in the yeare 1621, to inuade the kingdom of Poland; and those by that king to resist him: I hold it necessarie, briefly to set down the causes and reasons of the insuing war. 1620.

The Chrim Tartar, confining vpon the dukedome of Russia and borders of Poland, had made many incursions, and did great spoile vpon the Cossackes within that prouince of Russia, and other parts belonging to the Kingdom of Poland, and carrying away the people of all ages and sexes, made sale of them within the Turkes empire. Now Iean beagh Ghiray Han Prince of the Tartars, being wholly dependant on the Ottoman Emperors, his Maiesty of Poland sent many seuerall Embassadors to complain at that Port; That notwithstanding the antient league betweene him and the Ottoman Family, the Tartars greatly spoiled his Countries, which was both vniust and against the treaties. Howsoeuer the complaints were many and great, yet the king of Polands ministers found no redresse for those their alledged wrongs; but were answered, That the Tartars were absolute lords ouer themselues, and that they pretended to haue an annual tribute of 40000 Dollars from the king of Poland; which being denied them, they had reason so to do: and that the grand Seignior could only intreat, but not command them to surcease. The Tartars seeing the Polacke thus sleighted at the Port, grew more insolent and outragious: wherewith the Turkes were well content, for the great great benefit they receiued by slaues which were continually brought to be sould in their dominions, finding for the most part that those men had able bodies, and fit to be applied to the oare. It is true that the Chrim Tartars in antient time beeing so neere neighbours, were woont to receiue such a Pension from the Crowne of Poland, for the which they were obliged to seiue in euery occasion of Warre: but of later yeares that payment hath discontinued, because they rather receiued hurt, than any assistance from that vagabond and predatory people. G

When the Cossacks saw that after so many complaints they could not liue at rest, nor procure restitution of their wrongs, nor take their reuenge vpon the Tartars, being a flitting and fugitiue nation, who had no certain place of abode; they resolued to fall into the dominions of the grand Signior, who seemed, if not to protect, yet to conniue at injuries they receiued from these their neighbors. The Cossacks then that inhabited vpon the banks of the riuer Boristhenes (which emptieth it selfe into the blacke sea) were coniectured to bee fittest for the execution of this reuenge: and therfore they prepared a number of wel armed Barques, & falling down the riuer, did very great dammage, by robbing, spoiling, and burning diuers townes and villages bordering vpon the black sea. H

This news being brought to Constantinople, the grand Signior took it in great scorne, that such a base and rude people should come and afront him so neer his doores. Therfore he caused some gallies to be armed forth with speed to suppresse them: but his forces were foure or fiue times valiantly repulsed, and stil the Cossack went safely home with his prey. Now the tide of affairs was turned, and this great Emperor who was formerly petitioned by the Polack, is now become a suitor to him, & finds his Ministers measured by the answer the grand Signior had giuen concerning the wrongs don by the Tartars: That though the Cossacks adhere to the Crown of Poland, yet are they a free people of themselues: but when the Tartar shall cease from his hostilitie, it is like enough the Pole will intreat the Cossacke to do the same; and that is all the authoritie he can exercise ouer them. I

The grand Signiors preparation for warre with the King of Poland.

Affairs standing thus, no accommodation for wrongs on either side could be made; and the grand Signior, although he was now but fifteen years of age, yet was hee strong, vigorous, and of a high spirit, and more than desirous of a war, but especially with the King of Poland, from whom he looked for better satisfaction. This desire was nourished in him by the counsels of Ali Bassa great Vizier; and notwithstanding it was vtterly disliked by al the rest of the Ministers of state, and officers of war in that Empire, a war was neuertheless thereupon proclaimed throughout all the Turks Dominions; which did in generall displease the common soldier also. K

1621. The grand Signior the foure and twentieth of Aprill commanded paiment to be made to all the Soldierie; and the day following caused all his tents and pauilions, with those of his Viziers and other officers, to be solemnly pitched without the City, with all trades that were to attend his Royal camp. Who hauing now gathered of foot and horse three hundred thousand (though reported to be twice the number) set forward together with his court and train out of Constantinople the 29 of April, with three hundred field pieces, beside a hundred cannon sent vnto the frontiers by sea; leauing Achmat Bassa and the Bostangi Bassa gouernors of the city til his return. L

When he was arriued at the confines of Poland, he first attempted the fortresse of Chotyn in the prouince of Moldauia, lately giuen by Gasparo Gratiani to the Polacks. The which being strong of scituation, and well furnished for defence, the Turke finding it difficult to carry in few daies, left it besieged; and passing the riuer of Boristhene, found there the Chancellor of Poland intrencht vpon the borders, in a strong place and of good aduantage, with forty thousand Polacks and Cossacks, and eight thousand high Dutch, sent by the Emperor in aid of the King of Poland. The Prince was incamped at Caminitza, and strongly intrenched with sixty thousand souldiers; the King abiding in Cracovia, with the Nobilitie and his Court. The grand Signior facing the Trenches vpon Boristhene, with the multitude of his army inclosed them round, and shut vp all the passages; sending presently the prince of the Tartars, Ieanbeagh-Ghiray-Han, with thirty thousand light horse to make incursions within the heart of Poland: who did great spoile, and brought away captiues twenty fiue thousand soules of all sorts; which dammage did not so much proceed from the will of the Prince, as M

from

A from a Captaine of his, a Nobleman of Tartarie called Kante-Emir-Emirze, in great fauor at that time with the Emperour: for it was thought that betweene the King of Poland, and the Prince of Tartarie, there was some secret intelligence by the vertue of money.

During the space of foure and thirty dayes that the Grand Seignior held these Trenches besieged, almost euery other day he gaue them terrible assaults, but was alway forced to retyre with losse. The Polacke in brauerie making some sallies, were also glad to recouer their strength; onely once they so farre aduanced in the euening with their shot vpon the quarter of the Ianizaries, that they made a great execution, and almost put the whole camp into disorder; and as the Turks themselues did confesse, if this sally had been giuen in the night, it had hazarded the confusion of the whole army: All which being seen by the Grand Signior,
B and little hope of aduancing further, for diuers reasons he was inforced to treat a cessation of Armes with the Chancellor. The first was, That he had spent so much time without any aduantage, and the Winter approched, whereby his army suffered great extremities of cold and other miseries, by reason of terrible raines which had carried away diuers tents, horses, and other cattell, and some part of his cannons. Secondly, the prouision of sodder was become so deare, that diuers forsooke their horses for want of means to feed them: besides the great mortalitie of men, of fluxes, Feuers, & colds, and the horses of Asia not vsed to such a climat, that many men of quality that came out with ten & 12, were compelled to return on foot. Thirdly, the army either for wearinesse, or for discontent receiued from the Emperour himselfe, for
C his narrownesse and auarice shewed to the soldier, contrary to the glorious example of his ancestors in like enterprises, not only refused to fight, but were little lesse than mutined. Fourthly, this attempt from the beginning proceeding meerely from the obstinacie of the Grand Signior, contrary to the counsell of most of his Visiers, who desired generally a peace: at their solicitation and by the mediation of Radula Prince of Valachia, both parts were easily induced to treaty, and the Chancellor was drawn to send a Secretarie to the Grand Signior; where it was agreed, as followeth.

First, That the Emperor should raise his army, and retyre from the confines of Poland; and the Tartars as the occasioners of this war should send an Emirze to reside as a pledge from ensuing incursions. The Chancellor promising in the name of the King of Poland, to keep another in the court of the Prince of Tar-
D tarie, with condition to pay yearely as aforesaid forty thousand florins (an antient pretention of the Tartars) as a donatiue from the King of Poland; promising moreouer, for the better confirmation of the future peace, to maintain a Resident in the Port of the Ottoman Court; and vpon the arriuall of euery such Embassador, to send a Present conformable to the Ledgiers of other Christian Princes. And as the Grand Signior was obliged for the Tartars that they should forbeare all inuasions vpon the Polacke; so the Polacks should bind themselues in behalfe of the Cossacks, that they should commit no roberies in the dominion of the Grand Signior. And further couenanting in the name of the Polish Merchants for the Priuiledge of free traffike, to make a Present of an hundred thousand chequines in plate, sables, and Bulgary hides; alway intended with this reseruation, that this treaty should not prejudice or bind, vntill the Grand Signior did send a Chiaus to the King of Poland with these ouertures, that he might haue time to assem-
E ble his Parliament, and there to resolue to send an Embassador with ample authoritie to treat and conclude a finall peace in the Port. Whereupon the Grand Signior being satisfied with these conditions, did dispatch presently his Nuntio into Poland, and suddenly to the great content of all his army, he raised his camp, and returned to Adrianople.

The losse in the Turkish & Polish armie.

By relation of diuers present in that war, it was reported, That there died in the Turkes camp, by the sword, famin, sickneſſe and cold, about eighty thousand men, and aboue an hundred thousand horse; and the remaine at their returne, appearing so naked, sickely, and poore, made euident demonstration of the great losse and miserie sustained. The Polacks in their trenches lost aboue twenty thousand by the famine suffered in their besieging: so that if the winter and other wants had not constrained the grand Signior to rise with some pretence of honor, and that he had staid a few daies longer, they had bin forced to render or perish: which
F is euident, for that they were glad and prompt to accept of any agreement, although as yet there was nothing fully concluded.

The grand Signior being informed that the Emperour of Germany had sent aid of eight thousand Dutch to the King of Poland, and inraged that hee had so little aduanced in that attempt, pretending that the Emperour by giuing succors had broken the peace; to vent his choler, contrary to the aduice of his Councell, presently vpon his arising from the confines of Poland, in his camp proclaimed war against Germany for the next Spring; commanding vpon great penaltie, all his souldiers and slaues to be ready for that inuasion. Which gaue great discontent to the army, insomuch as they did almost publiquely professe, that they neither could nor would follow him. And conformable to this his rash resolution, hee gaue order to Kante-Emir-Emirze, a Tartarian captain then Bassa of Silistra, to winter with 20000 of his soldiers in the frontier. Presently hereupon Cæsar Gallo the Emperours Embassadour was stayed at Buda; the Grand Signior pretending, that hee had promised vpon his life, that the Emperor would giue no aid to the King of Poland. Not considering that he himself contrary to the peace, the summer before had surprised Vatz a town of Hungary, and had permitted many of his souldiers to follow the prince of Transylvania, as Voluntiers against the Emperor.

1621. The grand Signior inraged at the Emperour for aiding the Pole.

The King of Poland hearing of this resolution against the Emperour, called the Chiaus sent about the Treaty, before him, and told him, That if the grand Signior should proceed to make war vpon the Emperour for his occasion, that he could conclude no peace with him, being obliged to take part with the Emperor as his deare brother and Confederate. Which message the Chiaus sent to the grand Signior when hee was yet at Adrianople, where hee either purposed to Winter to affright the Emperour, or to quicken the Polacke to a conclusion of peace; cold in his sudden pretence, by the persuasions of the Visiers and Mufti hee changed his resolution, and tooke his way to Constantinople, where hee arriued the last of December.

Now it being giuen out, That the Emir of Syria or Sidon was in rebellion, and that hee had possessed himself of the city and castle of Tripolie, the grand Signior pretended to go in person against him, and gaue out 60000 Checquines to prepare his carriages and pauilions; and tooke order to prouide his palace in Aleppo, determining to passe that way, to amuse and raise suspition in the Persian: and likewise commanded the army of Asia to be in readines by the end of the month of April; and gaue out commission for victuals, munition, and other necessaries. The Mufti, Hoja, and other the Visiers who knew not the mistery, misliking this counsel, with great instances and reasons dissuaded him, as being a course very dangerous to his estate. First, that his Maiesty should go in person, leauing all Greece desolate, and commit the care and gouernment of his Imperial seat to a poor Chimacham or lieutenant, it not being probable, that the Emir of Sidon would stay to oppose himself against the force of his royal army, but rather make an escape, and retyre himself to some part of Christendom: and that a Generall by land, and the Captain Bassa Admirall of the sea, with his fleet of Gallies, would suffice to punish and destroy him. Besides, if his Maiestie vndertooke the journey in person, it was necessary that all his soldiers should attend him, which were a charge superfluous and aboue the enterprise, and almost impossible for them, hauing bin so harrassed and distressed in the late inuasion of Poland; who did euen publiquely murmure that they would not go. For which reasons the King seemed to change his resolution, and was contented to make a General by land, with the army of Asia: to which charge was named the Bassa of Cairo. The next day after, the grand Signior comming to the Arsenal, he called the Visier Bassa, the Admiral, and the great Treasurer before him; where it was concluded, to make ready at least an hundred gallies: for the preparation wherof sixty thousand Checquines were then deliuered; the Visier promising to furnish the rest of the whole charge with expedition, of his own purse, and to take it vp vpon the Kings Assignations. Wherupon the grand Signior with great content did vest them as a mark of fauor, and gaue present commission to the Admiral to be ready and to depart by the midst of Aprill following: and for his better strength he gaue a command to send for aids to Tunes and Algier. Which was thought requisite, because it was reported that the prince Philibert of Savoy, then Viceroy of Sicilie, had in readinesse sixty Gallies and six Gallions at Messina; which force was doubted would be imploied to giue succor to the Emir of Sidon, or to reuenge the attempt and late sacke of Manfredonia. So that they were with all expedition rigging and preparing the Armado in the Arsenall: and for prouision and preuention of the worst, there was ordained twelue small Gallies

and

A and the ordinary fleet of frigots to keep the black sea from the incursion of the Cossacks: and though it was giuen out that this army was only prepared against the Emir, yet many that vnderstood the secrets of that empire, knowing it to be too great, did beleeue it should bee sent to preuent a generall reuolt, which was then murmured and suspected in Asia. 1621.

About this time, contrary to the counsel and wil of all his ministers, the grand Signior married the grand child of a Sultana wife to Pertau Bassa, only for her beauty, without any pompe: which was ill interpreted in that court; his ancestors of late yeares not vsually taking wiues, especially of a Turkish race, in respect of kindred. This and other inconstancies, with extream auarice, made him odious to the souldier; and his daily haunting the streets on foot, somtimes disguised with a page or two, prying into houses and tauernes like a petty Officer, B increased his contempt euen in the city. The grand Signior maried.

Secret order was giuen about the same time to Diac-Mahomet Bassa of Canisia, and to Gelut-Emirze a Tartarian, to vnite themselues with Bethlem Gabor against the Emperour of Germanie. But the Bassa of Buda did aduertise the graund Signior, That Gabor had concluded peace with the Emperour; which news did greatly displease him, beeing ardent in the desire of war.

The peace between the grand Signior and the king of Poland was not yet fully concluded; but Embassadors weekly expected at the Port from Poland and other places, to hasten a full consummation therof. Among which, Sr Thomas Rowe Knight, Embassador in ordinary from his Majesty of great Brittain to the grand Signior, arriued there the first of Ianuary, and had C his audience speedily, when he made this speech vnto him in English: The King of great Britains Embassador arriueth at the Port.

Most high and mighty Emperor, his sacred Maiestie the King of great Brittaine, France, and Ireland, my most gratious Lord and Souerain, according to the antient league of friendship and amitie, of long time begun and continued between the most noble Ancestors of your Maiesties, and in his royall person confirmed by his sundry Embassadors and Letters, both to your renowned father, and to your Imperiall Maiesty; being fully determined on his part, to maintain and inuiolably to hold a fair and good peace and correspondencie with your Maiesty; hath commanded and sent mee with his Letters of credence, and friendly present, to reside as his Embassador in your royall Court. Not doubting but your Imperiall D Maiesty will accept them, and receiue me his vnworthy seruant with your wonted honor and fauour: and that you will giue credit vnto me in diuers matters of importance which hee hath commanded me to deliuer in his name; comprehended in fiue articles written in this Memoriall: And that you would be pleased to do therin according to the royall friendship of his Maiesty and your princely wisedom and justice. The particulars whereof I desire your Maiesty to reade and consider at your ease and leisure, and to affoord mee your royall answer; his Maiesty resting assured he shall receiue content and satisfaction worthy his Royall friendship.

The Letter of Credence sent by Sr Thomas Rowe.

E IAmes by the grace of God, King of great Brittain, France, and Irelend, Defender of the Christian Faith, against all those that falsly professe the name of Iesus, &c. To the most high and mighty Prince Sultan Osman Han, chiefe Lord and Commander of the Ottoman kingdom and Empire of the East, sendeth health and greeting.

WE doubt not but you receiued our Letters sent by our subiect Iohn Chapman; whereby we signified vnto you our royall pleasure, to recall and discharge our Embassador Sir Iohn Ayre *from his imployment and residence in your Court; whom wee desired you in your princely fauor to dismisse for our especiall seruice, and to receiue the bearer of our said Letters as Agent, to remaine in your protec-*F tion, for the better support and maintenance of our subiects which do trade and abide in your dominions, and for the aduancement and continuance of the mutuall commerce and friendship which hath bin a long time contracted between your predecessors and ours, vntill the arriuall of Sir Thomas Rowe, of whom as then we made choice to send vnto your Port as our Embassadour; as well to propound vnto you diuers things things necessary for the generall peace, as to reside in your court for our particular seruice. Notwithstanding lest the said letters should not come safely to your royall hands, wee haue thought fit again to make known our purpose of recalling our former Embassador Sir Iohn Ayre, and to desire you to discharge and dismisse him from your Port, and to receiue and admit in his roome our trusty and welbeloued Seruant Sir Thomas Rowe, one of the principall Gentlemen of our Court, and of our Priuy Chamber; whom wee haue expresly sent, and whom we authorise vnder our great Seal of England, as our Embassador to reside at your Port, and to negotiate in our name, and in the behalfe of our subiects abiding within your Kingdomes. Of whose fidelitie and discretion as we are well assured, so we doubt not but he will giue you good content in his demeanor and negotiation with you. Wee haue also thought fit to put you in minde of those common Rouers vpon the seas, who are enemies to the Lawes of Nations, and spoilers of the quiet & peaceable Merchant, by whom amitie and friendship is maintained betweene Kings and Princes: That you would please to exercise your great and mighty power to chastise and destroy them, as Traitors to your honour, and infringers of the sacred and publique peace. In full assurance that you will extend the same good respect vnto vs, as your royall Ancestours haue don vnto our most renowned predecessours, whereby that antient League and commerce may be inviolably maintained beiween both our Kingdomes, which on our part we shall be very loth to infringe or dissolue: We doe by these our Letters recommend vnto your princely fauour this our said trusty seruant and Embassadour, to reside and remaine in your Port, on our behalfe to treat with you in all affaires for the publique weale of our Dominions, and for the general peace of vs both, and our Allyes and friends, as also for the support and aid of all our subiects which doe liue and trade within your Estates and Countries: To whose good discretion we commend their affaires, and by whose industry and mediation we conceiue our people may bee relieued in their iust and reasonable demands, to the perfect maintenance and assurance of that mutuall crmmerce which hath so long time beene continued betweene our royall progenitors. And as we haue great cause to professe our grateful acknowledgement for many fauors which our former Embassadors and all other our subiects haue and doe receiue from your Royall hands, so in our princely loue we do intreat you to take knowledge of, and to command redresse for diuers oppressions and wrongs done vnto some of our said subiects persons and goods that liue vnder the assurance of your friendship with vs; which we haue formerly signified to our Residents at your Port, but as we verily beleeue, they haue neuer come vnto your eares, which are open to the iust complaints of all strangers: wherof we haue now giuen charge to our seruant and Embassadour to acquaint you with more at large. Vnto whom we desire you to giue protection and credit in what soeuer he shall moue or propound, for the establishing, confirmation, and inlargement in all occasions, of those liberties and priuiledges which our subiects haue antiently enioyed, by the benignitie of your self and of your royall Ancestors; and in all other things and occasions, wherin he hath or shall receiue our commands, as if our self did communicate them with you, which wee doubt not shall redound vnto the great vtilitie and honor of both our Empires. And so we wish you health and true felicitie.

Dated at our royall city of London the sixth day of September, Anno Dom. 1621, and of our reign of great Brittain, France, and Ireland, the nineteenth.

Articles propounded by the Embassador to the grand Signior.

First, his sacred Maiestie of great Brittaine, according to the most noble and renowned League of Amitie betweene your Maiesties, and your Crownes and Dominions, hath commaunded mee to renew the antient Capitulations and Priuiledges granted by your Imperiall Maiestie and your royall Ancestours, and therein to mooue your Maiestie, That you will be pleased to inlarge and extend your fauour vnto our Nation that liue vnder your protection, and to giue remedie to diuers iniuries done vnto them by the Customers of this royall Port, Aleppo, Smyrna, Scio, Patras, and other places, contrary to the iustice and honour of your Maiestie: And to giue order for seuerall commaunds in these places, in all our iust occasions; that both the fame of your justice may bee renowned, and the friendship of your Maiesties confirmed, and the correspondence and commerce betweene your Dominions established and increased.

Secondly, His Maiestie hath commaunded me to offer himselfe as a Mediatour of peace, to accommodate

A commodate the late breach with the kingdom of Poland: the King of Poland hauing sent his Embassador expresse into England to desire his aid, he hath thought it more agreeable to his honor, and to the antient league of friendship, to vse his credit with your Maiestie, to procure the generall quiet and peace of the princes of Christendom; desiring your Maiesty to consider his interest in the publique cause, and not to despise the forces of so many as may partake in the quarrell: which if your Maiesty shal hearken vnto the rather for his sake, as your royall Ancestor hath done in the like occasion, his Maiesty will accept it as a respect of your loue, which will assure and increase the commerce and friendship of your Dominions; in which his Maiestie hath giuen me more particular and full Instructions to treat and mediate in this businesse.

Thirdly, his Maiestie hath commanded me to moue your Imperiall Maiesty for the release of diuers of III.
B the Polish Nobilitie, now your captiues; and for one Scottish gentleman, a subiect of his Maiesty my royall Master.

Fourthly, his Maiestie desires that you will take some order with the pyrats of Tunes and Algiers, who IV.
shelter themselues vnder your royall protection (to the great dishonour of your Maiestie) and doe many robberies vpon the subiects of Kings and princes in amitie and league with your Empire, and take euen the ships sent vnto your royall Port. Admonishing your Maiestie to consider, that if they be suffered to continue, they will occasion the dissolution of all commerce and trade; being common enemies to all honest Merchants, by whom the friendship of these kingdoms are maintained and increased. And that if your Imperiall Maiestie please not to exercise your Royall power and authoritie to bridle or destroy them; that then you will not take it in ill part, that his Maiestie with other Princes his Allyes, shall make an army to
C punish both him and all others that receiue and cherish them: which hath hitherto bin forborne onely in respect of your Maiestie; and that the towns where they harbor themselues are or ought to bee vnder your Imperiall command.

Fiftly, his Maiestie hath commanded me to require justice and restitution of a great sum of money ta- V.
ken from Arthur Garaway, here imprisoned by force and iniurie in the time of Achmet Bassa: wherof his Maiesties former Embassadors haue complained to Sultan Achmat your Maiesties renowned father, and to Mehemet Bassa Vizier, to Hussen Bassa, to the Hoja of the King, and to the Mufti; wherin your Maiesties most noble father gaue commaund for our satisfaction. All the said great Officers hauing heard the cause, vpon examination giuing their testimonies, of the great wrong don vnto him: Mehemet Bassa also writing a letter, by the order of your Maiesties royall father, promising justice and restitution:
D which his Maiestie doth yet expect, and again demand. And hauing so often written in this cause, his Maiestie will not beleeue, but that in justice and honor this royall court would do right; imputing the fault to his own Ministers and Embassadors, that they neuer complained to your Imperiall Maiesty, according to his Highnesse command. Also his Maiestie hath commaunded mee to require and desire your Maiestie to giue me your Royall answer in all these particulars, by your letters in writing, as shall be fit for your own honor, and conformable to the antient league of amitie and friendship between your Royall Majesties.

His Maiesties Embassador not many daies after sent to the Vizier, who had promised him an answer vnto these articles: Who returned him this that followeth.

E To the first he said, That the Emperor his Master had giuen him order to renew the Capitulations, and to make any such additions as should be requisit, agreeable to their law, & conformable to their antient league; and that therin the Embassador should finde no difficultie: for they honored his Maiestie, and were resolued to giue him assurance of their will to maintain a true friendship; and therfore desired the Embassador to draw and prepare the Capitulations, and send them to him and the Chancellor, who would consider them, and being such as were fit to be granted, he should haue speedy order. The grand Signiors answer.

To the second the Vizier answered with great subtilty; First, iustifying the occasion of the war, and imputing the fault to the Cossackes, maintained by the Pole to rob euen at the port of Constantinople: therfore that the Emperor could not in honor but chasten and destroy F them, hauing first by message demanded justice against them; and now his Master beeing ingaged with great charge, and in his honor, he could make no peace with them who had beguiled him: pretending that they had no other intention but the war, becausse hauing raised his Camp, and dissolued his Army, the Polacks now scorned him, and kept no faith, neither sending Embassadour nor messenger, no not any letter since their returne. That therefore they could could not hearken to any condition: and that his Maiestie of great Brittain did not value the grand Signiors honor in this motion. G

To the third he replied, That the motion for the prisoners was vnseasonable, because in order it should follow the general treaty and making peace; which if finished, his Maiestie of great Brittain should finde, that for his sake all those mentioned in the Memorial should be free, except only the prince Coresky, who had bin the cause of many troubles, and had made escape from prison formerly.

To the fourth he made protestation in the grand Signiors name against the pirats, offring that his Maiesties Embassador should haue what commands, what message he would desire, in company of any Englishman.

To the fifth hee replied, That it was an old obsolete quarrell, and that the Embassador did him injurie to presse him, when in the time of three former Viziers his predecessors could obtaine no reliefe. Therefore he would not looke backe vpon the actions of other men, nor rake among the bones of the dead; but he desired the Embassador should rest satisfied, That while he had the honor to gouerne, there should no wrong be done vnto the English Nation; and that he would heare all complaints, so as no man should need to looke backe vpon his actions. H

This perfunctory answer did not much satisfie his Maiesties Embassador, but that hee desired some other of effect, being loth to accept of generalities; and therfore required a direct reply for his own discharge. Which was promised after much pressing, by the Visier who had first vndertaken the same. I

1622. The long stay of the Duke of Sbaraskie (chosen extraordinarie Embassadour by the King of Poland, to consummate the peace between him and the grand Signior) did much trouble the Emperors court, and especially the Visier, who procured a cessation of arms, but that a letter was writ by the King of Poland, which did a little prolong their hopes. In the mean time the Emperor divulged a pretence to visit Mecha, the tombe of Mahomet his great Prophet; contrary to the counsell and instance of all his Visiers that knew not the secret, and euen to the hasard of a generall reuolt; for they were jealous, that vnder colour of that voyage he had some other designe; and it was feared, the duke would not proceed to follow him at random, nor treat with his Deputies left at the Port. For the Polacks seemed in performing and assuring the peace, a little too glorious of their good successe; and the Nobilitie not so obedient to the King as that he could absolutely command. Which did both trouble their agents at the Port, and discontent the Turkes: so that a little motion of the Cossackes or Tartars at that time (spoil being both their liuelyhoods) had kindled new fires, and had disturbed or quite broken off the treaty. K

In the mean space the grand Signior writ his letter to his Maiesty of great Brittaine, in answer to his royal letter by his Embassador; wherin was contained a satisfactorie reply to all the particulars of those fiue articles deliuered to him: & the grand Signior had such demonstration of great care to giue his Maiesty all content and satisfaction, that his letter was presented to his Embassador with ceremonies of honor, requiring that it should bee sent by an expresse messenger, and gaue command for a safe conduct for that purpose. The true translated copy wherof doth immediatly follow. L

Prince Osman, euer victorious.

The grand Signiors letter to his Maiesty of great Brittain.

TO the mightie Prince, renowned amongst the Maiesties of the Princes of the Law of Iesus, obeyed of the great Potentates followers of the Messia, the onely Director of the important affaires of the Nazaren people; Soueraigne of the limits of power and honour; Lord of aduancement and authoritie, the most glorious Iames, King of great Brittain, France, and Ireland; to whose last dayes Wee wish all felicitie. M

THis our Imperiall arriuing you shall know, That your honourable and famous Embassadour Sir Thomas Rowe is with your Royall and acceptable Letter come vnto our happy Port, the refuge of the Princes and Commanders of the world. Wherof the sincere contents and substance was, That our antient Capitulations should be renewed, and diuers Articles therein reformed and explained, and some

A some other inserted. And whereas certaine Customers and other officers of our Empire, haue often transgressed our Royall agreements, and done many violences and injuries to the Merchants your subjects, that for the time to come they may be secured from all oppression: and concerning the affaires of the Polacks, that the enmity and war lightly begun betweene vs and them, might be conuerted into peace and friendship; and that there should be established a sincere league and amity, as in the time of our Ancestors. And that diuers Noblemen of Poland, and one of your Majesties Subjects now detained in our captiuity, should be set at liberty. Complaining also against the Inhabitants of Tunes and Algier, That they who haue violated our Imperiall Capitulations, Amity, and League, ought to be duely punished. And lastly, That whereas one of your subjects named Arthur Garraway, from whom vpon a pretension there was a great fine taken, and other wrong done vnto his person, you desire that his cause may be with justice
B reuewed: All which being made knowne vnto vs, with prudent and mature deliberation we haue both duely weighed, and perfectly conceiued them. Wherefore by the fauour of the great and prosperous God we do promise, that in all these matters propounded, we will apply our Imperiall care and diligence: And we haue already giuen our high and expresse command, that our antient Capitulations shall be renewed and confirmed. And such conditions as are correspondent to the peace, amity, and league betweene vs, shall in due time be granted. And there shall be sent with all expedition, our Royall Edicts to all our
(a) Beglerbegs, (b) Beghs (c) Cadees, Gouernors, Customers, Farmors, Superintendents, and Commissio- ners of our Reuenues, that from henceforth none of them shall giue any molestation to any of your Merchants or other Subjects. And insomuch as our happy gates are euer open to any, who with sincerity seeke our friendship, good will, and fauour; and the table of our liuely Graces is alwaies prepared for all men:
C Therefore whensoeuer on the behalfe of the Polacks, an Embassadour shall arriue at our high Court, and kisse the hemme of our vesture, and repent of their former errors, and present vnto vs a good friendship and sincere league, and shall desire our fauour and amity; by the mediation of your Resident now in our Imperiall Port, all matters shall be pacified and ended, and with a pen we will blot out all former differences. And the peace being so established your instances and desires for them shall haue gratefull acceptance with vs, and we will giue fit order for the prisoners.

(a) Viceroyes.
(b) Presidents.
(c) Iudges.

To the Beglerbeghs of Tunes and Algiers, and to all other our slaues in those parts, we will presently send our expresse and high commands, and other orders, that they shal neuer hereafter trasgresse the tenor of our Imperiall Capitulations, nor commit any injustice, nor do any violence to the Subjects of your Majesty. And concerning the businesse of the Merchant Arthur Garraway, wherein you haue informed vs,
D that there hath beene taken from him by oppression a great estate and faculty, in the time of our father Achmat Han of happy memory (the Vizier Achmat Bassa being then Deputy here) vpon pretence that diuers Mussulmens goods were found in his hands: which cause being now ouerpassed many yeares, you require a new hearing and inquisition. By the grace of the great God it shall be reuiewed and examined with all Iustice: in the processe and issue whereof you shall be assured to receiue a right and fit answer from your Embassador now remaining in our Court. And in our time we shall neuer permit, that any the least injury or injustice shall be done to any. Giuing you assurance on our behalfe, that the foundation and nerues of peace, friendship, and league betweene vs, are of vs streightly preserued, continued, and encreased: and your amity, correspondency, and loue, is euer respected, esteemed, and pretious with vs.
Therefore in the meane time, while our capitulations are making perfect, and that the full conclusion may
E be certified vnto you; your Embassadour hauing solicited vs for an answer to the propositions made by you; by an expresse Messenger, Robert Rowe, this our Imperiall letter is written and sent vnto you. Which arriuing, we hope that as in times past, the antient, perfect, and acceptable course of friendship, amity, and league, adorned with aboundant sincerity, resplendant loue, and benigne correspondency on your part, hath beene alway obserued and maintained; so it is now also requisite, that you preserue the same affections, with all pure, firme, and constant good will, grace, and goodnesse: or rather that you aduance and encrease therein, as we shall euer do by all sincere waies of loyall friendship and holy peace, nourishing it with our perfect intention and affectionate diligence, neuer admitting any occasion that may be thereunto prejudiciall.

F Giuen in our Imperiall City of Constantinople, the first day of the Moneth Gemaziel Achir (or Aprill) in the yeare of the departure of our Prophet Mahomet 1031; that is, Anno Christi Dei pari, 1622.

The Grand Signior discontented since his disgrace in Poland, as soone as he ecame to Constantinople, meditating reuenge vpon his souldiers, and finding that his pretence for Sidon did not relish, gaue out that he would passe into Asia to visit Mecha the tombe of his false Prophet; but hauing secret intelligence with Delauir Bassa, he prepared a sele & army of his followers to be ready in Asia, to execute his secret designe. G

The Grand Signior destrous of peace with the Polacke.

To make this voyage the more secure in apparance, hee seemed content to accept of any treaty with the Polacks, euen to conditions both of disaduantage and dishonour, for his estates in Hungary, he re-inforced the frontiers with diuers troups; and though he were much troubled at the league betweene the Emperour of Germany and Bethlem Gabor, yet he dissembled it so, as that he would not displease the Transyluanian, but rather offered new succours, and forbearance of his tribute. From the incursions of the Cossackes he hoped to assure himselfe by the treaty of the Poles; and in occasion of breach, he had the Tartars ready to requite them; and for more security, he added to the number of his gallies appointed to keepe the Blacke Sea. The common people and Visiers of the Port which loued rest, and knew not the designe, were much troubled and discontent at this journy; and made many remonstances to him of the inconuenience and danger, to leaue the seat of his Empire to the trust of a Deputy, in a time when Bethlem Gabor was newly reconciled to the Germane Emperour, and therefore not to be trusted; and the Polackes scarcely reconciled to him, and therefore to be mistrusted. Diuers other reasons were made to him, many petitions deliuered from the Church-men, Lawyers, and from all Estates. But melancholy reuenge had wholly possessed him, so that by no meanes he could be persuaded to desist. The souldierie passed so far as to threaten publiquely, and to protest they would not follow, but rather set vp another King in his absence, that should stay among them. In conclusion, carried by his owne fate to destruction, hauing first commanded away his Armado to the Leuant, and thereby disposed many of his souldiers, vpon Wednesday the seuenth of May, he began to passe ouer his tents and Pauilions to Asia side, with great quantities of treasure. The Ianizaries and Spahies, who had also secret intelligence vpon the King; his owne words and actions betraying some further proiect than a Pilgrimage (for he made preparations to carry away all his iewels and treasure euen defacing his palace, and taking from Churches, and his Ward-robes whatsoeuer could be conuerted to Bullion) suddenly met at the Hippodrome in the city, vpon a word giuen; and from thence ranne to the Seraglio in tumult, but without armes, and there according to their barbarous mutinies, cryed out for their King (hauing first taken order to stop the passage of any thing vpon the water.) Who appearing to them, asked, What this insolency meant, and what they pretended? They then, by the mouth of a multitude (for they had no head but that of the monster) demanded first, That he should not proceed in his purpose to go to Mecha, nor into Asia; but that he would abide in the city. Secondly, they required to haue deliuered to their fury, the great Visier Delauir Bassa, the Hoja or Confessor of the King, the Caslariaga, Gouernour of the women, the Deftardar or Treasurer, the Caddeleschar or chiefe Iustice, and some others, as enemies to the State, and consenting to this voyage, which they pretended would be the ruine of the Empire. The first, after a little dispute, the King granted vnto them, promising to giue ouer his journey; but they not content, exacted it in writing. To the second he replied, That it was dishonour to him to haue his seruants torne from him without order of Iustice: but persuaded them to haue patience, to stay vntill Saturday, the next Diuan or publique Councell, where they should appeare, and if they were found culpable, they should receiue punishment; not meaning to performe any of this, but to get time and allay their present fury. These fellowes not content with this moderate answer, vndertooke to know that these officers were guilty, and therefore that they needed no other witnesse, tryall, nor judge, but themselues; and with extreame clamor called to haue them rendered. But the King refusing to giue them any other satisfaction, and they vnprepared for force, returned into the city, which now was all in feare, euery house and shop shut vp, expecting a generall sacke. But they followed the way of their owne hatred, and first went into the house of the Hoja, which they brake and pillaged: But not finding him, they proceeded to the great Visiers, who made some defence, and they (being vnarmed) beat them off; and so they separated, being now euening, but yet kept a guard in some parts of the town. H I K L M

That night the King made an attempt to send ouer to Asia side, but was preuented; and to fortifie

A fortifie and defend the Seraglio, which was strongly walled about, and had alway in it of houshold seruants about three thousand: but it seemed no man would arme in his cause: for the next morning the Mutiniers assembled againe, and taking their arms, went first to the Mufti, or Arch-priest among them, and inforced him and diuers others to accompany them to the Court, where they anew demanded those officers, but with more instance and fury. In the meane time the Hoja, Cadalescher, and Testerdar fled, and were not in long time discouered. The Visier retired to the King, and persuaded him earnestly to go ouer in person in his owne boats (which from his garden he might easily doe) to Asia, and there to take horse, and hee would secure him from all perill; but the King would not moue, bidding him stay, confident and assured that he would punish these Rebels.

The Ianizaries mutiny against the Grand Signior.

B The wise old man seeing this constancy or obstinacy, desired leaue to shift for himselfe; which he tooke or obtained, and so got away to the hermitage of a Saint renowmed amongst them; who (like himselfe) betraied him, yet did him the fauour as not to deliuer him to the multitude, but persuaded and carried him backe to the Kings house. At this time it was disputed in the Seraglio about the deliuery of those officers; the Emperour refusing, the Rebels clamouring and threatening; insomuch as he began to feare they would breake in, and in their rage do worse than was yet pretended. Whereupon (whether by the Kings order, or by his owne consent, willing to be the peace offering) the braue Visier went out to them, and with a good assuredneese demanded what they sought of him, and wherein he had offended. At first they were amased; but one insolent villaine breaking the generall modesty, they answered C him with their swords, and suddenly cut him in peeces.

The great Visier slaine by the Ianizaries.

The Emperour seeing their fury so outragious, had now more cause to doubt, and retired himselfe, then too late, when he had lost his faithfull Counsellor; and would haue fled into Asia, but could not, yet he conueyed himselfe into a priuate place prepared by his Bostangi Bassa, or chiefe Gardener. The Rebels continued without in their madnesse, asking for the King, and for more sacrifices. But the seruants protesting they knew not where he was, they said they must haue a King, and if he would not appeare, they would make another: and hauing a while attended, they resolued to enter the Palace (but first tooke a generall oath not to sacke the Imperiall Throne, which they called their House and their Honour) and there seeking for the King, not able to finde him, they extorted by confession the Caslariaga, and slew D him; and then they demanded for Mustapha, vncle to Osman, by him formerly deposed, a man esteemed rather holy (that is, franticke) than wise, and indeed fitter for a Cell than a Scepter. The King the first day of this tumult had put Mustapha into a vault with two Negro women, without bread or drinke; in which estate these new electors found him, almost naked, and halfe pined. At first sight he thought they had beene the messengers of death: but that feare passed ouer, and his first request was a cup of water. Whom they tooke vp, and instantly proclaimed him their Emperour; which he was loth to accept, in a manner ashamed to be raised to that dignity. How vnstable are the estates of the greatest Princes! for he that was but euen now in the jawes of death, naked, starued, and dying for thirst, is become a great Monarch, may drinke gold, or the bloud of innocents.

The Ianizaries demand Mustapha.

E The souldiers as yet not knowing what was become of Osman, and loth to trust Mustapha in the palace, carried him in triumph to the old Seraglio, and there left him; departing to the sacke of the Visiers house, and so in the euening to their Rendeuous, where they kept both good guard and good order in the city, from fires and other insolencies. Sultan Osman amased with these newes, so soone as they had left the court, came out, and called to councell in the night Huzein Bassa late Visier in the Polish war, and the Aga of the Ianizaries, both faithfull to him, and demanded their aduice: first hauing sent to the old Seraglio, to practise the women there to strangle Mustapha; but some of them taking his part, a new vprore began in the house between that Sex; and the soldiers that kept watch hearing the noise, entred in and rescued him, & from thence remoued him to the chambers of the Ianizaries, where they garF ded him for that night in an ill lodging. All this while, Osman consults what course to take. These two his friends, and some others, tell him that the case was desperat, and could not be cured but by a desperat remedy: and therefore they agreed, that the Aga should go and persuade with the Mufti; and that the King in the morning should suddenly present himselfe to the soldiers at their owne dore, and make experience what his presence, his submission, and his beneuolence promised, could worke, to moue them to loyalty or compassion. Which counsell early in the morning they put in practise. The King accompanied with the Mufti (who neuer consented to his deposing, though he fauoured the souldiers against the Visier) with Huzein Bassa, and about twelue horsmen, went directly to the Ianizaries Colledge, where Mustapha was kept, and there in teares made them an oration; offering great recompence, repenting of his errour, and finally inuoked them by the merits of his father and all his Ancestors, to haue some pity vpon their true Master. The multitude (tam prona in misericordiam quam immodica sæuitia fuerat; sometime as prone to pitty as they were before to hatred) now knew not what to do; a silent murmure ran among them, and they were halfe conuerted: but the Aga of the Ianizaries thinking to merit of the King, and beginning to plead vnseasonably for him, with some harsh words of vpbraidure (vt natura maris omni flatu venti turbida; as the nature of the sea is to swell with euery blast of winde) anew moued their fury, so that they cried out Treason, and fell vpon him and Huzein Bassa and cut them into peeces, euery man taking a part of their flesh to satiate their reuenge. The Mufti would speake, but was withdrawne by some, for respect to his place, and with difficulty conueied away. Now the poore Osman saw his friends slaine, and knew not which way to conuert himselfe, but binding vp his eies with a napkin, expected death as the last of their fury. But they carried him first before Mustapha, and accused him as the disturber of the peace of the Empire, and demanded sentence against him (More vulgi suum quisque flagitium alijs obiectans.) The forsaken Prince pleaded for life, and the new King knew not how to condemne, but nodded and agreed to all that was propounded. At last they consulted with themselues, and put him vpon an horse (an insolent Spahy changing turbants with him) and sent him away prisoner to the seuen towers, vnder good gard (in his passage begging a draught of water at a fountaine) and then returned to their new master, and placed him in the Seraglio and Imperiall Throne; where he had need to haue good broaths and nourishment to restore his decayed body.

Daout Bassa strangleth Sultan Osman in prison.

The souldiers now thought all was done, and (only sacking the houses of Huzein Bassa and some others their conceiued enemies) returned in quiet to their seuerall lodgings, and had no further malice. But the new Visier Daout Bassa, made by Mustapha, knew well, if Osman liued, that this storme might passe ouer, and he would as easily, and by the same means returne to his estate, as he fell from it (vulgus vt mos est cuiusque noui motus cupidum:) Therefore he consulted with some few interessed in Mustapha's preferment, and thereby obnoxius to Osman, to search how many of the Royall bloud were left aliue, and resolued if there remained two, to make an end of Osman. Two of his brothers were found, the one about thirteene, the other about nine yeares of age: and thereupon the Visier went himselfe to the prison with a packe of hangmen, and gaue order to strangle the vnfortunate Prince: who now hauing had no rest in two nights, and thinking himselfe secure for a season, was newly falne asleep: but awaked by the comming of these messengers, asked, What newes? and blaming their sudden intrusion, they at first stood amazed, and the King made shew to defend himselfe; but a strong knaue strooke him on the head with the battle-axe, and the rest leaping vpon him, strangled him with much ado. Thus one of the greatest Monarchs in the World was first affronted by mutined troups, his owne slaues, almost vnarmed, and few in number, no man taking vp a sword to defend him: and they who began this madnesse, not meaning to hurt him, by the increase of their owne fury, which had no bounds, deposed him against their owne purpose, and at last exposed his life, against their will, to the counsels of other men whom they equally hated. And now they mourned for their dead King as freshly, as they raged vnreasonably; knowing they had stained their honour, being the first of their Emperors they euer betraied, and that they had set vp another that in all likelihood they must change for disability. Nunquan tulit documenta fors majora quam fragili loco starent superbi.

This was the last act of the life of Sultan Osman; but his intents and great designes, which drew vpon him this fatall blow, will not be vnworthy the communication: the practises, reasons, secrets, and counsels, of all actions, being the soule of History, and res gesta but the bare carkasse: and, as many ages haue not produced so strange an example of the incertainty of humane greatnesse, so in the disposition thereof, and in the waies leading thereunto, there was

seene

A seene euidently the wonderful prouidence of God, in confounding the counsels of the worldly wise, who had laid a foundation of new greatnes, wherby this Prince aspired the vniuersall Monarchy. And the world may see vpon how weake foundations this Monarchy was at first builded, how easily it was now shaken & corrupted; how their Kings are subject to the rage of a few slaues, how Anarchy hath prepared in as easie prey to any able hand that would attempt it. From the inuasion of Poland all these changes tooke their beginning. Sultan Osman aduanced to the throne in his youth, full of heat and bloud, being of a great and haughty spirit, very couragious, strong of body, and a mortall hater of Christians, enuious of the glory of his ancestors, and ambitious to raise his name aboue any of theirs, had projected in himselfe the conquest of the remaines of the bordering Europe. But to so great designes, The Grand Signior his designe to conquer Europe.

B he had one vice that resisted all hope of prosperity, which was extreme auarice; vnnaturall to youth, and a symptome of the decrepit age of Monarchy: Vbi vires luxu corrumpebantur, contra veterem disciplinam & instituta majorum apud quos virtute quàm pecunia res militaris melius stetit. His first enterprise was that of Poland, moued by the incursions of the Cossackes; which then he vndertooke of his owne head, without the counsell of any of his Visiers (who in a tyranny grown to a height by ease, and wealth, are euer corrupt and lazie) and against the liking of all the souldiers, who (contrary to their institution, being married and fathers of families, entered into trades, receiuing nothing in war more than in peace, besides danger and trauell) are not easily drawne from their owne chimnies. This action he thought so easie, as he had disposed of his conquest, and diuided the liue lyons skinne. But being met vpon the

C borders with a poore army in comparison, he was first arrested at Chotyn, a little fortresse; which hee was faine to leaue behinde him vntaken; and then seeking to aduance into the plaine country, by forcing the trenches of the Chancellor of Poland opposed against him, he could neuer procure his Ianizaries to fight, though ingaging his person once or twice beyond the regard of his quality, and his owne troupes ready to mutine against him, or to forsake him; hee was at last enforced shamefully to raise his campe, and to accept of any treaty to saue his outward honour. In this attempt hee lost aboue a hundred thousand horses for want of fodder, and eighty thousand men for want of fighting: for they would rather die running, or pillaging, or eating, than in the face of the enemy. For this disgrace he conceiued so inward, and rooted an indignation against the Ianizaries, and so justly, that he often lamented

D himselfe, and complained, that he was no King that was subject to his own slaues, vpon whom he spent great treasures, and yet they would neither fight in war, nor obey in peace, without exacting new bounties and priuiledges. Delauir Bassa, a man of great wit and courage, lately called from the Easterne parts, where he had long gouerned with honor, who came in though late, yet in a very braue and warlike equipage, aboue all other his captains, was suddenly made great Visier, the former Huzein Bassa being in the same disgrace common with the souldier, though not in the same fault. This man was neuer bred at Court, but had liued many yeares in action, and so had neither faction nor dependance at the Port, but stood vpon himselfe and his owne merit: and being now vnexpectedly aduanced to this high dignity, he wrought vpon the Kings discontent, and nourished it: and in conclusion brake with him, That it was

E true he was no Emperor, nor could be safely aliue, while the Ianizaries had the power which they lately vsurped. Informing him, That they were corrupted from their antient institution, and were lazie cowards, giuen ouer to ease and lust: Et animi per libidines corrupti nihil honestum remanet. But if his Majesty would pull vp his spirits, and follow his aduice, hee would prouide him a new soldiery about Damascus, of the Coords, men euer bred in the frontier, with hardnesse and warre, of great courage and experience; and that of them he should erect a new Militia, that should wholly depend of him, entertaining forty thousand in pay, which should alway be his guard: and that in the distribution of euery Prouince, he should constitute that the Begler-begh in his gouernment should traine some of the inhabitants, who in all occasions of making a great army, should be in readinesse, and thereby he should spare

F infinite treasures spent vpon these drones that eate vp his estate; and with men of new spirits and hopes, he should be enabled to do greater matters than any of his ancestors: but withall he desired the King to communicate this counsell to no man; nor to trust his life vpon anothers secrecy. Delauir Bassa neuer reuealing himselfe to any but the King, who extremely pleased

pleased with this aduice, that flattered his owne humour, consented, and remitted all to the G Visiers direction, who was a true souldier, and a very wise man, able by his credit in Asia, to performe all he had vndertaken: for he was exceedingly beloued in those parts, very rich, and had kept Damascus, whereof he was Gouernour, for himselfe in a late rebellion. Vpon this conclusion betweene them, it was first agreed, That the King should pretend to go in person either to visit Mecha, or against the Emir de Sidon, who was moued to take armes really to assist in the designe; but they vsed it to colour the departure of the Emperour: which when it was well weighed, was found, that then the army of the Ianizaries must be kept together, which could not agree with their ends. Hereupon the journey of the pilgrimage was divulged, That the King might vnder the shadow of an holy deuotion goe out with a small traine, and disperse those who were suspected to him. And for this, preparation was made, H but somewhat too grossely, by melting of all the Plate, Saddles, furniture of house, Lampes of Churches, and whatsoeuer could more easily be conueied away in mettall, with all the jewels and treasury. This gaue the first suspition, which was confirmed by diuers vnaduised words let fall from the King; of disdaine against the cowardise of the Ianizaries, and that he would shortly finde himselfe souldiers that should whip them: and lastly, dismissing all his household, except some few select; the discontented sort obserued this and betraied him. Delauir Bassa kept his own secret, and in the mean time prepared by his friends in Asia twenty thousand men; about Damascus ten thousand, from the Coords as many, besides those in readinesse of the Emir de Sidon; and all vpon pretence of defending the borders of Persia, who might take some aduantage of the changes in those parts: and gaue order, That all these I should meet the King at Damascus, where hee would presently cut off his guard and stay there, vntill he had regulated his new army and discipline, and then to returne triumphant to Constantinople, and vtterly root out the order of Ianizaries, Spahies, and Timariots, and to exaucthorate all their captaines and officers, to settle a new Gouernment, and to change the name of the city. And these things succeeding, hee then resolued with his new souldiers to attempt the recouery of his honour in Christendome; in the meane time to hold a dissembled friendship there in all parts. Certainely, this was a braue and well grounded designe, and of great consequence for renewing of that decaied Empire, languishing vnder the insolencies of lazie slaues, if God had not destroied it: it being very true, That the Turkish Emperour stands at the deuotion of his owne troupes for peace, or war, life, or death, and is in K effect nothing but the Steward or Treasurer of the Ianizaries. If this project had taken effect, what euents it might haue produced by a ciuill war, is not easie to judge. For doubtlesse the souldiory would haue set vp another King, and maintained him as well as they could; and the Europeian part had beene in danger to haue beene to me away by the diuision. Besides, Delauir Bassa hauing the King and the treasury in his possession, and his owne credit so great, and his inclination velle imperare, so willing to beare rule, once discouered, it might well be thought that hee had some ends of his owne to share a part of this mighty estate: if on the other side the Visier had proued true and faithfull, the reformation and new erection of the discipline of war, and the encrease of treasure consequent to the dismission of the old Militia, would haue beene fearefull to all Christendome; but Vbi est sapiens? vbi disquisitor sæculi hujus? Perdam sapientiam sapientum, & vanam reddam intelligentiam intelligentium. It is a great L question whether then were the wiser wish, That these counsels had succeeded, or not: for either diuision or subuersion, or a new prosperity and enlargement of their dominion had necessarily followed.

Obseruations vpon Sultan Osman.

Some obseruations vpon this occasion, will not bee impertinent, to those that desire to know as well the disposition and vse, as the things themselues. First in the purpose of the souldier, not at all to violate or hurt the King, much lesse to depose and murder him; but only to take away those about him whom they thought assistants in this project: yet the fury once on foot, they proceeded by insensible steps, to the vttermost of outrage, against many innocents in that businesse (though otherwise obnoxious) and against the throne and life of M their owne Emperour, Vbi furor ingruat, innocentes ac noxios juxta cadère; where rage and fury hath got the vpper hand, there the innocent and nocent fare alike. Secondly, in the degrees; that yet the King had not fallen thus low, if first he had not lost that awe and reuerence which

alway

A alway attendeth vpon Majeſty, if it be kept vp; by vnſeemly offices done by him in the ſtreets and Tauernes, apprehending many ſoldiers for petty faults; like a Conſtable, making his perſon common, cheape, and deſpiſed amongſt them; which was wont only to be ſeene and feared, as ſomewhat aboue humane greatneſſe. And this he did alſo in hatred and diſdaine of thoſe that had in the warre forſaken him. And now in this laſt act, if his owne obſtinacy had not plunged him into deſtruction, but that he had ſoftened them by a reaſonable yeelding to time, he had preuailed onely by time. Thirdly in the order, that theſe mutiniers hauing no head or direction, kept that reglement, that they tooke oath in their fury, in hot bloud, in the Kings yard, not to diſhonour, ſpoile, nor ſacke the Imperiall Throne; neither committed nor ſuffered any inſolence nor violence in the city to the Neutrals, but rather proclaimed peace
B and juſtice. Fourthly in the conſequents, that at the third daies end all was quiet, and all men in their trade, as if no ſuch thing had hapned; only the Ianizaries ſuffered no Diuan nor Counceil vntill they had receiued a Donatiue as guerdon of their iniquity. In which alſo the infinite waſte of treaſure is worthy your conſideration, which was exceedingly exhauſted by three changes in foure yeares, and by the late warres in Perſia and Poland; for euery Ianizary, abſent or preſent (whoſe rolle was about forty thouſand) receiued twenty fiue Checquines of gold; beſides the Spahies, Iamoglans, and other Orders, at euery alteration: which amounts in all neer to two millions. And now thoſe fellows that had taſted the ſweet of proſperous mutinies (haud ignari ſumma ſcelera incipi cum periculo peragi cum præmio) tooke ſuch a head as could not ſafely be ſuffered on, nor ſecurely be taken off. Fifthly, of certaine preſages
C that fore ran: for Oſman dreamed in the night, That he rid a Camell, and being mounted, he could not force him to goe by faire meanes nor ſtripes: and that then diſcending in a rage to reuenge it with his ſword, the body of the beaſt vaniſhed, and left the bridle and head in the Kings hand. Who next day troubled at this fancy, ſent to a learned man familiar with him, for the interpretation. He excuſed himſelfe, as vnfit to giue opinion in a matter of that conſequence; but perſuaded Oſman to enquire of the Mufti. He alſo craued pardon; but withall ſaid, there was none ſo fit to interpret it as Muſtapha the Kings vncle, who was eſteemed a holy man, that had viſions and Angel-like ſpeculations (in plaine tearmes, betweene a mad man and a foole.) The King repaired to Muſtapha, who briefely told him, The Camell ſignified his Empire: his riding, abuſe in gouernment: his deſcention or alighting, his depoſing: the vaniſhing of his Body, the reuolt of
D his Subjects: the Head remaining in his hand, only a bare title; and that he ſhould ſhortly die within a few moneths, and loſe his king dome, onely the empty name of Emperour ſhould accompany him to his graue. A ſecond of leſſe conſequence in the Viſier Delauir Baſſa; with whom his Majeſties Embaſſadour hauing contracted particular friendſhip, about ſix daies before this vprore, he went to viſit; and hauing no other buſineſſe but to perſuade him to ſtay the King from this intended pilgrimage, the Embaſſadour gaue him many reaſons in the preſent eſtate of their owne affaires; eſpecially, the Treaty of Poland yet depending. To which the Baſſa replied very grauely. Then the Embaſſadour vrged the feare of ſome tumult, collected from the licentious ſpeeches rumoured in the towne: And he was bold to deale plainely, ſincerely, and friendly, That if any ſuch thing ſhould happen, the fault would be imputed to the Baſſa, as E being of authority to perſuade the King; whom his quality and youth would excuſe, but all the fury would be diſcharged vpon the greateſt Miniſter: deſiring him to conſider the euent, at leaſt to take his affection in the beſt part.

The Engliſh Embaſſadors aduice to Delauir Baſſa.

The old Reinard ſtaied a while from reply: at laſt, ſmiling to himſelfe, that he ſhould be perſuaded againſt that which was his owne counſell, he gaue a finall anſwer, That there was no remedy, he durſt not hazard himſelfe to oppoſe the Kings reſolution: but aſſured him he would ſo order the matter, as this journey ſhould not proceed ſo farre as was expected. The Embaſſadour concluded for himſelfe, deſiring then that he would leaue him a particular recommendation to the Chimacham or Deputy as his friend. To which he ſuddenly replied,
F Trouble not your ſelfe, nor feare; I will neuer remoue ſo farre but that I will leaue one of my legges in this city to ſerue you. Which the poore man fulfilled; for being murthered within few daies after, one of his legs whole and entire was hanged in the Hippodrome, the moſt publike place of the city.

The Baſſaes reply.

The reading of Hiſtory, to know what is done and paſt, hauing in it no recompence but delight, delight, vnleſſe it looke foreward to vſe and action, either to correct errours, or by that light G to gather aduantage in future, it will not be an vnprofitable degreſſion to obſerue what was like to ſucceed theſe monſtrous alterations. It was feared, by contemplatiue men, that the ſouldiers in Aſia, who had loſt their hope, would not ſit downe with this affront, but rather attempt ſome reuenge for the death of the King, who was their martyr: or that ſome great Baſſa, farre remoued from Court, might apprehend this occaſion, not to obey an vſurper, ſet vp by treaſon; and vnder that colour to hide his owne ambition: or laſtly, that the whole State would fall into combuſtion, and inteſtine warre. This they themſelues foreſaw, and it came to paſſe, as will appeare in the ſtory; for within few moneths Abaſſa Baſſa of Arzirum declared himſelfe reuenger of his Princes bloud, and troubled, and almoſt hazarded the whole Empire. The Perſian apprehended the opportunity, and recouered the Prouince and H City of Babylon: and the ſame ſoldiers that had betraied their Prince, were neuer quiet vntill they had made ſome ſatisfaction, by reſtoring his brother and right heire: only it pleaſed not God to open the eies of Chriſtian Princes to ſee the inconuenience of their owne vnciuill quarrels, while the diſtractions of this mighty Empire did inuite to conquer it, and to diuide it as a proſtituted prey.

A practiſe to murther the brethren of Sultan Oſman.

On Saturday euening the firſt of Iune following, the Capi-Aga or Major Domo of the Seraglio, hauing receiued a ſecret order to remoue the brethren of Oſman from their lodgings, and in the night to ſtrangle them; as he was performing his command, aided with a few of his carnifices to carry away the Princes, they cryed out: the Pages running to the noiſe, and incouraged by the Caſlariaga, who had ſome ſuſpition, without further examination killed the I Capi-Aga, now almoſt euery Order hauing riſen againſt his owne head. That night they ſent ſecretly to the Ianizaries and Spahies, to enforme them what they had done; and in the morning early hanged his body in the Hippodrome for a publike ſpectacle. The ſouldiers returned in fury to the Court, in fauour of the Pages, and demanded juſtice againſt thoſe that had conſented to this wicked order, which had made an end of all the Ottoman race; only this Muſtapha being left aliue, who was ſo holy a Saint, that he would not people the World with ſinners, nor endure any woman neere him. The innocent King proteſted he knew nothing of this purpoſe: and if ſuch command were procured, it was gotten by ſubreption; and he was eaſily beleeued. But his mother, another Liuia, and the new Viſier, Daout Baſſa, who had her daughter to wife, were vehemently ſuſpected. It was a day of Diuan or Councell; but the ſol- K diers would ſuffer none, vntill they had an account of this treaſon. The Viſier denied all; the mother was a woman, and hidden in the houſe: yet it is very likely they both were guilty, to vphold and ſecure their owne authority; it being rumoured, that the Viſier determined to place ſubditiouſly in the roome of the elder Prince his owne ſonne, and very like him, and ſo to gouerne Muſtapha for a time, and by his remoue to eſtabliſh himſelfe and his race for euer. But now ſomewhat muſt be done to appeaſe the people; therefore Daout Baſſa was degraded from his office, and one Huzein Baſſa, newly arriued from the gouernment of Cairo, aduanced to his place, with promiſe of further examination. But the fury once ouer, there was no great ſearch nor diſcouery made, for perhaps the Sultana's Chequines quieted the matter. The new Viſier was a man without friends, yet very rich, of a ſtubborne and obſti- L nate nature, reported juſt in his waies, but peremptory and vnflexible (Audax ferox, ac prout animum intendit, pravus aut induſtrius eadem vi) one from whom all men might expect much good, or much ill: he began his gouernment roughly, and vndertooke to puniſh inſolencies early, and profeſſed a reformation, or to be a ſacrifice: A man fit for thoſe times that were deſperate: for the worſt was, that he muſt at laſt endure their fury. In the meane time he procured a little awe, and reſtored the face of juſtice: yet it was thought it could not laſt long, the Ghoſt of Oſman would not be at reſt vntill there were ſome parentalia made vnto him. The nature of the Viſier was vnſupportable; but if he preuailed, and were once ſetled, he reſolued anew to change the King, and lay an obligation vpon the brethren of Oſman; for he did neuer thinke himſelfe ſecure vnder a man gouerned by an inſolent woman, dominandi auide, M deſirous to rule. And what aſſurance could hee haue in that Prince, in whom there was no judgement, neither loue, nor hatred, but as it was infuſed? and though the particulars could not be foreſeene, nor where the ſore would breake out, yet the whole body was ſicke, their

King

A King being mentis inops, an Ideot; and the next in expectation a child vnfit for action, and all the great men and ſoldiers decayed, mutined, and corrupted.

In the mean time the Duke of Sbarasky came neer vnto the borders of the Turkiſh empire, and ignorant of thoſe great changes which had happened, ſent a ſeruant with a Letter to the dead Viſier Delauir Baſſa, with whom only the Poles had treaty. The contents were, That the King of Poland had ſent him to conclude a peace, vpon ſuch conditions as were agreed vpon by the Viſier and the Commiſſioners of Poland, ſigned on both parts; but that it was reported vpon the death of the grand Signior, That the new Gouernment had varied from ſome of them: That he had no other inſtructions to intreat anew, but if he would giue his word to the Engliſh Embaſſador, that there was no alteration in the intents of peace, he was ready to ſet
B forward on his journey. This letter receiued by the new Viſier was Greek to him, who was lately come from Cairo, and vnderſtood no article nor piece of the buſineſſe: Which was ſo ſecretly carried by Delauir Baſſa, that Sultan Oſman and he being dead, there was no man had ſo much as a copy, or knew the ſubſtance of that agreement. So that the Viſier giuing good words, aſhamed to confeſſe his ignorance, promiſed all things, but knew not what to write in particular anſwer, and therfore was at a ſtand. The meſſenger neuertheleſſe importuned a diſpatch, the which he had in general terms, and ſo returned again to the Duke his Maſter vpon the confines.

With this Nuntio the Duke wrot to Sr Thomas Rowe, and being very doubtfull to intangle himſelfe in this vnſetled gouernment, deſired him both to counſell him, and to tel the Viſier
C that he would not aduance, vnleſſe hee might receiue ſuch aſſurance of ſafety and publique faith, as that he might ingage his credit to him: hoping therby to haue both aſſiſtance & witnes in all his proceeding. Which gaue the Viſier occaſion to intreat the Engliſh Embaſſador, both to promiſe for the good vſage of the Duke, and to haſten him, and alſo to informe himſelfe by him, of the ſubſtance of the Treaty of Chotyn. Which being by him vndertaken, it turned to the great aduantage of both, eſpecially of the peace it ſelf.

Prince Coresky ſtrangled in priſon.

The 17 of Iune in the morning, the Prince Coresky one of the Lords of Poland, taken priſoner in the late war, recommended by his Maieſtie of great Britaine, who had formerly made an eſcape from the Turks captiuitie, was ſtrangled in priſon after two years of durance. This put all into murmur and deep conſideration, for what politique end this ſhould be don, euen
D when they themſelues deſired a peace with the Pole, and yet neuertheleſſe did that which might vtterly breake it. But it ſeemed they were at that time either caried with a brutiſh furie, or that the Prince was betrayed from home, by intimation, that his remuant nature would neuer ſuffer the peace long to continue between the Crowne of Poland and the Grand Signior.

The Viſier attempts to depoſe Muſtapha.

The Viſier (who cauſed this Polack prince to be ſtrangled) vpon ſome ſpleene towards the Aga or chief captain of the Ianizaries, took this occaſion to caſt the fault on him, and to caſſier him, and ſent him to the Iſlands to be ſtrangled; & gaue order to murder ſome other Baſſa's and officers, that therby way being made to depoſe the Emperor Muſtapha, to ſet vp Morat the child, and brother of Oſman, many being of his party. Wherupon the ſoldiers roſe all in E arms at the Seraglio, taking the alarm at the medling with their Aga, reſcued their Captaine and the reſt, and demanded the head of the Viſier. Wherupon he fled, and order was giuen to kil him where he could firſt be ſound. The ſoldiers alſo required the life of Morat Aga cuſtomer, and diuers others: but for feare of other complices they durſt ſearch no further into the conſpiracie; only the Viſiers houſe was ſacked and infinit treaſure taken; ſo as the ſoldier was quieted for a day or two, by making a new Viſier, Muſtapha Baſſa, who was of a ſoft nature, and ſcarce durſt do juſtice for fear of offending any man. Now a new faction was made betweene Muſtapha and Morat, and it was expected hourly when there ſhould be ſome great ſlaughter or maſſacre in the city; for of neceſſitie one ſide muſt fall.

There was then no ſecuritie for any man, when the King and Viſiers and all Officers held F their liues and dignities at the courteſie of the mutined ſouldier, who had taſted the ſweet of rebellion, and caſt off all awe and reuerence, and could not eaſily be reduced to order, without much bloud and haſard of the whole. Therfore the wiſer men retired from Office and imployment, and the inſufficient did cauſe their owne daily change and ruine. The ſouldier adhered to the King of their own creation, and hee was in effect their creature, for they did G wholly gouern him. But the lawyers and church-men made ſecret conuentions, and ſtill practiſed ſome great alteration; and feared not to ſay openly, That the foundation of their State was diſſolued, the king vnlawful, and all that had adhered vnto him lapſed into hereſie, hauing deſpiſed the inſtitutions of Mahomet. They wrought by wiſe counſels, and held a large corre-ſpondencie with thoſe of their own coat, and ſpread their confederacie to all parts of the Empire, to procure a faction, and kindle a greater fire than that of the ſoldiers: for at Bagdat the captain of the Ianizaries roſe and ſlew the Baſſa, burnt the Mufti and all his kin, and gaue his daughter in mariage to one Aſlan Begh, a pretender to the antient inheritance of a bordering prouince, to cantonize that part. All Aſia was in doubt whom to obey, and Cairo was eaten vp with oppreſſion: and that which was moſt dangerous, they had no ſence of the ſicknes in H the court, wherby to cure it, nor any of them ſo wiſe as to diſſemble it.

The Prince of Tranſylvania's Embaſſador arriueth at the Port.

The 22 of Auguſt the extraordinary Embaſſador of Bethlem Gabor Prince of Tranſylvania ariued at Conſtantinople; who amongſt other inſtructions had order to excuſe his Maſter, and to declare the reaſons why he had made peace with the Emperor without the knowledge of the Port: which were, That the war had continued three years in the kingdom of Hungarie, and had ſo conſumed and deſolated the country, that it was impoſſible for him to ſtay longer in the field and to maintain an army, for the great famin and ſcarcitie of all things which the ſoldiery ſuffered, and could from no place be ſupplied: ſo that if he had not accepted of peace offered, he had bin forced to quit the country of neceſſitie, and by his ſeeming flight haue left the enemy victor. Therfore he was conſtrained to win time, and to return into Tranſylvania I to refreſh his men of war, and to re-inforce them: as alſo his own preſſing affaires calling him back, his brother whom he had left Gouernour in his abſence, hauing aduiſed him, That the king of Poland, by the inſtigation of the emperor, by intelligence with ſome of the principal Lords, did practiſe a reuolt, and promiſed aid to make a new prince that ſhould wholy depend vpon the Empire and Poland. Laſtly, ſeeing the grand Signior had ſuddenly concluded a peace with the Poles, he feared he ſhould be left alone to the burthen of the war, in which the King of Poland being at eaſe might aſſiſt the Emperor, which he was not able to ſuſtain: therfore he was content to take the opportunitie to accept of that at the inſtance of the emperor, which he ſhould haue bin forced to do by neceſſitie.

Yet afterward, although he made this apologie for his maſter for concluding a peace, hee K aſſured the Port, that his maſter meant not long to keep the ſame: informing them, That the Emperour had made a league (being at that time quiet in Germany) to inuade the Ottoman Empire; perſuading the Port to grant a Commiſſion, with full power and authoritie to him and the Baſſa of Buda (who had bin twenty years in that charge, and knew all the borders) if they ſaw it fit, to preuent the Enemy, and to inuade the Empire, or the kingdome of Poland.
This demand was made by Gabor to inſinuate with the ſtate of Turky, and to get a power dormant into his hands, to aduance into Hungarie if he ſaw aduantage, or to oblige the Emperour; and to aſſure the peace, by hauing means not to care if it were broken. But the grand Signior finding himſelfe, by reaſon of Ciuile diſtractions at home, vnfit for a Warre abroad, and that they ſaw Bethlem Gabor had no other thing in recommendation than his owne de- L ſignes and fortune, his Embaſſadors Propoſitions began to be altogether ſleighted and neglected.

The Poland Embaſſador arriueth at the Port.

The Duke of Sbarasky, who came to conclude the peace betweene his Maſter the King of Poland, and the grand Signior, after long delay vpon the confines did at length arriue at the Port, but they made him ſtay fiue weekes before he could haue audience, forcing him to giue a Preſent, contrary to his Inſtructions. Notwithſtanding he could not get them to enter into a Treaty, finding nothing but falſehood and vncertaintie amongſt them, no promiſe nor faith kept, no priſoners deliuered, nor indeed any thing at all performed: for now that they had him within their liberties, they hoped to worke their owne ends, and to wearie him out, who had twelue hundred of his ordinary traine. They threatened to keepe him, and to M denounce a War againſt his Maſter: yet by the mediation of the Engliſh Embaſſadour, the Miniſters of the Port and he were pieced again, and the peace concluded, as ſhall be herafter ſet down at large.

After

A After many difficulties to obtaine admiſſion to the preſence of the grand Signior, cauſed by the forwardneſſe of the old Eunuch Georgi Mehemet Baſſa, then in the place of Muſtapha depoſed (who diſcouering that the duke would complain againſt Tomſha Vayuod of Valachia, and his creature, endeauored by al fraud, cunning, threatning, and faſtidious delayes, to diuert him from that purpoſe, being loth that the actions of him whom hee had foſtered and maintained in many tyrannies, eſpecially in the occaſion of the laſt Warre, ſhould be examined or layd open to juſtice) when hee ſaw that nothing could preuail, but that he muſt haſard a direct breach, by the diſcontent of the duke; and that the people began to murmur, and the Engliſh Embaſſador to proteſt him; he was admitted, and nobly receiued according to the pompous cuſtom of that court; who with his letter of Credence ſpake theſe following words:

B

The Oration of the Duke of Sbarasky to the grand Signior.

SIgiſmund by the grace of God, King of Poland, Sweden, Gothia, Vandalia, great Duke of Lituania, and of many other prouinces Prince and Lord: To your moſt renowned Maieſty, moſt mighty emperor of Aſia and Europ, and King of many kingdoms and prouinces, euer moſt happy, wiſheth health; and by me his great Embaſſador ſalutes you with all conuenient reuerence and honor: deſiring to your Maieſtie

C from the moſt high God, fulneſſe of all proſperitie, happineſſe, long life, triumph aboue your Anceſtours, Princes worthy of all memorie.

HIs high Maieſty of Poland, conſidering the depth and highth of the Decrees of the great God, marueling with all the world, and praiſing his high name, doth comfort and ioy himſelfe, beeing more than certaine, That that Eternall power which hath preſerued your Maieſtie from all euill deſtinies of men, and from the bowels of the earth, and hath placed you in this ſhining Throne, hath not done it but for the publique good. And like a wiſe Gardener, who hath weeded out all venomous and noyſom plants, that he hath placed your Maieſtie in their roome, as a noble and ſweet ſmelling floure, full of vertue, clemencie, and peace, deſired of all the world. His Maieſty my Lord and Soueraigne hath alwaies wiſhed,

D That not onely the actions of later yeares, but of many Ages paſt, might haue beene forgotten; and that that friendſhip and peace begun with the renowned Ottoman Kings two hundred and more yeares ſince, might haue beene without interruption continued. But ſeeing that the great God hath beene pleaſed to chaſtiſe the people of both parts, by the meanes of wicked men, that muſt be accepted for good, which commeth from his Diuine will. And therefore blotting out of memory whatſoeuer is paſt, doth now returne to deſire the continuance of the firſt antient peace, and doth offer himſelfe vnto your high Maieſtie to keepe it inviolable, as it was maintained in the time of Sultan Amurath of happy memorie. In

E witneſſe of which his ſinceritie, he hath not apprehended the opportunitie of the breach begun by the Perſian, the expiration of the truce with the German Emperour, nor the many reuolts and troubles in Aſia, nor hearkned to the inſtigations of many Chriſtian Princes his friends and allyes, nor to the Tartar diſcontented: but rather hauing refuſed all other wayes, hath with the bloud of his own ſubiects, and the charge of his purſe, regained from the Rebell Valachia, Moldauia, and a part of Tranſyluania, and rendered thoſe Prouinces into the hands of your Maieſties father, and ſuffered no man at any time to diſturbe on that ſide the friends of your Empire; giuing intelligence like a good friend and neighbour to your Anceſtours, of all your Enemies deſignes and machinations, and in as much as was poſſible, endeauoured to preſerue a good peace and friendſhip; which he offereth vnto your ſerene Maieſty; contenting himſelfe with the Capitulations which were treated at Chotyn, and thoſe of your moſt happy father and brother; praying your Maieſty that they may be confirmed and maintained. And not doubting but your Maieſtie will reſtraine the Tartars, as he will do the Coſſackes, and that you will ſuffer no occaſion of kindling new fires, he beſeecheth your Maieſtie to doe what juſtice you thinke meet, vpon Cantemir and Tomſha,

F who contrary to the agreements and publique faith, hath made ſpoile and new incurſions into Poland, euen ſince my departure from thence, and with many deceits and falſe deuices haue deſired to diſturbe the happie beginnings of accommodation. And ſeeing that by the antient Capitulations made with the moſt warlike Sultan Solyman, and his ſucceſſors the father and brother of your Maieſty, the prouinces of Mol- dauia, the Bassaes of Silistria, and the Beghes of Ackirman ought to keepe the passages of the Riuers to G restraine the Tartars; and that those now in possession of those Gouernments are already knowne, and growne old in their rapine and spoile, the King my Lord desireth your renowmed Majesty, that they may be dismissed, and their Prouinces giuen to some others more enclined in peace. For Cantemir, it is a true rule obserued, That one Tartar can hardly gouerne another, where both liue vpon spoile: and how easily vpon any occasion new troubles are apprehended by those who are antient enemies, I leaue to your Highnesse wisedome; in which his Majesty is so assured, that he doubteth not, that for the publike good, and for the complaints, and teares of both subiects, you will also vouchsafe to accept the request of your friend, and a King your neighbor. And if all the World, and the people thereof rejoyce, and praise God of the friendship and peace betweene your Majesty and the King my Master begun and concluded, he hopeth H that the poore and miserable prisoner shall participate of your clemency, that they may joyne in the general care to pray to the eternall God for encrease of your greatnesse. The King my Master doth therefore desire your Majesty to grant liberty to those who are in your captiuity, as he bindeth himselfe to set free all such of your Majesties subiects, as are now his prisoners; and I do promise on the behalfe of my Master, that he shall be a friend to your friends, and an enemy to your enemies. In conclusion, he desireth all hap-pinesse and prosperity to your Majesty from a cleere heart; in signe and testimony whereof, and of the friendship begun on his part, he honoureth you with a Present, which you may be pleased to receiue with your accustomed benignity; and shutting your eares to such enformers, enemies of peace, as are found at your Port, that you will esteeme him a friend and neighbour of the most royall and antient Kings of your most Princely Family.

I

The souldiers continued still in their mutinous disposition, euen in Constantinople the head city of the Turkish Empire, and grew to that height of insolency, that going in troups to the court, they demanded all offices of gaine; to be Stewards to the reuenues of the Churches, which are great; to take the Farmes of customes; and there committed many other outrages which were vnsufferable. The Visiers durst deny them nothing; they drunke wine in the streets without prohibition, contrary to their law; and stood in companies in the open day exacting mony of all Christians to pay for their wine; and being denied it, stabbed and murthered without any punishment: and when complaint was made to the Visier or Magistrate, they answered, None durst meddle with them, who had murthered their own King; and the Bassaes themselues desired the Complainants patience, and that they would beare a part K with the generall sufferance.

The Ianizaries assault the houses of the Christian Consuls at Smirna.

About the same time, the Ianizaries in the gallies which rid before Smirna, commanded by the captaine Halil Bassa, assaulted against his will the houses of all the Christian Consuls there. The English with all those of the Nation, were forced to runne naked from their lodgings, and to swimme to the Admirals galley to saue their liues: they ransacked the lower part of the house, and carried away to the value of two thousand dollars; the French sustained more losse; and the Venetians at least ten thousand, and one of the subjects of that State cut in peeces. The Generall had much adoe to appease them by threats or persuasions, or to saue the liues of all; insomuch as they miscalled and threatened him, because he would not consent to their madnesse. In conclusion, he was faine presently to put to sea, or else they had L finished the Trade at that place.

In Asia there was then three open rebellions; one at Babylon, another at Arzirum vpon the borders of Persia neere Tauris, and the third in Mesopotamia. The Visiers at the Port dissembled all this, and durst take no knowledge thereof, nor so much as to send a command thither, for feare of blowing the fire, which would haue put all into combustion: whereupon they held a secret counsell and consented to remooue themselues, to proue if they could recouer the desperate estate of that Empire, and tooke resolution to make Halil Bassa (the best souldier and most beloued) great Visier; and in his roome Daout Bassa captaine of the Sea; and the present Visier, Chimacham or Lieutenant at the Port; and in the Spring following, they resolued to send the Visier into Asia, with all the force they could make: to which end M they sent into Greece, to warne all the souldiery to be ready at Adrianople, not daring to make a rendesuous at the Port, for feare of new trouble; and so to passe the Hellespont, wide of the city, to appease (if they could) those reuolts, and by that way to draw the mutiniers from

the

A the Court into action, and to reduce them vnto obedience. And notwithstanding that there was no other symptome or prediction but such as threatned the destruction of that Empire, yet were they neuer prouder, nor more seeming not to distrust themselues, their only securitie being, That they had no enemie but themselues.

The treasurie was far exhausted, the reuenue abated, by the oppression of euery Bassa in his gouernment: the soldier increased both in pay and number, and so impatient of delay, that at euery quarter, (besides borrowing, and taking vp the farmes of the Customes before hand) there were so many intollerable exactions to raise monies, that the apparance of domestique quiet could not long endure betweene two extreames; for meanes could not be found, and the Ianizaries would not be retrenched nor deferred. And this was their general estate at that
B time.

While the Polish Embassadour was treating the peace at the Port (whereof there was no great doubt, because neither side was fit for war) there arriued an Embassador from the great Duke of Muscovia, which gaue some interruption therin, pressing the grand Signior to continue the war seuen years against Poland, according to the promise of Sultan Osman: offering that his Master should enter into Poland with an army, and that they would diuide the country between them. But his proposition was reiected, because they had had sufficient triall of his Masters cunning proceedings in the last war; for the Muscouite hauing made peace with Poland (before the inuasion of Osman) for fourteen years, and being inuited by him to break it, and to inuade that country, vpon promise that he would continue the war for seuen yeares,
C & make no agreement without their comprehension; first answered, That he could not break the peace, thinking that the other was but a flash of a yong prince. But so soon as he saw the Turks in the field and borders of Poland, then he began to hope he might make aduantage; and therfore promised Sultan Osman, on those conditions mentioned to enter into the quarrel. And to that end dispeeded his Embassadour to Poland, with instructions to demand three things. First, That the prince of Poland should renounce the title of elect Duke of Muscouy. The second, That the Poles should restore a territory in the border of Lituania, taken in the late wars. Lastly, That the peace should be perpetuall: threatning, That if they refused those conditions, he would enter into the country with an army and get what he could. This Embassador being arriued in the confines, heard news that the Poles had repulsed the Turke at D Chotyn, that he was retyred, and a peace treated. Wherupon he feigned himself sick, and sent back a post with this aduice, and his old instructions, desiring in this alteration some new order from home. The gouernor of the town where he lay, suspecting somwhat, intercepted the messenger and his packet, and sent it presently to the King. The man returned to his Master the Embassador as robbed, and was again dispeeded the second time, and sent backe with another stile, to wit, with letters of congratulation, joy, and offers of all help and continuance of the peace: with these the Embassador went forward to the court, and hauing audience, the King answered him, That if his message were sincere it had bin very acceptable; but he knew it to be a sugred treason, and no faith intended by the Muscouite, and therfore commaunded him to depart.

E The Embassador protested, vowed, and vsed all meanes to assure the integritie of his message; vntill hee was confronted by the Chancellour, with his owne Letter, and his Masters instructions. Hereupon was this other dispatched to the Port to hinder the peace, and to offer their concurrence to continue an inuasion. In the meane time the Muscouite neglected no means to secure himself, & by renuing two embassadors obtained a peace with Poland, which was then again confirmed. To which the Poles were the willinger to agree, not knowing what effects the negotiations of the duke of Sbarasky might produce at the Port: and now the Muscouite was forced to dissemble again with the Turk, and make his preparation to depart.

The great Visier Georgi enuying the authoritie of Daout Bassa the beloued sonne in law of The great Visier plots the death of Daout Bassa.
the Queene mother, and brother in law to the Emperour Mustapha (who had formerly been F deposed) who had bin both the instrument and the counsellor to murther Sultan Osman, scorning that he should vnder hand gouerne in his reigne, especially because hee countenanced in opposition the Duke of Sbaraskies businesse, he therefore practised to put him to death: but not daring to do it by his owne authoritie, and in vain to procure it from the Court, he stirred

stirred vp the Spahies to demand justice of him for the death of their last king. This looked farther than the first assent; for the subtil Visier, who was faithful to his true lord, & knowing the rage of an vnguided multitude aimed at a by-reuenge vpon others, whom he hoped would be involved and accused of the murther: and the soldier soon raised and mutined in the Seraglio, they demanded Daout, who instantly fled: but now that the busines was on foot, if hee were not found, the Visier himself was in danger: but the poore man was brought to the Divan, and there being called to publique justice, hee must excuse himselfe vpon some greater person; wherin the Emperor and his mother ran a new hasard, which was the secret end. Therfore both of them forsook him and left him to the law, and without any trial he was brought before the soldiers, stripped, his turbant taken off, and on his knees ready to receiue the stroke of death. But suddenly the Ianizaries came to his rescue, and carried him away to their chambers. The Spahies who began this action took it in ill part, and followed with great outcries, That they would haue him die; the others demanded that he might be heard in publique justice. Thus those two mutined factions were ready to come to blowes. Daout Bassa now in some hope of life, bribed the Ianizaries, and that day distributed 40000 Chequines of gold, and they promised to protect him. Who did not now think but hee was taken away for safety? But the Spahies followed their first resolution, and to appease the fear of that dissention it was agreed he should die. They that meant to saue him could not, but preserued him for a greater example of justice. They would not now let him lose his head in the Court, for that death was too honorable for him that had murdered his prince. Then the Ianizaries sent him secretly in the same coach wherin he had sent Sultan Osman to execution: twice in the way being dry with sorrow, he drank at the same fountains where his late master begged drink, and so was conueyed into the same chamber where he had murthered him. The executioners beginning to tie him, himself shewed the very corner where hee had committed that foule fact, and desired that there he might, if possible, expiate it: and so he was at last miserably strangled. Thus he had his reward, and God was iust also euen for the wicked.

About the 20 of February, the peace after many rubs between the grand Signior and the King of Poland, by the mediation of the English Embassador (who was chosen by the Visiers as Arbitrer of all differences) after many meetings with Diac Mahomet Bassa Commissioner for the Treaty, was concluded; the Duke hauing first been forced to send this following remonstrance for his expedition; which much mooued the Visier, and quickened the conclusion.

The Duke of Sbaraskies remonstrance to the great Visiers.

YOur Excellencie may be pleased to remember the happy and honorable treaty made before Chotyn: in which a peace was concluded between the Ottoman Empire and the kingdom of Poland, signed by Commissioners on both parts; wherin (with reference to other antient Treaties) it was agreed, That a great Embassador should come to the Imperiall Port, as well to confirm and swear the peace, as to set in order some other incident circumstances, as then not fully taken into consideration. Since which, the King and Republique of Poland hauing elected me for that imployment, his Maiesty and my self haue receiued many letters from Delauir, Daout, Huzein and Mustapha, Bassa's, all great Visiers; not only promising a speedy end and dispatch of the conclusion of peace which on both parts is so much desired, but also a release of our captiues, and all other effects of loue and friendship, according to the antient honor of the Imperiall Port: desiring me vpon that assurance to proceed with alacritie and expedition. And further, it hauing pleased his Maiesty of great Brittain (a friend to both) to mediate in this pious office, by his Embassador resident and sent to that end; who hath giuen me by his letters great incouragement and hopes of a reall and true proceeding in this businesse, agreeable to diuers promises made vnto him, which he accordingly hath informed his own Master; I was very glad of this honorable function, and hoped to haue found as ready performance as is by his Maiesty and all the world expected.

To this end I am come to the Port, with full power and instructions from his Maiestie and the Republique

A publique of Poland, to conclude and finish a full and perpetuall peace, with all sinceritie and heartinesse, and in his Maiesties name to swear the same; offering to be friend to the friends, and enemie to the enemies of this Imperiall Port reciprocally, and to be ready to treat and accommodate all or any other circumstances incident to a busines of so great consequence.

Since my ariuall, notwithstanding that I haue produced both the mentioned treaty at Chotyn, and Letters, how little I haue aduanced in the main affairs, and the doubtfull consequences of a long protraction, I desire you to consider; hauing as yet proceeded no further in substance, than the deliuery of my letters and presents; and to that end there may neuer be imputed to the King and republique of Poland any slacknes in present, or any breach in future; out of a sincere and good desire to establish this treaty sure and firm, and to open a clear and true heart, I am inforced to make this true declaration, and desire your Excellency to

B weigh maturely the motiues following.

I do not repine at myne own stay at this Imperiall Port, where I receiue all honour; I do not doubt of the sincere and faithfull meaning of the Emperor to conclude the peace; but the deferring hereof may against our wills breed three inconueniences.

First, your Excellencie doth know, that the Cossacks are a people not easily to be restrained, if they bee once at libertie, and that they liue vpon their arms. They haue ready eight hundred boats to make an inuasion into the black sea: in the winter they canot moue; they attend onely the aduice of the conclusion of peace: therfore now is the season to finish and publish it; for if by long delaies it shal be deferred vnto the Spring, and that jealousie or their own desire set them free, your Excellencie doth know in wisedome how

C difficult it is, to reduce into order a people of that condition, which for our parts we are now able and readie to preuent; the State hauing ordained to satisfie them, and to buy their boats vpon the first intimation of a conclusion.

Secondly, It is the order of our Nation euery Spring, to call a parliament for the reglement of all publique affairs; of which assembly I am a member: if I shall be staied here, and not able to render a reason therof, it will breed great suspition and disturbance in the general resolution: you may consider that in all parts there are some vnaduised men, friends of sedition and war; and many that make aduantage of others troubles, who may do ill offices, such as the innosent may be sorry for, but canot help.

Thirdly, The eies of all princes are set vpon the honor and faith kept on both parts in this treaty, and accordingly will gouern their own occasions.

For these reasons I do in his Maiesties name desire your Excellencie to gine me a Dispatch, such as may

D bring ioy and content to all, by auoiding the miseries of war; and in such time, that the snows and commodities of winter shut me not vp, but that I may return, as well to satisfie his Maiestie and the Republique in our generall assembly, as to retain those who may be cause of much trouble, without our consents.

There is no difficultie that I vnderstand; I am content to accept the antient and honorable treaties made with the famous Emperor Solyman and his successors; and now lastly at Chotyn: if there be any other difference, I haue power and am ready to accommodate it.

My desire then only is, That a present end and conclusion be made of a peace, firme and perpetuall: and that the Emperor will be pleased, according to many promises, to deliuer and set free the captiues taken in the last wars: as I do in his Maiesties name giue my word that all others taken on our part shall haue libertie and pasport to return. And if there haue bin any difficultie made by occasion of my pressure for the

E reiection of Tomsha and Cante-Emir-Emirze, I doe make this true protestation, That as it is the request of his Maiestie my King in friendship, so there is no other end nor cause of that desire, but only to remoue all occasion of offence and breach with this Imperiall Port, which those ill neighbours are euer ready to minister. But if that be any inconuenience to this Imperiall Port, I onely then seeke that better order may be taken with them for the future, that they may liue quietly, without offence of the publique peace.

I desire your Excellencie to weigh and consider these my reasons and protestations, which proceed only from a good and sincere heart, to

V promoue and maintain an inuiolable and good friendship with this Imperiall Port.

F

Within two dayes after, the Duke of Sbaraskie tooke his leaue of the Emperour, to the great joy of himselfe and his traine, who thereby saw themselues deliuered out of captiuitie.

The

The three great and noble prisoners were set free, and did make a publique acknowledgment of his Maiestie of great Britains fauor; to whom both the Embassadour and they attributed the best part of their good successe, and gaue particular thanks by letter. G

Articles contracted between the grand Signior and the King of Poland.

HIs Maiesty of Poland hauing sent into our happy Port his well deseruing and famous great Embassador the most illustrous Duke of Sbaraskie, to offer vs sincere peace, loyal friendship, and good correspondence, and to seeke that the antient peace and friendship should be of vs anew confirmed, and the old Capitulations renewed, and that for the time to come there might be established an eternal peace and friendship: his kingly friendship hath bin most pleasing to vs, and the peace and friendship by vs accepted: and wee haue ordained, That all the antient treaties shall be renewed; and at the present haue giuen this our Capitulation with the following Articles. H

I. FIrst, That neuer vpon our part, nor of any of our Viziers, Beglerbeghs, Beghs, Cadees, Officers, nor soldiers, any harm shall be done to the Prouinces, Cities, Castles, Townes, villages, and other places pertaining to the King and State of Poland. And likewise vpon the part of his Maiesty of Poland, That by his Princes, Ministers, or Cossackes, nor any other his subiects, there shall be no wrong don in any part of our Empire, city, castle, towne, or village, but that both parties shall alwaies remain friends to friends, and enemies to enemies. I

II. And seeing that the Tartars of Dobrirza, Biaolograd, Keil, Ozu, and Silistra, and the people of Moldavia, do enter, inuade, and damnifie the State of Poland: We command, that for the time to come, our Beglerbeghs of Silistra, and all other Beglerbeghs of Bender, shall take care to keepe all those passages and riuers, to the end that herafter the said Nations shall haue no passage by those waies to damnifie the state of Poland. And whensoeuer it shall be known that the said Ministers haue vsed negligence in keeping those passages, according to the treatie with Sultan Solyman, of happy memory, that such Ministers bee degraded and seuerely punished. K

III. The Vayuod of Moldauia likewise shall neuer grant any passage to the said Nations. And whensoeuer it shall be known that the said Vayuod hath transgressed in this our will, he shall be degraded and seuerely punished.

IV. And whensoeuer the said Tartars and others, contrary to this our will, shall make any inuasion or spoyl in the state of Poland, all our ministers and gouernors shall apprehend and seuerely punish them: and as it is set down in the agreements with Sultan Solyman, all the slaues and prisoners which shall by such malefactors be brought into our dominions, shall bee set at liberty, and their goods restored to them again, and the malefactors punished for hauing transgressed our Imperiall Capitulations. L

V. And if any of our Subiects shall buy any person or Polish goods, vniustly taken by such malefactors, and it shall be made knowne vnto vs by the king of Poland; the buyers for hauing bought vnlawfull goods, their estate shall be confiscate, and they themselues seuerely punished.

VI. The Prince Chrim Tartar shall be obedient vnto vs, and all the Tartarian Nation vnder his commaund. Kalgha Sultan, and other Emirs and Princes of his bloud, from henceforth shall neuer enter into nor inuade any part of the State of Poland, nor euer do any dam- M

mage

A mage, either by the way of Moldauia, the open field or desart, nor shall euer enter into or inuade any part or jurisdiction of the same. And at all times that his Majesty of Poland shall giue notice, That the said Prince or others aboue mentioned haue broken this our will and capitulations, and entered and damnified his State; for their disobedience, the said Prince as well as the others, shall be by vs punished and chastised; and we command that neuer any one, in any part of our Dominion, shall sell either people or goods robbed from the State of Poland; and finding that there be any one that hath dared to buy men, or goods, robbed from them, such shall be immediately punished with confiscation. And as before mentioned, the
B Begler beghs of Silistria, with all diligence shall keepe the streights of Osu, and neuer suffer the said people to passe; and if it shall be knowne they haue trangressed they shall be punished with losse of their charge and office.

And whensoeuer the said Prince Crim Tartar, or his Kalka, Emirze, or others shall by VII.
our order be called and commanded in their proper persons, to go to any part of the war in our seruice, if by chance they should passe by the confines of Poland, as it is set downe in the capitulations of my father of happy memory, They shall not enter into any Village, Borough, Castle, or City of Polonia, or do any kinde of dammage to the people thereof; and finding that they haue giuen any molestation or hurt, they shall be corrected, as is aforesaid.

C And in conformity of my fathers said capitulation, euery time that his Majesty of Po- VIII.
land shall inuite and call the said Prince Crim Tartar in his occasion of war whiles he giueth him his annuall stipend, the said Prince with all his forces and army, shall go, helpe, and assist his Majesty in euery such occasion, and shew all friendpshi and sincerity: to which effect we haue giuen order, that our Imperiall Letters be written to the said Prince, in this particular, who shall obserue all according to our will and pleasure.

And for the better establishing of this our peace and amity according to the antient capi- IX.
tulations and obseruance, his Majesty of Poland promiseth to send his great Embassador to D the said Prince of Tartars; and (beginning from this present, the foure and twentied of the moneth of Iune) to pay yearely to the said Prince his accustomed stipend in this forme following. Euery yeare his Majesty shall send the said stipend into the Castle of Chotyn in Moldauia, and the Vayuod thereof shall certifie the said Prince Crim, who shall presently send his Embassadour to receiue the same, by the hands of the Vayuod. The which Prince shall alwaies obserue this forme, and shall be alwaies obedient to this our Imperiall Will.

And in case that his Majesty of Poland should faile in any yeare to send the said stipend, X.
E the Prince Tartar shall not suddenly rise with his army and inuade Poland; but, according to the agreement of Sultan Solyman, continuing still in his obedience, he shall certifie vs, and we will procure and recouer his right.

His Majesty of Poland doth promise that from henceforward, the Cossackes should not XI.
enter nor come into any part of our Empire by the riuers of Osu or any other, nor make any spoile therein: and if the said Cossackes do enter into any part of our Dominions and doe any hurt, we certifying his Majesty by our Imperiall Letters, he promiseth to correct them seuerely, and to put to death the malefactors for breaking the capitulations, and violating the peace and amity.

F And all our subjects which shall be made slaues, and imprisoned by the said Cossackes, shall XII.
be immediately set at liberty; and the ministers of his Majesty shall alwaies be diligent to punish the transgressors, and wholly restore those persons and goods, which they shall haue taken from our said subjects, and that neuer any subject of the King of Poland shall buy any stollen goods: and if any haue presumed and bought, that he be seuerely punished: and in generall, all that which we haue promised concerning the Tartars and Moldauians, so his Majesty also doth promise to vs for the Cossackes and other his subjects. G

XIII. After the conclusion of this Peace, if vpon the confines or open fields, fishers or hunters on either part meeting together, shall happen to fall out or be at difference by their owne occasion, it shall be no disturbance to this our peace and amity.

XIV. Alwaies according to the antient agreements, the Princes or Vayuods of Moldauia, shall shew to his Majesty of Poland all due reuerence and respect, good amity and neighbourhood: and seeing that the said Vayuods haue euer beene as it were instruments of preseruation, or of the breach of the Peace; therefore we command, that for the time to come, neither the said Vayuods, nor other of our Beglerbeghs or ministers, shall build in those confines any new Castle, Fort, or Bridge; and that in those Castles or Forts of those frontiers which are already built, there shall neuer any other garrisons be kept but Moldauians: and according to the antient Capitulations, the Tartars shall not inhabit, dwell, or till within those confines, of both nations. H

XV. And to the end this peace and amity may be alwaies kept betweene vs, we sweare by the name of God, and assure by this our Imperiall Article, that all the Embassadors, great or inferiour, which shall be sent from vs to his Majesti, or those great or lesse which shall be sent from his Majesty to vs, shall alwaies be safe and secure, as well in their comming, as their returne; and that there shall neuer be need of any other passport, but that they shall be of vs by all waies honoured and well receiued. I

XVI. Concerning merchants, passengers, and other Polacke negotiators, they shall alwaies come safely and securely by sea and land into all the parts of our Empire; and for customes, tolles, and other duties of their merchandise, and in case of debt, credit, suretiship, and such other like accidents concerning the course of Iustice and Law, we command that it shall be alwaies obobserued according to the agreements with our father of happy memory, Sultan Achmat. Which Articles we at this present accept and confirme, ratifie, and command that they be of all our subjects for euer punctually obeyed and obserued. K

XVII. Furthermore we promise, and in the name of God sweare, to obserue and maintaine for euer, all those couenants and Articles agreed vpon and written in our Capitulations, by our great grandfather, grandfather, and father, and neuer to disanull any of them.

XVIII. And whereas to shew greater desire of sincerity concerning this peace, his Majesty of Poland hath sought of vs by his said great Embassador, that the subjects of Poland may safely and securely come by the riuer of Turla with diuers merchandise, and sell, buy, and trafficke in Ackirman, which trafficke being vsed will be of great benefit to both Estates; We ordaine and command from henceforward, that the said Nation may come and negotiate safely and securely in the said Ackirman. And to the end that this businesse be established and concluded in a good manner, we will giue order to our Embassador, whom we intend to send shortly to his Majesty for the ratification thereof. L

XIX. Which present Articles, Capitulations, Peace, Amity, League, and Correspondency, by the grace of God we promise vndoubtedly to maintaine so long as we liue in this World: and do hereby conclude betweene vs and our posterity, and the Kings and State of Polonia, an euerlasting Peace; Sealing it and confirming it with these words, Friends to Frends, and enemies to Enemies. M

Notwithstanding all this, after the Duke was departed one daies journey, where he staied

20

A to receiue the treaty signed, they altered some of the articles to their own aduantage, without his knowledge. Which when he heard, he complained anew by his letters to the Port of the abuse offered vnto him, and made haste rather to escape than returne. But the Cossacks at the same time being stirring about the Blacke sea, the Visier and State (hauing nothing more in care than to shut vp that backe Port, whereby they suffered much losse and dishonour, and could not reuenge it vpon a fugitiue people; which diuided their nauall army, being forced to send a portion of gallies to defend the trade, the best part of reliefe of the city of Constantinople comming from those coasts) resolued to giue content to the Poles, and to assure the Peace; that they might with more security attend their affaires in Asia and Hungary; which
B Poland, with promises of faith, and reparation for the injuries committed by the Tartars; laying the fault of miswriting the treaty vpon the Chancellor, which though they amended not, yet they did explaine and interpret: and for better establishment and security on their behalfs of the peace, they resolued to depose Iehan-Begh Prince of Tartaria, and to send Michmet Gheray his cousin german and first of the bloud, late prisoner in the Rhodes, to take possession of his dominion; who vndertooke to quiet and restraine that people: which he caused to be signified to Poland, that the King might see, these alterations were only for the full security of the peace of their side, that the Pole might take the like course with the Cossackes, who were not as yet reclaimed.

1623

The soldiers continued still in their height of fury and madnesse, and those that were to
C go vpon the gallies for the defence of the Blacke sea, and other designes, being ready to depart, robbed, slew, brake houses in the face of the Magistrate in the open day: What was it not lawfull for them to do, that had slaine their King, and made and destroied their great Ministers at their will and pleasure, as their Stewards and seruants? and God did so blinde them, that they should not see, that they digged vp their own roots, and were made by his permission the blind instruments of their own ruine. The mint also was remoued into the Seraglio, where was brought forth all the saddles, bridles, stirrops, that had any gold or siluer vpon them, with all old plate, to make money to patch vp a quiet, and to satisfie and content the soldiers, and all little enough for the present, to saue the city from a totall sacke.

The soldiers still continue in their fury.

The Embassadours of the Prince of Transyluania departed from the Port.

The Embassador of the Prince of Transyluania, hauing changed their stile of excusing a D firme peace with the Emperor finding the opportunity of a friend now made great Visier in place to aid their Prince, they negotiated new matter, assuring the Port, that by the troubles of Germany, a faire occasion was giuen to recouer Hungary, and to set the crowne vpon their Masters head; and that therefore if the Grand Signior would be pleased to grant vnto their Prince the aid of the Græcian army, that he would make another attempt to weaken the greatest enemy of that Empire; which they easily obtaining (the ignorance and auarice of the Turke opening a way to credulity, which was the constant aduantage of Gabor, who could conuert both ther vnderstandings and forces to his owne ends) being in all fully satisfied, they departed the 20 of Aprill. Which resolution of the Port was much wondred at by all wise men, who knew how vnfit the Turke was at that present for a warre. The Prince was then at E Cassouia, expecting the issue of his Embassage, and in hope of Turkish aid; which beeing granted and gathered vpon his frontier, and joyned at last with his owne forces, his whole armie was not very great, nor had he any cannon to march withall to besiege any place: his chiefest trust consisting in his intelligence in Hungary, where he expected a generall reuolt, and that all the garrisons would open to him, or at least some diuersion in Silesia (which he was promised) facilitate his waies; and he was not in despaire, that vpon the first appearance of an army, Morauia by the fauour of the Count of Torne, who had assisted his Embassadors in the negotiation of the Port, and his friends would follow the same example; and this was the designe which his Embassadors had so long solicited at the Port, and dissembled at their first comming. Now there was nothing expected but a war: but not long after, there arriued a F new Embassador from the Prince, without any mention of the affaires of those parts; which made all men inquisitiue, thinking he was either come to hasten the succours, or to change something in the manner and other circumstances depending thereon: but it was found that the States of Transyluania had assembled at Alba-Iulia, and were very loath to entertaine a war, or to breake with the Emperor; and therefore dispeeded two Commissioners towards him him, who were well receiued and treated at Vienna: and from the Emperor was sent to Transyluania the Bishop of Nitria. Whereupon a new peace was treated, and this Embassador sent to procure the recall of the former commands, giuen to the Bassaes to moue with their armies. Whereby it was suspected he neuer had any purpose to make a war, but only to ballance by the continuance thereof his cares and last agreement with the Emperor. G

The Bassa of Arzirum in rebellion.

All men prophesied (by reason of dayly disorders) the fall of the Ottoman Empire. But now Abassa Bassa the Bassa of Arzirum who was joyned with diuers others, and had made a great army, was in his march towards Angria, the direct way to Constantinople (Babylon yet resting in rebellion) with a pretence of reformation; he tooke nothing by force, but the treasure of the Empire. He held a generall Counsell in his campe, and sent to the port to require the Mufti, Cadees, Bassaes, and antient Beghs, to take knowledge and to punish the traitors that murthered the late King, and to settle a new one lawfully, that should be able to gouerne, to reduce the mutined city souldier to obedience and discipline, and to place about the Emperor some great Visier, chosen by the State, able to direct and apply remedies to the diseases then growne to a desperat height; complaining, that euery three or foure moneths, by the change of the Visier, the Prouinces were destroied (for they placed and displaced the Gouernors according to their owne factions) and so contrary orders were sent abroad dayly, insomuch as no man knew who was King or Visier, nor whom they should obey. These were his pretences, and if the present State would not consent to this assembly, he then resolued to come ro the Port, and settle all things at his pleasure by the sword. The great Officers in possession of the Emperor and gouernment, loth to be called to an account by the souldier, tooke a worse resolution, To make a war; and made choice of Cicala Bassa for Generall: which he refused vpon the same pretence, that in his absence alterations would be so frequent, that he should not please, or at least vncertainely, and according to interpretation. Therefore he required an absolute Dictatorship for the time, equall to that of a great Visier, or else he would not stir. This was granted him, and mony giuen out, and order to passe the water speedily; enrolling for his army fifteen thousand Ianizaries, & thirty thousand Spahies. But those did demur, and alledged it was a war against their owne brethren, and sought any excuses rather than to come to blowes. But the secret was, it was then Ramazan, or their holy Lent, at the end of which they were to receiue their pay; and therefore they would not moue, but pretended religion. Next day after their feast, when they should march, they shewed themselues in their colours, (hauing first held many consultations) and would not moue at all, vnlesse the Emperor or great Visier would go in person. So euery day brought forth new subject of trouble, and the Empire to a great deale of hazard and danger. H I K

Christian Princes at the same time with Morat.

- Emperours of Germany — Ferdinand the second, that now reigneth.
- Kings
  - Of great Brittain, — King Iames. / King Charles, that now reigneth.
  - Of France — Lewis the thirteenth, that now reigneth.
- Bishops of Rome — Gregory the fifteenth. / Vrban the eighth, that now sitteth in the Chaire.

MORAT

Morat in tender age the Throne aſcends,
For wanton luſt more apt than Princely ends:
Sporting he lies in a luxurious bed,
Whileſt Bagdat is by Perſia conquered;
A greater loſſe than this, who can diuine,
Vnleſſe to loſe the ſeat of Conſtantine.
His other Acts, and how he ſtill proceeds, Shall here enſue in ſtory of his deeds.

THE

THE REIGNE OF MORAT, OR AMVRATH, THE FOVRTH OF THAT NAME, ELEVENTH EMPEROR OF THE TVRKS; HE THAT NOW SWAYETH THAT MIGHTY MONARCHIE.

C Vpon the last day of August, Sultan Mustapha, brother of Achmat, who had beene twice Emperor, was deposed; and Sultan Morat, son to Achmat, and brother to Osman murthered the yeare before, placed in the Throne. But it will not be vntimely nor vnprofitable, to discourse of the causes and reasons of those great mutations, which are the intrinsique part and soule of action.

Sultan Mustapha deposed. & Sultan Morat placed in his Throne.

That State for fifteene moneths after the denth of Osman, was a stage of variety, the Souldiery vsurping all gouernment, placing and displacing as the winde of fauour or disfauour moued them. In that time there were three Emperors, seuen great Visiers, two Captiane Bassaes, fiue Aga's of the Ianizaries, three Treasurers, six Bassaes of Cairo, and in proportion as many changes of Gouernors in all the Prouinces; euery new Visier making
D vse of his time, displacing those in possession, and selling their fauour to others: so as the whole Empire was in a manner fined ouer foure or fiue times; such was the exaction for a welcome of euery Bassa to their gouernment. Huzein Bassa the last Visier of them (a tyrant hated of all men, and now restored to the dignity by bribing the souldiery) consumed the publique treasure so fast, and exacted mony from priuate men so violently, to maintaine his faction with the Ianizaries, that euen the Receiuers were afraid, and weary, and the wisest of them foresaw their owne ruine in the generall consumption: when there was any murmure against him, he presently silenced it either by gifts or bloud. As soone as he had dispatched away the Generall Cigala Bassa with the army for the suppression of the great rebellion in Asia (which vpon the deposition of Georgi, and the making of him Visier, was content to E march) which he did rather to disburden himselfe of feares, by sending out of the way the Spahies, who were his opposites, than for any loue to the State: which Army, what insolencies they committed for thirty daies before their passing the water, euen in the face of Iustice, was as incredible as impossible to relate, he sent priuatly to strangle Halil Bassa, Georgi, and Mustapha late Visiers; hoping thereby he had remoued all concurrents. Whether this gaue the occasion, or that his sin was ripe for reuenge, the Spahies suddenly gathered head, and the old Wolfe fled to his trusty guard, the Ianizaries. The city was almost diuided; but the Spahies sent their resolution plainely, being the weaker in number, That they desired not to come to blowes with their Brethren; but if the Ianizaries would protect him, that they F should keepe him, Constantinople, and Greece: but they themselues would depart and dispose of Asia. Which was a bold profession, but easie, the forces of the Rebels being of their society. The wisest foresaw the perill, and they all agreed to depose him; and so the Seale was giuen to Aly Bassa, a man reputed honest, but melancholy & vntried for so great a charge. Euery one saw those outward wheeles of motion, but the spring within that moued them was not so soon discouered: The army mentioned for Asia, arriuing at Nicomedia, fiue daies

journy

journy from Constantinople, shewed little bedience; many disbanded, and the rest had no G desire to fight with those of the same profession both in religion and in humour. The newes came dayly to the Port, of the taking of Forts by Abassa Bassa the head of the rebels and of other defections and combustions in those parts; and that that quarrell was taken vp against the Ianizaries and the present gouernment, of whom he slew all that fell in his power, as guilty of the bloud of Osman. This suddenly wakened and ripened the project of those who had plotted secretly this alteration to restore Morat to the Imperiall crowne. Hereupon the new Visier Aly, with the counsell of the Mufti and some Captaines of the souldiers of both Orders, laied their foundation: they shewed the imminent perill and difficulty to restore or preuent the rebels by armes: the Ianizaries saw that they alone must (as the marke of enuy) beare the whole burthen; and therefore all resolued, that the easiest and safest way to appease their H troubles, was to restore the true heire, the present Emperor; hoping that those who pretended their rising for the loue of his brother, and in reuenge of his cause, would obey that Prince, and quiet themselues. Vpon this resolution they assembled at the Seraglio without any tumult, and desired to haue Sultan Mustapha come forth and speake to the souldiers, and to answer to some questions: which he refusing (as truly vnable) they tooke out Sultan Morat and declared him King, with vniuersall joy and acclamation: insomuch as the Ianizaries (but the day before his opposites) being shewed the want of treasure and the necessity of the State, were content to remit their donatiue and encrease of pay, vsuall at euery change: a wonder that was not like to last long, for many of them did afterwards repent, and demand it freshly.

The new Emperor the next day made his solemne entry into the city, a youth of foureteene I yeares of age, fat, and of a liuely countenance, and good stature, a Prince of two faire hopes for such a people; whose actions afterward (though vnder gouernment) shewed that he would soone know himselfe, and proue of a stirring nature. At the returne of the gallies from the Blacke sea, who brought some Cossacks prisoners aliue, and some heads of the dead, he would see them all brought before him, a custome vnusuall. This desire, and some answers he gaue, made all men judge he would be actiue, and cruell. All seemed then serene and quiet, and neuer appeared so great a change euen in affections. The most disordered did then assume a face of obedience (which was once thought to be vanished that city) and chose rather submissiion to lawes than threatened destruction. The calme was as violent as the storme. The first actions shewed peace, but so, as to prepare for necessity of warre. They sought out, and K dayly found the treasure, plate, and jewels giuen and conueied away by Huzein Bassa, which returned apace, and many voluntarily rendred them. The last Aga of the Ianizaries, who was but three moneths before Caja or Lieutenant (afterward Bassa of Cairo) did for his part receiue, and restore, eight hundred thousand dollars, to buy his place and peace: so that euery day made new discoueries; onely he that had beene the author of all this was fled away, and could then by no meanes be found: whose apprehension would haue assured many, and haue brought backe a great treasure.

Asia in that search for mony, and new settlement of affaires, was almost quite forgotten; so that the army was staied from proceeding; for it was beleeued, Abassa Bassa depended vpon the new Emperor and would submit. But he had aduanced too far to trust to any safe retreat, L euen although he was the indirect occasion of the raising of the new Emperor. Yet the way was not warrantable in the rule of Monarchy, nor perhaps sincere in the intent; for Kings seldome pardon those that are able to be traitors, and haue shewed but a will to reuolt; and that power is neuer secure which is too much. Sometimes they make vse of traitors as a safegard for the present, and for the future a subject of their reuenge. And this maxime Haly Bassa in the former great Asian defection approued with the price of his life, being taken into the fa-uour of Sultan Achmat in all priuacy, made Bassa of Buda, and within foure months strangled, vnder colour of putting on a Vest of honour. Therefore it was doubted, that they who had discouered so high thoughts, and exasperated the Ianizaries, would not so easily dispose armes, by which only they might be safe; and it was then feared they had intelligence with M Persia. There rested one great difficulty, to introduce that awe of Majesty which had beene trampled vnder foot; and it was a great one, when a people, like the sea, had made a breach into antient reuerence, and prospered; the taste of profitable wickednesse was not so easily lost.
It was imagined that these changes would worke great effects vpon the bordering parts of Christen-

A Christendom intereſſed; for they intended peace vniuerſally, to recouer mony, and a habit of obedience and ciuil gouernment. To which purpoſe a letter was written to the Baſſa of Buda, to leaue it to his diſcretion in the mouing of arms againſt the Emperor (being lately excited therto by the prince of Tranſylvania) as a man experienced vpon the border, to doe what ſhould moſt conduce to the ſafety and profit of the ſtate: for as they durſt not abſolutely prohibit them and recal the former licence, for fear of diſpleaſing Gabor and the Baſſa, who were vnited; ſo they would inſinuat their deſires and fears by counſel, now only tending to peace.

In the midſt of this appearing calm, the Ianizaries, ſome repenting (as was ſaid before) and ſome denying their conſent to remit their donatiue and increaſe of pay, did anew ſharply demand it, with threats of innouation: ſo as they were forced to content them, and euery order
B of men and officers that were not of the ſword, were compelled to contribute to it. The Viſier ſent ſolemnly to the 4 reſident Embaſſadors, to borrow 30000 checquines, as the friends and allyes of the Port, to whom in confidence they durſt open their ſecrets. Many old experienced officers miſliked this betraying their own wants, as diſhonourable, and vnlike to take effect: which indeed it did not, for mony was ſo abaſed, and trades ſo poor, as the ſtranger had no ful purſe. The new emperor to ſerue his turn, gaue out 400000 drams of gold, being his beſt veſſel, to make coin; which was ſtamped baſe, to meet with the inſolencie of the ſouldier, who would take no ſiluer, as falſe mony. Except in this ſearch, the ſtate and city appeared to be at ſome quietnes; only the Baſſa of Cairo (Boſtangi Baſſa to Oſman, newly made Baſſa of Buda) ambitiouſly ſeeking the dignitie of grand Viſier, by the gift of 100000 Checquines, his of-
C fer was ſeemingly accepted, part of the mony payd, and he ſent for priuatly into the Seraglio, as to receiue the ſeale. But the Emperors beſt Counſell within ſaw how dangerous it was to giue way to ſuch innouations (beſide a priuat grudge, this man being the inſtrument to ſtrangle the queen-mothers eldeſt ſon, when Sultan Oſman went to the Poliſh war) where in ſted of aduancement a hangman took off his head, & his houſe & goods, being very rich, ſeiſed vpon.

Cantemir-Mirza Baſſa of Siliſtra was al this time in diſobedience; whom the late Viſier attempted to diſplace, and gaue order to the Chrim Tartar to remoue him by force. But it was thought fit, not to thruſt him further out, and to make him a dangerous enemy. Wherfore a confirmation of his gouernment was ſent him, a ſword & a Veſt, in all honor; the Poles miſliking of it, he being their mortal enemy, & to be remoued at their inſtance in the late Treaty.

D At the change of the Emperor all men hoped for peace with Abaſſa Baſſa the great rebel of Aſia; but he ſhewed that he had further intents than to ſet vp the brethren of Oſman; when pretending obedience, hee ſuddenly aſſaulted and took the caſtle of Tocat, which is in the Mint of Aſia, 7 Beglerbegs and 16 Sanzacks being joined with him: all that part of Aſia obeyed him, for he oppreſſed none, only executing his wrath vpon the Ianizaries. This aduice beeing brought by a captain of that Order, made much rumor at the Port; the ſouldiers raiſing a tumult in the Seraglio, demanded to be led out to fight, and to haue thoſe of Aſia declared Rebels: to which end a councel was called, where they receiued ſo cold an anſwer, that they grew into ſome diſorder, accuſing Halil and Georgi Baſſa to haue correſpondence with them; & ſeeming to doubt that the whole ſtate did conniue at this action, to proſecute the firſt deſigne
E of Oſman, To root out that corrupted Order which did diſorder all gouernment: inſomuch as they openly profeſſed, If we be true Muſſulmen and the Emperors ſlaues, let vs go out and fight with his enemies and ours; if not, and that you maintain them againſt vs, we are reſoluedto die together, and not to be waſted by pieces. There was much likelihood of this, but that Abaſſa Baſſa had proceeded too far: therfore to ſatisfie the ſoldier, the banner was ſet out at the court gate, and that of the Aga of the Ianizaries at their gate, and Warre proclaimed, That all the force of the Empire ſhould be ready to march within four daies. When they ſaw this reſolution in the great ones, (whether diſſembled or in good erneſt) that day being the 18 of October, 1623, the Ianizaries and Spahies held a councel, and changed their minds; alledging, That Winter approching, and no prouiſion made, they would not moue. The Viſiers were glad, reſpecting their owne
F eaſe; and ſo all Aſia was left to the curteſie of the Rebell, and to giue other friends leiſure to declare: of which the Perſian was moſt doubted. In the meane time Abaſſa Baſſa aduanced and tooke the city of Angria, which was ſurrendred vnto him as ſoon as hee came before it; but the Caſtle held out againſt him: and it was reported, he wept at the gates thereof, publiſhing the cauſe of his taking vp of armes, which he ſaid was onely in reuenge of the bloud of Abaſſa aſſaults and takes the caſtle of Tocat.

Osman; desiring such as fauored him to come on his side (diuiding the people) the rest to depart in peace euery man to his own house. He did no harm, nor tooke the value of a penny: his army was very great, and euery Ianizary that he could catch, he sacrificed to the ghost of the dead Emperor. Men report, he was first aduertised by a dream to reuenge: after that, Osman appeared vnto him, and lastly Mahomet. He called himself the poor Mechmet, deputed to reform the world from the great God. The Astrologers publikely augured his prosperitie, and euery mans discourse was ful of fabulous fears and prophecies. It was said he would come to the Port and demand audience by justice, and haue the cause betwixt him and the murtherers of their prince tried by law; and that if he were condemned as a rebell, hee would lay downe his head; if they as traitors, he would execute the reuenge. And it was generally thought, out of the coldnesse of the Emperor and all the Visiers, that he was secretly maintained by them, and came to fulfil Osmans designe, to wrest the gouernment from the mutined souldier, and to root out their Order. For all the lawyers and churchmen smiled, and rather rejoiced than feared. The Ianizaries openly murmured, that they were betraied, and accused many, yet they escaped; and now few spoke against him as against a Rebell. Yet the first of Nouember, whether for colour or earnest, the great Visiers tents were past ouer the water in hast, with those of the Aga of the Ianizaries, and all the force which could be then made at the Port, commanded to winter on the other side in Bruscia, to amuse the rebels, and stay them til the spring; perhaps being willing the blow should be taken on the other side, to saue the city from a general sack.

It was afterwards considered, that to preuail against Abassa Bassa with arms was a doubtful matter, and therfore the Sultan sent vnto him a Capigi Bassa, with a Vest, sword, and a Letter; giuing him thanks for the loue shewed to his brother and his bloud, but now the reuenge belonged to himself, of which he would take care; and therefore desired him, if he were a true subiect, to return to his gouernment of Arzirum, and to dissolue his army, and there to rest til further occasion of seruice. Vpon this order from the Emperor he excused himself, That the incommoditie of winter would not suffer him to retyre, but promised to liue in peace vntill the Spring, and then he would return in obedience to his gouernment.

The Emir of Sidon takes the city and castle of Damascus.

During these troubles, the Emir of Sidon possessed himselfe of the city and castle of Damascus, with some other places and forts, as it were in an instant; threatning Ierusalem, hauing demanded supplies, or at least neutralitie from the Bassa of Aleppo. This defection was of greatest consequence, because he was a prince of descent, and a pretender in right vnto those Countries; who had four or fiue good ports to let in Christian succors; with whome it was thought he had intelligence, hauing in the time of Achmat retyred to Florence and Rome; and that he was in some measure able to subsist of himself, hauing 30000 soldiers in his army, and a good foundation and estate of his own to maintain them. And yet his actions were only lamented at the Port, and no order taken to stop or reduce them, excepting some Letters & promises, the ordinary remedie that was then applied to those manifold troubles. For that State was then in a kind of lethargie, hauing no sence nor wil to make shew to feele the inward diseases consuming it; either because they were vnable for want of money (the treasure being much exhausted) or that they mistrusted their own souldiers, euery day apter to mutine than to fight; or that the neighborhood of Abassa Bassa did amuse and confound them: and so many circumstances crossed one another as the symptomes of confusion, all things being equally feared, and nothing thorowly vndertaken. Yet a little more sencible they were of Abassa the enemie that was neerest, whose followers took a passage and bridge about foure daies journey from Constantinople, as if he meant either to possesse himself thereof for his own meanes to aduance his army, or to keep it that none suddenly from the other side might assail him: but howsoeuer, it manifested that he was not yet quiet, nor resolued to obey, as he had promised. This new attempt of his was very hotly taken at the Port, and many councels held; but (as all things do there) the fury once past, the warmth cooled by degrees in 3 or 4 daies, so that only a few more Ianizaries were sent away to make garison, and to defend the passages; with whom were imploied the false French regiment and their Colonel, all the force they could then wel spare. No Spahies entred into that quarrell, as if these were purposely exposed to bee cut in pieces: which many beleeued, by the faintnes and disunited maner of their proceedings; or els that they went out of themselues, knowing the danger to be most imminent vpon them, & that the Emperor and his Councel did stil conniue with the actions of that Bassa.

Bechir-

A Bechir-Subbaſſa who had reuolted in Babylon, and held that caſtle againſt the Emperor all the laſt ſummer, hauing bin ſtreitly beſieged by Hafis Achmat Baſſa, and in danger to be forced, ſent his ſon to Sha-Abas the king of Perſia for ſuccors: wherupon he obtained ſome Perſian horſe. Vpon diſcouery of which, the Baſſa fearing he ſhould be compelled to raiſe his ſiege, betook himſelf to diſſimulation, as if he had ſuch authoritie from the grand Signior; he made a compoſition, and not only pardoned Bechir, and all offences paſt, but conferred the gouernement of that city and prouince vpon him as Baſſa, and ſo retyred his army. Yet although Bechir-Subbaſi was content to free himſelfe from the preſent neceſſity by treaty, yet really hee held the place for the Perſian, and to his vſe; whoſe Agent at the Port demaunded both that and Ahiska, as the antient patrimonie of his Anceſtors.

B Bethlem Gabor hauing with great expedition marched ouer Hungary, and reduced moſt part thereof to his obedience, except the townes of Presburgh, Rab, Comoran, and ſome few other forts, his army conſiſting of 33000 Tranſyluanians and Hungars, and almoſt as many Turks and Tartars voluntarily following for booty; met with no ſhew of reſiſtance vntil he approched Tyrnavia, within four daies march of the borders of Auſtria: whither ſending before ſome regiments of his horſe, to the number of foure thouſand, to ſummon the town, they diſcouered ſome Imperiall troupes ſent to make gariſon therein, being ſome 2300 foot and 200 horſe, and ariued within halfan Engliſh mile; betweene whom and the city they thruſt themſelues. Theſe troups perceiuing they were ſuddenly preuented, and not knowing how far the Princes whole army was behind, tooke downe to a ſmall village, and fortified themſelues in a
C church and church-yard walled. The commander of the Hungars diſpatched away a Currier to Bethlem Gabor, with aduiſe that he ſhould ſend him ſome foot with expedition; relating the maner how he had incloſed this garriſon. In the mean time he ſummoned the Imperialiſts, and told them that he had taken poſſeſſion of Tyrnavia for his maſter: And at the ſame time ſummoned the town and told them, that their ſuccors ſent had yeelded vnto him; keeping all intelligence one from another, and both from attempting any thing. The next day, the Prince with his Vantgard ariued in ſight, and then this Colonel ſent ſome troups to make gard before one of the ports very neer the wall. Thoſe Germans ſhut vp in the Church-yard, ſeeing the enemies horſe vnder the command of the town, and no ſhot made at them, beleeued that it was true that the place was rendred: ſo before the foot came forth to force them, they
D yeelded themſelues and tooke pay of the Prince, all except ſixe and thirty of the principall, who had licence to depart. Thoſe beeing then won, the Citiſens the next day opened their gates, and receiued Bethlem Gabor for their Lord; and thus theſe were gained without any ſtroke. From thence he marched directly toward Moravia, and ſent before him a daies journey, eight thouſand horſe to diſcouer and ſpoile. The Emperor finding theſe beginnings vrgent, ordered the brother of the prince of Licheſtein, to draw downe his garriſons from Bohemia and Moravia to the frontire; and ſent the Marquis of Montenegro, with Colalto, Don Baltheſar de Maradas, the Count Slick, Walſtein, Tiffenbacke, Count Torquato kinſman to the Pope, Sampack, and all his principal Captains to meet them, and to form an army for defence. There was gathered together fifteene thouſand beſides the baggage; who being lodged at the foot
E of an hill in the borders of Moravia, and many of their ſouldiers ſtragling to gather grapes, were by the Auantcurriers of Bethlem Gabor diſcouered, and preſently beſet, who took & ſlew ſeuen hundred. Some eſcaped and gaue the alarme, or elſe the whole Imperiall Campe had beene ſurpriſed without Sentinell or gard; theſe hauing proued as ſeruiceable as the Geeſe to the Capitol. The Hungars hauing gotten the top of the hil, and ſeeing the Bohemian and German army ſo neer in the bottom, and in ſome confuſion, reſolued to make triall how they were prouided, and made ſhew of a charge; but finding them in better order to receiue them, they retyred: one Captain only aduenturing too neer, was taken priſoner, and carried to the Imperial quarter: who being examined, told them, that the prince with a mighty army would the next night be in ſight; and therefore hee aduiſed them to prepare for their ſafety, for that F he came with a reſolution to fight, and ouermatching them with their number, there was no poſſibility of other than death or captiuity. The Imperials rather ſcorned than beleeued theſe threatnings; but the captain aſſuring them it was no time to jeſt with his own life and theirs, they remoued the next morning, and marched toward a town called Ghoding, vpon the Riuer of Moran that diuides Hungary from Morauia, about which was a ſmall trench, and within it a caſtle of ſome defence. The horſe of Bethlem Gabor ſeeing them mooue towards that place, preſſed in a gallop before them, and ſet all the houſes on fire, which burned a day and a night, vntill the whole was conſumed. In the meane time Bethlem Gabor arriued with his army; and the Imperialiſts ſtood in battalion to expect their fortune: but the fire being ended, gaue them leaue to enter among the ruines and aſhes, and to make the beſt of neceſſitie, where they fortified themſelues, hauing no ſtore of prouiſion. In this eſtate being cloſed about thirteen daies, it was diſcoueted to Gabor by a priſoner, that they were in great want, and that the ſoldiers began to mutine; demanding of their captains either to lead them out to fight, and die like men, or to make ſuch a party for them, as their preſent condition would admit. Don Balthaſar General of the horſe, in the name of all the commanders, gathered the army together, and acknowledging to them, firſt the great vertue they had ſhewed to abide at once the aſſaults of perill and famine, for their honour; and proteſting that their caſe and their Generals, was all one for matter of allowance, intreated them to ſtrengthen themſelues with hope and conſtancie, and required of them an vniuerſall promiſe, that they would abide with patience, vntill the end of October then at hand: if in that time, neither God nor the Emperour ſent them ſuccours, he would make ſome compoſition for them; not doubting to finde Bethlem Gabor a Chriſtian and a ſouldier, though an enemy; and to this propoſition they all gaue their words and faith. The reaſon of this ſhort obtained time, proceeded not from any thought of ſupply from the Emperour, but from an opinion and cuſtome, that the Turks would breake vp their campe vpon Saint Demetrius day the ſix and twentieth of the month of October; neuer vſing to ſtay longer in the field for the incommodities of Winter; and that now they ſerued in the nature of voluntaries, and had gotten their prey, it was likely nothing could hold them from riſing: but if that hope failed them, they then reſolued to giue the ſoldiers leaue to make quarter for themſelues; the Generals and commanders purpoſing to retire into the caſtle with ſome competent numbers, which they doubted not to keepe vntill ſupplies or weather ſhould force the enemy to diſlodge. The Prince of Tranſyluania knowing likewiſe that at that time he ſhould haue trouble enouh to ſtay his ſuccours, and if they ſtaied, hee feared they would prooue ill Winter gueſts, and diſcredit him with his Hungars, whom they indifferently ſpoyled, tooke counſell either to force the enemie by that day, or to winne them by policie; but the later was the ſafer way: for it ſeemed he had no deſire to put ſo many perſons of qualitie into the power of the Turks, whoſe priſoners by agreement they muſt remaine; and hauing alſo intelligence, vpon what hopes the Imperialiſts held out, hee counterwrought with the Turks, to giue him a promiſe to abide with him fifteene daies after Saint Demetrius; in which time he pretended to deliuer the Fort and all into their hands; conjecturing as it ſeemed, that before that day the Germanes would make ſome ouerture, out of which hee might worke his owne aduantage, and obtaine his owne ends, and they would admire and feare his power and credit in the Turkiſh army: for doubtleſſe hee might haue forced them if he had pleaſed, but then he had made his eſtate deſperat of any reconciliation with the Emperour, and muſt reſolue to continue the warre; vncertaine of the conſtancie of the Turks, aſſured, they being once retired, would very late draw againe into the field; and perhaps hee doubted the various ſucceſſe of warre, and of the ſetling of the State of the Grand Signior in Aſia, where all things were in diſtemper; and was ſomewhat carefull of his reputation in Chriſtendome, which he knew was farre aduentured in this action: for which aboue twenty thouſand poore ſoules loſt their libertie, and endangered their faith. Therfore he made vſe of his time and his wit, and the Imperials finding themſelues deceiued in the hope of breaking vp of the camp, now no longer able to ſuſtain their wants, ſent Commiſſioners to him in the Emperors name, to treat ſome agreement. Hee ſeeing his fifteene dayes weare out apace, and the Turks beginning to diſlodge, accepted the offer; and that very day to giue ſatisfaction to the Port, diſpeeded one of his chamber in poſt to make knowne to the Vizier (a man not vneaſie to abuſe) that hee had done his vtmoſt, to detaine the Turks to winter in Hungarie; but being not able longer to hold them together, hee was forced to come to a treaty: for to venture to aſſault the trenches, was full of perill; to riſe without ſome concluſion, were to quit the place, to honour the enemie, and to weaken his owne reputation: to continue the ſiege after the departure

A ture of his ſuccours, would hazard his owne Army into mutinie: therefore he was reſolued to make a truce for eight moneths; that ſeeing the grand Signior had conſented to receiue the Emperors Embaſſadour, time might be allowed for treaty and final concluſion. He gaue him inſtruction to ſay, That as then he had not fully agreed, but that it was reſolued on to be don, onely with a formall reſeruation of the approuement of the Viſiers, without which it ſhould be held as not done. That he ſhould require the finall reſolution of the Port, Whether the grand Signior would continue conſtant, and maintain him in the war or not: If they reſolued vpon Warre, then to demand prouiſion of munition, money, ſouldiers, and all other neceſſaries, in ſeaſon and in a meaſure; in thoſe times impoſſible. If they deſired peace, that they ſhould giue a draught of what conditions they affected. But withall, an abſolute power vnto
B himſelfe to mitigate them, and to make ſuch other at his diſcretion, as the neceſſity of the affairs and time required for the profit of the Empire. The Prince at the firſt arriuall of the Commiſſioners of the beſieged at his Quarter, diſcouered ſome jealouſie and diſcontent in ſome of his followers: Wherupon he called before him moſt of his Commanders, and deſired them not to miſtruſt him; he ſhewed ſome reaſons why he might be inforced to make a truce, but proteſted he would neuer depoſe armes, nor conclude a finall peace with the Emperour, except he would alſo diſarm, and leaue thoſe prouinces and the Empire in quiet. For though it were a hard choice for him to be bitten by a Wolfe or by a Dog, (which were his owne words) yet ſeeing he could better truſt the one than the other, hee would make vſe of one to curb the other. This gaue not full ſatisfaction; but the words of a Prince muſt bee currant
C payment, becauſe they beare his ſtampe; for his meaning, or what he treated, he truſted none withall but his own breſt. The meſſenger hee ſent vnto the Port, played his part ſo well and ſecretly, as he gaue ſatisfaction to that State, ready enough to beleeue well, and procured a ratification of the Truce ſuppoſed then to be made: and for inſtructions in the intended treaty, he propounded in his maſters name three articles, and one Commiſſion. Firſt, That the Emperor ſhould diſclaime all right and title to Hungary, and ſhould leaue the people free, and the Prince of Tranſylvania to gouern them. Secondly, That the Princes and all the prouinces that had ſent their Embaſſadours and preſents to the Port, and had made league with him, and had taken the Imperial protection, ſhould bee reſtored to their priſtine liberty and eſtates. Thirdly, That the emperor ſhould pay a tribute of forty thouſand dollars for Auſtria,
D pretended to be granted in the daies of Sultan Solyman. But the Commiſſion was the key of the work, wherby the Prince, with the counſel of the Baſſa of Buda, obtained ful power at his own diſcretion, if he found peace conuenient, to make and conclude it; this laſt being (as was ſuppoſed) the end and ſcope of Bethlem Gabors deſires: the other propoſitions onely a garniſhing, to make the Turks beleeue that he was careful of their honor and ſeruice; and the Emperor, that he was very powerfull, and much eſteemed at the Port. Which all men imagined would produce an end of thoſe wars: for the prince of Tranſylvania confeſſed, That hee drew not in the Turkes for any need he had of their ſuccours, nor for any benefit intended to them, but to make a glorious ſhew to the Emperour, of his credit with the grand Signior, therby to facilitate his ends.

E After ſome time ſpent in treaty with the Commiſſioners of the army, a truce was taken be- A truce between the Emperor and the Prince of Tranſylvania. tween the prince of Tranſylvania and the Marquis de Monte Negro, General for his Imperiall Maieſty, before the town of Ghoding on the frontier of Moravia, where the Germans were beſieged; and letters preſently written therof by the prince to the great Viſier, which were dated the tenth of Nouember. The mediator between them was the Palatine Staniſlaus Turzow an Hungarian. The articles of greateſt importance, or that were then publiſhed to the world, were foure:

I. The Articles of the truce.

F That on both parts armes ſhould be depoſed for ten months (ending the ſixt of September 1624.) and all other acts of hoſtility giuen ouer. That there ſhould of neither ſide any attempt be made, nor by force nor fraud to take any caſtles, forts, cities, or places of defence during this time; and that both Germans, Hungars, and Turks ſhould be alike comprehended.

II. That if the Emperour were deſirous to treat and conclude a finall peace with the Graund Signior,

Signior, he should vse Bethlem Gabor as the mediator, and doe nothing therein without his priuitie. G

III. That all the places and forts taken in by the Prince of Transylvania in his late expedition, should rest quiet in his possession vntil the time expired. And that all cities and castles now in the possession of either, should so remain without any alteration.

IV. That all passages should be open for free trade and secure intercourse of Merchants, and all other the subiects and friends of either side.

This done, the Prince of Transylvania made a shew of redeeming all the poor captiues ta- H ken by the Turks, at his own charge, with some help from the Imperials, vpon whom hee layd the blame, as hauing failed to meet him vpon a passage of water, where hee entertained the Turkish army; but they not comming, he pretended the Turkes rose in the night and carried them all away, to the number of twenty thousand.

The Prince warned the Turks to keepe in order, and not to straggle in their retreit, nor to commit any insolencie and spoil, the country being all in arms, and already inraged. But they followed not his counsel; which caused some 2000 Hungarian horse to set vpon them as they were diuided, and slew fiue or six hundred of them, and recouered some prisoners: whereupon the Turks vnited and returned, and killed as many of the Hungars, took one man of qualitie, and many other slaues.

Vpon aduice from Hafis Bassa General of the prouince of Babylon, That the King of Persia I
The King of Persia innades the prouince of Babylon. with a powerful army had entred those quarters, and that both the city & that country would be lost, if aids did not ariue very speedily; and the rebels in Asia continuing their insolencie, a War was suddenly proclaimed at the Port, in such termes as neuer had bin heard of in former times, to say, That whosoeuer took pay of the grand Signior in any kinde as a souldier, if he came not to the rendevous appointed, with his arms, he should be confiscated, esteemed as a Rebel, and his wife and children sold for slaues. This was sent into Greece, Natolia, Trabizond, and all the vtmost confines of the Turkish Empire. Herupon the grand Signior and the wisest of the Bassa's inclined to buy Abassa Bassa, and to send him a generall pardon and grant of all his demands, vpon condition, That he would presently march and turn his army against K the common enemy: fearing either the doubtfulnes of a battel with desperat men, or to force him to retyre and join with the Persian, where he might be wel receiued. And as the present condition of the state then stood, the counsel was good: but the Ianizaries would not consent nor hearken to any reconcilement with their profest enemy; but required to be led out against Abassa Bassa first, and so to proceed in the war: and becaus their own Aga, brother in law vnto the Emperour, did not concurre with them in opinion, they mutined against him, who wisely gaue way to the storm, and surrendred his charge, to which a Page of the court was presently aduanced. Thus whilst it was vnresolued how to proceed against the Persian and Abassa Bassa jointly, who continued to spoil and put to ransom all the lesser Asia, and could not be reconciled for the Ianizaries, nor safely attempted for the Spahies (between which two orders there L was as yet bad intelligence and emulation) the king of Persia conquered the prouince and city of Babylon, put to flight Hafis Achmet Bassa the General of that defensiue war, & tooke prisoner Chur Haffen Bassa a renowned old souldier, cut in pieces all that opposed him, possessed
* Niniue. himself of * Mosul, and Leska on the Persian sea, and diuiding his army, sent part toward Van and Diarbeck, and the other toward Mecha; as if he had hope and designe to share all the Eastern part of the Turkish empire.

His Maiestie the King of great Brittain hauing by his first letters in 1621, complained to the grand Signior, and commanded his Embassador to seek redresse against the piracies and insolencies of the inhabitants of Algier and Tunes, who in the two former yeares had ta- M ken aboue an hundred ships and Vessells of all sorts, and had made slaues of aboue twelue hundred of his Maiesties subiects, and had then vpon their wharfes a thousand pieces of iron ordnance, besides those in their shipping, taken from the English and Dutch: The Embassadour pressing to obtain justice against them, or that they might be abandoned and left to the justice

A iuſtice of his Maieſty, without offence of the Port; the great Viſier offred to giue what commands ſhould be required. But he knowing how weake effect thoſe letters of courſe had produced in other occaſions, and how little obedience and reſpect thoſe common Theeues did beare vnto the Port (the Baſſa's themſelues conniuing, and nouriſhing therby their own gain) eſpecially conſidering, that what face and ſeeming diſlike ſoeuer was ſhewed and pretended, yet inwardly the Turks did take pleaſure and glory, that the Chriſtian was robbed, weakned, and ſpoiled, vnder the ſhadow of peace; did vtterly refuſe to accept of ſuch feigned remedies, but inſiſted vpon two points, wherby only there might be ſome hope of redreſſe in that affaire.

Firſt, That the grand Signior would ſend an expreſſe Chiaus to Algier and Tunes, to call
B to the Port ſome of the principal inhabitants and aduenturers of all the Orders of thoſe Cities, ſuch as ſent and armed out the ſhips of courſe; that being conuented face to face, and accuſed & conuinced of the fact, the State might be truly informed of the conſequence of their outragious theeuery, and prouide ſuch remedie as ſhould be requiſite and ſufficient in the future, to ſecure the commerce and free nauigation in thoſe ſeas.

Secondly, That the Baſſa's who were ſent from the Port rather for cuſtome and pretence of dominion, than for any great fruit or hope of obedience (yet becauſe they returned at the end of their gouernment, they might be reſponſible for matters concerning themſelues) might receiue ſtrict and abſolute order, not to take the tenths of the prizes, becauſe being diſ-intereſſed, and ſharing no profit, there might be more hope, by their authoritie, of execution of the C grand Signiors pleaſure in reſtraint of their robberies.

Theſe propoſitions at firſt found much oppoſition, but the Embaſſador refuſing all other ordinary & vneffectiue means, required either this form of proceeding, or that the grand Signior would declare them out of his protection, and ſtanding neutrall, leaue them to their own defence: proteſting, That this courſe was offered for good reſpect to the Port; yet if really ſome order were not eſtabliſhed, that there was no remedie but to redreſſe theſe injuries by the ſword, and to puniſh thoſe Barbarians as Inimici humani generis, publique enemies to mankind. Deſiring the Viſiers to take it to ſerious conſideration, that ſeeing amitie and correſpondence between the kingdom of England and the Turkiſh empire, did principally and almoſt integrally depend vpon commerce and traffique, the whole foundation was ſhaken and
D made vſeleſſe to both, by the interruption of thoſe theeues. Theſe reaſons concurring with the diſtemper of thoſe times, and their own fears, ſo far preuailed, that by a general conſultation it was concluded, to ſatisfie the Embaſſador in his own waies; and accordingly a meſſenger was diſpatched from the Port, to call to iuſtice ſome of all the orders, to anſwer as Deputies for the Cities, before the Viſier and Divan, in ſuch accuſations as ſhould be obiected againſt them.

This negotiation was begun and finiſhed, as much as concerned the authority of the grand Signior, Anno 1622; but being not perfected and tranſlated vntil the next, and that time full of various mutations, we haue thought fit to continue the thred of the former hiſtory, and not to mingle and confound it with relations of ſeueral and vnlike ſubiects and relations: and al-E though this part be found a little out of his own time, yet both wil be the clearer by the diſſeueration.

The Baſſa and inhabitants of Algier hauing receiued letters by Mehemet Aga, both reprehending them for inſolencies committed vpon the Engliſh nation, and commanding them to keep the peace of the Empire, and to bring with him ſome of the principall of that gouernement, did elect foure and twenty Commiſſioners (amongſt whom the Mufti was both head and Aduocate) and gaue them inſtructions and order to recriminate and accuſe the Engliſh of many depredations and iniuries: hoping thereby either to extenuate their own offence, or by pretending iuſt cauſe, to leaue themſelues at libertie to continue their piracies. And the Baſſa and city of Tunes hauing receiued by the ſaid meſſenger reprehenſions and commands
F to the like effect, they reſolued to conſult with their fellomes of Algier, and in their paſſage to Conſtantinople, to joyne to them two of their Councell, and gaue them inſtructions to bee aſſiſtant. But with this caution, That they ſhould not declare themſelues openly, but to obſerue the proceedings of thoſe of Algier, and to conforme with them; that if they were inforced to make peace, they ſhould concur and be comprehended; but if it were poſſi- G ble for both to eſcape, that they ſhould leaue the breach open, and themſelues at libertie.

were

They arriued together at Conſtantinople in the month of Nouember, in that yeare in the reign of Muſtapha, and made their firſt addreſſes priuatly to the Engliſh Embaſſador, ſubtilly pretending to end all differences ſecretly with him, becauſe they were vnwilling to anſwer and diſcouer to juſtice, what infinite ſpoiles they had gotten: and that if they could accommodate with him, and treat without the authoritie of the Port, they reſolued to promiſe any thing, which they meant not to obſerue; and ſo eſcaping for the preſent, they hoped to doe more miſchiefe, by the aduantage of the ſecuritie of the Engliſh, and their owne breach of faith. But the Embaſſador refuſed to treat with them, as being ſubiects, and not ſui juris, and to giue them any hearing, but in the preſence and by the mediation of the great Viſier. Wher- H upon they applied themſelues, and returned to their reſolution of complaint, and the Embaſſador proſecuting their accuſation, after many meetings and diſputes, by the interpoſition of Halil Baſſa, there was an Amneſtia accepted on both parts, and a peace concluded on the Articles and conditions following; which were ratified by the proper ſignature of the grand Signior Muſtapha, and re-confirmed by Sultan Morat, proclaimed in Tunes and Algier, and recommended by ſeuerall letters from the Viſier and Captaine Baſſa, to the Baſſa's, Caddees, and Councell of both cities.

Imperiall Commands ſent by the Grand Signior I to the Baſſa's of Tunes and Algier, Caddees, Aga of the Ianizaries, Dyes, Captaines, Antients, and other gouernors.

OVr high and Imperiall Firmo being come vnto you, know, That from the time of our great Grandfather, Grandfather, and Father of happy memory, the Kings of England haue alwaies bin firme and conſtant with all ſinceritie, in friendſhip, league and correſpondencie with the Imperiall Port, our glorious progenitors, and with our Maieſtie. And in conformitie of the Imperiall Capitulations, League, and peace heretofore agreed vpon betweene both parties, and alwaies vntill now obſerued of vs; For aſmuch as the Engliſh nation, their Merchants and ſubiects, with their merchandiſe, ſhips, and goods, K are free to come and go, traffique and negotiate ſafe and ſecure in all the parts of our Empire; it hauing neuer been our Imperiall will and permiſſion, that by any of our ſubiects or ſlaues they ſhould at any time be troubled, ſpoiled, or damnified. Which Nation, whileſt vnder the ſhadow of our juſtice and protection they paſſe through the ſeas with their ſhippes and goods, for traffique and negotiation, diuers of you my ſlaues of Algier and Tunes, without conſideration or reſpect of the friendſhip, peace, and League betweene vs and the ſaid King, whereſoeuer you meet with the ſhips of the ſaid Nation, either at ſea, or in any port or hauen, take the ſaid Ships, ſpoiling them of their goods and merchandiſe, making ſlaues and killing the men which you finde in their ſhips, a thing not onely vniuſt, but alſo contrary to our Imperiall capitulations. Wherfore that for the time to come the ſaid Nation ſhall not be ſo vniuſtly ſpoiled and indammaged, there haue bin ſent to you diuers times our Imperiall and expreſſe commands: but you ſhewing L your ſelues arrogant and diſobedient, (as we vnderſtand) do ſtill continue to rob and ſpoile the ſaid Engliſh, contrary to our ſaid capitulations, intention, and will. The concourſe of merchants and traffike being the nutriment and ſplendor of kingdoms; you ſhall vnderſtand, That it is by no means our Imperiall will, that the ſaid Nation, now in league and friendſhip with vs, be any more in like ſort, contrary to our capitulation, will, and promiſe, ſpoiled and moleſted. Which iniuries and other wrongs don vnto them, beeing a great diſhonor to our ſtate and Imperiall Maieſtie, all you haue not only deſeruedly fallen into our iuſt diſpleaſure, but alſo are worthy of all diſgrace, ſhame and puniſhment. And to the end hereafter all things may be performed by you, according to the tenor of our Imperiall Capitulations, and that all ſuch as haue committed ſuch inſolencies and ſpoiles, be apprehended and worthily puniſhed, we haue at this preſent vnder our Imperiall hand affirmed and commanded, and haue ſent you this our Imperiall commandement by M this bearer Mehemet Aga, who as ſoon as you ſhall be there arriued, we command you that you call together all, great and ſmall, noble and mean, which dwell in the ſaid places of Algier and Tunes, and publikely in the preſence of them all, with a loud voice you ſhall reade this our Imperiall commandement; and after that,

A that, with the assistance and aid of this our Messenger, you haue deliuered into the hands of the Englisſh men, there appointed for the same, without further excuse and delay, all such Englishmen, their goods and merchandises and ships; which haue beene taken, contrary to our Imperiall Capitulations, from the said Nation; all those transgressors and malefectors, whosoeuer they be, who haue committed these outrages, and caused such disturbance to the peace, league, and friendship, you shall without any fauour chastise and punish according to their deserts. And afterward ye shall haue care, that the Nation, Merchants, and subjects of England be not so vnjustly spoiled, hurt, or molested, contrary to our Imperiall promise and will. Therefore you shall publikely protest and declare vnto all, That hereafter no man do trouble or molest them, but rather meeting them in any place whatsoeuer by sea or land, to helpe and succour them, obseruing the termes of true peace and friendship, according to the tenor of our Imperiall Capitulations; and

B that euery one take heed and beware, that he do, or permit nothing to be done contrary to our will, peace, and Imperiall Capitulations. And especially you shall looke and procure all things to be obserued, conformable to this our Imperiall will. And if, according to the antient custome, the King of England will establish there any Consull, we command, that the said Consull, as also the Merchants, and other subjects, be accepted, assisted, and protected at all times according to the intention of our Imperiall Capitulation. And all of you, with all your care, endeauour, and diligence, shall alwaies prouide that the said Nation may passe free and secure vnder our Imperiall protection and shaddow, and traffique and negotiate, buy and sell through all the parts of our Dominions, to their content and full satisfaction. And if after the date of this our Imperiall Commandement, we shall vnderstand that the said Nation be again robbed and spoiled by you; be you hereof assured, that our true slaues and subjects are those which do obey our Lawes and

C Commands, and obserue our will, as also it is written in our Alcaron, Obey God, the Prophet, and your Souereigne Lord: But those that doe not obey nor obserue our Lawes and commandements, are not our slaues nor subjects, but rather by their disobedience do fall into our displeasure, disgrace and malediction. For which, our Imperiall Commands shall be sent throughout all the parts of our Empire, especially to Tunes and Algier, and to all the Ports of Natolia and Gracia, and to what places soeuer else they shall come, to be alwaies driuen from thence, abandoned, and punished, and by all our Officers and Gouernors persecuted. Therefore take you heed, that you say not hereafter you were not warned hereof before hand, but giue notice publikely vnto all men, of the effect of this our command, and looke that you cause euery man to be obedient thereunto. By which doing, you shall be blessed of God, and obtaine our fauour: for if the said Englisſh Nation be againe troubled and molested, and the King of England do send

D any forces against those transgressors, to chastise and punish them, do you consider that it shall displease vs, that ye are the cause to disturbe the peace and friendship betweene vs. Therefore take heed and beware of all such actions as may any way tend to the disturbance and violating of our said Peace and friendship. And it being our chiefest desire, that this businesse be duely fulfilled and effected when this our Imperiall commandement shall come vnto you, and that you haue performed our will therein, and shall haue deliuered into the hands of the Englisſhmen, all such men, ships, and goods as haue beene taken from them; you shall aduise vs particularly and punctually thereof, and in what manner you haue satisfied and contented them, and send the same to our Imperiall Port. And all this let be knowne vnto you, giuing alwaies credit and obedience to our Imperiall Firmo.

E Written the last of the Moone Gemaziel Ahir, from the departure of the Prophet 1031. Giuen at our Imperiall City of Constantinople.

The Capitulations or agreement of the peace made with Tunes and Algier at Constantinople, and accepted and signed by the Commissioners of Algier and Tunes.

F

LEt infinite laud and praise be alway giuen to the most omnipotent God, who of his great mercy and grace hath blessed this World with peace and tranquility, for the safety and repose of his people: In conformity to whose diuine will and pleasure, the most inuincible and mighty Emperor hath alwaies entertained peace and amity with all those who haue desired his friendship, that both rich and poore, and all sorts of people might liue at their ease and content, to giue thankes, and serue the diuine Majesty. Which most blessed peace and correspondence hath euer been obserued by all the Ottoman Emperors. Therefore whereas heretofore in the happy time, of famous memory, of Sultan Morat Han now translated into Paradise (vpon whose soule let the diuine mercies be multiplied) the Kings of England, according to that truth and integrity infused into them, hauing alwaies made demonstration of their loue and sincerity to this happy Port, then, on both sides there was concluded and established a true peace and amity, and from that time to this present haue maintained their Embassadors here: And whereas there was then granted and giuen to the English Nation an Imperiall Capitulation and priuiledge (To say) That the subjects and Merchants of England, with their ships and faculties might freely and securely nauigate in our seas, and traffique and negotiate at their owne pleasure and content, in any part of the Imperiall dominion: Notwithstanding, some yeares past there haue hapned some discontents and quarrels betweene the said English Nation and the Souldiery of Tunes and Algier; and thereupon haue succeeded diuers acts of hostility, and mutuall damages, contrary to the honour of the said Imperiall Capitulation: for which cause, the mighty and famous Prince, among the Princes of the faith of Jesus, obeyed of the greatest followers of the Messiah, only Gouernour of the important affaires of the Nazaren Nation, Scuereigne of the limits of honour and power, Lord of greatnesse and authority, the benigne and sincere friend, the glorious IAMES King of England, to whose affaires we wish all prosperity, and whose last daies may be filled with honour and felicity, hath sent to this happy and high Port his elect, esteemed, and prudent Embassador Sir Thomas Rowe, Knight, with his Royall Letters; complaining vehemently against the said Souldiery of Algier and Tunes. The substance of which Letters being signified to the Imperiall Majesty of our Emperor, he with his owne proper hand Imperiall Seale hath expressely commanded, and giuen his Imperiall order, that the people of Algier and Tunes for the future should alway be obedient and obseruant, according to the Imperiall Capitulations, and should neuer commit nor make shew of any act contrary thereunto. Which Imperiall command and Edict being sent to those cities by one Mutafaraca, of the high court, and our esteemed Capigi Bassa Mahomet Aga; who arriuing there, and causing the Imperiall Commands to be read with a loud voice, in publique Councell, and in presence of the Beglerbegh and the whole souldiery of the countries, euery one of them with all readinesse and submission did shew themselues obedient to the said Orders and Edicts of his Imperiall Majesty. But withall replied, That while we did remaine constant and firme in the Peace with the English Nation, some of their Ships, contrary to the Capitulation, league, and Frendship long since contracted on both parts, haue done diuers damages and injuries vnto vs. And whereas from vs there shall neuer any action proceed contrary to the said Imperiall Capitulations, the said English Nation oftentimes made warre vpon vs; for which cause wee haue also been inforced to reuenge our selues: but now our desire is, That his Imperiall Majesty may be truely informed of our state and cause in this businesse, and accordingly let his Majesty dispose and order vs at his owne will and pleasure: for we will alwaies remaine, and be obseruant and obedient. To which purpose they haue joyntly and with one consent, chosen the wise and honourable Lord, reuerend among the prudent, the prouinciall Mufti called Seich Seidi, and the honourable and discreet, the Mufti of the City, Seich Salmi, and the two Caddees, Iudges of the Prouinces, two that haue beene Gouernors, two Colonels of the army, two Captaines of foot, assisted with other Antients, both Burgesses and souldiers, whom they

haue

A haue with one consent created and established as their Generall Procurators and Commissioners; and in company of the said Mahomet Aga, sent to this happy Port: who being here arriued, and hauing made knowne his petition to his Imperiall Majesty, he and his absolute minister the Grand Visier, haue expressely commanded vs, That we should call before vs the English Embassadour and the said Commissioners, and with all sincerity and justice that we should heare their differences, and make a finall and good conclusion betweene them; to wipe out all distaste and rancor, and for the time to come, to conuert, and in place thereof to plant a firme and holy peace and amity. In obedience to which order, we haue sent for the English
B Embaßador and the said Deputies; betweene both whom, after long and litigious discourses, we, according to the expresse command of his Imperiall Majesty, haue declared and commanded in the name of his Imperiall Majesty, to the said Commissioners of Algier and Tunes, That for the times to come they ought to obey and obserue the tenour of the Imperiall Capitulations, and in this particular to conforme themselues to this Imperiall order and subsequent Articles: viz.

That for euer hereafter, the hostility and enmity betweene them and the English should be I. anulled and blotted out of memory, and conuerted into a good peace and commerce. And after the date of this present writing, That the English Ships small and great, merchants, and all
C other subjects of England, freely and securely, at their owne will and content, shall and may passe in the seas, and come not only to this our Imperiall City, but also safely go to any part of our Dominion, without any opposition or hinderance, according to the antient vsage, and Imperiall Capitulations granted in behalfe of both parties.

And that his Majesty the King of England, hereupon may giue order through all the cities II.
and ports of his Kingdomes, to publish, That from henceforth euery trauellor or passenger shall securely go in his businesse peaceably, and that they shall receiue neither in their waies outward or returning, any molestation, trouble, or impediment; but that the subjects on both
D parts shall alway obserue and be obedient, conformable to the tenor of the Imperiall Capitulations made from the beginning of the peace vnto this day; and that for the time to come, there may in Algier be established an English Consull, prouided he be a man of quality and credit: to which Consull and his Merchants, and to all his Nation and their goods, neither from those of Algier, nor from any other subjects of the Imperiall Port, shall be offered or suffered to be done, any wrong or injustice whatsoeuer; but arriuing at the Port, the Officers of Algier (as it behoooueth all strangers should be protected and cherished) shall receiue them with all manner of courtesie and honour. And for the time to come, in case any of the English Nation should commit any act contrary to the peace, amity, and Imperiall Capitulations, for E such offence the publique peace shall not be broken, but the officers of Algier shall certifie the same to the Consull, who (if it lie in his power) shall punish any such offendor; if not, he shall then certifie his cause to his Majesty of England, or else to his Embassador resident in our happy Port, to the end, that the disturbers of the publike peace may be duely punished. In conformity whereof, if for the time to come any of the inhabitants of Algier and Tunes, shall haue committed any action contrary to the Imperiall Capitulations, by continuing to trouble or quarrell with the said English Nation, the said Consull shall make certificate and complaint to the Beglerbeghs and Commanders of the army, who shall alwaies seuerely punish all such ma-
F lefactors, to the end that those of Algier may be carefull, neuer to do any act prejudiciall to this peace and amity.

All those English slaues which shall be found now in Algier shall be set free, who with a III.
note or list of their names shall be deliuered to the said Consull at his arriuall; in exchange whereof there ſhall be another liſt giuen vnto the ſaid Conſul, of the names of diuers Muſſulmen taken not long ſince by their Engliſh ſhips and made ſlaues: which liſt the ſaid Conſull ſhall ſend to his Majeſty of England to procure their liberty; and in this particular, of either ſide there ſhall be vſed no fraud or deceit. G

IV. For the time to come, all the Merchants and other Engliſh which ſhall arriue at Algier or Tunes, ſhall be receiued, cheriſhed, and protected from all wrong and injury; and as in all other parts of the Empire they do ſafely and ſecurely traffique and trade, ſo alſo they ſhall peaceably, quietly, and ſafely go, come, and negotiate in theſe cities, without any moleſtation, and alway they ſhall liue according to the antient Capitulations.

V. That the ſhips of Algier and Tunes, ſmall and great, meeting with any Engliſh ſhips vpon the ſea, or in any Port, or ſeale, or other where, ſhall alway ſalute one another; and the Engliſh ſhewing their Colours, that they are Engliſh and friends, there ſhall be no diſturbance or quarrell betweene them, but all mutuall courteſie ſhall be ſhewed; and they ſhall do one to the other all ſuch offices of friendſhip as may encreaſe and fortifie this good amity and correſpondence: and there ſhall neuer be don any wrong or outrage one to the other; prouided that the Engliſh Ships ſhall not take part nor aſſiſt the enemies of the Imperiall Port, nor tranſport in their veſſels the armes or faculties of our foes, nor protect nor defend them. And if it ſhall happen after this concluſion, that it ſhall be found that any Engliſh Ship ſhall ſo carry or protect the goods of our enemies, they ſhall ſtand to their perill, and receiue puniſhment; and yet this our accord and Peace ſhall remaine ſafe and vnbroken vntill the day of Iudgement: And that alway on both parts, with all care and reſpect the antient and Imperiall Capitulations and Commands ſhall be preſerued and obeyed. H I

The ceremony of the acceptation of the Peace.

THe Commiſſioners, (to ſay) the two Mufties, Caddees, and other aboue mentioned, in our preſence made anſwer, That, We all in the name and behalfe of our city of Algier, and as the generall Procurators thereof, are content, and do accept of this accord and agreement, and we doe all ſweare and promiſe to obſerue the ſame; and that for the time to come, on our parts, nor on the behalfe of our ſucceſſors and poſterity, there ſhall neuer any act be committed nor ſuffered in prejudice or diſturbance of this peace and agreement. All which foreſaid Commiſſioners hauing before vs confeſſed, promiſed, and ſworne; the ſaid Engliſh Embaſſador did alſo ſay, I in the name of my Lord and King, and as his full Procurator, do accept and receiue theſe Conditions; and do promiſe, That the Subjects of his Majeſty my Lord and Maſter, ſhall alway maintaine with the Subjects of his Imperiall Majeſty, peace, according to the antient Capitulations; and that neuer on our parts ſhall be done any act of wrong, injury, or hoſtility: and at all times, when of either ſide there ſhall ariſe any controuerſie, or be done any injuſtice, that this peace ſhall not therefore be broken, but that the malefactors ſhall be ſought out and duely puniſhed. K L

Which declaration made on both parts, it was by vs regiſtred and publiſhed, and this our preſent aſſurance and writing giuen the firſt of the moneth Gemaziel, in the yeare of Mahomet 1032, being the middle of March 1622. Signed by the Commiſſioners of the Grand Signior, deputed for the Treaty. M

A Ratification of the former Treaty and, Peace sent by Sultan Morat at his assention into the Imperiall Throne.

The Commands sent to Algier and Tunes by a Capigi of the Grand Signiors, in company of Iserug the new Bassa of Algier.

[Written by the Grand Signiors owne hand:]

In conformity hereof let it be obeyed of all my Subjects.

To the Diuan of Algier.

THe Imperiall Command; To the Caddee of Algier, to all the Doctors and Churchmen, to all the Captaines of Isuph; to all the Commanders, Elders, and Officers; to all the heads and Antients, and to all the Souldiery of Algier, and many slaues there inhabiting: At the arriuall of the high and Im-
C periall Affirmo, you shall know; that whereas from the times of happy memory of my Grandfathers and Fathers (entred into mercy, whose Sepulchres let God glorifie) vnto this day, alwaies the Kings of England haue with all sincerity beene in good peace and friendship with this high Port and all my Ancestors; and therefore the Imperiall minde and will alwaies hath beene, That according to the Imperiall Capitulations contracted at the first Treaty betweene both parties, That the Subjects and English Merchants might freely and securely go and come into all parts of this well-gouerned Empire; and that they should neuer be troubled, hindered, nor damnified by any man, and that the said English with all their Ships should haue safe and secure passage in the sea, vnder the Imperiall protection, and to their hearts content and quietnesse they should follow their trades and merchandise; and whereas in all times past, there was neuer done to them any wrong or dammage by any of our subjects: you my slaues of Algier,
D or some of you, not respecting the friendship of those with whom the high Port hath peace and correspondence, do whersoeuer you meet their Ships, either in the Sea, or any other Port or harbor, take them and all their goods, doing them many injuries & violonces; and contrary also to the Imperiall Capitulations, do make them slaues, and many others you kill: for which your actions so vnjust, contrary to the Imperiall will and Capitulations not long since in the time of our brother Sultan Osman Han (now in mercy placed in Paradise) his Majesty the King of England hauing sent his expresse Embassador, and his Royall Letter, aduising him of the wrongs and spoiles (so contrary to the League and peace contracted, and the Imperiall will) committed by you: to the end that all you should obey, and with all diligence, care, and respect, should maintaine and obserue the peace and friendship with all the friends of the high Port; that all those who had committed such actions, so contrary to the Imperiall will and Capitulations,
E should be punished; the said our brother did then send you his expresse Imperiall commands, signed with his hand; which was deliuered vnto you by one Mutafaraga, of the high Port, called Mahomet, whose dignity God encrease. Which commands being read in the presence of you all, euery man did answer, saying, You were ready to obey the Order and Commands of your Lord; but that you had some particulars requisite to be presented to the Imperiall stirrop, and therefore that you did elect certaine of the principall of your Country, and sent them hither to him as your Procurators: who being arriued in the time of the regiment of my honourable Vncle, and hauing made knowne at the foot of the Throne of his Majesty, all those your reasons which you had giuen in instruction; He gaue command, that those said Commissioners, come hither in your behalfe, with the Embassador of England resident in our happy Port, should haue a conference in the presence of my late Visier Halil, then Captaine Bassa; and that all things
F there should be accommodated and appeased. Which conference being made in the prescribed forme, there all your grieuances were largely repeated, to the end that by reason of the aboue mentioned inconueniences, there should not happen any breach of the antient Peace and friendship, all matters were then anew pacified, and by writing and new treaty accorded, That according to the antient custome there should be sent an English Consul to Algier and Tunes, and that their Merchants should safely and friendly go

thither

thither, and into all other parts of this well gouerned Empire, and traffique in all parts thereof, and that they ſhould neuer hereafter be any way hindered, offended, or moleſted by any of you; and for more caution and aſſurance, there being written an authenticall Letter, ſent vnto the King of England, he gaue order and hath appointed a Conſul with many rich merchandiſes arriued in thoſe Ports. Which my ſaid Vncle did alſo then ſend you his expreſſe Command, That you ſhould obſerue all the ſaid agreement. But now being newly aduertiſed, That you my ſlaues of Algier, who wholly contrary to the laſt promiſe, contract, and faith giuen, do get, take, and ſpoile the Engliſh Ships, that you meet on the Sea, robbing them of their goods, and making ſlaues of their men, doing them all wrong and damage; and conſidering the King of England is conſtant and ſincere in his Peace and League with vs, and that the protection and cheriſhing of his ſubjects is neceſſary vnto vs; and that for you of Algier, or other of my Beghs whoſoeuer, to take veſſels, goods, or men from the ſaid Engliſh nation, ſo contrary to the laſt agreement made, and faith giuen, is a thing much againſt our will and the Imperiall Capitulations by vs granted; and alſo it being our will, that betweene you and them there ſhould be a good peace and correſpondency, and that the ſaid Engliſh Nation may ſafely and ſecurely traffique in all parts of this our well gouerned Empire, and that no man preſume to do them any dammage or injury, and that for the time to come the tenour of our Imperiall Capitulations in their Land may be duely obſerued, we haue ſent you this our Imperiall Command, and We do command you, G H

That euery one of you, of what condition ſoeuer, do obey according to the tenour of this my Imperiall Command, ſent you on purpoſe for this only reaſon; That whether by ſea, or in any other place where you ſhall meet any Ship of the Engliſh, their people or goods, you do vnto them no violence or wrong whatſoeuer; but alway according to the Capitulations giuen them, and the laſt treaty and agreement made with you, that you hold and keepe a true peace and friendſhip with them; and alſo that you obey according to the commandements formerly ſent to you in this buſineſſe; and that you neuer do nor ſuffer to be done any act contrary vnto them, but that you with all diligence obſerue and obey this my Command ſent you: in doing whereof you ſhall obtaine our fauour and benediction. And ſeeing according to the agreement made betweene you, there were diuers ſlaues ſet free and ſent vnto you from England, you alſo ſhall ſet free all thoſe Engliſh ſlaues that ſhall be found in your hands, and ſhall conſigne them to the Engliſh Conſull. And that whereas the Ship of England which was ſent vnto you with diuers Engliſh goods, hauing beene diſcharged, and receiuing your ſafe conduct, and returning to their Country, being met by ſome of Algier, who had no reſpect to the accord and faith giuen, they did take both the Ship and goods, and make the men ſlaues: therefore that act being very contrary to our louing peace and friendſhip, you ſhall deliuer the ſaid Ship and goods and men to the Engliſh Conſull; and take heed you do not herein ſhew diſobedience to our Command, and that thoſe whoſoeuer, who haue been ſo bold to commit ſuch an offence ſo contrary to the Peace and faith giuen, you ſhall cauſe to be ſeuerely puniſhed. In concluſion, know you, that in no caſe it is our Imperiall will, that the ſaid Engliſh Nation hereafter ſhall be any way troubled or damnified, ſo contrary to our Imperiall Capitulation. Therefore let euery one of you be admoniſhed, That according as it is written in our Law, ſaying, Obey the Lord God, the Prophet, and the Emperor; that thereby obeying you ſhall obtaine my bleſſing; you ſhall neuer conſent nor permit that any thing be done contrary to my Imperiall will: for if hereafter it ſhall be made knowne vnto vs, that the ſaid Engliſh Nation ſhall be againe outraged and injuried by you, be aſſured that euery one of you ſhall fall into my indignation and diſgrace, and you ſhall bee puniſhed with all ſeuerity. Therefore be you aduertiſed, that the obeying of my Imperiall Command ſhall be vnto you an aſſurance and ornament both of glory and felicity; and hauing my benediction, euery one of you vndoubtedly ſhall obtaine happineſſe in this World, and glory in the World to come, and you ſhall enjoy all your deſerts. Then you my ſlaues of Algier, according to the tenor of this my command ſent you, be you friends with the Engliſh ſincerely and perfectly, and doe you entirely obſerue the Peace and League, and vſe kindely the Engliſh Conſull among you; and protect and defend their Merchants, and whether by Sea or in Port you ſhall meet any of their Ships, ſhew vnto them all friendſhip, and omit no occaſion to aid, defend, and to ſhew loue vnto them: and this our Imperiall Command, both of the arriuall, and in what ſort you haue accepted and obeyed it, and in what forme you haue eſtabliſhed the Peace, and reſented my will and command, you ſhall aduiſe the whole by your anſwer vnto our high Port. And thus let it be knowne vnto you, giuing alway credit vnto our Imperiall Signature. I K L M

To

A

To the Bassa of Algier.

THe High and Imperiall Affirmo being arriued, you shall know, Whereas in times past the Gouernorus in that Prouince before you, by receiuing the fifths and tenths of the ships, goods, and men, which the Souldiery of Algier did take and rob from the English Nation, and by giuing them leaue and authority to do such depredations and acts, so contrary to the Imperiall Capitulations, the said souldiery haue taken so much boldnesse and daring, that they
B continue to do innumerable spoiles and violences vnto the said English Nation: which their insolent actions being made knowne vnto the high Port, and there was instantly written and sent vnto them exspresse and Imperiall Commands, That in no way, nor by no meanes it was not the will nor the Imperiall minde, that the Gouernours should in such sort conniue, and so euidently (contrary to the Imperiall Capitulation) should take any fifths or tenths, nor giue nor permit any licence vnto the said souldiers, to do so injust things; but that in this particular they should all do their diligence & loue, and that they should neuer take any fifths or tenths of the goods of the said English, stollen by the said souldiers, nor that they should permit vpon no
C pretence, that the English ships, goods, and men, so contrary to the Imperiall Capitulations, should be neither by them nor any other, outraged, molested, or damnified; and that if hereafter it should be knowne, that the said Gouernours should notwithstanding anew haue taken and accepted the fifths and tenths of the ships, goods, or Englishmen, robbed and taken by the said Souldiery, and because they haue consented and suffered the Souldiery to doe such depredations, wrong, and spoiles, and for hauing also beene the cause to violate the Peace, League, and friendship betweene vs and the King of England; that as faulty and guilty men they should be condignely punished. Now being that we are anew informed, That the Souldiers
D do not obey the said Commands and Orders sent by vs, and that by you the Gouernors there is leaue giuen them to continue in their injust course of robbery and oppression, and that still you do take the said fifths and tenths, and that you proceed in violating of the Imperiall Capitulations; Know you, That you are fallen into a disgrace, being it is in no sort our Imperiall will, that the said English Nation should be so damnified and outraged. And to the end that all the Commands giuen and sent into those parts for this businesse, may be obserued and obeyed, and that hereafter by no meanes there may neuer be giuen nor permitted any liberty to the said Souldiers to do the like depredations vpon the said Nation, and that neuer you nor any after you, do neuer take any fifth nor tenth, nor any part, but that alway the said Nation
E should be protected and defended, We haue giuen this our Imperiall Commandement, and we do command,

That when this shall be arriued, you shall obserue and do according to this our high and Imperiall Command; onely giuen for this reason, and also in conformity of the former Commands sent in this businesse: which you shall obey with all diligence and care; and that you shall neuer take nor accept any fifth nor other share, of the ships, goods, or men, that the Souldiers of Algiers shall so vnjusty take (contrary to our Imperiall Capitulations) from the said English Nation: nor neuer hereafter shall giue leaue, nor suffer, that the Souldiers, so contrary to my will and Imperiall Capitulations, shall doe such spoiles and depredations to the said
F English Nation; and that in no case you shall neuer permit that Englishmen shall be there sold, but you shall alway protect and defend them. And know of certainty, That if after the arriuall of this our Command, we shall vnderstand, that the said Nation shall be anew outraged and injuried, no excuse from you shall be accepted nor heard; and not only you shall be depriued

of

of your gouernment, but you ſhall be ſeuerely puniſhed. Therefore be aduiſed, and take heed G that you commit no act that ſhall be contrary to my will and Imperiall Capitulations giuen to the ſaid Nation. And in concluſion, take you order that all my ſlaues of Algier may keepe peace and friendſhip with the ſaid Engliſh; becauſe it is my Imperiall deſire, that the ſaid Nation and their Merchants may come, go, and traffike in all parts of our Empire. Therefore do you do all your diligence and endeauour, and to ſee that the Peace be ſetled with the ſaid Engliſh, and take heed that you commit no negligence nor errour whatſoeuer. And thus be it knowne vnto you, gining alway faith to our Imperiall Signature.

H

The like three ſeuerall Commands, only ſome circumſtances altered, according to the requiſites of the place, were written and ſent to the Dye, and Baſſa, and Diuan of Tunes.

This Peace thus concluded and promulged, was well and exactly obſerued for fiue yeares, and not one Engliſh ſhip aſſailed or taken, and at laſt ſix hundred Mariners, ſubjects of his Majeſty, releaſed from a miſerable ſeruitude and captiuity: vntill a ſmall offence was done to them, which they eaſily apprehended, to renew their deſire of ſpoyle, by which onely they liue, as being a people without induſtry or traffique; there being but one way to maintaine a Peace with them who are glad of any occaſion of warre, not to begin, nor to vnbinde their hands; for the ſoule of Wiſedome is Preuention. And ſo we proceed to our generall Story.

I

1624 Ali Baſſa the great Viſier beheaded.

On the foure and twentieth of March Ali Baſſa the great Viſier, by whoſe meanes Sultan Morat was aduanced to the Crowne, was ſent for into the Seraglio; where being queſtioned by the young Emperor about the affaires of the Perſian inuaſion, he was condemned inſtantly to loſe his head, which was executed in the place, and his body throwne out naked into the ſtreets. The occaſion of his ſudden death was attributed to his diſſimulation with the Grand Signior in the loſſe of Babylon, that he had ſuborned falſe aduice that there was no ſuch matter; either for ſloath, or feare to take vpon him the charge of the warre, with an army that would not obey in the city: and the baſe mony which he had cauſed to be coyned, being but one fift ſiluer, with which he made a whole payment to the Souldiery, putting the good K dollars into his owne purſe. But indeed the true cauſe was his owne ſordid couetouſneſſe, who in ſix moneths had heaped vp an infinite treaſure, by ſale of all Iuſtice and Offices; which in the end weighed him downe to the ground, and ſupplied (like a large ſpunge) their preſent wants for the intended warre in Aſia. To this dignity was aduanced Cerques Mechemet Baſſa, an antient Viſier, a man of an honeſt and ſincere nature, and one too good for thoſe times; who after he had enjoyed his place but a ſhort while, laboured to ſurrender it, as vnable to ſupport or content the inſolency of the Spahies in their vnreaſonable demands of impoſſible benefits. In the meane time the preparation for the warre in Aſia was aduanced, though the reſolution to ſet forward was deferred, vpon hope that by the authority of Cherques Mehemet Baſſa and other new Miniſters, Abaſſa Baſſa might be reduced to obedience, and L that great feare and impediment remoued; they hauing vndertaken to endeauour it, though it appeared very difficult, being that he yet continued the ſiege of the caſtle of Angria; and that his ſcattered army that wintered abroad, begun to returne to him from all parts, it was iudged he would be loth (although the Grand Signior had ſent him another) to truſt his life vpon a pardon.

The Emperor prepares for a war in Hungary.

While the Grand Signior was thus threatened in Aſia with the King of Perſia and his owne Rebell Abaſſa Baſſa, the Emperor of Germany made great preparations for Hungary, to the number of fifty thouſand men, which bred great jealouſie at the Port: But his Embaſſador the Baron of Curcy, lately arriued, to preuent a generall breach, and the expiration of the laſt Treaty made for twenty yeares at Zitwar, in the yeare 1606, diſſembling all the aids giM uen to Gabor, gaue the Grand Signior full aſſurance, that his Maſter had no intent of breach with him; but openly diſſauowed the Truce with the Prince of Tranſyluania, made at Goding: and that Cæſar would make warre vpon him, vnleſſe he might haue all the places in Hungary in Gabors poſſeſſion reſtored; deſiring only a neutrality from the Port, according to the antient

A antient Treaty. The Prince of Transylvania, who now repented that he had giuen away the vse of his late victorie which he might haue enjoyed, and foreseeing the storme that was like to fall vpon him, sent to the Port for succors: who with much ado obtained some Tartars, and Commands to the Bassa's of Bosna, Buda, Caniza, Agria, and Temizuar, to be ready with all their frontier garrisons to defend and assist him in any motion of the Emperor, or else not to stirre: being vnwilling to abandon him, who was then their chiefest bulwarke toward that part of Christendom, whilst most of their forces should be employed against the Persian in Asia; who had then entred Diarbech, the antient Mesopotamia, and taken Misbin and Merdin, two principall places, and all that prouince, except Hamit the chiefe city, wherin was a Bassa who defended the same with great valor and reputation: and it was not then known where the Per-
B sian would limit his ambition, many other parts fearing him for that which he had alreadie done: for he had separated the Arabia's, and all to the East of the Persian sea, from the Turkish empire: as hauing conquered from Balsara Northward, almost all to his own Derbent vpon the Caspian sea.

Vpon the 18 of April the Victuallers for the Asian army passed ouer the water, but the dispatch of the Vizier and the army was still delaied, and little speech when they should depart. In the mean time the Persian preuailed, without any opposition of consequence: & no man could discern the inward cause of this slowness, only the outward appearance was, a suspition and complaint from the Black sea, the City of Caffa hauing sent their Mufti & other Commissioners to inform the grand Signior, That 400 boats of Cossacks were abroad; That
C they had done great spoiles in the coast of Tartaria and the Turkish Empire, and taken many ships laden with prouision for the Port; and forty thousand more armed and horsed, ready for some land attempt: which put all those parts into great fear; of which they desired that present care and prouision might be taken and ordered for their defence. Whereupon there was held a new Councel, and Ibrahim Bassa dispatched with thirteen gallies, to make gard til more aids could be prepared; intending not long after to send a land army, and the Captain Bassa with their whole fleet.

Abassa Bassa (the supposed rebell of Asia) hauing collected his Army together, suddenly rose from Angria, and departed Eastward, hauing done no spoile to the city nor inhabitants, but left behinde him a better fame than any Gouernour sent from the Port: he now accepted
D of the grand Signiors pardon, and in obedience to his command, and shew of his submission, marched directly towards Diarbecher, to vnite himselfe with Hasis Achmet Bassa, as was supposed for the defence of that Countrey, who onely made some head against the Persian. This resolution of his departure did much seruice to that State, for thereby the Ianizaries & Spahies were accorded, and incouraged to goe to the Warre, who before could not be drawn out, suspecting one another, and fearing Him more than the common enemy. For it was euident, if he had staid in the way, either the souldiers would neuer haue gone out, or beene subiect to delay, mutinies, and dissentions, by reason of their factions. But now vpon this good fortune to the State, the great Vizier, Treasurer, Aga of the Ianizaries, and all the Officers and Army were passed ouer to Scutari, and mustered the tenth of May, beeing ordained to march the E twentieth; which was expected with great longing, in respect of the Souldierie, who as yet behaued themselues soberly, and made shew of reformation and obedience to Lawe. They were all about 30000 Ianizaries and 40000 Spahies, many being gon before to make the army compleat, and the place of their rendevous about Brussia.

In the mean time a report was spred, that the king of Persia was dead; but that gained little credit with the Turks, who knew it to be a vsual policie of that King, in hope therby to slacken the hast of their forces sent against him: but it did rather quicken them, insomuch that they said he had bin often dead, bur stil reuiued to some greater mischief.

Biram Bassa was dispatched General of the frontier of Poland & Bugdania, with four thousand soldiers, and order to draw together and command al the Beghs and garisons, and to raise F forces in that quarter, in preuention of some attempt feared from the Cossackes, who were in arms vpon the border, and had put all into distraction. To the 13 gallies before mentioned, to make a gard in the Black sea, were added ten more; who first transported Iean Gheray Han, to re-establish him Prince of the Tartars, and depose Mechmet aduanced the year before. That reſolution was caried very ſecretly, and though there was ſome whiſper, yet he was not declared vntil the day he kiſſed the grand Signiors Veſt, took his leaue, mounted his gally, & departed. The cauſe of this ſudden mutation was pretended, That Mechmet was accuſed by the Poles to haue broken the peace, and ſo they would pacifie the Coſſackes on better hopes: but the truth was, he was ſuſpected, becauſe he had excuſed to ſend aid to the Aſian War, being therto required, as fearing the entry of the Coſſacks into his country; and the rather, becauſe his brother Shachin Gheray, who fled twelue years before to the Perſian, being in diſgrace with Achmat, was now returned into Tartaria, at the inſtant when the Perſian did inuade the Turks dominions, as if there had bin ſome confederacie between them, both thoſe brethren beeing braue ſoldiers: and therfore it was feared that a dangerous reuolt or war would breake out in thoſe parts; for if Mechmet were not ſuddenly ſurpriſed, it was thought he would defend himſelf and his poſſeſſion. When the Gallies had performed their ſeruice to the new prince, they were appointed to join with the others, and to diſcharge Ibrahim Baſſa; one Huzein Baſſa a Vizier of the Bench being ſent to that command: Biram Baſſa hauing likewiſe order to haue an eye vpon the Tartars, as well as on the Poles. At the firſt departure of the firſt gallies, as ſoone as they came into the Blacke ſea they met with a ſmall Carmiſal, who reporting, That only forty boats of the Coſſacks were before them, the Ianizaries mutined, and forced their General to retire into the chanel, and demanded more ſtrength; who were ſupplied with more men, and ſo proceeded.

The Pyrats of Tunes and Algier in rebellion

Amongſt other diſtractions and reuolts of the ſubiects of that Empire, the pyrats of Algier and Tunes caſt off all obedience, not only vpon the ſea where they were maſters, but preſuming to do many inſolencies vpon the land, and in the Grand Signiors beſt ports. They began at Rhodes, where the caſtle ſhot at them. Afterward, a fleet of ſix pyrats of Tunes met with a Flemiſh ſhip called the Moon, laden at Alexandria; with whom notwithſtanding their peace, they fought and fired her, not ſauing any thing but ſome of the men, whom they made ſlaues: and after comming into the port of Salines at Cyprus, they found two Flemings more, and two Venetians, able to fight with two ſuch fleets. As ſoone as they came into the Road, they now claimed peace of the Flemings, ſeeing themſelues too weake to ſet vpon all foure; proteſting, That if they would aſſiſt their enemies, the breach was on their parts: who therupon vnworthily promiſed a neutralitie. Then they ſet vpon the Venetians, the captains whereof went aſhore to craue protection of the Caſtle in the graund Signiors port; for which the Begh demanded fifty thouſand Dollars, or elſe they ſhould take their fortune. Which they refuſed, and ſo were expoſed to their own defence; and the pyrats beginning with the ſmaller ſhip, ſhe made a good reſiſtance, but hauing no help, ſhe was thrice fired, and at laſt burnt to the water. The Captaine of the Dolphine (the greater ſhip) not ſhooting a ſhoot, with his men ſtole aſhore and fired her, being a Veſſell of eight hundred tunnes, and armed with forty eight braſſe pieces. The ladings of theſe two were valued at 300000 dollars, of which the Pyrats ſaued nothing: & in euils it was a bleſſing that ſuch a ſhip fel not into their hands, ſeeing the Cowards were not able to hold ſo ſtrong a fort. From thence they ſailed to Scandaron, where finding another Fleming and a Polacra, they ſurpriſed both, and then prepared to land. The Aga of the Scale and all the inhabitants fled, and they ſacked the town, and robbed all ware-houſes: and not therwith content, they ſet it on fire, ſo that nothing remained but ſtone walls, that would not burn. The greateſt loſſe to ſtrangers fell vpon the Dutch and Engliſh; for the former loſt about thirty thouſand, and the later about ten thouſand dollars; and ſo they reigned in the port eight daies and departed. An inſolencie vnſufferable, if that State had any ſence of honor or profit: for by this example there was no Scale of the grand Signior ſecure, and all trade muſt be giuen ouer, if no preſent courſe were taken for a ful redreſſe.

Vpon the laſt of May, after long expectation, the great Vizier Cerques Mehemet Baſſa and the Army for Aſia began to march: and Abaſſa Baſſa had made ſo many halts on the way, that he was greatly ſuſpected of the Ianizaries, that he lingred vpon purpoſe for them; and at the beſt it was feared, that he would onely returne to Arzirum and keepe the ſame. The Perſians death was no more ſpoken of, but it was rather doubted hee would be found aliue ſuddenly neer Aleppo: and the Emir of Sidon did once more threaten Damaſcus and Ieruſalem. Thus

A the miſchiefs and feares of that State followed one another like claps of thunder: For Mechmet Gheray, made Tartar Han the yeare before, being encouraged by his brother Shachim, newly come from his baniſhment in Perſia, would not ſubmit to the Grand Signiors Order, and reſigne his Principalitie to his Couſin Iean Gheray (not long after ſent and made Prince) and therefore he was againe recalled, fearing to put that countrey to trouble. But before that Order could ouertake him, hee was landed, and Mechmet Gheray came downe with a great army to reſiſt him; and the Generall of the gallies in the Blacke Sea was forced to land both his Ianizaries and Artillerie for his defence, and with ſuch power as they could make (not exceeding foure thouſand) to entrench them vnder the countenance of their Ordnance, whence there paſſed ſharpe blowes in three skirmiſhes, and on both ſides about
B two thouſand ſlaine; the Generall diſpatching one galley to the Port with aduice, and requiring preſent ſuccours. Whereupon the eleuenth of Iune a peremptorie Order came from the Grand Signior, That ſeeing his honour was now ingaged, hee would maintaine Iean Gheray, and giue him ſpeedy ayds. To which end a Councell was held the ſame day, and reſolution taken to ſend ſupplies, either the Captaine Baſſa, who was then ready for the Mediterran, or by order to the Princes of Bugdania and Wallachia. And thoſe brothers, then in poſſeſſion, had no retreit, but muſt maintaine their diſobedience by the ſword, which was a matter of as much danger as euer befell the Turkiſh Empire. Hereupon the Captain Baſſa with ſixteene gallies went into the Blacke Sea in ayd of Iean Gheray, made Prince of the Tartars, whom Mechmet Gheray had beaten off the land, and forced him to retire to the Grand
C Signiors gallies that carried him thither. The Emperour being ſtill reſolued to giue thoſe people a Prince, ordered all the frontier ſuccours to meet him to place him by force; which was, in the opinion of many that knew the countrey, held a matter of great difficultie, all the Tartars taking part with Mechmet, who had in his army neere threeſcore and ten thouſand horſe.

Troubles in Tartary.

In the mean time the great Vizier Cerques Mehmet Baſſa marched towards Dierbecker; from whence there was news, That the Arabs, ioyned with ſome of the Grand Segniors forces, had giuen a checque to the Perſian: which did encourage their owne army, who were not yet out of feare of Abaſſa Baſſa and his troupes (that ſtayed about Keſarie) earneſtly expecting what part he would take. Yet the ſeaſon being hot, the Perſian aduanced little, but onely forraged
D the countrey.

Vpon the ninth of Iuly, betweene ſeuenty and foureſcore boats of the Coſſackes, with fifty men apeece (rowers and ſouldiers) watching the opportunitie of the Captaine Baſſa's being ingaged in Tartarie, entred the Boſphorus about breake of the day; where diuiding themſelues, they ſackt and burnt almoſt all the villages and houſes of pleaſure on both ſides the Riuer, as farre as the Caſtles, and within foure miles of Conſtantinople. The principall places were Biugdary and Ienicoie, on the Grecian; and Stenia on the Aſiatick ſhore: where hauing made great and rich booty, they ſtayed vntill nine of the clocke in the forenoone; and then all the City hauing taken the alarme, the Grand Signior came downe to the water ſide, the Chimacham to the water Port: Halil Baſſa made himſelfe Generall in this tumult,
E and hauing not one galley ready for defence, hee cauſed to be manned and armed all the ſhip-boats, barges, and other ſmall wherries, to the number of foure or fiue hundred, with ſuch people, as they could either get to row, or hope to fight; and diſpatched all the horſe and foot in the city, to the number of ten thouſand, to defend the coaſt from further ſpoyle. Neuer was there ſeen a greater feare and confuſion for the time: yet they expected that thoſe poore Theeues would vpon their preparation preſently retyre. But they ſeeing the Turks boats make towards them, drew themſelues together into the middeſt of the channell, not farre aboue the Caſtles, and ſtayed firme vpon their Oares in battalion (in forme of a Creſcent) expecting the aſſault, the wind and current being againſt them. Halil Baſſa cauſed ſome ſhot to bee made afarre off, but they anſwered not with one muſket, onely houered from one
F ſhore to another, without any ſhew of retreit. Hereupon, the Generall ſeeing their forme and reſolution, thought it not fit to aſſaile them with ſuch boats as hee had, but eſteemed it wiſedome enough to keepe them from further attempts; fearing if they had broken his fleet of boats, which was eaſily done, that they would venture downe to Conſtantinople, which was now empty of all defence. And thus theſe few Rouers hauing firſt made great ſpoile, lay the whole day vntil Sun-set, facing and braving that great and formidable ci ty of the World, G and all the force it could make, and departed with their booty, with their Colours spred, vnfought with or almost resisted.

The Coſſacks enter the Boſphorus.

This small action and bold attempt to affront so great an Empire, made a strange discouerie, how much vnder the reputation the terror and strength of the state was then, how weake and vnprouided they were. But as the Oracle commanded them, first to seat ouer against blind men, it hath bin their fortune euer to haue blind enemies. Philip of Macedon had neuer projected, nor his son Alexander neuer aduentured with so smal forces, the large enterprise of subduing the Eastern Empire, if they had not discouered the effeminate and taint courage of the Asiatiques, by the admirable retreit of Xenophon, & swift incursion of Agesilaus. Great armies not daring to oppose the vertue of their small numbers. So we see, of smal beginnings H oftentimes great matters do arise; for by this attempt of the Cossackes the Poles had absolutely broken the peace with that Empire.

Huzein Bassa strangled in the Court.

Huzein Bassa that had beene twice great Visier, and vpon the tumult of the Souldierie had made an escape the yeare before (a man turbulent and hated of all men) beeing at last taken and carried into the Seraglio; after hee had (by many faire promises) confessed and restored much of the treasure carried away by him, was strangled in the Court, and had the iust reward of his tyrannie. And the present great Visier, sent to make head against the Persian, did yet stay at Iconium, expecting the Soldierie, who did slowly draw to him: so that it was thought he would Winter in Aleppo, being not able to proceed in the war that summer.

The Captain Bassa, sent into the Black sea, to establish Iean Gheray Prince of the Tartars, I was forced to retyre to Caffa, being repulsed from the land; the people retaining Mechmet in possession. Wherupon, to cure the wound with as little skar as was possible, he in the Grand Signiors name was constrained to confirme the other, and to be content to accept a curtesie, for which he gaue small thanks. And Cante-Emir-Emirze hauing again entred Poland, & done some spoil by the cutting down of some woods, was intercepted in his retreit, and routed with the losse of two thirds of his Army: and the Poles with a very great Campe intrenched neer Chotyn (the fort besieged by Sultan Osman in the late war, & surrendred vpon the peace) expecting the euent of the great troubles on that side.

The Cossackes returne to the Bosphorus.

The Cossackes after their first retreit returned again to the mouth of the Bosphorus, with double the number of their first fleet, being an hundred and fifty boats at the least; the supply K hauing lurked behind, either for succour in case of need, or for some other aduantage. They staied off and on vpon the coast three daies more, burnt the Pharos, and some two or three villages. They threatened to come to the Arsenall, putting all the City in great confusion. Gards were continued and re-inforced in all parts vpon the land; and at last two Gallies, filled with porters and labouring men taken vp in the streets, and about twenty boats, were sent out to keep watch, where they remained at the entrance of the Channels. But the Cossackes with their great booty, and two or three Carmisals taken, retyred; and so the feare was past for that time. But some of the poore Cossacks beeing taken straggling too far vpon the land, confessed vpon examination, that Mechmet Prince of the Tartars was confederat with them in this attempt, in reuenge of the offer made to displace him. And this confession hastened L
the death of Huzein Bassa, who in the time of his gouernment, of a prisoner made Mechmet a Prince, and gaue libertie to the Lords of Poland that were prisoners at the Port, (of whom mention hath bin made before) and dispeeded suddenly the Duke of Sbarasky, who if they had then bin there, without doubt they had been kept hostages; for in this tumult the Agent of Poland ranne some hasard, if by the wisdome of the * Chimacham it had not bin preuented.

* Lieutenant to the great Vizier.

About the four and twentieth of Iuly the Prince of Transylvania made an absolute Peace with the Emperor, without the knowledge or warrant of the Port. Which caused great suspition among them, but they bare it both silently and patiently, in respect of their own troubles then in Asia and other places. Therfore the Prince kept the conditions the more secret: M howsoeuer, it was known that he surrendred and disclaimed all title to Hungary, and consented that the Emperors son should be presently chosen King thereof, and keepe his Court at Presburg: That all the Estates of Hungary should receiue him, and the prince of Transilvania assist and serue him in all his occasions: That Bethlem Gaber should remain quietly prince

of

A of Transylvania, and Earle of the Siculi: That he should hold Cassovia, & two or three other Signiories which he formerly possessed, during life; and after, that they should returne absolutely as members to the Crown of Hungary. And this article did trouble the grand Signior, That the Prince at all had mentioned Transylvania without any relation to him, as if that prouince had depended of the Empire. Some other articles there were concerning the estates of priuat men, and mutuall pardons; this which hath bin set downe is the substance of the Treaty.

In the mean time a Chiaus (sent by the grand Signior to the Emperor, with newes of his inauguration, and to offer the continuance of the antient leagues and treaties between them) returned to the Port with the Emperors letter of acceptance, and confirmation of the Treaty
B made at Zitwa, which was the last: wherein it was agreed, That what either side possessed at that time should remain as it was; and if any road should be made, and prisoners taken, or places surprised during the truce, on either part, that restitution and full satisfaction should bee giuen by him that innouated. Ali Bassa the Visier before, and Cerques Bassa at that present, did both of them consent to the renuing of this treaty, which was often broken: ignorant vtterly of the affaires of those parts, and of the disaduantage to the prince of Transylvania and their own State; for herby the Truce being again in vigor, the grand Signior was bound to surrender Vatz, and many other places of importance, which had bin surprised in a time when there was neither absolute peace nor war between them, and was obliged to make many other restitutions of damage. But the Imperial party did not presse those smaller matters, only demanding Vatz, with all the country depending, held themselues for their limits, strictly vnto that
C treaty, which was then again confirmed on both sides. This conclusion discontented many, who laid the blame on the information of the Bassa of Buda, a suspected pentioner of the emperor: but it was the grand Signiors troubles in Asia that made him silent, and suffer both that losse and many affronts from Tartary and the Cossacks.

Newes of the Turks army ouerthrowne by the Tartars.

There arriued in the mean time from the Black sea two gallies, which brought the bodies of two Visiers, and certain newes of the ouerthrow of the Army, sent vnder the command of the Captaine Bassa to plant the new prince of the Tartars: who hauing landed his forces and artillery, was routed and beaten, himselfe wounded, twenty eight pieces of Ordnance lost, two Visiers of the Bench, and about fiue thousand soldiers slain and taken, the rest saued by flight
D vpon the Gallies; onely the Captaine Bassa with his fleet staied about Varna to receiue new order. There had not happened to that Empire in many Ages a losse of more importance in respect of the consequences; An Imperiall Army beaten, and thereby Tartaria separated from obedience to the Turkish Empire, and that people taught to know, That they were able to make and maintaine their owne Prince. But this was no time to take too much knowledge of that disgrace; Policie teaching them, rather to cure, than to make the breach greater. For the grand Signior after that, dispatched a galley to the Prince of the Tartars, with a Vest, and a Sword for his sonne, and a confirmation to him of his place. Casting all the faults vpon the Captaine Bassa, and disavowing his attempts; though hee was sent with Commission to do it. Which (to make the dissimulation good) was like to cost him his head, being sent for E in to answer the same. The sudden yeelding on the grand Signiors part shewed a great weakenesse and feare, to flatter a victorious enemy: and it was doubted how the Tartarian would accept a gift which he had gotten by his own strength: for if he stood out hee would proue a dangerous neighbor, the city of Constantinople being alwaies open to him; for Adrianople and the borders did then fear him, and euen some Cossacks did ioyne with him, although before they had been mortall enemies. Yet to make some compensation of this defection, Abassa Bassa the strong rebell had made his peace with the great Visier in Asia; and to seale the credit of his faith by another trecherie, sent in the heads and estates of three of his chief followers to redeem his own. Which much raised the dul countenance of that Court; for although the pardon was dishonourable, yet was it seasonable. But they durst not ioyne their F Armies for fear of new stirres, for he went toward his own gouernment of Arzirum, with promise to keep it safe; and the Visier marched slowly towards Babylon, as then held by the Persian.

About the twentieth of September the great Visier Cerques Bassa abiding in Iconium, and

Abassa

Abaſſa Baſſa in Kaiſerie (neer thereunto) he was erneſtly prouoked by the Ianizaries to ſet vpon him. But the Viſier hauing expreſſe order, not to make the breach greater with the rebel, but to vſe all means to appeaſe him, and to reconcile him to them, would not be drawn to conſent therunto: for which cauſe, and ſome other their ſmall diſcontents, they twice ſtoned the tents of the Viſier, and wounded him in the head. Wherupon hee aſſembled the Commanders of the Spahies, declaring vnto them the great truſt the grand Signior had in them; and ſhewing them an abſolute Order giuen him to keepe good tearmes with Abaſſa, and neuer to fall to blowes with him, he deſired them to finde ſome way of pacification betweene him and the Ianizaries: who inſtantly promiſed their obediénce and aid to execute all his commands. Then the Viſier called together ſome of the Captaines of the Ianizaries, and perſuaded them ſo to worke with their companions, that a peace might bee concluded betweene them and Abaſſa Baſſa. Who finding their fellowes very vnwilling, had much adoe to perſuade them: in the end it was agreed, that the Viſier ſhould treat and accommodate all differences. Who preſently ſent to conferre with Abaſſa Baſſa; but he by no means would truſt himſelfe, or giue a meeting, and anſwered, That hee would neuer depart from his Followers and Army; but if he deſired to ſpeake with him in priuate, that he ſhould firſt ſend his brother the Beglerbegh of Caramania, and Elias Baſſa of Natolia in hoſtages, and that then he would come vnto him. Which diffidence of his much diſpleaſed, and the Viſier was conſtrained to treat the peace by mediation. Which hauing at the laſt brought to effect, he took his oath three times vpon the Alcaron, To hold him as a friend, and neuer to doe him any violence. The Ianizaries alſo gaue their conſent in publique, promiſing to maintaine the word of the Viſier: and the articles of their reconciliation being drawn in writing, were ſent to Abaſſa; who reciprocally made the like oath, and accepted the peace vpon the conditions following, ſigned by the Viſier: That he ſhould be confirmed Baſſa of Arzirum, his ſon Beglerbegh of Orfa, and his Lieutenant of Maras (all on the borders of Perſia) and that he ſhould depart with all his army to the defence and cuſtodie of that prouince, and wait vpon the aduantages of the Enemy.

Abaſſa reconciled to the great Viſier.

While Abaſſa Baſſa did treat this accommodation, Colophon Muſtapha Baſſa (the principal of his Colleagues in all his rebellion) made ſome ſhew of retyredneſſe from him, and vnderhand to parle with the Viſier apart; and in concluſion wrot vnto him, and promiſed to deliuer or to kill Abaſſa Baſſa. Which Letters of his being either intercepted or ſent him, and ſeeing that Colophon had reſolued to kil him treacherouſly, he called him into his tent, and asked him plainly, Why he went about to betray him; and withall ſhewing him his own hand, hee drew his ſword and claue his head, deliuering all his goods to ſome ſeruants of the Viſier, to conſigne vnto their maſter. Then it was anew moued to Abaſſa Baſſa, That he ſhould aduance with his forces preſently towards Babylon, againſt the Perſian, who had retired his main Army to oppoſe the princes of Vsbecke, who had made ſome incurſion; leauing fiue thouſand garriſon ſouldiers in the city. But Abaſſa refuſed to go, vrging, That hee was onely bound by the Treaty to returne and make gard in his gouernment of Arzirum. Whereupon the Viſier, forced to ariſe and aduance, he arriued at a caſtle called Nigda (neere Aleppo) wherein were diuers chiefe followers of Abaſſa Baſſa; who hauing vnderſtood of the Pacification made, came out with preſents and victuals to meet the Viſier and his Army, and were of him well receiued. But the Ianizaries enuying to ſee them ſo well vſed and honoured, in a fury fell vpon them and killed them all; and vſing the opportunitie, entred the Caſtle, put to execution their wiues and children, and euery perſon found therin, and all others that could be diſcouered in the bordring villages appertaining to him, to the great diſcontent of the Viſier. Which being known to Abaſſa, and ſeeing they had broken their oath and faith, he roſe with his Army, and marched right to the Imperial camp; where arriuing, one of his captains with 400 horſe began the dance, and without delay fell into the Quarter of the Ianizaries, doing ſome execution for an hour and half; in which skirmiſh there fell on both ſides two or three thouſand. The Viſier ſeeing this beginning, partly forced by the Ianizaries, and partly for his honor, drew vp his whole army to come to a battell in their defence. Which Abaſſa Baſſa perceiuing, and that which hee expected not (who hoped that the Vizier & Spahies would haue giuen him leaue to reuenge many iniuries vpon the faith-breakers) vnwilling to fight with the

A the grand Signiors General ſounded a retreat, and got himſelf and his army a mile or two diſtance off. The Vizier to ſhew himſelfe faithfull to the Ianizaries, and to keepe in grace with them, ſent four Beglerbeghs with their regiments in purſuit of him; who finding Abaſſa Baſſa and his army in good order and firm, made ſome ſhew of skirmiſh to little purpoſe. But they returned to the campe, and told the Vizier, that they had found him in battalion with 40000 men, and that they were not able to deale with him. The next day Abaſſa with many great threatnings marched away directly for Arzirum; and the Viſier to Diarbecher, for his hybernation; in great diſpleaſure of the Ianizaries, and the rather for that he was beloued and protected by the Spahies.

The brother of Mechmet Gheray in the mean time brake through the prouince of Bugdania The Tartars make an incurſion into Poland.
B (Radula the Vayuod hauing made eſcape) and entred into Poland, firſt ſpoiling the country, and driuing away all the cattel; and afterward entred Wallachia, and beſieged his ſon prince of that country, in his caſtle of Tergoviſta, notwithſtanding they were ſubiects of the graund Signior. And in ſted of ſending back the artillery loſt in the laſt defeat (which was expected) he entred the caſtle of Caffa, the chief port of the Negropont, and carried away from thence all the cannon and munition, which he tooke vp into the land to his town of Bagchaiſeray, as if he meant to fortifie himſelfe, a practiſe at that time vnknown to the Tartars. Which were ill ſignes of ſubmiſſion, & yet the name of Muſſulmen, at any time when they come to blows doth eaſily accommodate all quarrels.

About the 12 of March following, the Tartar Han ſent an Embaſſador to the Port, with an Tartar Han ſends an Embaſſadour to the Port.
C offer of his Maſters ſeruice, which was receiued with great joy; excuſing the entry of the Tartars into the frontier of the Turkiſh empire, as being don in the ſeruice of the grand Signior, only to fetch Cante-Emir-Emirze and his followers out of Siliſtria, and to compel them to retyre, to auoid and take away all occaſion from the Poles to lament the injuries don by them; that therby they alſo might take the like order for their Coſſacks, and ſo the peace might be duly obſerued on both ſides. Whereupon a poſt was diſpatched into Poland, aduiſing what was done, and requiring that on both parts the like correſpondence might be obſerued; or els that the grand Signior would vnderſtand, if the Coſſackes made any new attempt, that the peace was broken on that ſide, being they could haue no excuſe to lay the fault vpon the Tartars. This vſe was made of the Embaſſage: yet the Vizier was not without jealouſie of the D ſinceritie of the meſſenger, but thought he was ſent for exploration, to diſcouer the force, preparation and reſolution of that State; and therefore they made all ſhew of good prouiſion, arms being giuen out to the Boſtangies, and a great fleet dreſſing for the black ſea, wherin the Coſſacks had bin already ſeen, and rumor made them to exceed 300 boats: inſomuch that all the inhabitants of the Boſphorus did daily retyre to Conſtantinople. The fear was generall, which was ſufficient argument of weakneſſe; and the year before had ſhewed what might be don with a ſmall and reſolute force.

Now that the ſeaſon ſerued, the Perſian prepared to continue the inuaſion, and the Vizier 1625
E to oppoſe him. All the Soldierie departed towards the campe, though they intended not to meet, but to make war by diuerſion. Abaſſa got ſome credit at the Port, and they eaſily apprehended all occaſion to beleeue his reconciliation. One of the chief commanders in the Perſian army ſent to Abaſſa, to perſuade him to deliuer Arzirum his gouernment to the Sha: which he ſeemingly accepted, and trained him on with 8000 men to take poſſeſſion; when in the mean time he drew together his troupes, and ſuddenly ſent them vnder the conduct of a prince of Georgia, and ſet vpon them, who ſuſpected no ſuch treaſon, routed them, and ſlew a thouſand, whoſe heads he diuided and ſent for preſents to the Port and the camp. Vpon which action, by the multitude he was proclaimed to be the beſt ſubiect of the graund Signior, and named to be Vizier. But ſome thought it not ſo great an aſſurance of his fidelitie, becauſe he went not in perſon, nor would come out of his ſtrength, though commanded to draw into the F field to aſſiſt in the generall ſeruice: excuſing himſelfe vpon the neceſſitie of defending the frontier. Neither could he refuſe to ſend ſome of his followers to this exploit (being vrged therto by ſome of his Captains) without diſcouering himſelf too ſoon; his reſolution vndoubtedly being, That while thoſe two great Oppoſits ſtroue for the whole, he would keepe a part of Asia, and his own head; knowing that hee could make his peace with the surrender to the Conqueror, at pleasure. G

of

From these parts were not the greatest nor neerest feares: for the Prince of the Tartars hauing made peace with the Poles, and taken the Cossackes into his fellowship, made shew of some designe against the Turkish Empire; and the people were indifferent, many inclining to him. The Cossackes with three hundred Frigots crossed the Black sea, sacked and burnt the suburbs of Trapezond, and all the adioyning coast; and retyring, were receiued into the port of Ghiosleue, belonging to the Tartars; which augmented the iealousie, that they would vnite.

A new rebel in Asia.

At the same time there appeared a little rebel in Natolia, one Ianet Ogli, a simple Spahi not aboue 24 years of age, dwelling in the plains of Tyria; who vnder the colour of reformation of the commonwealth, came down to Smyrna with ten thousand soldiers. The city amased, sent to Constantinople for succours, but receiued an answere as cold as their means to helpe them: The Christians fled to their ships, by chance in the Port: the gouernor to the Castle. But it seemed he had priuat quarels with some great men in the towne, whose faction sent out 4000 shot to keep the passage; which being beaten, he came before the city and executed his wil, beheaded two Caddees, punished diuers insolent soldiers, placed and displaced the Officers, and proclaiming peace in the grand Signiors name, offended no man, nor did any spoyle; but giuing a particular protection to the Consuls, and promising them in their quarel, if they were oppressed, to return with his rod of correction, he departed to his own home without any further trouble. The operation of that medicine proued wholesome, though it appeared dangerous; and he pretended to haue had order from the State, a disorderly way: but it was likely they did rather conniue at, than approoue of that rude execution of justice. Howsoeuer, not long after he had disturbed Smyrna, he tooke vp armes again with a greater power; which followed the impunitie or prosperitie of his former attempt; for he marched toward Bursia in Natolia: and the State was forced then to take his actions into consideration, which they would haue ouerseen. There were two Councels held about him, and a resolution taken, while his forces were but new and wauering, to resist the beginnings, and to send out some strength to suppresse him: but who should command, who would obey, or whom to trust, could hardly be agreed. He still vsed the name of the Grand Signior, and the common blind of rebellion, Reformation: but what he would haue, or whither his designs drew him, was the more dangerous for the vncertaintie. H I K

The Armado sent into the Blacke-Sea for suppressing the Cossackes, arriuing at Varna, a garrison towne kept by Gebegies (an inferiour Order of souldiers) there fell out a quarrel betweene them and the Ianizaries. These (after the sway of their insolence) would take from the other their Ouens in their owne Towne: which being not endured, a priuate fray was begun betwixt them; which breaking out into a faction, the fellowes of both Orders became interessed and ingaged, and they fought a sharp battell; many of both sides fell, to the number of a thousand. The Captaine Bassa, who could not preuent this quarrell, sought to appease it, by doing some justice against the Gebegies; but it proued onely enough to inrage them against him as partiall; and too little to satisfie the Ianizaries, who thereupon forsooke the gallies, and kept the land, leauing the Armado without soldiers to gard it, in danger of the Tartars and Cossackes. L

The great Vizier in Asia gaue command, That no soldier should retyre to Winter Garrison, but stay with the army about Babylon, the fittest season being then to make the war; disposing himselfe in the mean time to take in places of lesse import. Abassa Bassa moued not, and promised obedience in other things, but to go out of his hold of Arzirum he did peremptorily refuse.

Strange predictions of a great plague insuing.

The yeare and season was full of contagion, which was obserued by some forewarnings, and some extraordinarie disposition of the aire and accidents: For on the eighth of May at midnight there was a great and fearfull earthquake at Constantinople, which indured about six minutes, and crossing the sea, was felt in Greece, Asia, and the Islands. And on Munday being the twenty ninth of Iune, at night there began a most terrible tempest, with so violent and continual thunder & lightning, that al the city of Constantinople shewed as if it had bin M

on

A on fire; at the end whereof fell a ſtorme of haile, that brake tiles and glaſſes, ſo that ſtones by report were taken vp of a hundred and fifty drams; but from credible witneſſe that weighed diuers of them, the next morning there were found of ſixty and ſeuenty drammes apiece, (which is about ſeuen or eight ounces) wherewith many were wounded. On Sunday the third of Iuly, another tempeſt of thunder and lightning began at Conſtantinople, which burned a woman and her childe in their bed, and ſlew much cattell in the field. And the fifth of Iuly the ſickeneſſe was growne to that height, that the Turks proclaimed their publike proceſſion and prayers; which is performed with great ſolemnity by the Mufti and all the Mullaes, accompanied with the Viſiers and chiefe of the city, attended by the people at a little Moſchy on the edge of the plaine of Achmadan, ouer the water on Grecia ſide: which cete-
B mony is neuer vſed vntill the mortality exceed a thouſand a day; which was eaſily knowne by the burials, that were all made without the wals, and account of them were kept at euery Port; and that day was numbered only to go out of the gate of Adrianople nine hundred and ſeuenteene. On the eighth following there died a thouſand thirty foure: by computation of the whole (being many Ports of buriall) there could not die leſſe than two or three thouſand a day, beſides Galata, Pera, and Scutari, the infection being ſpred almoſt into all the villages. The ſame day, Proclamation was made in the city, That no Butcher ſhould kill mutton; a murrion or plague (whither was vncertaine) hauing taken that ſort of cattell ſo violently, that they died in multitudes with ſores in the fields; and it was not knowne what men ſhould eat, nor where ſafely to prouide it.

C Vpon the approch of the great Vizier toward the Prouince of Babylon, there was a moti- The Perſian feignedly deſires peace, and the Georgians ſend their Embaſſadors.
on made on the part of the King of Perſia, of peace; but it was vnderſtood by the Vizier to be but an artifice to delay his Army. There came Embaſſadors from the Princes of Georgia, who hauing formerly depended vpon the Perſian, were about nine yeares before betraied and tyranniſed by him: in reuenge whereof they hauing taken protection of the Grand Signior, and the laſt ouerthrow giuen to the Perſian (though attributed to Abaſſa) being executed by a Nobleman of that Nation, they then ſent to offer themſelues in a confederacy of that war. The meſſage was acceptable, and the Archbiſhop of Calcedon their countryman appointed to receiue, entertaine, and returne with them as Embaſſador from the Port, to confirme and diſpoſe the whole Nation (who were gouerned by three Princes) to enter into this League, D and to make warre vpon the King of Perſia. The race of thoſe three Families had long ruled that Countrey, whereof one was accounted the chiefeſt (though the others had ſeuerall juriſdictions) of which the maſculine line was then failed, except only one, who being made Turke young, was a Baſſa neere the Red Sea. The State ſent vnto him, and made meanes to the Vizier, that hee might returne and be their Prince; but on condition that he ſhould become a Chriſtian: but that being denied them, they elected the daughter of their laſt Prince, notwithſtanding their antient Law, that excludes the ſucceſſion and rule of women; and hauing procured therein a diſpenſation from the Patriarch of Conſtantinople, thoſe Embaſſadors had alſo otder for formes ſake, to procure the confirmation from the Grand Signior; which was granted them.

E The Ianizaries mutined in the Blacke-Sea being againe appeaſed, the Captaine Baſſa ſent out Sackſachi Baſſa, hauing made a fleet of an hundred and foureſcore frigots, and armed them, to keep the riuers about Oſu, by which the Coſſackes deſcended. Sackſachi arriuing at Oſu, and finding all quiet, on the Biram day went aſhore; and being at dinner, was ſurpriſed by the Coſſackes, and hardly eſcaping, loſt all his fleet, and many of his men. The Captaine Baſſa hauing aduice of this ouerthrow, made all haſte to Oſu, and finding no ſhew of enemy, reſolued to go on towards Caffa; but that night the Coſſackes deſcending with their boats by many out-lets, the Baſſa of Oſu ſent to him to returne ſpeedily and make haſte towards Conſtantinople, for that the enemy, growne proud with their late victory, ſuppoſing no other force abroad, were directly gone for the Boſphorus, and were reſolued to aſſault the Imperiall The Coſſackes returne to the Boſphorus.
F city, or at leaſt (as they boaſted) to burne the Arſinall. Vpon this aduice, the Captaine Baſſa ſet ſaile, and the next morning by breake of day, and in a fog, fell in with the fleet of the Coſſackes (conſiſting of three hundred and fifty frigots, that catried from forty to foureſcore musketiers apeece) and was ſo mingled with them, that he could neither vſe his ordnance for the danger of his owne gallies, nor auoid them without fight. Thus engaged, the Coſſackes furiously began the assault, and being three or foure boats to one gally, boorded them: twice they entred the maine mast of the Admirall galley of the Turks, killed three at the helme, and broke the rudder off; which being againe fastened by foure Christian slaues, and the Sunne breaking out, so as the gallies could vse their great shot, and the winde rising, the Cossackes were forced to leaue their fight, and betake them to their oares; where in parting, with the ordnance (as was reported) thirty boats were sunke, and six or seuen hundred men taken vp. The conflict was bloudy on both sides, being come to hand blowes, and therein the Ianizaries almost consumed. The Captaine Bassa sent to the Port for supply of men, and all that tooke pay of the Grand Signior, euen to the old soldiers which were put to pension, were sent away, some to make gard at Chanakchy by land, on the mouth of the Bosphorus; other by water to re-enforce the Armado, and all was filled with trouble and terrour. The feare of the Tartars likewise was not so extinquished that there was not cause to expect some attempt by land, Shachi Gheray being in armes; and those motions if not suddenly appeased, would occasion another breach with Poland.

The Plague at that time raged as if it would haue dispeopled the city of Constantinople and the villages adjacent, and the Francke Nations did all feele it; but the Turks and Iewes by Armies, as if they went to conquer hell, if there were no league and confederacy betweene them. On the three and twentieth of Iuly there was Corban or sacrifice made at the gate of the Seraglio, two Beeues and a hundred Sheepe: at euery other Port of the city two Beeues and some Sheepe for the contagion and warre.

Ianet Ogli returned againe towards Smyrna, and the Chaya or Lieutenant of the Bey of the city, raising three thousand souldiers, went out against him, hoping to draw more to follow him: they met at a plaine, and fought valiantly; Ianet Ogli remaining victor, with the death of the Chaia, and two thousand of his men: and he was dayly expected at Smyrna, hauing sent before to assure the people that he would do no violence to any Trader or Inhabitant, but only renew the Oath of obedience to him, and punish some that were authors of this enterprise against him. The Merchant-strangers were so confident in him, as they purposed not to stir, but to receiue him as their Protector; and thought the Rebell an honester man, than any Iustice of their Towne. The mystery of this strange course could scarce be penetrated, for he still reported he had authority from the Grand Signior; though it was denied at the Port; for they were glad to know how to quiet him.

Ianet Ogli taken and slaine.

Yet not many daies after, he fought a battell which he lost, and was taken, being betraied by his owne followers; and it was desired that he might be brought aliue to be seene at the Port; but the Ianizaries crucified him, and sent his, and his mothers, and his brethrens heads together, so that the tumor was suddenly allayed.

About the foure and twentieth of September the gallies returned from the Blacke-Sea, with the losse only of foure, by a great storme. The Captaine Bassa brought in triumph two hundred and seuenty poore Cossackes, and was receiued, as if Pompey had againe finished the Piratique war, that almost famished Rome. But they did not triumph at the victory, but ouer the conquered people; and they esteemed this sea fight next to that of Lepanto; but the nobler for the escape: for doubtlesse if the winde had not risen too great for the frigots, which were in number neere foure hundred, the whole fleet had beene in danger to haue been towed Northwards euen vnto the jawes of the Enemy.

The great Defterdar strangled and thrown into the streets.

About the same time, the great Defterdar, Treasurer of that Empire, was sent for into the Kings Gardens, and there by the Bustangi Bassa strangled and flung out in his shirt into the streets; an vsuall end of riches and greatnesse in that Court. Otherwise, the State of that Empire did then produce no remarkeable alteration: for the jealousie of the Tartars was somewhat appeased; but the Termes with Poland were vncertaine, while the Cossackes were yet vnrestrained. The Grand Signior vsed all flattery to the Tartar Han, to enter Poland in reuenge: Which he promised, and rode as farre as Akyrman; but from thence excused his not proceeding vpon the waters: which was doubtfully interpreted, That he had no will. In the meane time the King of Poland sent an Army against the Cossackes, to shew his sincerity to the Peace; which was very well taken of the Turks.

The Persians ouerthrown by the Georgians.

The Georgians in the meane time gaue a blow to the Persian, and sent many of their heads to the Port by a Nuntio; who was presently dispatched away with the Bishop of Calcedon,

as

A as Embaſſador of the Grand Signior, to enter league with thoſe Princes, to make ſome diuerſion. Abaſſa the old Rebell would not yet truſt himſelfe with the Viſier, but pretended he would vnite himſelfe with the Georgians in the ſeruice of that State; although he fortified himſelfe ſtrongly, and diſcharged all his Ianizaries. The Grand Signior to aſſure him, or to preuent that hee ſhould not reuolt, ſent him the dignity of a Viſier, a Sword and a Veſt, and authority to make war in company of the Georgians, in quality of a Generall (ſo well a ſtrong Theefe proſpered there:) and hee arriued not long after with his army at * Moſull, a place recouered from the Perſians in the way to Babylon: who vnderſtanding of ſupply of eight thouſand, ſent thither by the Perſian to re-inforce the garriſon, ſent out a party of Courds, that encountred and broke them, obteining a full victory with the fall of two thou-
B ſand, and the Generall and two young Sultans taken priſoners; who were ſent to the Port, with the heads of their followers. The news of which ouerthrow was receiued with much joy and content in the Court. The Viſier demanded a million and two hundred thouſand Checquines to be ſent before-hand for foure moneths pay of the Army; giuing this reaſon, That foreſeeing he muſt Winter in thoſe parts, and that Babylon would be defended, it was neceſſary to haue mony to hold his ſouldiers together; for if he ſhould diuide them to their Hybernation, it would be Auguſt before they could be drawne into the field, and the Spring loſt: and to hold them that were already almoſt in mutiny, were impoſſible, vpon credit. To this end all waies were vſed to raiſe money; a third of which ſum was ſent from the Port, but the reſt was hardly found (for the ordinary charge far exceeded the reuenue) and fell very heauy
C vpon ſuch as were forced to contribute.

* Niniue.

The Perſian King, reported to be taken in his limbes at the ſame time (which did commonly forerunne ſome ſudden enterpriſe) lay with his Army about Tauris, indifferently to ſuccour Babylon, and to attend the Circaſſians, or to make ſome diuerſion when he ſhould ſee the Viſiers Army ſetled and ingaged in a ſiege: Which was not long deferred; for hee beſieged Babylon, wherein was eight thouſand Perſians in defence. His regular army (conſiſting of Ianizaries and Spahies, directly paied from the Grand Signior) were lodged on the one ſide; and the Beghs (which were thirteen) with the Timariots and Souldiers repartited on their gouernments on the other. As they began their approches, in a morning twenty thouſand Perſian horſe fell into the quarter of the Vizier, and did a great execution: but the D alarme taken by the Beghs, they came to his reſcue, and the Perſians retired. In that faction there fell fiue or ſix thouſand Turks. Whereupon after there was made a generall muſter, and not found aboue foure thouſand Ianizaries of twelue thouſand; nor ten thouſand Spahies, of thirty thouſand that were written for the war: ſo that all the ſtrength did reſt in the Beghs, who were well followed, and little care or obedience in the other Orders. There were ſeuen Princes of the Arabs, who were ſubject to the Grand Signior, and ought to ſerue and aid him when they were commanded; but being ſummoned, they raiſed their forces by common conſent, and ſtaied vpon their owne borders; anſwering, They durſt not diſpleaſe the poſſeſſor of Babylon; but if the victory did returne, they would yeeld their antient obedi-
E ence vnto the Grand Signior: and if the Perſian did hold his recouered right, they alſo would no longer acknowledge any ſuperiour, being (as they pretended) borne of free Anceſtors.

About the fiue and twentieth of March there fell a great ſtorme vpon the Bailo of Venice, for an accidentall fight by a Venetian Veſſell with a Bey of Andry: Many of the Turks were ſlaine, and the Captaine Baſſa pretended great damages; auerring, That their gally was rich and rifled. He anſwered wiſely and ſtoutly, That it was a chance; and would vnderſtand of no compoſition, but onely write to the Senate to examine the cauſe by juſtice. But the Turks ſought to draw an inference, That he, as Procurator of the Republique, was bound to ſtand in Law before the Iudges of the Port (where he was like enough to be heard and condemned F together) and then to remaine as a Pledge for ſatisfaction. But he would not yeeld ſo much aduantage; inſiſting, that he was an Embaſſador, to expound the ſence of his Prince, and to maintaine the amity: and ſo by his ſtanding mute the buſineſſe reſted in diſcontent. 1626.

The gouernment of the Turkiſh Empire daily declined, and (as a great and ſtrong Body) had violent luctations before it yeelded and waſted. The Ianizaries about the laſt of March mutined The Ianizaries mutine againſt the Boſtangi Baſſa.

mutined against the Bostangi Bassa, for beating one of their Order (for disorder in the night) by the Grand Signiors command, and before his window. For by their Canon, they ought to be deliuered to their owne Capes to be judged and punished; yet, though the Emperors Word should be aboue the Law of his slaues, and though he avowed the fact, sent, and wrote vnto them, nothing would appease them; onely his life they pardoned, exacting his displacing, with sentence of incapability euer to beare office. He had beene a good seruant to his Master, carefull of the publique Honour, seuere against the licentiousnesse of the times, and therefore vnfit for them. Afterward (following the example) they began to quarrell with the Vizier, who had fauoured the Bostangi; and with much labour they were silenced for a time, but not quieted. This was their estate: What could then strangers expect, when the Emperor suffered injuries of his owne bondmen? G H

At the same time, an open rupture betweene the Grand Signior and the King of Poland was like to succeed an inuasion made a little before into Podolia by the Tartar Han; who returning from thence with a great prey, was met, and lost with a part of it, the greatest part of his Army. Whose brother Shachin Gheray refusing to accompany the action, as contrary to the Peace and his Oath, sent the Generall Koneſpolsky the copy of the Order from the Port; which being discouered, the Vizier hearkened after any ouerture or meanes to make vp the breach, and to procure a new reconciliation. But the ouerthrow giuen ro the Tartars encouraged the Poles to declare their reuenge, and to auow the attempt of the Cossackes, who were then ready with seuen hundred frigots to fall vpon some part neere Constantinople, munition being allowed them, and a Polish captaine to euery boat. They threatened to fight with the Grand Signiors Armado, and made a vow to inuest and carry away the Admirall galley. All the villages on the Bosphorus to the gates of Constantinople trembled, and the city it selfe was not without feare; softened by certaine prophecies and Astrologians, who foretold a great blow from a Northerne people. Twenty gallies kept the mouth of the channell, and the Captaine Bassa was to depart within ten daies with forty more; almost already conquered with his owne and the common feares. I

The Grand Signiors army besieged before Babylon.

Certaine newes was brought from Babylon, That the King of Persia had besieged the Viziers campe, and that he was lodged vpon his Trenches, and had cut off all accesse and prouision: so that the Grand Signiors care was then greater to saue his Army, than to recouer that City. Yet his Ministers did abate little of their pride, but were more ready to doe a wrong or any insolency than euer; insensible of their owne estate, or dissembling it a peruerse way. K

The King of Poland being yet very loth to breake the peace with the Grand Signior, which had been concluded betweene them chiefely at the instance and mediation of his Majesty of Great Britaine; although the Tartars had entred his countries, and done great spoile, he caused his Minister to write to his Majesties Embassador at the Port, to lay downe their just complaint: which the Embassador did, in confidence of his friendship with the Chimacham; to whom he went, directly pressing him as well to a consideration of his Masters and his owne estate, as of that of the King of Poland: That all the burthen and blame would finally light vpon him; it being the vsuall way of great Princes, to discharge their failings and errours vpon their Ministers. This admonition moued the Chimacham much, and this was the substance of his answer: L

In all Lawes and Religions (said he) there is nothing more odious than to be esteemed a Lyar; because Law and Religion presuppose truth, especially in great Ministers, vpon whose faith much of the publique quiet doth depend: but most especially at such a time (for then it was * Ramazan) separate to deuotion, that it was most abhominable to God to sweare a lye, by whom he swore, and by the life of the King, all whose benefits might be poyson to him in his heart, if euer either he or his Master gaue any order or intimation to the Tartar Han to enter Poland, or to doe any act contrary to the Peace: which if he had done he might justifie, seeing the Cossackes the yeare before did make the first breach, and gaue the occasion. To witnesse this assertion hee called the * Reitzkatab, who made no scruple, jurare in Verba Magistri, to sweare to what his Master had said: onely he confessed there were Commands written to Mehemet Gheray, by intelligence and consent of the Polish Generall, to enter the country of the Cossacks on both sides, to reduce them to obedience; with restriction of any damage to be done to those comprehended in the Peace: and that M

* Lent.

* Chancellor.

what-

A whatsoeuer the Tartar Han had don more, was and should be disauowed, as beyond his Commission. Many other matters he repeated, as the remoue of Caute-Emir, and the death of Hagy-Key, only to auoid any occasion of their parts. And in conclusion, all his discourse tended to an expression of desire to maintaine a good and perfect Peace. His Majesties Embassador asked the Chimacham, what he was willing he should write in answer to the King of Polands Ministers? Who briefely answered, That they had no other intent but to keepe the late Treaty; and that if vpon the Poles part (as they had begun) the Cossackes should be restrained, they would take absolute order with the Tartars; who had no other pretence of quarrell, but a claime of a certaine pension (mentioned in the Treaty) vsually giuen them; which if his Majesty of Poland would establish, there should neuer be more occasion of those
B mutuall laments: that it were a dishonour to the Grand Signior, to seeke and entreat the comming of an Embassador to settle those late disorders; but if the King of Poland pleased to send one, he should be receiued with all rites and respects. To this the English Embassador replied, That he doubted some ill example of the vsage and detention of others, would make the Polacke wary, and difficult to engage any person of Quality. To which he gaue all such assurance of good and free acceptation as words could expresse. All which, the Embassador returned in writing to the Ministers of Poland; entreating both parties to conniue at what was past, and endeauor by all meanes afterward to restraine those mutuall incursions, which were begun anew by the Cossackes, the noise of whom had strucke the Imperiall city with great feare.

C Vpon the third of Iune the Spahies assembled in the Hippodrome; discontent with the gouernment of the old Chimacham Georgi Mehemet Bassa (the ablest and wisest man in that State, but to Christians malicious, and of the Poles a continuall persecutor) who had the authority of the great Visier in his absence at the war; and in great fury ran to the house of the Mufti, and demanded of him to pronounce a sentence of death against him, and that hee would rise and informe the Grand Signior of their will; which if he refused, they threatened a generall reuolt, and to doe their owne justice. There was no remedy; the Emperor being enformed, was pleased instantly to displace him, and to giue the office to Regeb Captain Bassa, or Admirall, and his office to * Imbrahor Bassa; hoping thus to quiet all matters. But this gaue them no satisfaction, they demanded in greater fury his life. The poore old man was
D retyred into the Grand Signiors protection, who vsed all meanes to appease them, offering to banish or confine him: but nothing would content or separate them vntill he had deliuered him vp; who the next day was strangled and throwne into the streets, where the Barbarians vented their spleene vpon his dead body, cutting off his eares and nose, and carrying them in triumph to their fellowes. Presently they demand the life of some others, principally of Mozat Chiaus the Customer (odious to all men) whom when they could not finde, they sacked his house. Within a day or two after they began to be quiet, vpon promise, That if he could be found he should be rendred to them, and others be brought to Iustice: but all feared that that Pestilence and Destruction of the city would escape by force of his money, hauing three times before beene in the like danger. That great Minister or Chimacham was ninety six
E yeares old, had been forty fiue yeares Visier, and thrice Chimacham. The great seruices he had done, euen to the preseruation of the Empire, nor any other respect could protect him from this rage. The occasion then taken against him, was, That he did conceale the ill estate of the army in Babylon, flattering the Grand Signior, while their fellowes perished; and certaine Letters written in bloud, pretended from the Campe, produced to accuse him; which afterward were discouered to be written in Constantinople. When the sentence was deliuered to the Bostangi Bassa, he came to the lodging of the Chimacham in the Kings Garden, where he thought himselfe in sanctuary, and for reuerence to his age and place, held it (being written) in his hand, rather to intimate, than to be the messenger. The poore old man perceiuing it, desired an houre to pray; and conjured him to warne the Grand Signior, hereafter, not
F to be so easie to consent to shed innocent bloud, which within few daies he would repent: and lastly he entreated, that he might not die by the foule hands of the Hangman: which cost him deare; for the Bostangies executioners, either for respect, or for want of skill, could not finish his life (so great was his old heart) in one houre: he was buried by a few Rascals, his owne seruants hid, and no man daring to accompany him to his last Bed.

The Spahies cause the Chimacham to be strangled.

* Maker of the horse.

The

The immediate foregoing discourse was filled with the injustice and insolency of man; G but this bringeth with it the example and justice of God, who reuengeth the bloud of his enemies and wicked men, vnjustly spilt, to preserue his image euen amongst them that study to destroy it. To this may be fitly applied that boldnesse, Non esse curæ deis securitatem eorum, esse vltionem: The Ianizaries either enuious that they had no part in the last sedition, or being innocent, vnwilling to participare in the infamy, or rather it was their turne to do somewhat; forced the boats of the gallies which lay aboue Constantinople in the channell, and
The Ianizaries petition against their fellow-mutiniers. came downe to a garden house vpon the sea in the night, where the Emperor priuatly reposed, and began to exclaime against the death of the innocent; protesting they had no share therein, but as obedient slaues they desired the peace of the State, and that Iustice and quietnesse might returne to the City; and requiring reuenge vpon diuers whom they accused as H
 Lieutenant to the Aga.* the authors of those tumults, they named their owne Segmen Bassa* as the principall, and eighteene of their owne officers, and diuers others of the chiefe Spahies, who held councels together, and were become heads of Factions; which vntill they were all cut off, there was no hope of good gouernment and peace. The Grand Signior gaue them milde words, and promised to do justice, and to punish all such as should be found guilty: but nothing being don to satisfie them, and it being beleeued that the new Chimacham conniued, and had bin a party to all their counsels, at least his preferment made him obnoxious to that suspition; and it was most true, that the Segmen Bassa and his followers & faction were the contriuers of the fall and muther of Georgi Mehemet Bassa, and very probable that he was fauoured if not protected by the new Minister; the Ianizaries rose againe, and by force brought downe the gallies I neere the City, and landed and held a Councell very secret in their chambers. This bred much suspition and feare; but the day of publique audience being come, according to the custome, they repaired all to the Seraglio, and waited in their order: their Segmen Bassa only did not appeare; and it was thought he absented purposely by agreement with the Chimacham, lest there should be some occasion to examine the past businesse, which would not endure the light. The * Diuan being finished, and the Viziers and * Caddee Leschers com-
 Publike Councell.*  Chiefe Iustices.* ming towards the gate, they were stopped by the Ianizaries, and told plainely they would speake with the King. Such persuasions as were requisite were vsed; but there was no remedy, they would deliuer their owne message. The young Emperor at first was afraid, and retired; but to auoid greater inconueniences, resolued to come out to them. Order was instantly giuen to send for the Mufti and the Antients of the Law, and many * Santons, for the Segmen Bassa, and others of quality to be present at this action. In the meane time a Throne was brought out, and placed in the great Court, and the Grand Signior came forth and sate in his Majesty, attended and assisted by all the great Ministers and Officers of his Empire, to strike a reuerence and feare into the souldiers, whose purposes were not yet discouered. Contrary to all expectation, an Electo spake for them: In all humble manner professing their obedience, and lamenting the sickenesse of the State, and the dayly insolencies; and declaring, as they were not guilty of this last mutiny, so they were ready to spend their bloud in defence of their Prince, and for the reformation of those disorders (to which there could be applied no remedy but by the sword of Iustice to cut off all those heads which held Conuenticles, and plotted dayly alterations, onely to gouerne the whole L Empire at their will.) They desired their Petition might be accepted, and those disturbers of the peace sought out and executed, in which they would assist: and that new names and titles might be forbidden, which many had taken vp as Heads of Factions; and the Souldiery reduced to their antient discipline: Which if his Majesty would grant and speedily put in practise, they were ready to die in his seruice; otherwise, as there was no hope of quietnesse, so they did foresee greater mischiefes dayly contemplated, which they would oppose as well as they were able. At the end of this Oration (which might haue become a Cato) they deliuered a briefe petition in writing, wherein they modestly accused the new Chimacham of confederacy and conniuence with their Segmen Bassa, whom they anew appealed, and gaue vp the names of those their owne Officers, and Spahies, vpon whom they layd all the burthen of the dayly tumults. The Emperor gaue them a short, but satisfactory answer; yeelding to their request, yet mingled with some admonition such as became a Prince: and so they departed euery man to their owne rest. But the Segmen Bassa hauing some intimation that his name was renewed in that list of death, tooke the first opportunity, fled, and hid himselfe; and diuers others conscious of their owne merits, retyred, and thereby
 Holy-men.* K
M

A thereby condemned themſelues: not one roaring Spahi to be ſeene in the city; all things were ſo calme as if Aſtræa were deſcended. There was no diſtemper but in the heart of the Chimacham, who was afraid to bring his complices into triall, and yet was ſure if they were not taken, their eſcape would be his ruine: for the Ianizaries exacted of him an account of the execution. With much diligence the Segmen Baſſa was apprehended, and brought to the Court. He was firſt examined, rather to finde his owne treaſure which was infinite (for hee had the ſpoile of Greece in the laſt gathering of tribute-children; and of the Seraglio at the death of Sultan Oſman) than to diſcouer other men. The Grand Signior ſent for him, and after few words, gaue ſentence to haue his head ſtrucken off; which was inſtantly performed before the dore. Afterwards diuers of both Orders were taken (as was reported, to the num-
B berof twenty two) priuately ſtrangled, and throwne into the ſea; and ſome (principally branded) were hidden and fled. This trouble turned the Grand Signior to account many waies; for by confiſcations he aduanced a million and two hundred and fifty thouſand Dollars of the Segmen Baſſa; by the Scriuano as much; by others, very great ſummes; and, as if peace had riſen out of the graue of the old Chimacham, there was heard no more noiſe: the Spahies ſhrunke, and the Ianizaries as their glory tooke vpon them an auſtere reformation. But there were many inward ſores and diſcontents, which notwithſtanding all this cleere aire, were like to breake out, and one ſtorme could not be ſufficient to cure or purge the corruptions of that State.

The Grand Signiors Army in diſtreſſe.

C While the Grand Signior was thus troubled with appeaſing his diſordered and mutinous Miniſters and ſlaues at home, newes was brought from Babylon, That his campe there was in great extremity, beſieged without by the Perſian, Maſter of the field, and conſequently of their prouiſions; nakednеſſe, famine, and diſeaſes within, were more terrible than the Enemy; and the ſupplies ſent, ſtaied at Dierbeker, not daring to proceed without better gards: inſomuch as if ſpeedy ſuccors were not giuen them, the army muſt diſhonourably and dangerouſly breake and ſteale away. But hereupon there was a publike Councell held, in which all Orders as well ciuill as military aſſiſted; and a preſent ſupply collected, and a Generall choſen to conduct them.

The Grand Signior, becauſe the greateſt part of his land forces were thus buſied and em-
D ployed againſt the Perſian in Aſia, ſent his Letters (at the inſtance of the Prince of Tranſyluania) to diuers Kings and Princes vnited for the liberty of Germany, to encourage them to perſeuerance and conſtancy in ſuch deſignes as were fit for that purpoſe. But this was an art of Gabor, to inſinuate (by this ſhew) into the Grand Signior an opinion of great confederacy with thoſe Princes, to make himſelfe more valued and conſiderable at the Port; and on the other ſide to improue his authority in Chriſtendome, by the pretence of ſo much credit, and ſo great aids ready for his ſeruice. The copy whereof doth here immediately follow.

Prince Morat euer Victorious;

E

To the moſt glorious amongſt the great Lords of Ieſus, and chiefe amongſt the higheſt of the people of Meſſiah, Directors of all the affaires of Chriſtians, Princes of the limits of power and honour, Lords who direct to greatneſſe and glory, and Kings ouer many Nations, who antiently haue declared themſelues to beare true loue and affection to our high Port: and to all Kings and Princes, glorious Potentates, and other Gouernors of the people of Ieſus, whoſe laſt daies we pray God may euer be happy: but eſpecially to thoſe who haue at the preſent deſired the friendſhip of our moſt happy Port, the ſanctuary and refuge of the Cæſars and Princes of our age. To them let it be knowne, vpon the ſight of our moſt high and Imperiall Signature, That there is arriued at our happy Port, a meſſenger with a Letter from the moſt glorious amongſt the followers of Ieſus, and the moſt reſpected and honoured amongſt the people
F of the Meſſiah, Director of the affaires of the Nazarene people, Patron of the limits of honour and power, and Lord of greatneſſe and glory, Bethlem Gabor, Gouernour of Tranſyluania, and King of Hungary, whoſe laſt daies be propitious; being a true ſeruant and an vndoubted friend to our high Port, by the great mercy of the moſt high God euer preſerued; and by the wonderfull protection of the chiefe of Prophets our Prophet Mahomet Muſtapha (whom God bleſſe) kept ſafe, with a moſt noble, high, and

continued

continued off-spring: which did signifie, That some of you who in those parts be Kings and great Gouer- G nors, and chiefest and most glorious of the honoured and famous amongst the Lords that are obedient to the Messiah, haue antiently shewed your selues constant and firme in your affection and sincere good will to our high Port; and that some others of you, being Lords of great Countries, do now desire friendship and acquaintance with our Imperiall Majesty; and that the Gouernour of Transyluania and King of Hungary, holdeth at the present good friendship and correspondence with you, and that you haue vnited your selues with him for good and honourable ends: who letteth vs vnderstand, That you haue sent Messengers and Letters to him; certifying him, That although some of you were antient and vndoubted friends long before of our high Port; yet others of you who haue beene more remote, doe now desire to approch our familiarity; and that he should be the guide and presenter of the sincere Faith and good affection which you pretend to haue with vs. And the said Bethlem Gabor King of Hungary, in obser- H uance of the perfect obedience and loue to our happy Port, hath enformed vs of the truth of your state, and your offered friendship. Which his Letter, with all the particulars therein contained, we haue caused to be translated by our Visiers, and presented to our Imperiall view; so that nothing therein hath been hidden or vnknowne to vs from the beginning to the end: the particulars whereof hath pleased our happy eies, and the friendship which you haue desired to make with our high Port, hath been accepted of our Imperiall Majesty: and all those things he certified there are most acceptable to our sincere minde; assuring you, That our high Port hath and shall be at all times open to the whole World, but especially to those who by a fresh and new friendship seeke to enter in and receiue it. And as all our Progenitors, and we our Selfe, to all the Friends of our house haue beene euer benigne and courteous, so to you shall be shewed all honour from our Imperiall dignity, and more fauour than to others who are your equals. And in token I that you may know we do accept of your loue and friendship offered, we giue you safe conduct to send your Embassadors into our high Court; writing this our Letter vnto you, full of all affection and integrity. At the arriuall whereof it is meet, that in conformity of the good affection and sincere friendship which you haue promised and expressed to our high Port, you vse all diligence and care to fulfill and prosecute this worthy and good businesse which you haue begun, hauing your minds attentiue and setled vpon the same, in such sort as they be stable and sure, according to antient custome in like cases. And to other Kings, friends of this Port, you shall send your Embassadors of Honour, that the means of loue and friendship may encrease euery day; and the good effects vpon our part shall be dayly augmented, and the houres of our affection shall go forward and continue: and by the grace of the high God, your Embassadours or other Ministers comming to our happy Port, shall haue assigned them euery one apart their houses; and K according to the forme and manner of our Imperiall Majesty, shall be entertained and protected; and when it shall be fit for them to returne to you againe, we will take order that they shall haue commodious and safe passage. Therefore rest satisfied in minde, and giue good credit to these our happy lines set downe concerning this affaire: and be you also firme and constant in your friendship, correspondence, and confederacy. And we haue sent to Muhemet Bassa our Visier &c. (whose glory God continue) who at the present is Gouernor of Buda, our expresse Commands, and giuen order, That all the Armies belonging to him, of Buda, Bosnia, Temeswar, Canisia, and Agria, and other places adjoyning thereunto; and besides them, to the most eminent Beglerbeghs of the Prouince of Greece (whose Armies belong vnto him) the most valiant Captaines of all our Empire; and to other personages of eminent ranke, who haue vnder their command many thousands of men; That they repaire to our said Visier and Generall, (whose L glory God encrease) and being all gathered together, that they make their Musters and Campe at the confines neere Buda, in such a place and part as shall be fit for that purpose. And on the other side also, That Bethlem Gabor (Gouernour of Transyluania, and King of Hungary, shall leauie a good Army, and keepe good correspondence with our said Visier, that they may be in a readinesse and prepared, in case that any Enemy inuade the said King of Hungary, or the Prouince of Transyluania; that then they vse all their diligence and readinesse to repell them, and fulfill all those duties which concerne the honour of our State, and are beseeming the reputation of our Religion. And by the grace of God, after that your Embassadors (honourable and fit personages) shall come here with your Letters, and establish a good Peace and friendship, there shall be no doubt but you and your Countries and Allies shall be protected by vs, and hereafter comprehended in all our Treatise of Peace which we shall conclude and establish. In conclusion, M
All that which our noble minde can expresse or promise, shall be effected: whereof we haue giuen notice at large to all our Ministers. Of euery other particular the Gouernor of Transyluania and King of Hungary will write to you more amply; to whom I desire you to giue faith and credit; and to obserue good correspondence, both with him and our said Visier Muhamet, Bassa of Buda: and you shall write vnto vs

(when

A (when this our Imperiall letter shall come to your hands) of what other thing shall happen, by your embassadors; which by the grace of God you shall send to our high Port: and you shall be very carefull alwaies, to fulfill the beginnings of this our friendship and amitie.

Written in the middle of the month of Iuly, 1626. In Constantinople.

About this time there arriued a Letter from the King of great Brittaine to the grand Signior, concerning the Treaty of Algier and Tunes, and complaining of diuers injuries done to B his subiects, and requiring justice and redresse. Which being respectiuely answered, are worthy of publique communication.

His Majesties Letter to the grand Signior.

CHARLES by the grace of the most high God, King of great Britain, France and Ireland; Defender of the Christian Faith, &c. To the high and mighty Emperor Sultan Morat Han, chiefe Lord and Commander of the Ottoman Kingdom, sole & supreme C Monarch of the Eastern Empire, sendeth greeting.

WE haue vnderstood by our Embassador resident with you, with how much honor and respect the death of our dear Lord and Father of euer-glorious memory was condoled at your Imperiall Port; And if the signification therof, and of our peaceable succession to these Crowns, haue not in all this time come vnto you immediatly from our selfe, it hath not bin through any default of our affection, or respect to you, but many important affaires vpon our first accesse, and the dangerous infection wherewith our royall city of London, and many
D other principall parts of our Kingdom haue been visited, haue diuerted vs, and forced vs to defer these offices longer than we intended or desired. And as we hope you will for these important reasons, readily and freely excuse those omissions which in so weighty occasions may well be dispensed withall; so we pray you to be assured, That wee are desirous that the amitie which hath of long time bin held between our predecessors, may be renued, continued, and confirmed; and the intercourse of trade betweene our subiects and yours, be maintained and preserued, for the good of both our kingdoms and people. And to giue you the better proofe of our reall and sincere intentions therein, we haue ratified, and do ratifie the treaty made by our Embassador Sir Thomas Rowe in that your Imperiall Port, with your Sub-
E jects of Algier and Tunes; and we canot doubt, but that you for your part will keep a constancie in the exact performance thereof, and to that end will lay your royall command vpon those your vassals of Algier and Tunes, duly to obserue the articles of that Treaty in all respects toward our subiects. We do likewise recommend vnto you, and pray you, in conformitie to our desire of friendship and good correspondencie, to confirme and ratifie those priuiledges which haue bin formerly granted by your predecessors to our Merchants, and to inlarge the same according to present occasions, and as shall be most conuenient for the good of both our Kingdomes: which as we will study by all good means to keepe vp in full force, and most aduantagious execution; so we may not omit to represent vnto you the grieuances of our subiects when F they are vniustly wronged, contrary to the capitulations between vs, and we presume without your knowledge or consent. That which we haue now to desire your justice in, is, First, for extreame injuries done by inferior officers, and especially by one Morat Chaus a Customer of that Port, who hath not only broken, but also scorned and contemned the articles of the Capitulation, and that in the publique Divan, to your dishonour, and to the great preiudice of our Merchants. Secondly, an open injustice don to our subiects in Algier, wherin our English Consul and the rest of our Nation were restrained of their liberty, their goods seised vpon, and forced to pay great sums of mony, contrary to justice and the direct terms of the Treaty. But if while we on our behalfe do obserue the Capitulation, and all good tearmes of friendship, such meane persons as Customers and other Officers be suffered and borne out in these vniust insolencies and oppressions vpon our subiects, in a manifest breach of the Capitulations, we canot shut our ears against the petitions of our subiects, but must according to their humble suit, giue order to withdraw their persons and estates from such dangers, wrongs, and injustice; vnlesse vpon this our instance we find a speedy redresse & exemplary punishment inflicted vpon such as haue or shall transgresse the rules of justice, and the amity and contract between vs; which we recommend to your iudgement and care, as a matter wherein the welfare of our and your people and countries is interessed. We do further particularly pray you, to giue expresse order for the vpholding and maintaining of that article of priuiledge, for the paying but only of one Custom within all the ports vnder your jurisdiction, with free liberty to export any commoditie, hauing once payd custom, without further charge, and that our subiects be not exacted vpon contrary to that priuiledge. The further particulars of our subiects grieuances, and what else we desire to be negotiated with you, we haue giuen in charge to our Embassador Sir Thomas Rowe, to whom we pray you to giue credit, and to return vs full answers to the seuerall points of this our letter. Wherin if you shall giue reliefe to our subiects, and punish those that violate the capitulation, we shal receiue it as a singular testimony of your justice, your good intentions toward vs, your constancie in your contracts, and your iudgement in what hath relation to the good of your owne Dominions; and we shall be ready to answer that realtie of yours, in whatsoeuer shall rest on our part to perform.

G H I

Dated the first of March, 1626.

The grand Signiors Answer to his Majesties Letter of Great Britain.

L

Prince Morat, euer successefull;

TO the mighty Prince, reuerend amongst the Maiesties of the Princes of the Law of Jesus, obeyed of the great Potentates Followers of the Messia, the onely Director of the important affairs of the Nazaren people, Soueraign of the limits of honor and power, the most glorious CHARLES King of Great Britaine; To whose last dayes we wish all felicitie.

M

TO the sublime and happy Throne of our high Port, the Seat of the perpetuall Vicariat, the which by the mercy of the Diuine Maiestie of the mighty God, and by the grace of the Lord was the Seale of the Prophets, vpon whom be continuall blessing, and the refuge of the Princes vpon the face of the earth, and the Sanctuarie of the Potentates of the world; your Letter with accustomed sinceritie is arriued,

A arriued, by the hands of your Embassador, the elect among the Nation of Messiah, Sir Thomas Rowe, resident in our happy Port, to whose end we wish blessednesse. The which, according to the antient Ottoman custome, and the vsed Imperiall forme, was by our supream Vizier and glorious Vicegerent translated and expounded; and being presented before our State of most ample honour and felicitie, and seene by our Imperiall eies, and considered by our benigne sight, from the beginning to the end, our noble vnderstanding hath intirely perceiued the inserted businesse, and all particulars thereof; and our discreet aspection, from the least to the greatest, hath comprehended all your proposed affaires, all which conduce to loue. The principall whereof is (besides that you haue fully mentioned, and declared the state of the Amitie that between both Dominions hath been preserued by your Fathers and Ancestors) That now your Majestie, after your Father of glorious memorie, being by iust inheritance ascended to the Regalitie of

B those Crownes, doth aduise vs, That you also more than your Father, are stable and firme in the same way of friendship, and most constant towards vs, in preseruation of the Peace and good correspondence, and daily attentiue to endeauour the strengthning of the Peace and Amitie with our Port, and resolued to accompliſh the same; and not to faile in any part of louing correspondence. With which your friendly aduice, with most sincere words expressed, are to vs most gratefull; That you in a blessed houre, and a happy time, haue possessed, and begun to reigne in the Kingdomes of your Father; the secret of our purest heart was greatly reioyced, and did conceiue abundance of contentment, and our Imperial Maiesty also hath therfore obtained, and together expressed all manner of gladnesse and loue toward your Majesty, in diuining you all happinesse.

You haue also aduised vs, That your aboue named Embassador, yet abiding in our blessed Port, hauing

C formerly treated with those of Tunes and Algier, and contracted concerning your Merchants, and their free traffique and commerce in those partss, and conformably with them agreed, concluded, and confirmed the Peace; the which being very profitable and commodious to both our Kingdomes, that you haue also ratified, and in the whole condiscended thereunto; desiring, That on our behalfe also the same should be obserued: and to the end that for euer hereafter there may be no deuiation from the same Accord, and that to the Merchants, according to the antient Custome, going and comming to those parts to traffique and negotiate, contrary to the Imperiall Capitulation, no iniury may be by them done; That we should send to our Vice Kings our expresse commands. Therefore you shall know, That we haue already sent to our said Vice-Royes, with expresse order, our most efficacious and Imperiall Commandements, and strictly charged them, Neuer to transgresse the same contracted Agreement; and that they take heed, Not to do any wrong or

D violence to any of your Merchants (contrary to our Imperiall Capitulations) trading and vsing those parts.

And furthermore hauing signified vnto vs, That certaine Magistrates and Customers of some Scales of our well defended Empire, contrary to the Articles and Couenants written in the Imperiall Capitulations, do make diuers demands of grieuances and impositions of your Merchants, and vnder the name of Mesteria, * and such like, do pretend and exact money from them: and hauing also aduised vs, That conformable to the Imperiall Capitulation, your Merchants hauing paid their due custome, and transporting their goods to other Scales; That they also demand of them a new Custome: Therefore it being in no wise our Imperiall will that in our prosperous days, and iust and peacefull reigne, according to our Imperiall Capitulation, That wrong should be done to any man; We haue giuen vpon this particular, our requisite and

E sufficient Imperial Command, and streitly commanded and ordained, That they shall neuer transgresse our Imperiall Capitulation; and that the Nation of your Merchants, in what place or Scale soeuer they shall go, the Magistrates and Customers do all diligence, that the said Merchants may liue quietly, contentedly, and securely; and hauing payd in one Scale the custome of any merchandise, which being not sold, and that they shall transport it to any other Scale, that they take great heed, not to demand nor take of them any new Custome, nor euer, contrary to the Canon, to exact of them any new imposition or other grieuance.

* Dutch duties.

You haue also further aduised vs, That the late Hussreph Bassa, while he remained in the charge of Vice-King of Algier, did vniustly take your Consul, resident in Algier, with the Merchants which liued with him, and hauing imprisoned them contrary to the Law, Iustice, and the friendship betweene

F vs, did take from them certaine thousands of Dollars, and had done to them other great wrong and damage: therefore, seeing it is more cleere than the Sunne-shine day, that it is not in any sort by our consent, that such injustice and insolent actions should be committed, and there being then present in our happy Port some of the principall persons of the garrison of that place of Algier, who did know the whole proceeding, and we hauing commanded they should bee examined of that businesse, they were presently brought to Iustice, and being all of them variously reprehended and affrighted, they did answer, confessing G and obliging themselues, That all the money taken they would repay from the reuenue of the custome, and Fifts collected; and as soon as they should arriue in Algier, they would take order that the Consul and all the Merchants should be set free. In conformity whereof, we also haue written our most effectuall and noble Command, reprehensiue and threatning, directed to the Vize-Re of Algier, and commanded him, That in this busines he vse no negligence, but that without further delay he set at liberty the said Consul and Merchants, and restore vnto them entirely all their goods taken from them, and that he know, that hereafter no such action shall be pardoned; and that your Consul sent into those parts, according to antient custome, shall be entertained and honoured, and that hee doe punctually obserue and execute the due tearmes of friendship.

And in the Conclusion, concerning all the included particulars of your Letter; in due forme, and H befitting our Majestie the Fountaine of Iustice, and conformable to the Tenor of our Imperiall Capitulations, there haue been written diuers our noble Commandements, and consigned to the hands of your said Embassadour; and for the time to come, in all things which shall lead to the increase of our friendship, and those offices, commodious and profitable to the Merchants of both our Dominions, our Impe-riall study and attention shall not bee spared: and be you assured, that the termes of our Amitie and good correspondence which to this day hath been continued, shall bee of vs with excellent endeauor maintained.

But being informed from our honorable Gouernor, wise Councellor, and Visier, Haydar Bassa (whose splendor God preserue) whom wee haue assigned and sent to the custodie of the boundlesse Ayman, that there is come a petition, with a representation and attestation of the principall of that Kingdome, to our I happy Port, declaring, That in times past, in the gouernment of our Fezeli Bassa, Vizier, now dead, be- ing that certaine men of war appertaining to your Kingdomes, had contrary to the Capitulations, assailed the Merchants which with their goods returned from India, and fought and taken their ships, and it being made knowne to the said Fezeli Bassa, that our Merchants had been damaged to the value of six hundred thousand Dollars: which action being it was contrary to Law, Iustice, and our Imperiall Capitulation, and that it was requisite that the spoylers should be condemned, the said Fezeli Bassa did collect from the Masters of the said men of warre, for the said goods taken from our Merchants, an hundred thousand Dollars, and did consigne it to the true owners: and whereas there was yet remaining to them fiue hundred thousand Dollars, the which to this day is not satisfied, the said men of warre not containing themselues in due forme, haue armed a new seuen ships from your Countrey, and haue come and as- K sailed fourteen ships of our Merchants, which from India were sailing to the Scale of Ayman, and hauing taken the Masters prisoners, haue made spoyle and depredation of all their facultie; and that now the Dutch Nation and your men of warre ride at anchor in the Port of Mecha, and do pretend the return of the hundred thousand Dollars taken by Fezeli Bassa. Which brute and scandolous wickednesse, in af- front of our Imperiall power, to dare to perseuer, and to spoyle and ransacke those parts, being signified to the feet of our Imperiall Throne, the Ocean of Iustice, and that those robbed Merchants are subjects of our well defended Dominion. Being in no manner our Imperiall will, that there should be lost one of the said Vessels, nor any the least part of their goods detained; and being that such an action is very ingratefull, and oppugnant to the Peace and friendship between vs contracted, to the end that all the said Merchants may bee set free, and that their goods and faculties taken, may bee entirely restored to the true L owners; which your Majestie causing to be done, you shall accomplish the requisite termes of true Amitie, and shall fulfill the offices of our sincere Correspondence, and shall strengthen the foundation of our good and mutuall fidelitie and League, wee haue written you this our present Letter, full of all effectuall Loue.

At the arriuall whereof it is conuenient, that in conformitie of the great perfect and spotlesse Amitie between your Ancestors and our happy Port, and the Imperiall house of eternall glory, and the antient good Concord, Vnion and Correspondence, that also your Maiestie should be firme and stable in all waies, with iust proceedings to preserue and maintaine the meanes and Orders of friendship descended from your Fathers and Ancestors. And if your Maiestie desire and will, That the termes of Amitie, and our good correspondence shall be carefully obserued and kept, you will then bestow your good diligence and M care, that the aboue mentioned happened action, so discrepant from our Imperiall minde and will, that is, as is aboue written, That the fourteene ships of our Merchants which came from India to our well de-fenced Dominion, and Scale of Ayman, and were taken and surprised by the English Men of war, and the Merchants which were found in them all made slaues, and all their goods and faculties made prize;

that

A that they may be all set free, and all the goods taken from the said Merchants may be entirely restored to the true owners; and so your Maiestie shall haue conserued our most happy mind and affection, and protected our most honorable and noble desires: the performing of which your friendly office, vndoubtedly will produce to your Kingdomes many beneficiall and profitable effects; and certainly you shall finde, that it will redound to the great honour and fame of your Maiesty. And by the Grace of God, after that this our happy and most loving Letter shall arriue by some honourable person, and to you faithfull; be you pleased to send aduice to our excelse Port, of the manner of your vsed diligence and affection in this businesse, and of the effect of the libertie of our ships and Merchants, and of the full restitution of all the goods taken,
B to their right owners; and with what readines you haue expressed your sinceritie and affection to our Imperiall Maiesty. Which businesse we haue also earnestly recommended to your aboue named Embassadour, that when he shall more largely haue enformed you, that you be pleased to giue him credit, and that in the time to come you will attend to apprehend all those means worthy the conseruance of our Friendship, Peace, and Correspondence.

Written in the fifteenth of the Moon Gemaziel evell, in the yeare of the departure of the Prophet, vpon whom be eternall blessing: 1036.

Giuen in our well-defenced City of Constantinople.

C Which is the 20 of Ianuary, 1626.

Vpon the opportunitie of the foresaid troubles within the Turkish Empire, and either to giue reputation to the Armes of the House of Austria in Germany, or to affright Gabor, and dissolue the correspondence which he had practised with some Allyes, or perhaps hoping really to obtaine a peace, and by the ease both of expence, and vse of so many souldiers on the the frontier of so great an enemie as the grand Signior, to effect with more expedition their vniuersall ends; there was in the month of Iune, in the yeare 1625, a Gentleman dispatched from the Vice-Re of Naples, in a frigot of the Spanish King, accompanied with six or seuen
D seruants, with Commission to goe to Constantinople, and being there arriued, to deliuer certaine Letters of ouerture of a peace between the grand Signior and the King of Spaine. To assist him in his Negotiation, there was sent by seuerall waies a Benedict Frier called Padre Beril, and a Greek brought vp in the colledge at Rome, called Cannachi Rossi, both practised in the waies of that court, and formerly imploied in other seruices of intelligence and exploration. Their Instructions were forked; these to practise on the Greek Church to supplant the Patriark; and if both the treaty & their machinations should fail, to attempt to raise the Cossacks, by promise of a sum of mony, to trouble the grand Signior, and to diuert his forces and resolution from assisting the Prince of Transylvania in Hungary, as shall bee at large mentioned in a subsequent discourse. The gentleman was born a Bolognese, and had serued Gasparo
E Gratiani, late Prince of Walachia, and by that means had some experience and acquaintance at the Port. On the way he gaue himself out for an Embassador: which raised more rumor, and gaue warning to those who were disaffected to the succes of his vndertakings. But before we relate how he proceeded, it will giue some light to later negotiations, to look a little higher, vpon what ground and occasions this enterprise was aduanced.

The State of Spain hauing often (especially when it was pressed with any necessitie) practised to make a peace with the Turkish Empire; particularly by the mediation of a Iew, taking the name of Gabriel de Buona Ventura, who was sent with Letters and instructions from Christophoro de Mora and Catagneo the Secretary in the time of Rodulphus the second, who had then war with Sultan Morat; whose enterprise being discouered at Vienna, was by the Empe-F ror interrupted. In the year 1619, the Baron Molart being then Embassador for the Emperor Ferdinand, he dispatched first a Captaine called Francisco, and after him Padre Antonio Berill, with instructions of one tenor vnto the Duke of Ossuna, then Vice King of Naples. The substance was, That he found the opportunitie faire, and the Turkes inclined to make a generall peace with the House of Austria: that therfore this season should not be omitted, but that the duke ſhould preſently diſpeed to him ſome man of qualitie and wit to aſſiſt, and fit to ma- G nage ſo great a buſineſſe: That this man ſo choſen, ſhould not take on him as directly ſent from Spaine, becauſe it would then be expected that hee ſhould appeare as an Embaſſadour; which would require great expence in preſents and traine, and waſte much time in ceremony. Thus the Negotiation would be moſt properly and expeditely perfected by him and the embaſſador of Cæſar, becauſe in the Capitulation of 1606, betweene the Emperor and the Grand Signior, it was expreſly cautioned, That it might be lawful for the King of Spain to enter into that Treaty, & to be compriſed, if it pleaſed him. To theſe were added diuers reaſons inſtructions, examples, and accuſations againſt the Venetians and Hollanders: but the cardinall argument was, That by obtaining this peace, the King of Spain might with ſecuritie ſubdue his Rebels, and finiſh his conqueſts, and defend his Indies from fear of inuaſion, threatned after H expiration of the Truce in Holland. Some other ouertures were made in theſe inſtructions, and reaſons to inforce them, which the modeſtie of Hiſtorie and reuerence to Princes ought to omit. But this negotiation being involved in that of the Emperour, which ſucceeded not according to their expectation, fell before it was ripe. Yet the reaſon continuing, to ſhut that backe port, when their Armies were buſied with other deſignes, the ſaid practiſe was renued by the mediation of another Portugal Iew called Cormaro; who went into Spaine in the year of our Lord 1624, and was thence returned to Naples, and from him and his offers occaſion was taken to ſend this Bologneſe to the Port. Who beeing now arriued at Conſtantinople, tooke firſt ſanctuarie at the houſe of the Agent of the Emperour: where meeting with Beril and Roſſi, and conſulting which way to lay or begin their buſineſſe, they at laſt reſolued to I work by the Agent to whom they were adreſſed, and not to diſcouer themſelues vntill they ſaw how the generall propoſition was taſted. Their Inſtructions were framed of fiue articles. 1. To mooue a perpetual peace between the King of Spain and the Ottoman Empire. 2. To induce the acceptance wherof, to offer to ſet free all the Turkiſh ſlaues, to the number of four hundred, which were then in the Spaniſh captiuitie. 3. To vndertake and promiſe to ſecure the ſubiects of the grand Signior from all loſſe and ſpoil in the Mediteranian ſea, and to keep the coaſts and ſhores from all inuaſion. 4. To vndertake by the Red ſea to ſerue all the empire with the riches and commodities of Eaſt India, at better rates than they did buy of the Engliſh and Hollander, and in them to aduance the Cuſtoms eighty thouſand Dollars yearly. 5. Laſtly, That the King of Spaine ſhould oblige himſelfe to procure the King of Po- K land to reſtraine the Coſſacks from their vſuall excurſions in the Euxine ſea. Theſe were amplified with many reaſons, arguments, and accuſations; but in the concluſion reſtrained, That if they ſaw no probabilitie to obtain and aſſure the Peace, that then Berill ſhould proceed to prouoke the Coſſackes; and this Gentleman ſhould not appeare in the Negotiation, but reſide in the houſe of the Emperours Agent, vnder the name of his Secretarie, vntill further direction.

the

When theſe propoſitions were firſt moued, the ſpecious ſhew made them acceptable; but when the particulars were weighed, eſpecially that offer, To keep the ſea and the coaſts of the Mediterran free from any ſpoyl or inuaſion; the Vizier moued a queſtion, Whether the king of Spain were ſoueraign Lord of the Duke of Florence and the grand Maſter of Malta? and L
if not, how he could command and reſtraine the Knights of Saint Stephano and Malta, who were Religious Orders, and ſworn enemies to the Port? To this obiection receiuing no clear and ſatisfactorie anſwer, the Vizier began to miſtruſt, and to demurre. But delayes (which are vſuall in that Court) not ſuting with the account which this Bologneſe was bound to render vnto the Duke of Oſſuna, of his ſucceſſe, Either to aſſure the peace, or not to loſe the opportunitie of a diuerſion by the Coſſackes; cauſed him to attempt both at once, and to imploy Padre Berill to execute his part. Who beeing taken in Siliſtra vpon ſuſpition, by the Baſſa Diac Mehemet, and his Letters opened, the Spaniſh friendſhip was diſcouered; and the Bologneſe ſtole himſelfe out of the Countrey, and as it was reported, was at his returne impriſoned, for the vanitie of intituling himſelfe as a publique Miniſter, and venting his ma- M ſters name vpon ſo great a Theatre. And the Agent of Cæſar aſſiſted to accuſe him, as not able to containe him within the limits of his Commiſſion, but that hee would wilfully break out, and diſpute, That hee ought perſonally in the name of the Vice-Re to treat with the Vizier: threatning, To cauſe his Penſion from Spain to be retrenched, as cold in the ſeruice

of

A of that Crown, the ciuile ſtrife proceeded from heat to blowes: and it was beleeued, that the Agent vnder hand both haſtned his flight, and procured his puniſhment.

The ill and diſgracefull ſucceſſe of this attempt, and the diſſention between miniſters ſo ſtrictly obliged by common ends, made many beleeue, that the wiſe State of Spaine would not again raſhly and ſuddenly ingage their reputation to a ſecond ſcorn. But fear and neceſſitie, that obey no rules, inforced as it ſeemes the Vice-king of Naples (for all theſe practiſes were maſqued vnder his name) to do a ſeruice that would be moſt acceptable when it was done. For the rumor, That the Prince of Tranſylvania did prepare an army, and that the grand Signior had giuen order to the frontier Baſſa's to aſſiſt him, and that the Count of Mansfelt and Duke Weymar were expected with their troups to ioyn with him; this collegation appeared terrible, and to threaten Vienna it ſelfe; and therfore it was iudged the beſt counſel, openly to offer a Peace, to amuſe or ſeparate the force of the Turk, or vnder the ſhadow of a treaty, to ſteal away the firſt opportunitie of action. So that contrary to all expectation, ſuddenly in Aprill of this year, it was ſuddenly aduiſed from Raguſa, That there was there arriued in a Galliot of Naples, another Mercury, a Spaniſh Gentleman, that openly avowed himſelf to be really ſent from the Vice-Re, to offer a peace to the grand Signior, and to prepare the acceptance of Embaſſadors or Commiſſioners fit to treat it. He was well attended, and furniſhed with exchange, and earneſtly commended by the Vice-King to the Senat of that City. At his firſt landing he made grauitie, and expected ſome ceremonies and reception: but thoſe ſmall States, who are like a grain between two mill-ſtones, thinking their greateſt ſafety conſiſted in taking no notice, and in being on both ſides diſ-intereſſed, would not vnderſtand him; and he finding himſelfe deceiued, was caried in a cloſe chaire to the Monaſterie of the Friar Minors, and kept himſelfe priuat; only ſending another Letter (which was written to a Vizier at the Port) to thoſe Magiſtrats, deſiring them to diſpeed it by Poſts to Conſtantinopole, and to prouide him Guides for his journey thither. Both which were done, and two Turks appointed to conduct him. Before his departure, hee diſpatched another Currior to Belgrade to a Correſpondent there. It was likewiſe aduiſed from Raguſa, That he was laden with preſents, and had order to ſpend freely: which was dangerous in a Court where all things were vendible; and thoſe that fauoured the Deſigne triumphed, and accounted the prize already won; nothing being more diſcourſed, than the Peace between Spaine and Turkey. As a fore-runner of this negotiation, to ſmooth the waies, there was ſpred ſome weekes before this newes, a Letter printed in Spaine, Cum Licentia, as written from the grand Signior to the Catholike King; offering Peace, and promiſing to ſeparate from all his Enemies, and to leaue them to iuſt puniſhment, and neuer to aſſiſt or ſupport them: with a Catalogue ioyned, of an infinite preſent that ſhould bee ſent by the Turke to procure the acceptance of this amitie. At the firſt ſight this Letter was deſpiſed as a fiction: only ſome contemplatiue men did make conſtruction, That it was ſpread to encourage the people of Hungarie, and to remooue the feares of the Turke; or to raiſe a jelouſie in Gabor and his friends: eſpecially being ſeconded with a concurrent rumor, That a Miniſter really was ſent to treat peace, and an Embaſſador expected to follow him, that at leaſt he ſhould be receiued to gaine time. But theſe were poore ſhifts for ſo great and wiſe a State; yet whatſoeuer the purpoſe was, whether it was a counterfeit, or directed to ſome end, it was taken vp and vſed as an inſtrument to reject the embaſſage and to prohibit the bearer to approch the court. For whether it fel into the hand of a Moore-Franke expelled Spaine, or were made vſe of by any Embaſſadour that deſired to croſſe the concluſion of ſuch a peace, in ſuch a conjunction, ſo dangerous to many princes and ſtates, it was ſhewed the great Viſier and Mufti, commented vpon, and vrged as a great affront to the grand Signior. At which they took ſo high and ſudden diſdain, that they gaue inſtant Commands, and ſent horſmen to beat the waies, with commiſſion to all the Beghs and Caddees to aſſiſt them, That whereſoeuer they did meet or find this gentleman, they ſhould carry him directly back to the ſea ſide, and ſee him ſhipt; with admonition, not to preſume to land on penaltie of death. And other letters to check the Senat of Raguſa, for receiuing any miniſter of their enemy, without asking leaue or conſulting the State.

1626.

The Gentleman was by this time aduanced four daies journey toward the Port, where hee fel and brake his leg, and was caried back in miſerable pain to Raguſa, and returned to his old lodging;

lodging. Where the horſemen found him, and deliuering their letters to the Senat, demaunded to haue him giuen vp into their hands. But they refuſed to break their ſanctuary, and only promiſed to obey the effect of the grand Signiors command, ciuilly to ſhip him & to ſend him back to Naples: which was don in the preſence of thoſe Turks, and letters written by the Senat, both to the Vice-King and the Vizier, to excuſe themſelues, That they durſt diſpleaſe neither party, but deſired to liue in the grace of both princes. G

The grand Signiors Command to all the Sanzacks and Caddees of Greece, to return the Spaniſh Gentleman ſent from the Vice Re of Naples. H

VPon the ſight of this our Imperial Signature, you ſhall take notice, That the Spaniards (being alwaies antient enemies of our happy Port, the Fountaine of felicity) haue of late ſought to aduantage themſelues of ſome princes which keep good friendſhip & correſpondence with vs: To which end the Viceroy of Naples did ſend the laſt yeare a Meſſenger to our Imperial Port, intimating, That the King of Spaine was deſirous to haue a peace with I vs. But in regard they haue bin euer our enemies, and that the peace which they did then offer was fraudulent, and only to ſerue their own ends; we did not vouchſafe to giue him audience, but rather reiected both himſelfe and his meſſage. And now again we haue notice giuen vs, That there are others come to Raguſa from the ſaid King of Spain, about the ſame buſineſſe, with intent to come forward to our happy Port; Therefore wee haue ſent Muſtapha our Capigi with our Imperial Command, That if any ſuch perſons ſhal come within any of your ſeueral juriſdictions, that you ſtay them, and without one houre or moment of delay deliuer them to him, to be caried forth of our dominions, and made return into their own country. This K is a buſines of very great importance, and therfore we command you to be very wary and circumſpect in ſearching out for ſuch perſons; and that you vſe no negligence or delay therein, but ſpeedily obey and put in execution this our Imperial Command, not ſuffering any one whatſoeuer, comming either from the Vice-King of Naples, or the King of Spain, to proceed forward toward our happy Port. And you ſhall certifie vs in writing by the ſaid Capigi, how and in what maner you haue executed our Command. And if any ſuch perſons comming from the Vice-King of Naples or King of Spain, haue any letters or writings, you ſhal take them from them, and ſend them to our happy Port. And after you ſhal haue ſeen and vnderſtood this our Commaund, you ſhall giue faith and credit to it, and reſtore it again to our ſlaue Muſtapha L Capigi.

Giuen at Conſtantinople in the middle of the Moon of Saban, in the year 1035.

Which is in the middle of May, 1626.

Another of the ſame Tenor was ſent by the ſame Meſſenger, vnto the Commonwealth of Raguſa. M

About the ſixth of September the Prince of Tranſylvania ſent a meſſenger in great haſte to the Port, with Letters and Inſtructions to his Agent there; the ſubſtance whereof was reduced to two heads: Firſt, to declare to the grand Signior, That his Eſtates in their Dyet, by

A by his consent, had elected his Lady to the succession of that Principality: and to require the confirmation, according to the antient Rites and Capitulations betweene them. For his sudden resolution, without consulting the Grand Signior, and in excuse of the sex, he proposed many reasons, all directed to one scope: That the encrease of the House of Austria was so dangerous to all Germany, that it was requisite to prouide for Transyluania, to preuent the corruption of an Inter Regnum, wherein the Imperials might worke distemper and diuision: and therefore it was necessary that a Successor should be declared, and in possession; and one well allyed and strengthened by the Princes opposite to the Austrians; which conditions meeting in his wife, made her without all exception. That this election was passed with the consent, and in contemplation of his Allyes and friends of the Port, and vnder their assurance
B of protection. And that therefore he should vrge the Grand Signior to concurre and approue his care, employed onely to preuent and humble the Common Enemy. Secondly, That whereas then six yeares past, when hee liued in peace, without offence of the Emperour, he had beene commanded by the Grand Signior to moue his Armes, and to prouoke an enemy, now become irreconcileable: Which Councell had beene continued vntill that time, by the most experienced Ministers of the Turkish Empire; and Letters sent him the yeare before of the same tenour; and that he had lately required a plaine approbation of his prosecu-
C tion of those designes, which being formerly indifferent, were now become necessary; He should now persuade them, not to lose this opportuuity of confining the Emperor for euer within Germany, and setling an assured peace and safety to the Turkish frontier; that was by his conquest of Hungary. That if he found any difficulty in either of these, That the succession were refused to his Lady, or succours to him to prosecute the warre; that he should vnmaske, and plainely protest, That he had been engaged first by the Grand Signior, and made confederation with many friends, with his consent and approbation, too late to be reuoked, and his owne honour so far thereby exposed, that he could not retire, but would prouide for his owne safety. Therefore as he would pay his tribute, and continue his faith; so, if they would leaue him to himself, they must not disdaine the like measure in their occasions, from him and his friends.

His Letters and messages were roundly deliuered to the Ministers of the Grand Signior; and a generall answer giuen, That for the succession they would consult and resolue to his fit
D satisfaction; and that a Letter should be presently written to approue the antient Councels. The Agent not content with that coldnesse, nor well discerning the times, pressed the Vizier to a more direct and particular answer.

The Grand Signiors army flies from Babylon.

But in the instant there arriued newes from Babylon, That the campe was risen and fled, by the fauour of the night, forced to burne their Tents and Prouisions, and to breake their great Artillery, and cast it into the Euphrates; That the miseries in the Army had been such as men in the field neuer suffered (consumed by famin, and suffocated by heat: by this, twelue thousand died in one day; the other might be judged by the price of a bushell of Barly, sold for thirty eight checquines of gold.) That the Great Vizier had beheaded three of the most valiant Bassaes, hoping thereby to cast the enuy of his shame vpon them: and, That retyring
E to * Mosul, the Persian vsed his victory, and following a flying Army, did continuall execution for ten daies vpon the Reare. So great a blow the Turkish Empire neuer receiued; the newes whereof was taken with so much sadnesse, that it was no season to treat of making new warres. The Emperors Agent made vse of this dejection, and opposed all the Transyluanian negotiations diametrally, and promised the present comming of a great Embassadour to ratifie the Peace betweene the Grand Signior and his Master. And the Turke knew not whom to beleeue, weakened in spirit by their successe and the present constitution; Funturi ambiguus, & magis quid vitaret quàm cui fideret certus; doubtfull of the future, and rather certaine what to auoid, than whom to trust. Wherefore the Prince of Transyluania's Agent resolued, not to prouoke by an importune pressure, a dispairefull answer; but to giue them
F time to recollect and gather heart, and to accept of their generall Letters, with a promise from the Chimacham annexed, That as soone as a few daies of consultation and prouision for their affaires in Asia were past, that he would enter into a particular consideration of his Master, and giue him ample content in them; and that in the meane time he might proceed cheerefully.

* Ninivie.

The Duke of Weymar and Count Mansfelt arriue in Silesia with an Army.

The Bassa of Buda in the meane time sent a Post to the Port, with certaine newes of the G arriuall of the Duke Iohn of Weymar and Count Mansfelt in Silesia; and that the Prince of Transyluania was risen to joyn with them, hauing mutually exchanged and sent some troups one to the other; and that himselfe was marched neere Vatz, to conferre with the Prince in his passage, to resolue together of the prosecution of their designes. Whereupon the Em-perors Agent at the Port made violent exclamations; protested the breach of Peace, and vsed some scandalous arguments against the Friends of the Prince; begged, threatened, and enforced all his powers to diuert or affright the Chimacham; who knew no more than was infused into him and for the most part beleeued the last man, or as his feares guided him. This causèd some stop of the dispatch of the inuestiture of the Princesse of Transyluania, obtained by Sr Thomas Rowe, and other negotiations of the Prince: And the Agent had procured a letter H from the Grand Signior to his Master the Emperor, of excuse; yet referring all conclusion, if they sought Peace, to a treaty with the Prince of Transyluania and Mortesa Bassa of Buda.
Other Letters were dispatched to the Bassa, to beware of impertinent actions, to occasion an vnseasonable rupture: yet so mingled and qualified, as that they intimated, any thing would be accepted that was throughly done. Against the inuestiture the Emperors Agent shewed all his wit and strength; objecting, That she was a woman, a stranger, and a German. By this only he hoped to begin a discontent betweene the Grand Signior and the Prince of Transyluania; knowing, that the election once passed, would not be recalled, and that if it were not confirmed at the Port, the Prince and Estates of Transyluania would finde themselues wronged, and their liberty encroached vpon, and perhaps seeke other refuge: for the Emperor I would willingly haue accepted any returne or aspect towards him. But the art, to sow a dissention, or to entice the Prince to depend vpon the Emperor, and to take of him that which he could not obtaine at the Port, being at large opened to the great Ministers of the Grand Signior, it was againe resolued to dispatch the Grant, and to send the Embassador with vsu-all ceremonies: who was to depart within six daies.

The Prince of Transyluania being vnited with Mortesa Bassa of Buda, dispatched from his Campe at Zetzen aboue Nouegrade, a Currier to the Grand Signior; aduising, That Wal- stein, and Isterhas Palatine of Hungary, were drawne vp with their Army to oppose his proceedings, and to keepe him from joyning with Count Mansfelt: Who sent to him a Gentleman to know the cause of his entring the Imperiall Dominions; and professing they came K as friends, and offering many conditions, desired that order might be giuen to both their Armies to retyre a daies journy, and betweene them a place assigned for Commissioners to meet and consider of some accommodation. To whom the Prince answered, he had no purpose to vsurpe any thing in Hungary, but only to deliuer them from the tyranny of the Germans, and to relieue his Allies oppressed, whom he could not betray; nor had he any power to treat with them. The Armies being neere, and parties abroad, did occasion some blowes, and great skirmishes for two daies; wherein on both sides some bloud was spilt, the Prince taking himselfe to haue the better, hauing gotten twenty six German Launciers prisoners, and some light Hungarian horsemen; and that Walstein the third day retyred fiue Dutch miles, and fortified himselfe at Wiuar. This faction was begun vpon the fifth of October. L Vpon the Enemies remoue, Messengers did mutually passe betweene the Prince and Count Mansfelt, and appointment made for their secure meeting the third day after: Vpon which, Gabor promised to follow the Imperials, and to attempt them. Mortesa Bassa made an offer to set downe before Nouegrade; but was withdrawne by the Prince, not to spend time before a Towne, and loth to giue it to the Turks. He wrote, That Count Mansfelt had made agreement with the cities of Silesia, all ports being open to him; and that he passed without any offence, and had brought with him some Deputies from Breslaw and the Nobility of that Prouince. That all the strong places of Hungary had sent to him, That they would not aid the Emperor against him, if he committed no spoile; and were ready to receiue and obey him, if he were Master of the field, and able to protect them: And therefore hee now desi- M red a Command from the Grand Signior, to the Bassa of Buda, that hee might not retyre (according to the Turks vse) but Winter with him; lest his Allyes thereby discouraged, the opportunity of his part should be lost, and a faire entrance opened to the Emperor to follow a reuenge. The Grand Signior, who formerly was so wary and backeward to consent

to

A to any breach, being now vnawares engaged, Lupum auribus tenens, holding the Wolfe by the eares, without ſcruple granted his deſire, and the Orders were ſent away; That what was done being paſt recall, Morteſa ſhould Winter with the Prince of Tranſyluania, and not retire without his conſent, but in all things follow his direction: yet limited according to their neceſſities and the nature of feare, full of caution, not to aduenture vpon vncertaine grounds; with power and inſinuation to make a Peace, if profitable and ſafe Conditions ſhould be propounded.

At length Count Mansfelt joyned with the Prince of Tranſyluania and Morteſa Baſſa, hauing vnder his command ſouldiers, but miſerably worne out with a long march (and diuided with the Duke of Weymar, who ſtaied in Sileſia) without any munition or fit armes: which
B diſcouraged Gabor, who expected ſuccors, but found (as he pretended) a charge: yet as they were they reſolued to ſet vpon the Army of Walſtein neere the riuer Gran, the ſixteenth of October; which retiring continually, vpon the paſſage of the water, they fell on, and made a great diſorder, and tooke many priſoners, whoſe heads they afterwards cut off. Walſtein being not able to ſuſteine their fury, after this loſſe plainely fled. Whereupon the Vantgard of the Prince of Tranſyluania followed him, and had ſlaughter of his Reare all the way betweene Gran and Vaghe; which riuer the Enemy paſſing vpon two bridges of boats, there was a new fight begun, and many of the Imperials cut off. The Princes troups entering the bridges peſle meſle with them, got the paſſage, and hauing ſlaine a great many, put all the Army into greater feare: ſo that now they were reſolued to follow them euen to the gates of Preſ-
C burg and Vienna, as they wrote to the Port.

The army of the Imperials defeated by the Prince of Tranſiluanian's troops.

Notwithſtanding this good ſucceſſe of the Prince againſt the Imperialiſts, he in the beginning of Ianuary (by reaſon of the hardneſſe of the Winter, and that he receiued not ſuch ſupplies of contribution from his Allies as he expected, and the Turks very deſirous of a Peace with the Emperor, by reaſon of their wars in Aſia againſt the Perſian) ſent a meſſenger to the Emperor, excuſing his taking vp of Armes, vpon the vnperformance of ſome Articles in his late Treaty, and the not ſending an Embaſſador to the Port; aſſuming the neceſſity of D obedience, and offering to make a Truce for three moneths, and to diſpatch Commiſſioners to the Emperor, to mediate the concluſion of Peace with the Grand Signior. To which he receiued anſwer, That if firſt he did not diſmiſſe the Turks, and ſeparate himſelfe from Count Mansfelt and his Troups (with whom he would admit no parle, nor make any accommodation) he would giue no audience to any that came from him. Vpon which anſwer the Prince returned to Caſſouia, and Morteſa Baſſa to Peſth.

Count Mansfelt alſo returning toward the State of Venice, in his way thither died at Boſna-Seray neere Spalato in Dalmatia: the newes whereof comming to Duke Iohn Erneſtus, already weakened with a Feuer foureteene daies, he alſo fell into an Apoplexy, and died at Turocz in the North part of Hungary, where hee was quartered for the Winter. His body was opened, and not one drop of bloud found, but his heart withered to the ſmalneſſe of a Nut.

The death of Count Mansfelt and Duke Erneſt.

The Agent of the prince of Tranſyluania, in excuſe of his maſter for this ſudden defection,
E had order to declare vnto the Embaſſadors of his Friends and Allies at the Port, That the Truce with the Emperor was not made by his Maſter alone, but by a conſultation, where were preſent a Commiſſioner of the King of Denmarke, Duke Iohn Erneſt, Count Mansfelt, and diuers Deputies of the Prouinces of Morauia and Sileſia; and the generall conſent of the Councell of War, induced thereunto for theſe reaſons: Firſt, Becauſe the Baſſa of Buda was expreſſely commanded to retyre; who muſt obey, vntill he could better informe the Grand Signior, and if poſſible, incline him to the war. Secondly, Being to enter into conſideration, if the Turks by no meanes could be induced to continue their Aids, that it might be gained to acquaint the Confederates with their eſtate, and to conſult with them, of meanes to proſecute the Enemy with their owne Forces: and to that purpoſe, that Count Mansfelt had ta-
F ken his voyage toward Venice. Laſtly, the neceſſity of drawing to garriſon, being a Truce in effect, they thought it no prejudice to aduantage themſelues by one in words. That vpon the eighth day of December the Embaſſador of the King of Denmarke returned to his country, fully ſatisfied and enformed of all their proceedings and Counſels; in which it was concluded to re-inforce their Troups in the Spring, by the aſſiſtance of the Barons of Morauia and

The Prince of Tranſyluania's excuſe for making a Truce with the Emperor.

Sileſia, whoſe Deputies were ſent purpoſely to enter into the Confederacy promiſing to join their forces: and that in Iune following the Prince would draw into the field, and march directly into Auſtria, to make that Prouince the ſeat of the war; where it was promiſed that the King of Denmarke ſhould meet him, and vnite their Armies, by which meanes only they hoped to finiſh the miſeries of Chriſtendome. G

The miniſters of the Grand Signior hauing made a great complaint vnto his Majeſties Embaſſador reſident at the Port, That ſome of his majeſties ſubjects had robbed ſome of the Grand Signiors at the Red Sea, for which they required reſtitution, according to the Capitulations of Peace. Whereupon his Majeſties Embaſſador writ this Letter to them as followeth: H

To all Admirals, Captaines, and other Commauders of Engliſh Ships, Subjects of his moſt ſacred Majeſty, trading or nauigating in the Red-Seas.

After my hearty commendations and greetings; theſe are to let you know, That Haydar Baſſa of Ayman hath giuen information to the Grand Signior, That ſome Engliſh ſhips in company with Hollanders, haue ſurpriſed diuers Indian Ships, wherein (as they pretend) were many Merchants and Subjects of the Grand Signior; and haue taken their goods, contrary to the Peace and Amity betweene his Majeſty and the Grand Signior. Which Information (we being aſſured of your diſcretion, and well knowing you haue no ſuch authority from his Majeſty, nor any other deriued from his Royall power) although we hope it is falſe, and that you no way haue exceeded your commiſſions and inſtructions; yet the lament of thoſe parts being vehement and many (wherein the Grand Signior hath complained by his Letters to his Majeſty purpoſely written; demanding Iuſtice of ſuch action) and to preuent the proſecution of ſuch courſes, contrary to the Peace, and being thereunto ſolicited by the Chimacham, as a meanes to auoid all occaſion of breach betweene both Nations, I haue thought fit to ſend you theſe our Letters of Aduice, to put you in minde, exhort, and require you, That you be very heedfull, not to giue juſt occaſion of offence and ſcandall, nor that you take or make priſe of any ſhips or goods belonging to any ſubject of the Grand Signior, contrary to the Peace, Amity, and Capitulations of his Majeſty for free commerce. Wherein you are wiſely to conſider the conſequences of this buſineſſe, and of our trade in the Grand Signiors Dominion; and that his Majeſty will do juſtice vpon all ſuch as interrupt the publique Peace. We further deſire you to examine the truth of ſuch accuſation, and to make certificate to me, of all the late proceedings of our Ships in thoſe parts, that I may be able to giue a reaſon, and to anſwer for you, according to my duty; that all our trouble here (which may be a great conſequence) may be auoided: And for the future, exhorting you to do no action or violence to any of the Subjects of the Grand Signior, contrary to the Peace, for that ſuch is his Majeſties will and pleaſure. And ſo I bid you heartily farewell. I K

Giuen in Conſtantinople the nineteenth day of Ianuary, 1626.

Although the Prince of Tranſyluania kept his Army in their Hybernation, and that the Grand Signior had giuen order (at the inſtance of ſome of his Miniſters, fauorers of peace) to recall Morteſa Baſſa of Buda from his gouernment; yet it was moſt cleere, euident, and vndiſputable, that the Prince did with all ſincerity endeauor to continue the war, notwithſtanding his Treaty, made for neceſſity, and referred for ratification to the Grand Signior. His priuate negotiation with the Capi-Aga and Caſlar-Aga, not communicated to any, and the good effect it wrought, was ſufficient teſtimony of his conſtancy and inward purpoſes: and vpon the death of Duke Iohn Erneſtus, that Army being in want and almoſt in mutiny, he relieued them, and gaue them two moneths pay, one in meale, butter, hony, cheeſe, barley, and other victuals, and the other in mony; aſſuring them that they ſhould not want, vntill both meanes and orders came from the Princes, to whom the Count of Mansfelt was diſpatched. This the Prince writ to the Port, as a greater argument (becauſe chargeable) of his deſire to confirme the Grand Signior; which if he meant peace, had beene caſt away. But after the death of the old Chimacham (protector of him and all his actions) the Emperours friends L M wrought

A wrought vpon the pretended patriots, and conuerted their feare into a ſeeming ſincerity and care of auoiding an engagement in a double war: who finding the State entangled in the troubles of Aſia, made that the foundation, not only to diſpute againſt any other, but to threaten the contradictors of their opinion. Theſe for the moſt part were men popular, but vtterly ignorant of the preſent condition and affaires of Hungary; yet they ſo preuailed (quod in ſeditionibus accedit, vbi plures erant omnes fuere, which hapneth in tumults where many are, all men run) that the Vizier, to ſatisfie them, was enforced to command the retreit of Morteſa. Theſe things hapning in the inſtant when they concluded to diſpatch a new Vizier, and to raiſe the ſoldiery to follow him, there was no time to ſpeake of another enemy, and thoſe wiſe men could do but one thing at once. But the zeale of this Councell laſting no longer than while
B it was blowne by Cæſars Miniſters, and that the ſupply of Aſia was reſolued, and the Grand Signior being fully informed by Gabors laſt Letters, which threatened as much on the other ſide, That if that opportunity was loſt, and that the houſe of Auſtria ſhould poſſeſſe Germany; or at the beſt, the Princes colleagued take the example and make peace, he muſt expect a ſharpe inuaſion and reuenge, then when he ſhould haue no friends, and their Army buſied in Aſia: vrging the neere alliance of the Emperor with the King of Poland, the inſtigation of the Pope, and whatſoeuer might beget a feare that they ſhould be incloſed with enemies. This admonition taught them the wiſedome to be content to keepe their oppoſites exerciſed at anothers charge; and though as yet they durſt not, or would not ſo openly declare, as to pull the war vpon themſelues, yet they found it neceſſary to be continued, and therefore
C they reſolued to temporiſe, and to auoid a preſent extremity, by the colour of the Truce. In the meane time to leaue Bethlem Gabor at his liberty, and to obſerue how the Princes proceeded to maintaine and ſupply their Troups; meaning to ſtep in when they ſhould ſee their Army in the field. To this purpoſe Morteſa Baſſa was re-eſtabliſhed in his gouernment, and the buſineſſe ſo carried with him, that he ſhould make no ſhew of mouing, vntill the time fit to take horſe; and that then hee ſhould haue leaue and command to correſpond with Gabor according to the occaſion.

The Emperor hauing had notice of theſe counſels and deſignes, diſpatched a Dutch Gen- 1627 tleman toward the Port, with Letters and Inſtructions to his Agent and Friends there; and A Dutch Gentleman diſpeeded to the Port by the Emperor, diſguiſed in French attire.
D commanded him to make his journey by the way of Raguſa, giuing it out that hee was a French-man, leſt hee ſhould be diſcouered in the ſhorter way by Buda, and ſtopped, and his Papers and Inſtructions ſearched. Notwithſtanding all this diſguiſe, notice came to the Port beforehand of the comming of this Meſſenger; and the Miniſters of the Grand Signior cauſed him at his arriuall to be confined, not ſuffering him to open a packet, and the Vizier forcing him to decipher his Letter to the Emperours Agent in his preſence, not truſting him with his owne ſecret. The ſubſtance whereof was vehement complaint againſt the Prince of Tranſyluania; accuſing him to be the author of all the troubles and diſcontents of the frontier. That ſince his aduancement it was not poſſible to maintaine the Peace, nor that Amity which was contracted betweene their kingdomes; intimating a deſire to haue him de-
E poſed, as a perturber of the World. Expoſtulating the mouing of thoſe new Armes and the preparations of the Baſſa of Buda. He had Letters likewiſe to the Grand Signior, but was not ſuffered to deliuer them: but they reſolued to ſend him backe to Buda, there to diſcouer his meſſage, and if it ſhould ſeeme fit to Bethlem Gabor and the Baſſa to treat peace, that then an Embaſſador from the Emperor ſhould be accepted, but no inferiour perſon, nor querelous Letters. Thus it was plotted to be referred to the aduice of Gabor; who gaue this counſell; that he might in all occaſion both know the ſecret, and direct the anſwer, and by making himſelfe ſeeme neceſſary to the Turks, he guided all their reſolutions to his owne ends. On the other ſide, Morteſa Baſſa hauing had notice, that a meſſenger was ſtollen by, and arriued and heard at the Port, ſent a Poſt with Letters, complaining, That he ſhould haue any entertain-
F ment there, or was admitted any audience: That if the Grand Signior had with confidence really referred the concluſion of the peace or warre to Bethlem Gabor and himſelfe, all other Treaty was impertinent and hurtfull, and might produce vncertaine or contrariety in the reſolution; deſiring that he might be diſmiſſed inſtantly and ſent to him, becauſe one of the Imperiall Commiſſioners being arriued at Comara, had aduertiſed, That they could not enter

enter into conference vntill the returne of this Messenger. Whereupon the Vizier dispeeded him without any answer to the Emperor, or treaty, or other resolution than that which was formerly mentioned; rather taking from him, than receiuing his Letters; only a Fede for his discharge was giuen him, that he had brought and presented them, but comming from the country of an Enemy, they could not be accepted. Thus he was sent to Mortesa by a Chiaus, and with him an answer to the Bassa, That his negotiation was wholly referred to him and the Prince of Transyluania; with this caution, That hee should protract, and beware to be rashly ingaged in an open war. G

About the one and twentieth of Aprill news came to the Port from Cairo, signifying the reuolt of Gemen in Arabia, vnder a pretending Prince whom they call an Ayman or Priest: That he had ouerrun the country, and besieged the Bassa in the principall city. To whose reliefe the Bassa of Cairo had sent by Suachin in the Red-Sea three thousand souldiers; but it was aduised, that if more succors were not supplied, that the Holy Country would be lost. This caused frequent Counsels, and did much trouble the State; especially the feare of Mecha, Medina, and the deuotion to their Prophet. The great Vizier arriued at Aleppo, but complained for men, munition, and mony: to raise the first, the Viziers of the Bench were sent abroad; one to Greece, another to Natolia, a third to Tartary, others to other places; insomuch as the City was left desolate. Munition was aduentured by Sea to Scanderone; and mony was extorted from the poorer (per fas & nefas) or drawne from rich subjects (precario) to concur to assist in the publique want. H

A dead silence now possessed all things; and there was little newes from the Prince of Transyluania, how he proceeded, nor what he purposed: only the tripartite Commissioners were met at Comara, where they treated; and the generall inclination of the Ministers at the Port being wholly bent to peace, they aduised Mortesa secretly, and excused themselues to Gabor vpon the Mufti; whose feares the Imperials had made the ground of their hopes, and that Councell. But it seemes it was resolued at least, not to breake; the Emperours Commissioners pressing a resolution on the one side, and Gabor on the other raising new difficulties, and endeauouring to dissolue the Treaty, and to leaue the occasion of the warre open to time and opportunity. The Turks being driuen vp in a streight how to please both, fell at last vpon the Prince, accusing him, That he had in December before treated apart, and made his owne peace with the Emperour, vpon conditions to his owne aduantage, without consulting the Port: which was true; for vpon the retreat of his Army, and the despaire of the forces of Count Mansfelt, (which he found weakened by a long march) and the disunion of the Generals, he had treated and signed Articles; but as he pretended, they were concluded in a Councell, with the consent of his friends or their ministers: which as he could not directly deny, so he did not absolutely confesse; tempering what he had done, with diuers conditions; of the declaration of the consent of his Allies, and the ratification of the Grand Signior. This Treaty was noised and bruted from Vienna, and the copy sent to Constantinople purposely to discredit him: so that it was no more a secret; and thereupon the Prince dispatched a Post to his Embassador, to satisfie those who might except against him: professing not only what he had done apart by necessity, and for want of supplies, but that he would proceed in the generall Treaty: because there was no other way to vnblinde the Ministers of the Grand Signior; who so much affected the assurance of the Border, that they would not beleeue any arguments, as fauouring of other interests, but that he would at the conuention raise so many rockes and impossibilities, as that the breach of the conference should be the beginning of the war, and a bond of necessity in the Turks to partake in it. The Emperor remaining still jealous of delaies, sent another messenger to the Port, with a second plaint against Bethlem Gabor, and Mortesa Bassa, as the disturbers of the antient Truce; and an expression of his feruent desire to maintaine a good peace with the Ottoman Empire, which he said could neuer be secured, vnlesse the Grand Signior should place such Ministers in the frontier gouernments, as were louers of the publique quiet. For the establishing whereof he had sent his Deputies to meet those of the Port, who hauing agreed (as he pretended) vpon Articles, and reconciled all differences, that he was ready to send a great Embassador thither, to confirme whatsoeuer should there be concluded. This was done only to get an acceptance of some person of Quality to be present at the Port; which Gabor and Mortesa Bassa hindred, to keepe that State I K L M without

A without any light but such as they pleased to giue them. But it being objected to the Messenger by the Vizier, That the Emperour had made a peace apart with the Prince, and that therefore he had obtained his ends without the communication of the Grand Signior, which gaue much suspition of sinister purposes: the Emperours Messenger did not deny but that there was some such thing done; but that his Master did not trust in it, nor could euer rest secure in the word of that Prince, vnlesse the authority of the Port did strengthen it. In conclusion, feare on the one part to lose an opportunity of peace; the death of Mansfelt, some disasters of the Friends of the Prince in Germany, and the failing of aids expected, all concurring on the other part, made both parts soften and decline, and resolue to take care only of their owne affaires, and to leaue the World at liberty.

B The Captaine Bassa was sent vp to the Euxine sea with a gallant fleet for flags and streamers, resolute to attempt the shutting in of the Cossacks by building two Forts on the outlets of the Boristhenes: who prepared to resist him, and were intrenched neere his expected descent. The Poles made some braues, That they would assist them, and maintaine their frontier, as Lords of that ground: but it was not beleeued they would hazard their peace with the Grand Signior, by fighting with his Generall, but rather conniue till he should be returned, and then to raze and ouerthrow what was raised, and excuse it vpon their out-lawes. This enterprise was like to cost some knockes; but as matters then stood, the Poles were not in state to make any great progresse, the King of Sueden hauing diuerted them to their owne defence in Prussia: yet how soeuer they resolued in this particular, they must keepe an Army C on foot, least they tempted the enemy to vse the occasion. The Captaine Bassa dispatched with an Armada into the Blacke Sea.

While all the Sea forces were imploied in this designe, the Arches were left vngarded, and six gallies of the great Duke of Tuscany came to the mouth of the Hellespont, and took one Gallion, and many lesser ships of the Cairo fleet; the booty whereof by report amounted to some millions of Dollars. This sudden alarme caused the Grand Signior to send into the Blacke-Sea to recall some forces, and instantly from the Armado twelue gallies were spared, and dispatched to seeke the Christians, who were departed with their riches.

There arriued at the same time a Persian Embassador at Aleppo with ouertures of peace: vpon whom the great Vizier put gards, neither accepting nor refusing his message; and sent to the Port to declare, that the State must either furnish him with a million and half of gold, D and store of munition, or else grant him a Commission to entertaine that opportunity and motion of Treaty; for with lesse supplies hee could not proceed. The first was impossible, and the later much against the stomach; but a fresh aduice bringing the report of a great Embassador following the former with rich Presents, and faire offers, made many beleeue or hope a happy conclusion; though men of best judgements esteemed it very difficult, vnlesse Babylon should be surrendred. All men made this conclusion, That if peace could be settled on that side, the Turks had yet spleene enough to reuenge the braues they had endured from the Imperials; who though they sought a Truce, prosecuted it insolently, threatening fire and sword if they obteined not their desires. And thus the Treaty at Comara had ebbs and flouds, heats and colds, as the feare or hope of the affaires of Asia did temper it. An Embassador from Persia arriueth at Aleppo.

E This expected Persian Embassador not long after arriued at the Port, with little hope to buy peace at a cheaper rate than the surrender of Babylon. And the gallies of the Grand Signior sent in pursuit of the Florentines, by great diligence ouertooke them in a Port of Morea, and recouered all the prizes, [So their great wealth was like a dreame, when they awaked it vanished:] And vpon the sixteenth of Iune they returned and entered in triumph, towing in all the reprised booty. It seemes they were become too rich to fight, and the Turks, though superiour in strength and number, were content with the gaine, and glad not to force men already spoiled, into dispaire. The Persian Embassador arriueth at the Port.

About the first of Iuly the Bassa of Buda sent post to the Port, with aduice, that the Emperors Commissioners at Comaran had presented certaine Articles, containing accounts and F restitutions: which being sent to him, he had receiued, but could not allow them; answering, That the Grand Signior did not treat with Merchants; Which had like to haue bred confusion: but that they were since entered into new conference, and had concluded in the generall, a resolution to peace; with consent that both parties should haue time to send to their Masters for fresh instructions in particulars. Whereupon he had dispatched that Messenger to the Port, to vnderſtand the ſence, and to receiue abſolute directions from thence. By him G Bethlem Gabor did write a ſharpe Letter; confeſſing plainly (ſeeing he could not longer conceale it) that he had made peace for himſelfe; but accuſed the negligence of thoſe Miniſters as the cauſe thereof: Firſt, That they would neuer conſtantly truſt his aduiſes of the opportunity of the war, but their Mufti and Book men, who were fitter to enterpret their Law, than to judge of the World and matters of State. That he would be true to the Grand Signior, but yet not neglect himſelfe, when he ſaw how little care of him was had, how little authority and credit was giuen to him. That the Letters written to him from the Vizier were ambiguous and irreſolute, but diuers others priuately had threatened him not to be the occaſion of a war. And therefore to proue himſelfe faithfull and true to his owne firſt counſels, he offered, That if the Grand Signior would breake off the Treaty, and reſolue to vſe the time, H that he was ready to march in ſix daies warning. He amplified the proſperity of the remains of Mansfelt Army in Sileſia, the occaſion, and all other fit arguments to moue them to a change of thoſe degenerate counſels of peace. But this was an art to caſt the fault on others, for the concluſion of that which he had ſuffered to proceed, and was beyond his power to remedy. Yet it much perplexed the Vizier, who excuſed himſelfe, and returned all the blame vpon the Lawyers, as men ignorant, by whom he had been ouerborne; and that he neuer conſented to Peace or Treaty in his owne judgement, but had promiſed ſincerely according to his engagement, as far as he durſt, and, that ſo much his continuall Letters witneſſed for him; promiſing, that he would cauſe a Conſultation to anſwer theſe aduices, and that he would not agree to any concluſion without the ſatisfaction of the Prince, and all others that were I friends to the Port, and the reſtitution of the oppreſſed liberty. Which ſolemnly handled in a full Counſell, Orders were diſpatched away as the finall reſolution of that State, to leaue the power of making Peace, or breaking the Treaty, to the judgement of Gabor and the Baſſa of Buda, wholly and without reſtriction.

to

What effects this would worke was ſomewhat vncertaine; but ſuch appeared the inclination of thoſe into whoſe hands the Treaty was now referred, that there was a ſtrong opinion, the Emperour of Germany ſhould faile of the ſecurity expected: Eſpecially becauſe the ouertures of peace which the Perſian made by his Embaſſador arriued at the Port, together with their neceſſity, had raiſed ſome ſhew of inclination to hearken to accomodation in thoſe parts. But it came aduiſed from the Treaty, That the Commiſſioners being met the ſecond K time, the Imperials inſiſted vpon high termes, demanding a ratification of the old Peace of Zitwa, then expired, without any addition or diminution; and by vertue thereof, reſtitution of Vatz, ſtollen during that time: declaring they had no authority to proceed to any new negotiation. To which the Turks replied, That ſo much ceremony needed not, to appoint a ſolemne meeting to confirme that which two Letters onely from their Princes might haue done: That that Truce being run out, was no longer in vigor nor in being. If they would treat a new Peace, that they were ready; but to expect any reſtitution, or reuiuing of the old, it was in vaine, and their meeting fruitleſſe. And the Germanes as ſtiffely preſſing their own propoſitions, the Conference was for a while interrupted, and a current rumour ſpread, The Conuention was diſſolued. But Morteſa Baſſa diſcouering by diſcourſe, That the Imperials L ſtood vpon ſo peremptory points, as ſuppoſing that all the forces were drawne into Aſia, and that the Grand Signior could not ſhew an Army on that ſide; ſuddenly gaue order to all the troups that were ready about Buda, and in the frontier to march to Peſth, and to ſhew themſelues in the field. Whereupon the Germans began to mollifie, and were content to renew the Treaty. At a third ſeſſion they reſolued to employ the force of gold, and to win Morteſa by corruption; to whom they preſented from the Emperour ſix thouſand Dollars, with promiſe of a greater reward. This Caſt changed all the Game; and he vndertooke both to diſcouer the deſignes of Bethlem Gabor, and to croſſe him in his Maſters Court.

The Miniſters of the Grand Signior hauing exhibited a ſecond complaint to his Majeſties Embaſſador, for ſome wrongs done vnto his ſubjects in the Gulph of Perſia, he ſent vnto them M this enſuing Command, to obſerue the antient Capitulations.

To

A

To all Gouernors, Admirals, Commanders of Ships, Or other his Maiesties Subiects trading in the Kingdome or Gulfe of Persia.

After our louing commendations:

B WHereas Aly Bassa of Balsara, hath sent his Letters to this high Port by the hands of two of his seruants inhabiting in those parts, by them informing the Grand Signior, That the English Nation trading in the Persian Gulfe, in Ormus, Iasques, Mumbrun, and other parts of the Kingdome of Persia, do make prize and take the Vessels and Frigots of the Subiects of the Grand Signior dwelling in Balsara, Lasha, and the Coasts of Arabia, trading to Meschit, India, Goa, and Calicut; and that they make Slaues of all the passengers, Merchants or other, that they finde vpon the said Vessels, being Subiects of this Empire. Further, That they do vnite themselues with the Persian (now in warre with the Grand Signior) assisting him not onely with munition, but Vessels and Frigots; and that they help and teach the Persians (enemies of this Port) to build Gallies, Galliots, and other Vessels of warre to arme in those seas; prouiding them of Shipwrights and all other necessaries for the fitting of an Armado, therby to inuade or besiege the Port of Balsara, or Lasha, or to make incursions vpon the territories of this
C Empire. Which actions being alleadged to be contrarie to the Capitulations of his most sacred Majesty, and to the publique Peace and Commerce betweene these Kingdoms; I haue been called before the Chimacham, Deputie to the great Vizier, to make answer to these Obiections, and to prouide some timely remedie, before those proceedings should giue further occasion of discontent. To which accusations, I being able, concerning the fact, to say nothing; but that knowing such actions to be vniust and vnlawfull, and contrary to the will of his sacred Maiestie, and your Commissions and Instructions from the Companie and your Principals, for whom you serue: I do hope that herein you haue not offended, nor giuen any iust occasion of lament, vnlesse you haue been thereunto by like acts of hostilitie prouoked. Notwithstanding being vrged by the great Ministers of this Port; and that it will require so much time to informe his Maiestie, and to seeke redresse by so long a course, (to whom neuertheless the Grand Sig-
D nior will write his Letters of complaint, to require Iustice in such case) and for the preuention of future euils of very great importance to the Subiects of his Maiestie (which you may easily conceiue) and for the declaration of his Maiesties sincere and constant purpose to maintaine a good and iust Peace with the Grand Signior and all his Dominions, which I know to be his Maiesties royall will: and that I make no doubt of your obedience to all his Orders and purposes, like good Subiects that must answer your actions at the Tribunall of his High Iustice; I haue thought fit and very requisite to send you this our Declaration, and in the name of his Maiestie to admonish and require you, That you presume not to take or make prize of any of the Vessels or Subiects of the Grand Signior, trading in the Sea whersoeuer; nor to make any spoyle of their goods, or hurt or detaine their persons: nor that you intermeddle in any in-
E uasion or attempt of the King of Persia, to assist him or his Armies against the Subiects or Dominions of the Grand Signior, neither by Sea nor Land, nor by prouiding them of munition, Shipwrights, or other Artsmen, to teach them the vse of gallies, thereby to inuade the Territories or Subiects of this Empire; but that therein you carry your selues neutrally and indifferently, betweene two Princes both in Peace and Amitie with his Maiestie. Wishing you well to consider, the inconuenience which may arise to others, and the damage in time to your selues, by teaching a powerfull Nation to vse their strength in Sea causes, of which they are now vtterly ignorant, and of which practise wee haue a lamentable example in these Seas. And no way doubting, That like good Subiects, you will conforme your actions and proceedings in those Seas to the rules of his Maiestie (for that such is his will and pleasure, In declaration whereof I haue affixed his Royall Seale) yet I am inforced to protest, That the contrarie will giue occasion of much trouble and danger vnto your selues, and in the end losse and damage to your Prin-F cipals.

Giuen in Constantinople the third of September, in the yeare of Grace, 1617.

Halil Baſſa made great Vizier vpon the rout of the army mentioned at Babylon, was ſent to the war in the end of the laſt yeare, being arriued at Dierbecher, reſolued to enter Perſia (notwithſtanding that the King had an Embaſſador at the Port treating of peace) and gaue order to certain Beglerbeghs to make another inuaſion by Van; and did endeauour to draw Abaſſa Baſſa, with his forces ioyned with the Georgians, to do the like on his frontier, who gaue good words, and hopes of due obedience. Whileſt theſe deſignes were in preparation, the Perſian by his General beſieged Achiska, a city of great importance neer Arzirum: Whereupon Halil ſent Diſlenk Baſſa of Natolia, with ſix other Baſſaes, to Abaſſa, to perſuade him preſently to performe his word, and to riſe and vnite his ſtrength with them. With theſe hee ſent three thouſand Ianizaries vnder twelue Captaines, with his owne Letters; who being arriued neere the City, he appointed them to incamp, and ſent them prouiſion for a day or two, till he could put his affaires for his departure in order. Theſe reſting ſecure, in the night he ſet vpon them, and cut them in pieces, ſome few eſcaping to the Port. Diſlenk and another, Muchmet Baſſa, were ſlaine; the Captaines that he tooke aliue, or came to him to treat, he ſent to the Perſian: whereby Achiska being in great diſtreſſe, and vnſuccoured, was preſently ſurrendred to the Enemy. This newes being brought to the great Vizier, the next morning hee roſe with all his whole army, laying aſide all deſigne againſt Perſia, and marched right to Arzirum; vowing to puniſh the Rebell, or there to end his life: who was ſtrong, fortified, victualled, prouided, and reſolute.

The Perſian beſiegeth Achiska

Notwithſtanding all the colours, proteſtations, and perturbations of the Prince of Tranſyluania, That hee would finde occaſion and quarrell to diſſolue the treaty of Comaran, or that he would ſeparate himſelfe from the Turks; yet at laſt hee ſent his Embaſſadour Francis Microferentz to the Grand Signior, about the later end of October, to acquaint him that the peace was concluded. And within a few dayes after, the Internuntio of the Emperor arriued with a branch of Oliues at the Port: And this Embaſſador and two Agents of Gabor went to the Chimacham with a Letter from their Maſter, vnder the Seale, of great ſecrecie; of freſh aduice, That the King of Denmarke was vtterly broken and fled into certaine Iſlands, all his Countrey, and Germany proſtrate at the mercy of the Emperour (which newes the Imperials had formerly ſpread) counſelling the Chimacham to make an end of their peace with the Emperor, and to diſpatch and to accept of any conditions, and to ſend the Internuntio away with ſpeed and content; leſt the Auſtrians puffed vp with thoſe victories, ſhould take the aduantage of their delay, and preſent them worſe termes, or refuſe it abſolutely. Whereupon the Miniſters of the Port reſolued eaſily to peace; changing their former Ænigmaticall letters, and hudled vp a haſty concluſion. They added further, That the Princes of Germany treated a Pacification, which was like alſo to take effect; and either way, that the Emperor would be at liberty to make war vpon him. Whether they feigned the firſt part, to accelerate the ratification; or feared the later, and that their Maſter ſhould therein deſeruedly be left out, was hard to iudge; but they only by this office (which the Turke did beleeue was ſincere) merited of the Emperor the conſummation of what was done; and thereupon they Both made their atonement with the Emperor according to their ſeuerall Capitulations.

Bethlem Gabor certifieth the Port, of peace betweene him and the Emperor.

What was the ſecret cauſe and reaſon of this ſudden alteration, (Gabor hauing made all demonſtration, that he would continue the war; hauing proceeded euen to threats and proteſts againſt the Miniſters of the Port; and being irritated anew after the concluſion of his owne Treaty, by the complaints and practiſes of the Emperors Agents, to bring him into diſgrace or ruine; ſo that hee could repoſe no truſt in an enemy newly reconciled, and ſo often prouoked) did breed much inquiſition, and many doubted ſome great myſterie, either of his reuolt wholly to the Imperiall part, or that he had ſome other high deſigne in Poland. But thoſe who were leſſe ſpeculatiue and curious, and looked only vpon euident matter, concluded, That the King of Denmarke being indeed diſtreſſed by Walſtein, who vpon the priuat accord of Gabor, was let looſe, and was become triumphant in Germany; and finding himſelf betrayed and forſaken by Morteſa Baſſa, and that he could no longer diſguiſe his owne ends, which were, To oblige the Emperour to him for the Peace if it were made; and to blinde the Turks, to conuert their force and authoritie to better his conditions in the Peace; and that hee foreſaw ſo much renitencie and inconſtancie in them to proſecute the warre, the vigor whereof depended vpon contingencies and the ſucceſſe of the Viſier in Aſia; that he reſolued to

preuent

A preuent being preuented, and discouered. For certainly if he had not roundly shut vp the occasion, by being the first that seemed to merit of both parts, by reconciling the difficultie hee himselfe had raised, he had bin stript naked, and left in the state of the Constable Count of S. Pol, between Lewis the 11 of France, and the Duke of Burgondie. This only was obserued by all, That whatsoeuer the ends of Gabor and Mortesa were while they were vnited in counsel, they did suffer the grand Signior to know no more, than conduced to their own ends; & that they had practised power to change the resolutions of the Port, with euery wind of rumor they pleased to obtrude: And that if Gabor had bin countenanced and nourished in his hopes, to wear the crown of Hungarie (which was the scope of all his intentions) that he had credit and wit enough to haue moulded the Turks (who saw the affairs of Christendom only thorow
B the glasse of his relations) to his own designes; and that hee would continue the War at his pleasure, and they at whose costs it had bin made, should haue bin the least and last, to know the internal motiue. For so it often happens, That great Princes and States haue bin involued in troubles, and shut vp with peaces, vnder the specious name of the publique good, by the passions, designes, or ambitions of their Allyes or Ministers, the causes and pretexts being seldom rightly distinguished.

It hath bin formerly intimated, That Gabor had secretly treated apart; and now the general peace being concluded, the Articles themselues will most cleerly discouer, either to what streits the Prince was driuen, or what were his intentions: the order of time giuing place to that of Story, we haue chosen this period to publish them.

C

Articles of Peace concluded between the Emperor of Germany, Ferdinand, and Bethlem Gabor Prince of Transylvania, in the moneth of December, 1626.

D

THe Prince of Transylvania doth promise by the faith of a Christian, neuer to moue arms, or vse any hostility against the Maiesty of the Emperour, or the House of Austria, or their Successors; much lesse to enter into their dominions with an army: Not to aid his Enemies, nor to keep correspondence with them: Not to plot any innovation in the kingdom of Hungary, or other Christian Countries; neither to stirre vp and prouoke the Turkes or Tartars, or others to inuade them: Not to entertain nor assist in any euill Counsell against his Maiesty, nor to giue ear to the requests and desires of his Enemies; but rather to reueale all
E their conspiracies and wickednesses which shall be made known vnto him, and by all means to demonstrate and shew a sincere minde, truly desirous of Peace, and solicitous of the Common good.

That the Prince shall instantly depart with his whole army out of the territories & cities of the Emperor; and that he shall restore as well all goods belonging to the Imperiall Treasure, as those of his faithfull subiects.

That he shall remoue from him the Rebel Mansfelt, and all other his followers and Adherents desirous to inuade the dominions of the Emperor. And that he shall not aid any stranger whatsoeuer, who at his instance hath entred into the territories of his Maiesty with Count
F Mansfelt; to whom letters of publique safety shall be giuen, that they may returne by twenty or thirty in a troup; with condition, That in no place of their retreit they shall ioyne with the enemies of the Emperor.

IV. That seeing it is fit for the establishing of the Peace, that the Inhabitants of countries and cities belonging to the Prince, by the consent of the Emperor should remain during his life, in obedience and fidelitie to him; and that those inhabitants should do homage to the Emperour (sauing their corporall oath to the Prince) to keep inviolate these articles: That they should haue leaue by Letters of full authority and power granted them by the Prince, in their first assemblies and conuentions to make such oath of Homage. G

V. That at the same time of the performing of the Homage and Oath, besides the Oath before the last War, they shall take a new oath, according to the agreement betweene the Prince and the Commissioners of the Emperor.

VI. The Prince shall procure, That all places vpon the confines which were taken by the Turkes in the last war, shall be restored, and that all Captiues on both sides shall be set at liberty: and that the Prince shall procure the freedom of all such the Emperours subiects as shall bee in the Turkish captiuitie. H

VII. That all the subiects of the Emperour, lately incited and drawn to the seruice of the Prince, shall be free from their oath; and if the Prince haue any of their letters of obligation in his hands, that he shall restore them: And that these conditions confirmed, all other things formerly treated, shall remain in their former state and vigor.

VIII. That if any other difficulties arise, they shall be accommodated with fidelitie and quietnesse, by Commissioners on both parts. And that all those who in the last commotion haue serued the Prince, shall be absolued, according to the treaty and agreement at Vienna. I

IX. That all the inhabitants of counties and cities which haue serued the Prince, shall be absolued; only those excepted who haue voluntarily taken vp arms against the Emperor, for whom he shall only intercide: excusing alwaies priuat men which haue done priuat wrongs, for they shall according to law and custom, seek their restitution by Ciuile Action.

X. That all other Articles of peace concluded at Nichilsburg and Vienna, shall remain in their former vigor and force; except vpon the behalfe of the Emperor, the paiment of thirty thousand Dollars to the Prince, and the care of the confines granted vnto him. And that all goods of the Emperors Clergy possessed by the Prince, shall be restored, from the year 1619, till this present day: Except the Abbies of Replana, belonging to the Seminarie of Strigonium; for which the Prince shall pay to the Emperor yearly fiue hundred florens. K

At the arriuall of the Messenger sent from the commissioners of the Emperor, to the Port, with the news of the conclusion of the Treaty, and the ratification on the part of Cæsar, he presented this letter. L

The Emperors Letter to the grand Signior, a little before the ratification of the Peace.

FEerdinand the second, by the grace of God Emperor of Germanie, &c. We giue notice hereby to your Maiesty, That by the diligence and wisdome of our Commissioners on both parts, all controuersies which haue hertofore hapned, are wel accommodated, and all injuries and hostilities for the future preuented. Now for the better and more exact obseruance of this our said Treaty, we haue sent vnto your Maiesty our Internuntio Stephano Baloco, M

Captain

A Captain of Tata, to giue you notice of the agreement betweene our said Commissioners, and to present you with the Capitulations, seuerally signed and sealed by them. Which wee pray your Maiesty to accept word for word; and hauing signed them with your Imperiall hand, that you will send them back vnto vs with all expedition: Not doubting but your Maiesty out of you benignitie and greatnesse, will obserue and keep the same, as we vpon our part do promise euer to do.

Giuen in Prague the 21 of Zilhege (or September) in the yeare of the B Messiah 1627.

Ferdinando:

Count Colalto Counsellor.

Sberinger Secretary.

C

Articles of peace agreed vpon between Ferdinand Emperor of Germany, and the grand Signior Sultan Morat, in Comaran, in the moneth of September, 1627.

D I Sultan Morat, King of Kings, &c. To thee Ferdinand, honored King of the Romans, Almaines, Bohemians, Hungars, Croats, Austrians, Emperor of Germany, and most glorious Prince amongst Christians: whose last daies be euer happy.

BY vertue of our Imperiall Commission granted to Mortesa Bassa our magnificent Vizier, vpon the frontiers of Buda; to the Beglerbegh of Agria, Mehemet; to the Mufti of Buda, Issa; to the Sanzack of Strigonium, Achmet; to the Bey of Sonluc, Muharem; to the Aga of Assapi, Ghian; and to Michael Todolaghi Embassador of Bethlem Gabor, on our behalfe: And the illustrous Palatine of Hungary, and the Chancellour Stephano and others, on the part of the Emperor. Which Commissioners being met in the field of Sona, and E hauing found the peaces which had formerly bin concluded at Zitwa, Vienna, Comar, and Chiarman, to be disturbed by diuers insolencies and outrages don vpon the subiects of both parties. Wherupon the said Commissioners in the aforesaid place did treat and conclude a good peace for the space of twenty fiue years, in the current year of our great Prophet Mahomet Mustapha the Messenger of God, 1037, and of the Venerable Christ 1627, as appeareth by a sealed Capitulation containing eleuen Articles. And you also desiring and accepting the good peace for so long time, hauing sent the sacred Capitulation to our happy Port, by your esteemed and honored amongst Christians, Stephano Baloco, Captaine of Tata; desiring in your Letter,
F that it may be obserued word for word. And although we haue declared heretofore vpon our Imperial part, That we would haue made other Capitulations; yet since it hath euer bin our regal custome, affectionatly to correspond with the intentions of those great princes that professe amitie, amity, deuotion, and friendſhip to our high Port (by the immenſe fauour of God, the ſtay and refuge of great Lords and Princes;) We declare and demonſtrate our ſingular greatneſſe and magnificence, and approue ſufficiently, and hold lawfull, the confirmation of the Peace for the ſpace of twenty fiue yeares, according to the ſuid Letter, beginning from the yeare 1627. Wherupon our high Order is giuen out in writing, for ratifying and confirming of theſe our new Imperiall Capitulations. G

Thus much is the Preface, according to the ſtile of that Court: That which followeth is the Capitulation, as it was accepted and ſent by the grand Signior; tranſlated out of the Turkiſh word for word, without any alteration. H

THat ſeeing the Peace eſtabliſhed formerly at Zitwa, Vienna, Comar, and Chiarman, hath remained in the ſame ſtate, and in the ſame articles, without any alteration, it ſhal not be violated by any new occaſion of contention.

That the difference of Vatz, whereof is made mention at the preſent, ſhall reſt in the ſame ſtate that the Commiſſioners on both ſides ſhall agree.

That the new Forts built vpon the confines of Croatia, contrary to the Peace, ſhall be demoliſhed. To which purpoſe our ſaid Deputy Mehemet, and our Viſier Morteſa Baſſa, ſhall meet vpon the frontiers of Buda with your Deputies, at the time appointed by the Treaty, and there vpon the places on both ſides ſhall cauſe to be demoliſhed the Forts built contrary to the Peace: wherin if they find any impediment, they ſhall chuſe able and valiant men to performe and execute the ſaid ſeruice. I

That after the approbation of this happy Peace, your great Embaſſadour ſhall come to Comar; and ours ſhall repaire with our Imperiall Letters to Strigonium: and there one of them aduiſing the other, yours ſhall ſet forward to our happy Port, and ours ſhall aduance to you. For ſo it is agreed by our Imperiall Order, both carrying with them the new Imperiall Capitulations. K

That all complaints of Villages ſubiect to both parts, ſhall bee layd aſide, and no violences, taxes, or contribution, contrary to our former Conuention, ſhall be exacted. And all Forts built in the common confines ſhall be raſed. And reciprocally it ſhall be made knowne, according to the antient Treaty, what great men doe dwell amongſt our Tributaries. And for the execution of the ſixteenth and ſeuenteenth Articles of the Peace of Zitwa, the tenth of Vienna, and the fourth of Comar and Chiarman (for ſuch was then the agreement) two Capigi Baſſa's of our high Port ſhall be deputed and diſpeeded, the one to this ſide, and the other to that ſide of the Danuby. And vpon your part you ſhall ſend two ſuch qualified perſons to the ſame places: who being met together with the deputies of Morteſa Baſſa and the Palatine of Hungary ſhall rectifie all diſorders, and ſee that good juſtice be done on both parties: for ſo it is our moſt high pleaſure. L

That the Slaues which haue been taken during this our Treaty, ſhall be freed and ſet at libertie without any ranſome: and thoſe who were taken before the ſaid Treaty ſhall be exchanged and redeemed, according to their qualities and eſtates; by the interpoſition of Morteſa Baſſa and the Palatine of Hungary deputed for that purpoſe. M

For the good of poor people on both ſides, the Commiſſioners haue thought it fit to conclude this renued peace for 25 years, from 1627. Wherunto we haue giuen our Imperial aſſent.

That

A That all Merchants, and other our ſubiects on both parts, ſhall haue ſafe paſſage and conduct through both our Dominions: and we haue giuen command to our Baſſa's, Beglerbegs, Generalls, Beghes, and Captaines, vpon our confines, to apprehend, bring into juſtice, and puniſh all ſuch as ſhall any way diſturbe or moleſt them contrary to the peace. As likewiſe the Palatine of Hungary and other your Miniſters ſhall doe on your part, if they finde any ſuch offendors. VIII.

That our Beglerbeghs, Sanzacks, Captains, and Gouernors; and your Generals, Commaunders, and Captaines, ſhall vpon occaſion employ all ſuch perſons as are louers of the peace and common good. IX.

B That there ſhall be no damage or hurt done to any of our ſubiects in any of your Kingdomes or Dominions, neither by ſea nor land: as there ſhall none be done to yours in our Dominions. X.

That all by-paſt wrongs, enmities, and vnkindeneſſes on both parts ſhall be forgotten and layed aſleepe: and that this happy Peace ſhal be ſincerely and firmely continued and kept inviolate. XI.

C Vpon condition that the Emperor performe and obſerue all the aforeſaid Articles, and that there follow no action from any Miniſters, contrary to the ſaid Peace; We promiſe and ſwear by God our Creator, who made the whole world of nothing; and by the honor which we bear to our moſt high Prophet Mahomet Muſtapha, That there ſhall not bee done during the whole term of the ſaid Peace, the leaſt hurt or damage to the Subiects, Countries, Kingdomes, Caſtles, or Forts of the ſaid Emperor, by any of our Miniſters or Armies, nor to any Chriſtian ſlaues ſubiect to our happy Port.

D I haue choſen the Capitulations as they were ſigned by the grand Signior, which though the Articles are very generall, and matters of greateſt moment either referred, or not fully eſtabliſhed; yet being therſore aduantagious for the Turk, who would not deſcend into particular definition, becauſe by the vertue of former treaties, all places ſurpriſed ought to bee reſtored, and depredations ſatisfied, he would neither break, nor yet oblige himſelf to reparation: and indeed the difficulties were inſuperable in reſpect of the Turkiſh Law; for no place can be ſurrendred to the Chriſtian, where a Moſche hath been erected; which was the caſe of Vatz: And the Emperor could not conſent to abandon his claime with charitie and honour, grounded on the articles of Zitwa. So that both ſides were contented to bee appeaſed, rather than righted for the time, and both did thinke that they had the aduantage: The Emperor, In preſuming his title; the Turke, In not declaring. So the one part accepting the ſignature of E the other, without diſpute, the bodies of the Treaties were very different, if not contrary: yet ſo deſirous they were of peace, that they did wittingly ouerſee one the arts of the other; and in effect there was no firm peace eſtabliſhed, but that either ſide might finde iuſt matter, and ground it on the Capitulation it ſelfe, when occaſion ſhall inuite them to breake. Therfore I obſerue, That it is not the letter but the minde that makes a true peace: and I am perſuaded, That the minds of theſe Princes, how ſoeuer neceſſitie hath reſtrained them, are ſo diſcrepant, that the firſt opportunitie wil diſcouer them in their own colours and nature. And this ſort of concluſion was moſt fit for Gabor (not to haue matters ſoundly examined and healed) who was principally ſafe by an il intelligence, and maintaining of jealouſie and ſubiect of new diſcord between thoſe Empires.

F Halil Baſſa General of the Army in Aſia, whom we left furiouſly marching to be reuenged of the Rebel, was forced to riſe from the ſiege of Arzirum; and retyring, Abaſſa followed him 7 days, and cut off all his rear, and took his treaſure, cannon, and baggage, to the great diſcouragement of the Turkiſh ſtate. The army afterward fel into mutiny, and ſought to ſtone their General,

General. Whereupon he wrot to the grand Signior, That there was no hope of obedience, G vnleſſe the reuerence of his perſon did reuiue it. Yet he reſted at Tocat, and the ſoldiers diſbanded, and returned naked to the Port, as from an ouerthrow: and it was threatned, that thoſe which did ſtay with the Vizier, would bring him to Conſtantinople perforce; ſo that in the next Spring, much trouble, if not a great deſolation was preſaged. Yet it was reſolued to proſecute the Warre: for though the renitencie of the ſoldier, and many other impediments perſuaded againſt it, yet not to haue moued at all, was thought too plain a diſcouery of their owne infirmitie, and would too much encourage the Enemy, eſpecially Abaſſa Baſſa, who had practiſed both the Tartars, Poles, and Coſſackes. Whereupon Huſſeruph Baſſa a Vizier, and late Aga of the Ianizaries, was choſen Conductor of the Militia, and ſent ouer the water to Aſia ſide with all prouiſion. Much new Ordnance was caſt, which the grand Signior H went in perſon to ſee in the Founders office. And from thence to the Arſenall, to giue order for the gallies. And it was concluded, That the new Generall ſhould march directly to Diarbecher, to oppoſe the Perſian, and there remaine as Baſſa of the prouince, with one diuiſion of the Army. But ſecretly he was made great Vizier, and the Seale appointed to bee giuen him when he ſhould be vpon the way. This was done partly to ſaue charges, becauſe to that great degree appertained great expence in ſetting out; and partly for reſpect of Halil Baſſa in Tocat, that he might not ſeeme to be diſplaced in diſgrace, but that he ſhould ſurrender to the other, and retyre to the Port, ſalvo Honore. And when Huſſeruph ſhould be declared prime Vizier, he had order alſo to change his wayes, but whither, was not divulged. Howſoeuer it was iudged they could not attempt much that year, but only make ſhew to keep the field, and the I reputation of an army.

1628. About the fift of April Huſſruph Baſſa was declared Vizier; who intended to march directly towards Babylon, for of Abaſſa they had enough the laſt year; who had writ a letter to the grand Signior, That he was his ſeruant and ſlaue, & would hold the prouince for him: but if he ſought to force more, plainly that he would deliuer the poſſeſſion to the Perſian, againſt whom as the great Enemy, if they would proſecute the war, that he would doe all ſeruice hee could with his ſafety. And this was accepted as a full ſubmiſſion.

Whilſt the grand Signior was thus buſied to ſettle the affaires of Aſia, and to reduce Abaſſa Baſſa to obedience; the Tartar Han was openly declared a Rebel, and Enemy to the Turkiſh Empire: and his brother Shachin Gheray hauing exacted a tribute of the Princes of Bugdania and Wallachia, had receiued an ouerthrow of Cante-Emir a Tartar, his Æmulous, but obedient to the grand Signior. Whereupon it was ſuddenly reſolued to take Ghian Gheray (formerly depoſed) out of the Rhodes, and to ſend the Captaine Baſſa with the whole Armado to eſtabliſh him Prince, and to diſplace the other. So that for that year the Mediterran was like to be free, and the Turkiſh Empire ingaged in ſo many troubles, that euerie thing ſeemed to worke toward their ſubuerſion. But great bodies haue ſtrong luctations, and die not with one fit, or by one blow; and ſuch was the miſerie and iniquitie of the times, that while Chriſtian princes contended for ambitious and enuious, rather than iuſt quarels; that L none of them had leiſure to help to puſh down that enemy, who tottered by his own weight; nor to vindicate the Chriſtian Honour; nor the Holy Land, oppreſſed and poſſeſſed by a Tyrant, that onely ſubſiſted by their diſſentions: and I feare, the loſſe of the opportunitie hath loſt the Grace that gaue it; and that a common repentance will requite a common ſinne and folly.

Hauing drawn our Hiſtorie for matters concerning the Tempotal eſtate, and the revolutions therin, vnto a period, of our own knowledge or practiſe, it will not be impertinent nor vnprofitable, to make ſome relation of the Greek Church, and the affaires therof, which ſuffered many perturbations and aſſaults during theſe times; as if one influence had diſpoſed all things to vniuerſall trouble: but the cauſes were far differing. There are yet remaining vnder M the Patriark of Conſtantinople 111 Metropolitans and Biſhops, who liue with freedome of conſcience and Religion vnder the grand Signior, and gouerne the Chriſtian Flocke vnder their ſeuerall Iuriſdictions. Who haue their antient Churches, with ſome competent

reuenue

A reuenue in their owne poſſeſſion, teaching, preaching, and adminiſtring of the holy Sacraments according to their owne Rites, without any moleſtation for matters of Religion. The preſent Patriarch is called Cyrillus, formerly gouerning the See of Alexandria, a reuerend and learned man, who hath deſired to reforme many errors, and to enlighten much of the blindeneſſe of his Church; inſenſibly preuailing, for want of Lectures, Schooles, and Books, and by the mixture of Barbariſme. His reuenue, (though very good) and that of his Biſhops, not ariſing wholly out of viſible lands and rents, but by ſecret contribution, and other duties; and the ſimplicity of their life and habit, without ſhew or pompe, giuing no occaſion formerly to the Turks, to expect any profit by vexing them, as is vſually practiſed vpon other lay Chriſtians, they liued in great peace and tranquility; vntill of late yeares the Church of Rome, ho-
B ping either by the pouerty of the one, and the greatneſſe of the other, to force the Greeks to a ſubmiſſion, or perhaps, enuious of their quiet, to weary them by trouble, or to ſubuert them. To this end a Greeke Colledge was by the laſt Gregory erected in Rome, to breed vp the Youth of that Nation; where they had liberty of all their owne Rites, only acknowledging the ſupremacy of the Pope, which they muſt do, or not be admitted: and that ground being layd, for point of doctrine it matters not; there is enough gained to make him that had ſworne obedience, to accept of all the reſt. By this foundation the Pope hoped to breed Proſelites enow in time to poſſeſſe all the Biſhoprickes, and to ſubdue the whole Church. For theſe Students returned admired men for their education and knowledge, and wanted not meanes to promoue their preferment; which was a great aduantage ouer the ignorant
C breeding and diſcipline of the meere Greeke. But by the foreſight and wiſedome of Cyrillus this plot taking little effect, as it did irritate the Pope and Cardinals againſt his perſon, ſo it did incite them to ſeeke other more powerfull meanes of corruption, or to ruine him. And both were put in practiſe. To this end a Congregation was erected to take care of the Eaſterne Church, and to direct the practiſes vpon it; whereof a principall Cardinall was made Protector: and many Conſiſtories were held, by which way to reduce the Greeke Church to obedience, or to root out all thoſe that oppoſed it. It was reſolued to make titular Biſhops of almoſt all the Sees (eſpecially in the Iſlands) where any Greeke Biſhop had reſidence; ſo that there were many Paſtors without a flocke. But theſe Emiſſaries being diſcouered to be ſupplanters and diſturbers of the poor Church, were alſo reſiſted, and ſome caſt
D into priſon; and ſome aſhamed of their empty honour, voluntarily returned. But all theſe deuiſes failing, they fell at laſt vpon the round and moſt aſſured way of force, to worke their ends by the Embaſſadors of Chriſtian princes of the Romiſh Religion reſiding at Conſtantinople; and the moſt potent, of bribery and corruption: making vſe of the impotency of the Turkiſh Miniſters, who they knew would ſell Mahomet himſelfe for gold: Flectere ſi nequeo ſuperos Acheronta mouebo. From this reſolution did all the danger and miſchiefe ſpring: and certainely the zeale of the Romiſh Church is cloathed with ſo much honour and ſolicitouſnes, that in that only it prouoketh enuy. But whether they haue in this purſuit and cauſe proceeded with the rules of Chriſtian charity, in that place, among Falſe-Beleeuers, where euery ſcandall did concern the honour of Chriſt himſelf, or not; I leaue to the iudgement of E euery ingenious man. And becauſe this Part, of the quarrels betweene the Roman and Greeke Church, though acted in ſeuerell yeres, hath beene related entirely by a ſincere Pen, in a Letter directed to a noble Senator of Venice, whereby the paſſages will be more cleere and continuous, than if they had beene mingled and interrupted with other affaires; I haue rather choſen mine owne eaſe and the Readers profit, by tranſlating that Letter, to ſerue it in all at once, than by peeces and fragments. The occaſion whereof ariſing (as I am informed) from the variety of reports and Printed pamphlets, of the laſt Act concerning the banriſhment of the Ieſuits, and a rumor ſpread, that they were reſtored: the truth whereof it ſeemes that Senator did deſire to know, and therefore prouoked ſome Friends to ſatisfie him. And ſo without other prejudice, I referre the Reader to the Text it ſelfe following.

G

The Copy of a Letter written to a Senator of Venice, concerning the contentions betweene the Roman and Greeke Churches in Constantinople.

My Lord,

H YOur Letter hath laied vpon me a charge, that (if I were able to performe) is so full of enuy, and subject to diuers censures, according to the preparations of the hearers of a matter of that nature, that I would haue chosen to haue obeyed you in any other way, rather than in that of a Relator. For I perceiue by you, some prejudice is already gone out, and hath taken possession of a part of the World, harder to remoue than to teach a new heresie. But hoping that you seeke the satisfaction of your owne curiosity, and that you purpose not to controuert, I will not refuse, against my owne reason, and little leisure, to returne you assurance, how far you haue power ouer them and me.

I IT is now ten moneths since this conflict between the Greeke Church, and the Iesuits here fell out, but not the first time they haue been in trouble, imprisonment and oblegation. They were settled in Galata by the Grand Signiors License, vnder the French protection, about twenty fiue yeares since; in which time they had gotten a good Seat, builded much, gathered together a faire Library, and won greatly vpon the weaker Sect, and age, women and children. I speake of the Greeks; for with the Romanists they had least credit, who adhered to their antient Orders of S. Francis and Dominicke; and were affraid that this new Society would be too busie, and cast them into danger of their old priuiledges: for the Turks are plaine, and yet rash, and easily apprehend euery innouation.

The pretence of this Colledge was, To teach children for nothing, or charity, Grammer, the Arts and Tongues. And there being no open Schoole in those parts, and few bookes for want of Printing, the Greekes (who loue learning best, when it is best cheape) were content K their children should gleane tares in any field, to saue their purses: and their wiues were won by eloquence and affability, to open their sins to them, who had more witty penances than Greekish shrift and fasting, which did decay their beauty, and deject their countenances. But the wiser sort, especially the Patriarch Cyrillus, and his Bishops, discouered Anguem in herba; and did foresee, That by this seeming benefit, the Youth of their Nation might be corrupted (Seruabit odorem testa diu) and their owne bosomes tempted by the Daughters of Euc: And they likewise did feare, That vpon this foundation might be nourished Proselites to Rome, that in time would vndermine the whole Church. And therefore did as modestly as they could (to preuent an open dissention) seeke to withdraw both, from this bait of seducement. Hinc illæ lachrimæ: For when the Iesuits did discouer they were discouered, L they began to practise that by force, which they had long designed in the darke. The first open warre brake out in February 1622; when these Fathers (protected by the French Embassador) attempted to depose the Patriarch, and to place another Greeke in his Chayre, who had secretly submitted to the Pope, and promised to render new obedience to the See of Rome.

Whereupon Cyrillus consulted his friends, how to auoyd their enuy. He resolued to proceed with mildenesse and charity; and first to deale with the seduced Bishop, as one of his owne Flocke: and the Sunday following hee preached and published the Counsels held against him, and the danger of his Church; not naming the Iesuits, otherwise than by admonition, to beware of certaine fiery Organs and Instruments, against whom he should be enforced to proceed with more seuerity, if they desisted not. And then being assisted with foure M Archbishops, and the Clergy present, he excommunicated that Greeke joyned with his enemies: hoping by this gentle Exhortation to the one, and Example on the other, to obtaine the blessing of Peace, recommended by Christ to his Church. The pretence of this quarrel

from

A from Rome and preſent diſdaine, was publiſhed by the French Party, to haue root, becauſe that the Patriarch kept company with Lutherans and Heretiques, and therefore muſt needs ſauour of the ſame Leauen. This modeſt courſe of the Patriarch did but exaſperate; for the Ieſuits hauing a Viſier fit for them, in Aprill following, by ſubornation of others, did accuſe Cyrillus of a practiſe to betray an Iſland in the * Arches, to the Florentines; and by the promiſe of twenty thouſand Dollars for the eſtabliſhment of the excommunicated Biſhop, they preuailed to haue the Patriarch apprehended, depoſed, and ſent priſoner to Rhodes, where he ſuffered many miſeries and outrages, and their Friend to be placed in his Seat. But the Greeke Church, though they durſt not oppoſe the preſent fury, yet they would neither acknowledge Paſtorem qui non intrauit per Portam, nor reſort to the Cathedrall, nor contribute B any mony to pay the fine due to the Grand Signior vpon remoue, vpon which the French relyed, for though they had promiſe from Rome of aid, yet was it not leuied. Whereby finding themſelues in a ſtreight, they made meanes to a ſilly Archbiſhop of Adrianople, who was rich, to take the charge; the other willingly reſigning vnto him: who accepted the offer, aduanced part of the Symony, and leuied the reſt by force of Turkiſh Commands vpon the poore Greeks; and ſo he was in appearance fully, if not Canonically ſeated. Their purpoſe was not long to ſuffer this man to continue, but only to hold the See full, vntill ſupply came from the Pope, and then to depoſe him, and place one fitted for their deſignes. By this mutation they hoped to recouer all the Greekes to the Catholique Cauſe, and Spaine. And in theſe changes the Patriarchat was robbed of moſt of the antient Manuſcripts, and other Or-
C naments of the Church.

In September following, Cyrillus by helpe of friends, and force of money, was reſtored to liberty, and returned to Conſtantinople. Where being arriued, all the Greekes flocked to him: Which the Archbiſhop of Adrianople obſeruing, and knowing himſelfe an Intruder, (the true Patriarch neither reſigning, nor being Canonically depriued) ſecretly and voluntarily came and ſubmitted, and offered to ſurrender the charge to him. But Cyrillus not daring to accept it, vntill meanes were made to the State, or that he were recalled by a Synod, was content the Church ſhould be vacant, to ſee what would of it ſelfe emerge. The French Embaſſador hearing of this ſudden defection from him, by the counſell of his Ieſuits fetched their Archbiſhop into his houſe, and encouraged him to reſume his place; promiſing him
D protection from the Pope, from the King his Maſter, and to ſpend forty thouſand Dollars for his ſuſtentation. And thus, partly by faire words abuſing the impotency, and partly by force compelling him, they won the weake man to yeeld: and then the French Embaſſador ſent his Interpreters and Ianizaries to re-ſeat him in the Cathedrall, and in Galata proclaimed him Patriarch, and threatened all thoſe that would not obey and acknowledge him. An inſolence full of proportion to the deſigne, to maintain an ill cauſe by worſe meanes.

But the Clergy and people knowing the vnlawfulneſſe of this intruſion, and the vndue conſecration, and foreſeeing the ruine to come, if ſo pernitious example ſhould preuaile, did ſtill adhere to their old Paſtor. Which the new better weighing in his owne retiredneſſe, than in the French Houſe, where his ambion was fomented; and fearing that if Cyrillus ſhould recoE uer his juſt right by the ſame way he had done his liberty, ſome greater diſgrace or puniſhment might fall vpon him; without further conſulting his high Protector, in the night quitted the See, and came to his Patriarch and caſt himſelfe into his mercy, asking abſolution; and vtterly renouncing French, Spaniſh, or Romane Factions, freely reſigned. Herewith Cyrillus encouraged, by the ſtrength of money and friends was againe with the Letters of the Grand Signior reſtored, in deſpight of the Enemy, who now found himſelfe ouermatched. But this ſtriſe did coſt the Greeks threeſcore thouſand Dollars, taken at Intereſt, almoſt to the deſtruction of the Church, eſpecially to haue diſcouered to the Turks a way to extort great ſums by changes, from them, who formerly were eſteemed poore Monks: which will neuer be forgotten, and will finally ruine the See. This was the effect of pretended zeale to F Religion, and a Romiſh charity.

Now all men hoped for Peace; but there brake out another ſtorme. In Ianuary following, a Coloyre was ſent from Rome, called Archemadrita, and was receiued by the French into his houſe; who brought a promiſe from the Congregation de propaganda Fide, That notwithſtanding the firſt faile for want of money, that now twenty thouſand Dollars ſhould be ready and returned thither, if they could make ſure the depoſition of Cyrillus, and place an G obedient Sonne in his roome. To this end it was promiſed, that ten thouſand Dollars giuen by a widow in France to charitable vſes, ſhould by the Popes authorty be conuerted. And thus new practiſes and new accuſations were aduanced; but being timely diſcouered, they were preuented: yet againe it coſt the poore Church a round ſumme of mony.

* Marcellogenum.

The next yeare the perſecution was calmed in outward appearance, but more ſubtile and cloſe machinations ſupplied it: for it was then reſolued in Rome, to corrupt Cyrillus, and ſo to winne him: then to diſcredit him with his friends, and to lay him open and vndo him. To this purpoſe were ſent from Rome about February 1624, two ſeuerall Agents, one called Padre Berillus, to ingage the Patriarch in a practiſe with the Coſſackes, which was treaſon: and a Ieſuited Greeke bred in the Colledge at Rome, named Cannachi Roſſi. To whom were gi- H uen inſtructions vnder the hand and ſeale of Cardinall Bandini, to make ouerture to Cyrillus of reconciliation, with great conditionall promiſes of ſupplies and this following Commiſſion. But Sir, becauſe you will beſt judge of the ſcope of this negotiation, by the copy it ſelfe, the originall vnder the ſeale, remaining with the Engliſh Embaſſador, and from whence this hatred tooke root; I, that haue onely taken vpon me the part of a Relator, haue made it here a Parentheſis, and leaue your judgement to collect your owne ſence.

I

Inſtruttioni per Canacchio Roſſi.

1 NOn vi eſſendo lettere ne del Patriarcha, ne de' Prelati non le ſi può riſpondere ſe non in voce, conformandoſi alla relatione del meſſo.

2 La chieſa Romana ha ſempre deſiderata l'unione & pace con tutte le Chieſe, ſpetialmente con l'Orientali, tanto per altri tempi bene merita della Chieſa Catolica, e non ſolo ne' tempi antichi mà vltimamente ancôra, nel tempo de Patriarcha Hieremia ha fato quel che ha potuto per aiutarla, e reunriſela, non perdonando in ciò ne à ſpeſe, ne à fa- K tiche, Anzi per queſto ſteſſo fine hà fondato, & mantiene il Collegio de giouani Greci con li ſui renditi, acciò quella natione ſi nobile & ingegnioſa ritorni a fiorire in pietà & in lettere, come altre volte ha fiorito.

3 Nel particolar propoſto del Patriarcha preſente: Noſtro Seigniore (tanto grand fautore, & Padre della Natione Greca in particolare, come voi ſteſſo ſapete, & hauete veduto cogli occhi) volentaria mente ſpenderebbe ogni gran ſumma di denaro per riunir ſi nobile membro alla Chieſa, & aiutare in particolare quella ſedia dalla quale dipende il rimamente del'Oriente; ma ſuppoſte le relationi, che di Conſtantinopoli ſono venute, & vengono conti- L noùamente del Patriarcha, non vede in che maniera ſi poſſa fare.

4 Di lui ſiamo auiſati, che nega l'Jnuocatione de Santi, il colto & veneratione dell'Jmagini, & Reliquie de Sante, la Preſenza reale de Chriſto nell'Euchariſtia, la Liberta del Arbitrio, l'Autorita de ſacri Concilij, le Traditioni, l'Autorità de Santi Padri, la neceſsità della Confeſsione auriculare, & lo ſpiegare in eſſa li Peccati della mente, & che in loco di lei haueſſe introdotto vna certa Confeſsione fatta a Dio publicamente con parole generali, che manda li giouani a ſtudiare nell'Vniuerſità d'Inghilterra, & di Germania, doue s'in-ſegna queſta dottrina; per poter poi per mezzo di loro diſſeminarla per il' Leuante. Che a M queſto fine ha fatto ſtampare, & egli ſteſſo diſſemina, dandoli alli Veſcoui, come Chateche-ſi, pieni di queſti, & ſimili errori condannatigià, tanti anni fa, non ſolo dalla fede Apoſtoli-ca & dal Concilio Tridentino, ma dalli ſuoi Predeceſſori anchora, come egli ſteſſo teſtifica

nella

A nella professione della fede lasciata tanti anni fa in mano del Arciuescouo di Leopoli riconoscendo questa, & simili altre dottrine per heresie & dicendo che per questo era impossibile, che la chiesa Greca s'unisse mai con li Protestanti; che a contemplatione delli Ambasciatori Hugonotti (con li quali liberamente communicá) ha tolto via il Sinodico, & ha lasciato di far riuerenza alla santissima Eucharistia.

5 Che desiderarebbe sua Santita che tutte queste cose fossero false & che lui come Capo de si nobile natione fosse tale quale rechiedono li bisogni presenti, e spirituali, & temporali de'suoi subditi per poter con bona faccia, & conscienza, mettere mano ad auitarlo.

B 6 Che si queste sono calumnie, & le pare di poter far constare a sua Santita la sua innocenza, ne faccia Capace l'Ambasciatore di Francia, ó dell'Imperatore, che alla relatione loro per essere persone di tanta autorita & virta, si prestera ogni fede, & per mezzo loro mandi a N. S. la confessione della sua fede, nella quale accetti il Concilio Fiorentino, & danni li errori de' Caluinisti & Luterani, dannati prima da suoi Antecessori, che non manachera la sede Apostolica d'ogni diuto & fauore per aiutare & rimettere in piedi la Chiesa di Constantinopoli & tutte l'altre dependenti da lei.

7 Che non e per richieder S. Santita ne da lui, ne da gli altri Prelati Greci, altre conditioni, se non quelle che si sono conchiuse & stabilite nel sacro Concilio Fiorentino, per che
C come fin hora ha fatta la Chiesa Greca, condanni & anathematizi le biastemie delli heretici Settentrionali, cioè Luterani, Caliuinisti, & simili.

Roma xxj. Febraro, 1625.

Il Cardinale Bandini.

Locus Sigilli.

D

Translated.

Instructions giuen to Cannachi Rossi.

E 1 HAuing neither brought me Letters from the Patriarch, nor from any other Prelate, we cannot giue an answer other than by word of mouth, conforming to the relation you haue deliuered.

2 The Church of Rome hath alwaies desired an vnion and peace with all other Churches, but especially with those of the East, (who haue heretofore so well merited of the Catholique Church) and not only in antient times, but euen lately in the life of the Patriarch Hieremy, she hath done what she could possible, to assist and vnite the Greeke Church vnto her: not sparing therein either cost or labour: yea, to effect the same, she hath founded, and doth yet maintaine a Colledge of young Greekes with her owne reuenue, to the end that, that noble and ingenious Nation should flourish in godlinesse and learning, as in former ages it hath done.

3 Concerning the proposition of the present Patriarch, our Lord and Master the Pope (a Fauourer
F and Father of the Greeke Nation, as particularly your selfe haue knowne and seene) would disburse a round sum of mony to re-anite so noble a Member to the Church of Rome, and assist in particular that See, vpon which the rest of the Easterne Churches doe depend. But considering the reports which haue been spread, and continually do come from Constantinople, of the Patriarch, we do not see in what manner it can possibly be effected.

4 Con-

4 *Concerning him, we are aduiſed, That he denieth the Inuocation of Saints, the worſhip and veneration of Images and reliques of the Saints, the Reall preſence of Chriſt in the Euchariſt, Free will, the authoritie of Sacred Councels, and Traditions, the authoritie of Holy Fathers, the neceſſitie of Auricular Confeſſion, and in it, the reuealing of ſecret ſinnes: In ſtead of which he hath introduced a publike Confeſſion made to God in generall words. That he ſends young men to ſtudy in the Engliſh and Germane Academies, where this Doctrine is taught and profeſſed: that by their means he may ſpread it in the Leuant. And to this end, that he hath cauſed to be printed, and that he himſelfe hath diſperſed and giuen to ſome Biſhops, certaine Catechiſmes full of this and other like erronious Doctrine, condemned long ago, not only by the Apoſtilique See and the Councell of Trent, but euen of his owne Predeceſſors, as he himſelfe hath teſtified in that Confeſſon of Faith which he left many yeres ſince in the hands of the Archbiſhop of Leopoli, acknowledging this and the like Doctrine for hereſie; and therefore concluding, That it was impoſſible that the Greeke Church ſhould euer vnite it ſelfe with the Proteſtants. And that in contemplation of the Hugonot Embaſſadours (with whom he doth freely conuerſe) he hath taken away the * Sinodicon, and hath laid aſide the reuerenee due to the moſt holy Euchariſt.* G H

* It ſignifieth an Aſſembly: I take it to bee the power of Excommunication. But enquire how it is vſed by the Romiſh Church.

5 His Holineſſe doth deſire, That all theſe reports were falſe, and that he being the head of ſo nobie a Nation, ſhould be ſuch a one as the preſent condition, both in matters ſpirituall and temporall of the flock vnder his Iuriſdiction doth require; that he might with a cheerfull countenance and ſafe conſcience extend his liberalitie and aid vnto him.

6 If theſe ſhal proue calumnies, and that the Patriarch doth think he can make his innocence appeare before his Holineſſe, let him iuſtifie himſelfe to the French or the Emperors Embaſſador: to whoſe relation (being perſons of great vertue and authoritie) credit and faith will be giuen: and by their meanes let him ſend to his Sanctitie the Confeſſion of his Faith, in which he doth accept the Councell of Florence, and condemne the errors of Caluin and Luther, condemned alreadie by his Predeceſſors. And the Apoſtolique See will not be wanting in all fauour and aſſiſtance, to raiſe vp the Church of Conſtantinople, and all others on it depending. I

7 That his Holineſſe will not require either of him or the other Prelates of Greece, any conditions but ſuch as were concluded and eſtabliſhed in the ſacred Florentine Councell; ſo that (according as the Grecian Church hath alway done) hee condemne and anathematiſe the blaſphemie of the Septentrionall Heretiques; to ſay, of Caluiniſts, Lutherans, and ſuch like.

Rome, the xxj. of February, 1625. K

Cardinall Bandini.

The place of his Seale.

This Channachi Roſſi arriuing with his Commiſſion at Conſtantinople, became an vndertaker of his owne accord, to merit of the Church of Rome, to conuert the Patriarch: who was amaſed at the boldneſſe, and feared both waies; either to anſwer, and ſo to be ingaged in a penwarre; or to be ſilent, and condemned as ſtanding mute. But at laſt hee reſolued, that ſeeing the Cardinall vouchſafed not to write directly to him, to take no notice; but to ſee how patience would deliuer him out of this ſnare. But the Ieſuits content with no temper but preſent ſubſcription, ſtirred vp ſome Biſhops now made of their faction, anew to depoſe him; and there was offered twenty thouſand Dollars to eſtabliſh one of them. This tempeſt forced Cyrillus to retyre and hide, vntill his Friends had reuealed to the State the myſterie of this forked practiſe, and opened the treacherie of both of theſe Miniſters, imploied only to introduce a change aduantagious to the Pope, and dangerous to the Grand Signior. Yet ſuch is the cuſtome of this Court, that his peace was againe bought at the expence of ten thouſand Dollars. L M

Once more the Patriarch expected peace and ſecuritie; but the Congregation at Rome fell vpon a new counſell: Firſt, better to fortifie themſelues before they attempted their enemies. And to this end, vpon diuers pretences, it was reſolued to ſend to Conſtantinople, an

Anti-

A Anti-Patriarch from the Pope, qualified with absolute authority, but vnder the title of Suffraganeo Apostolico, and with him a Treasurer for the Church (for Saint Peter durst not trust the French Embassador with money) yet with these to ioyne him, for his zeale and countenance, and the Iesuits for their Counsell. To this Triumuirate was giuen all power to plant, displant, to sow, and root out, and finally to do all things that might aduance the Romane cause. For their better strength & abetting, it was also decreed to create new Romish Bishops in Smyrna, Naxia, and many Islands (a shift learned at Trent) to oppose the Greeks, and by aduantage of learning to supplant them. Of this mission there was great expectation.

About December, 1626, the Suffraganeo arriued at Naxia, whither the French embassador sent the Romane Bishop of that place his Chaplein, and two Iesuits to receiue him: who con-
B ducted him as far as Scio, where he was accepted with great Ceremonie. But beginning his office too roughly and too soon (for he should not haue declared himselfe vntill he had crept to Constantinople vnder the French wings, and had bin setled by degrees) many took offence at this noueltie. The Lay-men feared some prejudice in their right of Patronage ouer the Churches: the wisest foresaw the danger of Christian libertie, and that their practises in this innouation would inuolue all others into a suspition of some conspiracie: and if any scandall should from hence arise, the Turks would not distinguish betweene the guilty and the innocent, beeing in one Liuerie by the name of Frankes. Yea, the Friers could not endure a power so neere aboue them, but refused him lodging in their Conuents. The Greeke Clergy began euidently to discouer the subuersion of their authority, and antient Faith. Only the Ieso-
C its triumphed, and thought the prize now their owne. But desperation forced some, and charity others to defend their possessions. Thus encouraged by strong friends to oppose this fatall blow, all the plot was opened to the Vizier, and their design quietly and without scandal frustrated. The Suffraganeo retired without noise; their new Bishops made by subreptitious Licences were imprisoned; their Letters of Priuiledge taken from them, to the extreme anguish and disgrace of their Protector. This last repulse made them furious; but Infestis animis deerat occasio.

In Iune, 1627, here arriued vpon an English ship one Nicodemo Mataxa, a Coloyte borne in Cephalonia: he brought with him the Greek stamp made at his expence, and diuers bookes printed in London, as he pretended, for the benefit of his Nation, drowned almost in inuinci-
D ble ignorance, especially for want of means to learn and study. As soon as he came ashore, and had spoken with the Patriarch, and made knowne his zeale to that Church, hee was from him by the Archbishop of Corinth recommended to the English Embassador, to assist this pious intention, to passe these heauy commodities through the Custome-house without suspition. In which though he foresaw some trouble, yet he willingly vndertook the protection. But first consulting with Cyrillus of Constantinople, and Gelasius Patriarch of Alexandria, (then for his priuate affairs at the Port) and with the Resident of the vnited Prouinces, he was of opinion, That in a matter of that nature, which was in it selfe honest and iustifiable, it was requisite to proceed openly, and with leaue: which hauing obtained of the Vizier, tooke vp, and brought both stampe and Bookes to his house. Now supposing all the difficultie had been ouercome,
E and neuer suspecting any scandall from Christians, for that which hee thought did not, nor ought not to offend them, hee gaue countenance and helpe to Mataxa to put his industry in order.

The Patriarch desired the Stamp might worke in the English House; but the Embassador for priuate respects would not consent, but offered to take a House, and to giue both it and them his protection. Which he did, not far from his owne, and neerer to the French Embassadors: who pretending the vnion of the two Churches, there appeared no feare of him, that he should enuy a Christian worke, or do any act that might separate them for euer. As soone as Mataxa was setled, and his print in order, the French and the Iesuits tooke offence at it, as set vp to publish Bookes against the Church of Rome, or at least to take away their trade of tea-
F ching, and seducing children by his printing of catechisms, Magna est Diana Ephesiorum. First, they attempted to draw him into their gouernment, inuiting him to their Monasterie, intimating, That adhering to them would take off some ill suspition raised on him for hauing studied in England. When he could not be woon by flatteries, they reported him to be an Heretique and a Lutheran, because he took sanctuarie from the English. Against the stamp they excepted, at the Armes of the King of Great Britain, which they said was scandalous, and being in the Frontispeece of euery Booke, was malum augurium, and did foreshew, that within they must sauor of heresie: for, What could be expected from an hereticall Fountain, or from the Man that conuersed with Heretiques. G

excepted

Melsius, Pat. Alex.

These obloquies little moued the English Embassador, who knew their malice proceeded from the matter of one Author that wrote against the Supremacie. But the rage extended so far, that it was reuealed to Mataxa, That he should be murthered in his bed, or in the street, as he passed in the night from the English to his owne house. Whereupon at his great instance the Embassador was content for his person to giue him lodging. So in the day he continued his worke, and at euening retyred vnder protection.

As yet they found no occasion to worke their purpose: but the Patriarch sent a little Treatise to the Presse, made by himself (being an exposition of the Faith, and Tenets of the Greek church, without any mention of controuersie, or censuring the opinions of others; principally to satisfie the world in those calumnies spred, That he had introduced new Doctrines, to the scandall of his own Flocke) which he had resolued to dedicate to the King of England; but now hauing opportunitie to print at home, prepared an Epistle fit for it. This prouoked the Iesuites, who not able to endure any application of the East Church to that Monarch, could no longer containe themselues, but conspired with their Embassadors to ouerthrow both the Author, Worke, and Workman: and hauing gotten another Booke written by the Patriarch, printed in England, and brought by Mataxa against the Iews, they found some passages which did modestly condemne the opinions of the Turks. When they had this supposed aduantage, they practised with a Buffone, but a crafty knaue, who had credit with the Vizier, and had bin Vayuod of Galata, to inform him, That this Mataxa was a Captain sent hither to raise sedition, and that vnder the colour of printing Bookes for children, hee dispersed others against the Alcaron; That they were brought from England secretly, and that the English Embassador protected him and his designes: That these Bookes were written by the Patriarch, to stir the Greeks, and to draw them into defection; and many of them sent to the Cossacks, to prouoke them to vnite vpon the occasion of the Grand Signiors expedition into Asia, that was then rumored. H I

These accusations were capitall, as they concerned Cyrillus and Mataxa; and sufficient to impaire the credit of the English Embassador, if not to ruine him in the affairs for which he did reside. K

The Vizier without further consideration resolued to assault the house of Mataxa, and surprise him in the act of Sin, of printing against their Law; and gaue order to a Captaine and companie of Ianizaries to execute it. Which was out of course, to set at liberty vnruly soldiers, that seldome containe themselues within their Order, or can be appeased without booty. The exploit should haue bin done on Friday the fourth of Ianuarie: but the French Embassador hearing the English had inuited the Patriarch, & Venetian Baylo, to some entertainment on the day of Epiphanie, he stayd it two daies, as he said, to make sauce to their Feast. On that day at high noone, a hundred and fifty Ianizaries armed beset Mataxa's house, and guarded all the passages to the English: all was full of fears and rumor, and no man knew the cause. In this tumult, the English Embassadors Secretarie and Mataxa returning from Church at Galata, passed by; and some of the Coloyres seruants that were apprehended, shewed their Master, to free themselues: but he being in a hat, and the Secretarie answering he was one of his Lords Followers, he escaped safely, and got into the English house. The Captaine missing him the Principall, bound all his seruants, brake open his chests, and carried all away, stamp, books, papers, plate, mony, cloths, and whatsoeuer was portable, as the goods of a traitor, to the value of seuen thousand Dollars. And returning thus full, a French * Drogaman told them, That the Offendor was fled to the English Embassador: but the Turk, that had more charity, answered, he had no order to follow him thither. L

* Interpreter.

Now the English Embassador thought himselfe interessed; yet that day not to seeme to bee moued, made as merry as such rumours would beare; That hee had practised against the State; others, That the Stampe was to counterfeit the Grand Signiors Letters; others, To make false money; and other such as Ignorance and Accusation beget among the Multitude. M

The

A The next day the books were examined by two Greek Renegado's, and the Folio by the Iesuits noted where the blasphemy should be: the place was interpreted before the Vizier and some *Mulla's, but there was nothing found that by law could touch the life of the author or printer; yet the Patriark was conuented, and many crimes obiected to him without proof or probabilitie. * Churchmen and Lawyers.

There yet rested some diffidence in the Vizier, at the report, That Mataxa was a man of war, and held correspondence with the Cossacks, and that he should liue vnder the English protection; which was nourished by shewing the Armes of England on the frontis-piece of that book. But when the Mufti had giuen sentence, That euery doctrine against their opinions was not blasphemy, nor criminal; and that the grand Signior giuing leaue to Christians to
B teach their own law, and to preach matters contrary to Mahometism, it could not be thought but it was daily don in their Churches, for which they were not punishable; so they could not be culpable of treason for writing the same, so long as they did not scandal their Law, but only oppose it. The main obiection being thus fallen, it was more easie to refell the accessaries grounded vpon it.

The third day the English Embassadour shewed himselfe openly, and went to the Vizier, and professed, That he had receiued that Mataxa into his house, to keepe him from the fury; but that he should be ready to maintain his innocencie. He put him in mind, That this businesse and man accused he himselfe knew, that hee was a Gentleman of Coloyre, a subiect of the Senat, and presented vnto him by the Venice Baylo; and that he had giuen leaue to land
C and vse the stamp, and that nothing was done without his communication and consent: That therefore he much admired that he would be so rash to suspect his friends, and so scandalously to assault their houses, to spoile their goods at the instigation of those whom hee had cause to know for enemies; and to be so far transported at the winde of an occasion, without acquainting him, to send souldiors that might haue done mischiefe to bee too late repented.

When the Visier had called to minde the man, and all circumstances, and remembred whom the matter concerned (the English Embassador, with whom he had confidence) hee was ashamed of his precipitation, and protested he had no doubt of him, nor purpose to affront him: That hee wondered at the impudence of those that had so grossely abused him; and
D concluded with this profession (as the English Embassador for his credit did publish) That if against his will he had done him wrong, when he should see all the goods of Mataxa restored, their honour repaired, and those that had procured this scandall, fallen into the snare they had made for others, and exemplarily punished, then hee desired to be acquitted of injustice, and to be esteemed still his true friend. By this office the Patriarch was wholly cleared, and restored to the good opinion of the Vizier, and afterward of the Mufti; to whom the English went immediatly, to instruct him of the malice of the one part, and innocencie of the other.

Within few daies, the Vizier sent home to the Embassadors house all the stamp and print, (except some few letters lost in the tumult) and all the books and papers that were seised, in E publique satisfaction, attended with Officers and souldiers: in which he shewed so much respect and care to recouer euery particular, that there was not much missing of any value. Amongst those books, there was printed Bishop Iewels Apologie translated into Greeke, a Catechisme and Confession of the Patriarch, and some new Treatises at the Presse; but one, and one only Iewel was missed, and can neuer be recouered: There was presented to the English Embassador a Manuscript that had with great veneration and care bin preserued in the library of a Bishop, and was averred and beleeued the only copy in the world, of the Lectures and controuersies against the Bishop and Church of Rome; read cathedrally by the most famous and learned Photius Patriarch of Constantinople. This booke the Embassador highly esteeming as the raritie of the East, had deliuered to Mataxa, to be transcribed by his Deacons
F that attended the correction of the print; that hauing double copies, so great a riches might not perish in one bottom. But this too much care to saue it, lost it: for beeing halfe finished, and in the assault of the Ianizaries amongst other surprised, neither the original nor any leafe could euer be recouered. Such was the diligence of the setters and ouerseers of this conspi-racie. The Embaſſador mooued the Viſier, who vſed all his power: the Patriarch publiſhed G an Excommunication for many moneths, if perchance any Greek had bought it of the ſouldiers, to return it: but all in vain. Wherby it was reaſonably concluded, That this book was a principal envy of the Ieſuits, who feared the publication; and that their miniſters beeing Spies and in part Actors of the aſſault, had ſo eſpeciall an eye vpon it, that it fel into their vnredeemable power, and ſo by them either ſent to Purgatorie or the Vatican.

The next day after the fury, Cannachi Roſſi the Agent of Cardinall Bandini, went to the Patriarch to braue him in aduerſitie: who mildly asking him, How long they would tempt his patience by wicked conſpiracies? and, What had driuen them to this extremitie to ſeek his life? he replied, That they were ſcandaliſed at him for two things; for fauouring Mataxa, and ſuffering him to preach, being an heretike, and liuing in the houſe of an heretique. Secondly, H
That he had begun to print a book ful of hereſies, dedicated to the King of England the head of Heretiques. But if he would retract the one and renounce the other, the French Embaſſador ſhould procure his accommodation.

With the next Poſt after this trouble, there came from Rome a copy of a Conſiſtory held in the houſe of Cardinal Bandini, entituled for Conſtantinople; wherin this practiſe againſt the Patriark was debated and reſolued: the cauſe grounded vpon his conuerſation with Calviniſts, and ſending of ſtudents to be brought vp in their Schooles; that therfore he ſhould be accuſed of contriuing an inſurrection againſt the Ottoman empire. And the execution of this plot commended to the Embaſſadors of the Potentates reſiding in this Court, fauorers of the Catholique cauſe. Which Councel being compared with the laſt practiſe, it did euidently I appear, that one was dependant on the other. Which the Patriarch wel conſidering, and finding that he had no more ſafety in patience, reſolued to vſe his friends, to ſend them away that would not let him liue in peace. And the Engliſh Embaſſador taking deep offence at the inſolence of Cannachi Roſſi, vſed to the name of his king; it is thought that they, together with the help of a good friend no leſſe powerful than either of them, vnited to baniſh the Ieſuites; and to ſhew their Protector, that they had no leſſe power to offend, becauſe they had leſſe malice and deſire to do it.

For the way they wrought (to omit other obſeruable circumſtances) it is true, the Engliſh Embaſſador was angry, and declared; and had good credit, and was ſeen often abroad: but hee was not alone, for the Patriark (that is a wiſe man) knew he ſtriued not now for victory, but for K life. The Ieſuits guilty of deſeruing a iuſt reuenge, retyred all to the French Embaſſador his houſe, where they lay hid about fourteen daies: but in that time hearing no noiſe, and hoping that all was ſecure, and that the Patriark and Engliſh Embaſſador trauelled onely in their defence, and to recouer their loſſes, they returned to their houſe triumphant; when ſuddenly we heard that a meſſenger came to them, to let them know that ſome Greeke women were come to make confeſſion, and ſtayed for them in their garden. To whom two of them came downe, and were preſently areſted by the Viziers officers, who then entred their lodgings and apprehended another. This was done without any noiſe or ſcandall, and the actors had ſuch care, That their Church was ſealed, all their altars and plate ſaued, and whatſoeuer appertained to them, inviolated: only their perſons and Library, per Legem Talionis, were caried to the Viſiers L houſe, where they were kept in irons about a moneth, and their bookes likewiſe viſited; in which were found much more aduantage to haue drawne them within compaſſe of the Turkiſh law, than their diſcouerie on the Patriark. And the ſame inſtant Cannachi Roſſi was alſo taken, and his papers in his lodging, and caried to bear them ſad company. The French Embaſſador deſired audience, but could not obtain it: he viſited euery great mans port, eſpecially the Mufti, where he had no other acceptance, than admonition to carry himſelf with more temper, and to meddle with the buſines for which he was imploied. Hee vſed all meanes, but could no where preuail for relief: he threatned a breach of amitie, and to ſurrender the Capitulations, and interdicted the Traffique; but the Turkes were prouided with anſwers, That they would inform his maſter the French King, and giue him ſatisfaction. In concluſion, the M Ieſuites weary, and in feare of death (for there was crime enough) the Engliſh Embaſſador, whom they ſuppoſed their Enemy, to auoid ſcandall and the effuſion of Chriſtian bloud, interpoſed for them, and obtained their liues; and after many Conſultations, it was agreed to

baniſh

A baniſh their Order out of all the grand Signiors dominions, to deliuer back their books; and this grace at the interceſſion of him, of whom they had not merited that courteſie. That it might clearly appear there was no purpoſe of robbery, nor to take the goods that were innocent, and in the French Kings protection. In proſecution of which Councel there were commands ſent to Scio, Smyrna, Aleppo, and Cyprus, to diſcharge thoſe places from the practiſe of this fraternitie; who had a deſign to get the Sepulchre at Ieruſalem into their hands, and to ſupplant the Franciſcans (which controuerſie is wel known at Rome, and would make a long Section in this narration:) and finally they were put into a Barque, with good gard, in their irons, and ſent to Scio; with order to ſhip them and their fellowes vpon the next veſſell that went for Chriſtendome, and in the mean time to keep them priſoners. When they came to
B the caſtles on the Helleſpont, the French Embaſſadour had procured, that the Caſtellane would not ſuffer them to paſſe, for want of the Captain Baſſa's Letter; and ſo they were returned to Conſtantinople, but ſtill kept in their Gaol: and ſuddenly it was rumored, they were revoked, and ſhould be re-eſtabliſhed. But when the Vizier heard his authoritie was contemned, and this trick put vpon him, he was ſo much inraged, that again their liues were in danger. But the preſent fury appeaſed euen by their ſuppoſed Enemie, they were returned, baniſhed firſt to Scio, and ſo ſhipt for Italy. I muſt confeſſe that I haue not obſerued any one ſorry but the French Embaſſador, ſcarce his houſhold; all other Catholiques, eſpecially the Orders of Friers, and the Franciſcans of Ieruſalem, were glad they were eaſed of their Dominion, and the fears of their deſignes. And I haue heard it reported, That themſelues did ingeC niouſly confeſſe an obligation to the Engliſh Embaſſadour; and in their relations to Rome laid all the fault vpon the precipitation of their Protector.

There was another command ſent to Smyrna, to apprehend a couple that had crept in vnder the French Conſuls protection: who at firſt hid themſelues; but being aduiſed to giue place, and a means opened to them to eſcape, fled ſecretly; there beeing no other purpoſe in their perſecutors, but to be rid of ſuch negotiating fathers.

And thus Sr you haue a true relation of what I haue obſerued, & for your ſatisfaction collected of thoſe that had better means to know particulars than I, who am buſie enough if I do myne own buſineſſe. There reſts only to tell you, That during the Engliſh Embaſſadors ſtay (which was about fiue months after) the French ſate down and ſtirred not. But conſidering
D that his credit in France depended much from Rome, and from an opinion of his zeale to the Catholique cauſe, and his power to ſupport it; hauing made the Colledge of Cardinals beleeue that he would ſubdue the Greek Church (wherein wiſe men thought hee did diſſeruice both to the Cauſe and his Maſter: for the ready way to vndoe the Catholiques, was to innouate any thing in their antient maner of life, gouernment, and priuiledges, which they enjoyed with their conſciences freely) he thought himſelfe vtterly loſt, if he did not do ſomewhat to recouer his reputation there, by a ſeeming reſtitution of the Ieſuites. Vpon which deliberation, hauing yet two of them refuged to his houſe, and hid there a month after the departure of the Engliſh embaſſador; he petitioned the grand Signior, That his Chapleins might haue leaue to bury his Dead, and do other offices of their Function. Which being granted, it was E publiſhed, That he had reſtored the Ieſuites.

And becauſe you are ſo curious to know all, and in what eſtate that reſtitution now ſtands, I conclude with the true copy of the command obtained, and leaue it to your iudgment, whether the breach be made vp ſo whole as is ſuppoſed. For euery plaiſter is not a ſound cure.

G

The Grand Signiors Command, directed to Assan Bassa Captaine of the Sea; and to the Caddee of Galata.

* Petition.

*AT the sight of this our high and Imperial Signature, you shal take notice, That the French Embassador by an * Arz giuen to our happy Port, hath made vs to vnderstand, That (their Law and Religion being not like to that of other Christians which liue in our wel gouerned Empire) they with our Imperiall Licence did procure to come from the kingdome of France certain* Religious men called Jesuites, who for the space of twenty fiue years haue had their abode in the Church of Saint Benet appointed to them in Galata; and lately by finister information made against them, were sent away to their owne countrey: from which time the said Church being shut vp, and hauing no other Religious who could assist in the necessary Offices of men ready to die, or dead; haue therfore petitioned for our noble Command. To which end (excepting alway the aboue named * Religious, sent away, and others of other Nations) that he may place in the said Church such persons of Religious French, and French Religion, which are found at this present here, elect, and appointed by him, without molestation or injury to be done vnto them by any whomsoeuer. Therefore in conformitie to his request, this my Command is obtained; and I doe command, That at the sight of this my Imperiall Order it be obeyed and executed: That because, as is before pretended, the French haue not those * Religious who can performe the Functions necessary for the Dead (excepting alway those Religious already banished, and all others comming from the countries of our Enemies) that they may put into the said Church such persons for Religious men, as are naturall Frenchmen, and of their owne Nation, which at present are found in Galata, and that shall by them bee appointed: and that so long as they commit no faults in their charge, and that they practise nothing contrary to our Imperiall will, that they be of no man molested.

* In the original it signifies an Order.

* or Orders.

H I K

Vpon the obtaining of this Command, the two Iesuits in the French house were solemnly and with great ostentation caried to S. Benetto's Church, and placed there as the Embassadors Chapleins; and an opinion spread, of an absolute re-establishment of their Order, and so it was divulged in Rome. But it was not supposed by the French, that this Copy should bee seene by any but himselfe; and then the Act would haue appeared as truth. But some Criticall and captious men haue made many Quære's vpon this matter: First they haue asked, What then is the French Religion, if it differ from all other Christians in the Grand Signiors Dominions; when in Galata there were fiue Romish Churches and Monasteries, with French Capuchins, Dominicans, Franciscans, and others? Secondly they haue asked, What Ceremonies are necessarie to a Frenchman, in danger of death, or after it, that none of these Orders can assist or performe? Again they aske, Who are restored by this priuiledge, if the Religiosi supra nominati, and Strangers are excepted? What is meant by French Religion, and the same Religion? To which it is answered first, That this new French Religion is onely Iesuitical, not approued by the most Christian King, improoued by the Sorbons, and reproued by all the louers of the libertie of the Gallican Church. To the second, That they dying must be absolued only by a Iesuite, or buried in his habit, or shut out of Paradice. Again they answer, They finde none restored but a new French Religion, and such men as were personally then in Galata; that is, two Chapleins only to assist in case of death, but no Order of Iesuits. And they finally conclude, That the French Embassador hath more dishonoured his nation, to restraine their Religion to the Iesuites; and the whole Clergy, to renounce all other Orders;

L M

A Orders; that he hath done benefit to the Ieſuites, except he had need of ſome colour in ſtead of truth.

Sir, I will not comment at all; to obey you I haue gon thus far extra provinciam meam: And now I return home to my ſelfe, to aſſure you that I haue been, and will ſo die,

Your true, &c.

Galata ix. Novembr. 1628.

B

This Trage-Comedie being ended, and a ſeeming peace returning with the Spring; whilſt the new Vizier marched towards Babylon, to ſettle the affaires of thoſe parts, Sir Thomas Rowe, then his Maieſties Embaſſador reſident at the Port, procured his leaue to return home, and was recalled. By whom the grand Signior writ this inſuing Letter to his Majeſtie of great Britain.

C

The grand Signiors Letter to his Majeſtie of Great Britaine.

TO the moſt glorious amongſt the greateſt Maieſties of the Princes of Jeſus, moſt reuerenced amongſt the people of the Meſſiah, ſole Director of the important affaires of the Nazaren Nation; Lord of the limits of Honour and Power; and Patron of Grace and Authoritie, CHARLES, King of Great Britain and Ireland: To whoſe laſt dayes we wiſh all compleat and true happineſſe.

D

BE it known vnto your Maieſty at the ſight of this Letter, That your Embaſſador Sir Thomas Rowe, reſpected and beloued amongſt Chriſtians, to whom we wiſh a happy end; (being heretofore ſent to reſide as your Embaſſador at our happy Port, to be watchfull ouer all offices of good correſpondence betweene vs, and that all requiſit terms of honor ſhould be fulfilled; and to renew the Mantle of our affection) hath from his firſt arriuall here, vntill this preſent, moſt perfectly attended vpon the charge impoſed vpon him, and in all his actions proceeded with extraordinary diligence and induſtry, for the high honour and great fame of your Maieſty his Soueraign. And now your Maieſty hauing ſent in his place one of the chiefe of your moſt eſteemed, Sir Peter Wyche, to reſide at our Imperiall Port; and that the ſaid Sir Thomas Rowe hath taken reſolution to return to your Maieſty with our Imperiall conſent: We ſend them vnto you with theſe our Imperiall Letters; hoping in the moſt high God, that when he is ſafely arriued with you, out of your abundant and innate clemencie, and your ſingular and ſincere goodneſſe, in reſpect of his good and faithfull ſeruice, that you will ſee him honored and rewarded. And to the end that the great affection and loue which we nouriſh to your Maieſtie, may be daily encreaſed; we deſire you readily to imploy your benigne care in the keeping and obſeruing of this our Imperiall Capitulations, with euery Article therein contained; as we on our part will likewiſe do in all things that are meet to bee done concerning their perfect obſeruation: wherof you ſhall find a good and clear teſtimony by the future effects.

E

F

Giuen at Conſtantinople, 1628.

Though

Though impertinent to the Hiſtory of Turky, yet a conflict hapning betweene the ſhip G which tranſported Sir Thomas Rowe to Italy (returning from Conſtantinople) & the gallies of Malta; I haue thought it would not be an vngrateful concluſion, to obſerue and record the mighty deliuerance of thoſe whom God is pleaſed to keep; by communicating the copy of a relation made of that fight.

On the eleuenth of Auguſt, about ten of the Clocke in the forenoone, the Sampſon beeing becalmed before Malta, the ſea as ſmooth as glaſſe, not a breath of winde, wee diſcouered foure Gallies to rowe from the Towne. They came vp all abreſt, right with the ſtarre-boord quarter of our ſhip; which warned vs to fit our ſailes and our ſelues to fight, not knowing their purpoſe. When they came neere, the Admirall Galley, without ſending boat, or ſpeaking with vs, made a ſhot, which fell ſhort; then rowing neerer, made another which did al- H moſt reach vs. And comming ſtill on, the Vice-Admiral gaue a third, all demy-Cannon, that flew ouer vs between our maſts. Theſe we ſuppoſed they made to try the length of their ordnance, and to lie there for battery; for they ſtopped, and piked halfe their oares. Whereupon wee ſent them a Culverin ſhot, that grazed vnder the Admiralls ſtarre-boord bow; and ſo we began a ſharpe fight betweene twelue and one. The Gallies were full of Cavagliero's and ſouldiers as they could ſtand: They lay on that quarter about three houres, changing ſhot with vs, often hitting one the other. Then Captaine William Rainsborow (who behaued himſelfe with braue courage and temper) finding a breath of winde to giue the ſhip motion; conſidering that he was a great marke on the broad ſide, and the Gallies very narrow, keeping their prowes ſharpe toward him, and that he could beare little vpon them, trimmed his ſailes I before the winde, and brought them to a Sterne fight, where they continued their batterie two houres more; and the Sampſon could then beare vpon them two whole Culverin in her Sterne-Chaſe, and two tranſom Culverins in the Gunne-roome, and two Sakers in the great Cabbin; and by yawing of either ſide both her quarters, and ſome pieces forward on: This gauled them, and they found it hot. Their manner of fight was, when they were all laden, they rowed vp, and brought all the maſts of our Ship together, and then gaue all their guns;
hauing fired, they fell aſterne; and this in order, Alternis vicibus: but yet we reached them.
The Admirall of the Gallies gaue eight Pieces at once, ſo that ſhe appeared all fire: one demy-Cannon of twenty fiue pound bullet, two demy-Culverin, fiue Saker and Minion.
All the reſt were alike armed, and they plyed their Ordnance very hard, and often dangerou- K
ſly. Being aſterne at firſt, they ſhot at the maſts and yards of our ſhip, and maimed them almoſt all in a line; hoping to ſee ſome fall, and then they had layne by vs. But it was ſo calme that the maſts ſtrained not, though they were almoſt ſpoyled. The Gallies kept a man on the end of their after-moſt Oare, to obſerue where their ſhot fel; and ſent boats often off, of which one returned well waſhed. About fiue a clocke they pauſed, and the Admirall ſent to his fleet; whereupon they tooke a reſolution, either to boord, diſmay, or ſinke vs; and came vp on our larboord quarter all abreſt, within piſtoll ſhot, and their ſwords drawne, and Trumpets ſounding; bidding vs Amaine for Malta. The Captaine cauſed one from the poope to waſt them aboord, and anſwered a point of Warre. Then began an hot fight, and too hot for them; for the Sampſon forbare, and gaue them not a ſhot vntil they were very neer, L and almoſt vnder vs, and then poured in two Culverin, and two demy-Culverin, and one Saker with a round ſhot and a caſe, that raked them fore and aft: and they hauing giuen vs all their Gunnes together, began to fall againe aſterne. But wee tacked and ſent them a broad ſide at parting; and ſo they lay and renewed their Sterne batterie vntill Sunne-ſet. What blowes we receiued is in a note following: What harme the Enemie receiued we knew not; only this we ſaw, the Admirals foremaſt was ſhot by boord, his poop caried away into the ſea, one culverin round ſhot ond caſe that fel in the bow, and went out in the quarter thorow the banks of Rowers; and many other that raked them through. The Admiral lay athwart a good ſpace to men ſomwhat, & let men down her ſides in baskets; and neuer came more vp: for that ſhot that brake out her poup, made them all at once take in their flags; which being an vnu- M ſuall thing, we conjectured that their Generall was ſlaine. And ſo they left vs, and hoyſing their ſailes, and rowing, made all haſte into their port, in ſight whereof they fought. The laſt ſhot they made came into the gun-roome of the Sampſon, the force being ſpent, yet hurt three men:

A men: and ſhe hauing a Culverin laden, ſent it to take leaue of them; which raked the Admirall. When they came vp with vs, they did not expect ſuch bullets, but hoped to batter vs to the water out of our ſhot. They left vs at halfe houre paſt ſix a clocke, ſo that the fight laſted ſeuen houres. The Gallies gaue the Sampſon 400 ſhot, and hit her in the hull, maſts, yards, or rigging, with more than a hundred and twenty; and we ſhot fifty ſix whole Culverin, & ſpent in all aboue ten barrels of pouder. Neuer Gallies had ſo much aduantage of a time, nor did ſo brauely, but they were at their own dores. By Gods grace we had but one man a paſſenger ſlain, four hurt, and ſome bruiſed; but our ſhip terribly battered, her maſts, yards, ſailes, and ropes all torn. That night continued with little winde, and the ſea ſmooth, and wee plugged vp our wounds the beſt we could. The next day we were inforced to ſtand out of the way to B Southward of the Iſland Lampadoſa, when we found our danger; and there we lay fiue daies without ſail, to fiſh our maſts and yards, and mend our ſailes, and to make firme our breaches by and vnder water. Which we could not haue don if it had not continued calme; for thoſe demy-cannon bullets of twenty fiue pounds made too great holes, and ſplit all plankes and timbers; and the Carpenter was forced to hang like a Tortoiſe vpon the water, and driue many nailes vnder the ſending of the ſea, waſhing him ouer continually; eight ſhot either with, or within three fingers of the water. So if that night or the next day there had bin any ſea, we had neuer made this Relation, for the pumpes of our ſhip were as well exerciſed as the men, But God helped vs.

A Note

G

A Note of the ſhot and dammage receiued by the Sampſon in fight.

In the Rigging:

FOur main ſhrouds cut by ſeuerall ſhot.
Main Runner. Main Tye.
Main top-Maſt-ſtay. Main top-gallant Halliers.
Main top-gallant braces.
Three Main top-gallant ſhrouds.
Main tack. Main top-ſail Sheats.
Main Buntlines. Fore back ſtay.
One fore ſhroud.
The chain that ſlung the main yards cut all to pieces.
Three parrels of the main yard.

H

Shot in the Sailes.

Miſen top ſail two ſhot. Miſen one.
Main ſail in the Brailes fourteen. Main top ſail thirteen.
Fore ſail nine. Fore top ſail fiue.

I

In the Maſts and Yards, Demy-cannon of twenty fiue poundweight.

The main Maſt ſhot through halfway between the deck and head.
The main Yard cloſe by the parrels.
The Fore Maſt halfway between the deck and head.

K

Demy Culverin.

The Spritſail yard through by the ſlings, and ſpoiled.

Dangerous ſhot through the Hull; being all Demy-cannon of twenty fiue pound the bullet: beſides many Demy-Culverin, Saker, and Minion, that did not or not much damage vs.

L

Demy Cannon.

Three in the Stern cloſe by the water, through the bread room and bread, into ſacks of wooll.
One in the Stern and the gunne room, vnder the tranſome port, hurt three men.
One through the Cuddy.
Two through the great Cabbin killed a Parrat.
One grazed vpon the ſteeredge, and caried away the Bend.
Two by the maine Maſt: one through the Cabbins killed a Iew a paſſenger: the other brake the larboord ruſter, and three timber heads.
One through the forecaſtle into the furnace, hurt two men.

M

One

A One ouer the fore-caſtle killed two ſheep, and caried away a timber head.
On the ſtar-boord ſide nine; whereof one in the quarter, and three forward on by the edge of the water. Fiue between decks, among our men and ordnance.
On the Larboord ſide four all below the deck; wherof two between wind and water, the other two not much aboue: and one between Decks, that ſplit the bits.
One ſhot that crackt the ſheat anchor at the flouk.
One that ſtaued the Ladder in the chaines.

B These eight ſhot between wind & water were all dangerous, they ſtaued on our lower deck two barrels of beef, two of peaſe, a Butt of wine; ſome of the ſhot paſſing through nineteen inches of plank and timber, pierced into bales of Grograms, and caried one into another: two went thorow all the bread and two ſacks of ſtiued wools: They bare in whole planks, ſhooke and ſplit the timbers, and ſtarted the trunnels, and made vs very leaky.

When we ariued at Ligorn, we vnderſtood of eighteen knights of Malta killed in the fight; but after by an Engliſhman that came from thence it was knowne, That the Generall of the Gallies was ſlain, and thirty ſix Knights and Officers, and two hundred ſixty four ſlaues Rowers and Souldiers. Which was too great an exchange for one Iew. But

C ſuch is the reward of arrogance, & ſhal be the protection euer of a good cauſe, and of them that truſt not in the broken reed of Fleſh, but in Almighty God.

A

A briefe Diſcourſe of the greatneſſe of the Turkiſh Empire: As alſo wherein the greateſt ſtrength thereof conſiſteth: And of what power the bordering Princes, as well Mahometans as Chriſtians, are in compariſon of it.

B

By RICHARD KNOLLES.

THe Hiſtory of the Turks (being indeed nothing elſe but the true Record of the wofull ruines of the greater part of the Chriſtian Commonweale) thus as before paſſed through, and at length brought to an end; and their Empire (of all others now vpon earth far the greateſt) as a proud Champion ſtill ſtanding vp as it were in defiance of the whole world: I thought it good for the concluſion of this my Labour, to propoſe vnto the view
C of the zealous Chriſtian, the greatneſſe thereof, and ſo neere as I could, to ſet down the bounds and limits within the which it is (by the goodneſſe of God) as yet contained, together with the ſtrength and power thereof, as alſo in what regard it hath the neighbor princes bordering or confining vpon it; with ſome other particularities tending to the ſame purpoſe. All or the moſt part therof, although it be by the Conſiderat wel to be gathered out of the whole courſe of the hiſtory before going, yet ſhal it more plainly here together in the ful therof appear, than by the long and particular conſideration of the riſing and increaſe therof be perceiued: not much vnlike the ouergrown tree, at the greatneſſe whereof euery man wondereth, no man in the meane time either perceiuing or marking, how by little D and little in tract of time it grew vp to that bignes, as now to ouertop al the reſt of the wood. The Imperial ſeat of this ſo dreadful an empire, is the moſt famous city of Conſtantinople, ſometime the glory of the Greeke Empire, but now the place where Achmat the firſt of that name, and fourteenth of the Othoman Emperors, acknowledging no man like himſelfe, triumpheth ouer many nations; a city fatally founded to command, and by the great Conqueror Tamerlane, of all others thought to be the beſt ſeated for the Empire of the world. In which city (taken from the Turks by Mahomet the ſecond, by the Turks ſyrnamed the Great, and the Greeke Empire by him ſubuerted) as the Othoman Emperours haue euer ſince ſeated themſelues, ſo haue they wonderfully, euen to the aſtoniſhment of the World, out of the ruines of that ſo glorious a State, increaſed both their ſtrength and empire, almoſt altogether fixt euen
E in the ſelfe ſame kingdoms, countries, and regions, as was ſomtimes that; though not as yet (God be thanked) able to attain to the vttermoſt bounds that that empire ſometimes had, eſpecially in Europ, albeit that it hath oftentimes in pride therof moſt mightily ſwoln, and in ſome few places therof ſomwhat alſo exceeded the ſame. Among the reſt of the Othoman emperors, this great Monarch of whom we ſpeak (namely Achmat the firſt, which now reigneth in that moſt ſtately and Imperial city) hath at this preſent vnder his command and Empire, the chiefe and moſt fruitful parts of the three firſt known parts of the world: onely America remaining free from him, not more happy in the rich mines therof, than in that it is ſo far from out of his reach; for in Europ hee hath all the ſea coaſt, from the confines of Epidaurus (the vttermoſt bound of his Empire in Europe Weſtward) vnto the mouth of the riuer Tanais, now called Don, with whatſoeuer lieth betwixt Buda in Hungary, and the Imperial City of Conſtantinople: in which ſpace is comprehended the better part of all Hungary, all Boſna, Servia, Bulgaria, with a great part of Dalmatia, Epirus, Macedonia, Grecia, Peloponeſus, Thracia, the Archipelago, with the rich Iſlands contained therin. In Africa he poſſeſſeth all the ſea coaſt from Velex (or as ſome call it Belis) De Gomera, or more truly to ſay, from the Riuer Muluia (the bounder of the Kingdome of Fez) euen vnto the Arabian Gulfe, or Red-Sea Eaſtward, except ſome few places vpon the riuage of the ſea, holden by the king of Spain; viz. Merſalcabir, Melilla, Oran, and Pennon: and from Alexandria Northward vnto the city of Aſna, called of old Seine, Southward: in which ſpace are contained the famous Kingdomes of Tremizen, Algiers, Tunes, and Ægypt, with diuers other great Cities and Prouinces. In Aſia all is his from the ſtreits of Helleſpontus Weſtward, vnto the great city of Tauris Eaſtward: and from Derbent neer vnto the Caſpian Sea Northward, vnto Adena vpon the Gulfe of Arabia Southward. The greatneſſe of this his Empire may the better be conceiued by the greatneſſe of ſome parts thereof: the Meere of Meotis, which is all at the Turkiſh Emperors command, being in compaſſe a thouſand miles; and the Euxine or Blacke Sea in circuit two thouſand and ſeuen hundred; and the Mediterranean coaſt which is ſubiect vnto him containing in compaſſe about eight thouſand miles. But to ſpeake of his whole territory together; he goeth in his owne dominion from Tauris to Buda, about three thouſand two hundred miles. The like diſtance is from Derbent vnto Adena. From Balſera vpon the Perſian Gulfe vnto Tremiſena in Barbarie, are accounted little leſſe than foure thouſand miles. Hee hath alſo in the Sea the moſt noble Iſlands of Cyprus, Eubœa, Rhodus, Samos, Chios, Lesbos, and others of the Archipelago. In this ſo large and ſpacious an Empire are contained many great and large countries, ſometime moſt famous Kingdomes, abounding with all manner of worldly bleſſings and natures ſtore: For what Kingdome or countrey is more fruitfull than Ægypt, Syria, and a great part of Aſia? What countrey more wealthfull or more plentifull of all good things, than was ſometime Hungarie, Grecia, and Thracia? In which countries he hath alſo many rich and famous Cities, but eſpecially foure, which bee of greateſt wealth and trade; namely Conſtantinople, Caire, Aleppo, and Tauris. Conſtantinople for multitude of people exceedeth all the Cities of Europe; wherein are deemed to be aboue ſeuen hundred thouſand men; which if it be ſo, is almoſt equall to two ſuch Cities as Paris in France. Aleppo is the greateſt City of Syria, and as it were the centre whereunto all the merchandiſe of Aſia repaire. Tauris, of late the Royall ſeat of the Perſian Kings, and one of the greateſt Cities of that Kingdome, from whom it was in this our age taken by Amurath the third, hath in it aboue two hundred thouſand men. Caire amongſt all the Cities of Africa is the chief, leauing all others farre behinde it (although that ſome make the City of Cano equall vnto it in greatneſſe) beeing as it were the ſtore-houſe not of Ægypt onely, and of a great part of Africa, but of India alſo; the riches whereof being brought by the Red Sea to Sues, and from thence vpon Camels to Caire, and ſo downe the riuer Nilus to Alexandria, are thence diſperſed into theſe Weſterne parts: albeit that this rich trade hath of late time been much impaired, and ſo like more to be; the Chriſtians (eſpecially the Portugals) traffiquing into the Eaſt-Indies, and by the vaſt Ocean tranſporting the rich commodities of thoſe Eaſterne Countries into the Weſt, to the great hinderance of the Grand Signior his cuſtomes in Caire.

The bounds of the Turks Empire.

The foure chief cities for trade in the Turks Empire.

The Othoman gouernment in this his ſo great an empire is altogether like the gouernment of the Maſter ouer his ſlaue, and indeed meere tyrannicall: for the great Sultan is ſo abſolute a Lord of all things within the compaſſe of his empire, that all his ſubiects and people, be they neuer ſo great, do call themſelues his ſlaues, and not his ſubiects: neither hath any man power ouer himſelfe, much leſſe is hee Lord of the houſe wherein hee dwelleth, or of the land which hee tilleth, except ſome few families in Conſtantinople, to whom ſome few ſuch things were by way of reward, and vpon eſpeciall fauor giuen by Mahomet the ſecond, at ſuch time as hee won the ſame. Neither is any man in that empire ſo great, or yet ſo far in fauor with the great Sultan, as that he can aſſure himſelfe of his life, much leſſe of his preſent fortune or ſtate, longer than it pleaſeth the Sultan. In which ſo abſolute a ſoueraignty (by any free borne people not to be endured) the tyrant preſerueth himſelfe by two moſt ſpeciall means: firſt, by taking off all armes from his naturall ſubiects; and then by putting the ſame and all things elſe concerning the ſtate and gouernment thereof into the hands of the Apoſtata or Renegate Chriſtians, whom for moſt part, euery third, fourth, or fift yeare (or oftner if his need ſo require) heetaketh in their childehood from their miſerable parents as his tenths or tribute children.

Whereby

A Whereby he gaineth two great commodities: firſt, for that in ſo doing he ſpoyleth the Prouinces, hee moſt feareth, of the floure, ſinues, and ſtrength of the people, choice being ſtill made of the ſtrongeſt youths, and fitteſt for war: then, for that with theſe as with his owne creatures he armeth himſelfe, and by them aſſureth his ſtate; for they in their childehood taken from their parents laps, and deliuered in charge to one or other appointed for that purpoſe, quickly and before they be aware become Mahometans; and ſo no more acknowledging father or mother, depend wholly on the great Sultan; who to make vſe of them, both feeds them and ſoſters them, at whoſe hands onely they looke for all things, and whom alone they thanke for all. Of which fry ſo taken from their Chriſtian parents (the only ſeminarie of his wars) ſome become horſmen, ſome footmen, and ſo in time the greateſt Commanders of B his ſtate and Empire next vnto himſelfe; the naturall Turks in the meane time giuing themſelues wholly vnto the trade of merchandiſe, and other their mechanicall occupations; or elſe to the feeding of cattell, their moſt antient and naturall vocation, not intermedling at all with matters of gouernment or ſtate. So that if vnto theſe his ſouldiers, all of the Chriſtian race, you ioyne alſo his fleet and mony, you haue as it were the whole ſtrength of his Empire: for in theſe foure, his horſemen, his footmen, his fleet and money, eſpecially conſiſteth his great force and power: whereof to ſpeake more particularly, and firſt concerning his money: It is commonly thought, that his ordinary reuenue exceedeth not eight millions of gold: and albeit that it might ſeeme, that he might of ſo large an Empire receiue a far greater reuenue, yet doth hee not, for that both hee and his men of warre (in whoſe power all things are) haue The Turks ordinary reuenues.
C their greateſt and almoſt onely care vpon armes, fitter by nature to waſt and deſtroy countries, than to preſerue and enrich them: inſomuch that for the preſeruation of their armies, and furtherance of their expeditions (euery yeare to do) they moſt grieuouſly ſpoyle euen their own people and Prouinces whereby they paſſe, ſcarce leauing them neceſſaries wherewith to liue: ſo that the ſubiects deſpairing to enioy the fruits of the earth, much leſſe the riches which by their induſtrie and labour they might get vnto themſelues, do now no further endeauour themſelues either to husbandrie or traffique than they needs muſt, yea, than very neceſſity it ſelfe inforceth them. For to what end auaileth it to ſow that another man muſt reape? or to reape that which another man is ready to deuoure? Whereupon it commeth, that in the territories of the Othoman countrey, yea euen in the moſt fruitfull countries
D of Macedonia and Greece are ſeen great forreſts, all euery where waſt, few cities well peopled, and the greateſt part of thoſe countries lying deſolate and deſart: ſo that husbandry (in all well ordered commonweales the Princes greateſt ſtore) decaying, the earth neither yeeldeth her increaſe vnto the painefull husbandman, neither the matter vnto the artificer, neither the artificer wares to furniſh the Merchant with, all together with the plough running into ruine and decay. As for the trade of merchandiſe, it is almoſt all in the hands of the Iewes, or the Chriſtians of Europe, viz. the Raguſians, Venetians, Genowaies, French, or Engliſh; the naturall Turks hauing therein the leaſt to do, holding in that their ſo large an Empire no other famous Cities for trade, more than the foure above named, viz. Conſtantinople, Tauris, Aleppo and Caire: whereunto may be added Caffa and Theſſalonica in Europe; Damaſcus,
E Tripolis, and Aden in Aſia; Alexandria and Algiers in Africke. In our countries here in this Weſt part of Europe, of the abundance of people oftentimes ariſeth dearth; but in many parts of the Turks dominions, for want of men to manure the ground: moſt part of the poore countrey people drawne from their owne dwellings, being inforced with victuals and other neceſſaries to follow their great armies in their long expeditions, of whom ſcarce one of ten euer returne home to their dwellings againe, there by the way periſhing, if not by the enemies ſword, yet by the wants, the intemperateneſſe of the aire, or immoderate paines taking. But to come neerer to our purpoſe, although the great Turks ordinary reuenues bee no greater than is aforeſaid, yet are his extraordinarie eſcheats to be greatly accounted of, eſpecially his confiſcations, forfeitures, fines, amerciaments (which are right many) his tributes, cuſtoms
F tythes and tenths of all preyes taken by ſea or land, with diuers other ſuch like, far exceeding his ſtanding and certaine reuenue: his Baſſaes and other his great Officers like rauening Harpies as it were ſucking out the bloud of his poore ſubiects, and heaping vp ineſtimable treaſures, which for the moſt part fall againe into the Grand Signior his coffers. Ibrahim Vizier Baſſa

Bassa (who liued not long since) is supposed to haue brought with him from Cair to the value of six millions: and Mahomet another of the Viziers was thought to haue had a farre greater sum. His presents also amount vnto a great matter; for no Embassadour can come before him without great gifts; no man is to hope for any commodious office or preferment without mony, no man may with empty hands come to the presence of him so great a Prince, either from the prouince he had the charge of, or from any great expedition hee was sent vpon; neither vnto so great and mighty Prince are trifles presented. The Vayuods of Moldavia, Valachia, and Transylvania, before their late reuolt, by gifts preserued themselues in their principalities, being almost daily changed, especially in Valachia and Moldavia: for those Honors were by the grand Signior still giuen to them that would giue most; who to performe what they had offred, miserably oppressed the people, and brought their prouinces into great pouertie. In brief, an easie thing it is for the great Tyrant to find occasion for him at his pleasure to take away any mans life, together with his wealth, be it neuer so great: so that he canot well be said to lack mony, so long as any of his subiects hath it. Neuertheless the late Persian war so emptied the late couetous Sultan Amurath his coffers, and exhausted his treasures, that all ouer his empire the value of his gold was beyond all credit inhanced, insomuch that a Chequine was twice so much worth as before. Besides that, the mettal wherof his gold and siluer was made, was so embased, that it gaue occasion vnto the Ianizaries to set fire vpon the city of Constantinople, to the great terror not of the vulgar sort only, but of the grand Signior himself also. And in the city of Aleppo only were in the name of the great Sultan 60000 chequines taken vp in prest of the merchants there, which how wel they were repaid we leaue for them to report.

Now albeit that the Turks reuenues be not so great as the largenesse of his Empire and the fruitfulnesse of his countries might seem to afford, all the soile being his own; yet hath hee in his dominion a commoditie of far greater value and vse than are the reuenues themselues; which is the multitude of the Timariots or Pensioners, which are all horsemen, so called of Timaro, that is a stipend which they haue of the great Sultan, viz. the possession of certaine villages and towns, which they hold during their life, and for which they stand bound, for euerie threescore ducats they haue of yearely reuenue, to maintaine one horseman, either with bow and arrowes, or else with targuet and Launce, and that as well in time of peace as war: for the Othoman Emperors take vnto themselues all such lands as they by the sword winne from their enemies, as well Mahometanes as Christians, all which they diuide into Timars, or as wee call them, Commendams, which they giue vnto their souldiers of good desert for tearm of life, vpon condition that they shall (as is aforesaid) according to the proportion thereof, keepe certaine men and horses fit for seruice alwaies ready whensoeuer they shall bee called vpon. Wherein consisteth the greatest policie of the Turke, and the surest mean for the preseruation of their Empire. For if by this meanes the care of mannuring the ground were not committed vnto the souldier, for the profit they hope thereof, but left in the hand of the plaine painfull husbandman, all would in that so warrelike an Empire lie waste and desolate; the Turkes themselues commonly saying, That wheresoeuer the Grand Seigniours horse setteth his foot, there the Grasse wil grow no more; meaning the destruction that their great Armies bring in all places where they come. The institution of these Timariots, and the taking vp of the Azamoglans (for so they call those children which are taken from their Christian parents to be brought vp for Ianizaries) are the two chief pillars of the Turkes Empire, and the strength of their wars; both which seem to be deuised vnto the imitation of the Romans, as are diuers things moe in the Turkish gouernment: for the Romane Emperours vsed their own subiects in the wars, and of them consisted the Prætorian army, which neuer departed from the Emperors side, but were still to gard his person, as doe the Ianizaries the great Turk. And in the Roman empire lands were giuen vnto souldiers of good desert, for them to take the profit of during their liues, in reward of their good seruice and valour, which were called Beneficia, and they which had them, Beneficiarij, or as we term them, Benefices, and beneficed men. Alexander Severus granted such soldiers, heirs that might injoy those lands & commendams, conditionally that they themselues should serue as had their fathers, els not. Constantine the Great also gaue vnto his Captaines that had wel deserued of him, certaine lands

The two chiefe pillars of the Othoman Empire.

for

A for them to liue vpon during the terme of their life. The like fees in France, which they call Feuda, were of Temporaries made perpetuities by theſe their late Kings. Theſe Timariot horſemen in the Turkiſh Empire ſerue to two great and moſt notable purpoſes: wherof the firſt is, That by them the Grand Seigniour, as with a bridle, keepes the reſt of his ſubiects in euery part of his great Empire in awe, ſo that they cannot ſo ſoon mooue, but that they ſhall haue theſe his Timariots as falcons in their neckes; for to that purpoſe they are diſperſed all ouer his dominion and Empire. The other vſe of them (and no leſſe profitable than the former) is, that out of them he is alwaies able to draw into the field an hundred and fifty thouſand horſemen well armed, ready to goe whitherſoeuer hee ſhall commaund them: with all whom he is not at one farthing charge. Which ſo great a power of horſemen cannot conti-
B nually be maintained for leſſe than fourteene millions of duckats yearely. Wherefore it is to bee maruelled, that ſome comparing the Turkes reuenues with the Chriſtians, make no mention of this ſo great a part of the Othoman Emperors wealth and ſtrength, ſeruing him firſt for the ſuppreſſing of all ſuch tumults as might ariſe in his Empire, and then as a moſt principall ſtrength of his continuall Warres, alwayes ready to ſerue him in his greateſt expeditions. The number of theſe Timariot horſemen is now grown very great, taking increaſe together with the Turks Empire. It is reported, That Amurath the third, grandfather vnto Achmat that now reigneth, in his late warres againſt the Perſian, ſubdued ſo much territorie as ſerued him to erect therein forty thouſand Timariots; and appointed at Tauris a new Receit, which was yearely worth vnto him a million of gold. Theſe Timariots are in al accoun-
C ted to bee ſeuen hundred and nineteene thouſand fighting men; of whom 257000 haue their dwelling in Europ, and 462000 in Aſia and Africk.

The number of the Timariots.

Beſides theſe Timariots, the grand Seigniour hath a great number of other horſemen vnto whom he giueth pay, which are his Spahi, Vlufagi, and Carapici of his Court, being indeed the nurſeries and ſeminaries of the great officers and gouernors of his Empire; for from among them are ordinarily choſen the Sanzacks, which afterwards through their good deſerts or the Sultans great fauour, become Viziers, Beglerbegs, and Baſſa's, the chiefe rulers of that ſo mighty a monarchy.

The Spahi, Vlufagi, and Carapici.

He hath alſo ſtil in his army a great multitude of other horſemen, called Acanzij, being in-D deed but rural clowns, yet for certain priuiledges which they haue, are bound to goe vnto the wars, being euen of the Turks themſelues accounted of ſmall worth or value in compariſon of the Timariots. Hee receiueth great aid alſo from the Tartar in his wars, as alſo from the Valachians and Moldavians (vntil that by the example of the Tranſylvanians, they to the great benefit of the reſt of that ſide of Chriſtendom reuolted from him) all which are to bee accounted as the Romans Auxiliarij, that is to ſay, ſuch as come to aid and aſſiſt him. And thus much for his horſemen.

The Acanzij.

Another great part of his ſtrength conſiſteth in his footmen, and eſpecially in his Ianiza-
E ries: in whom two things are to be conſidered, their Nation, and dexteritie in Armes. Concerning their Nation, ſuch of the Azamoglans as are born in Aſia are not ordinarily inrolled in the number of the Ianizaries, but ſuch as are borne in Europ; for they of Aſia are accounted more effeminat, as they haue been alwaies, more ready to fly than to fight. Wheras the people of Europ haue euen in the Eaſt been accounted for better and more valiant ſouldiers, hauing there to their immortal glory, ſet vp the notable trophies of their moſt glorious victories. The ſouldiers of Aſia be called Turkes, after the name of their Nation, and not of their Countrey, (no countrey being indeed ſo properly called) and they of Europe, Rumi, that is to ſay, Romani, or Romans; as the Country, eſpecially about Conſtantinople, is called by the name of Rum-Ili, that is, the Roman Countrey, as it was in antient time, of the notable Roman Colonies therein, knowne by the name of Romania. Now as concerning their dexteri-
F tie, ſuch male children are culled out from the Chriſtians, as in whom appeareth the greateſt ſignes of ſtrength, actiuitie, and courage; for theſe three qualities are in a ſouldier eſpecially required. This choice is made euery third yeare, except neceſſitie inforce it to bee made ſooner; as it happened in the late Perſian Warre, wherein not onely oftner choice was made, but they were glad to vſe the Azamoglans alſo, a thing neuer before by them done. For thoſe Youths (the Children of Chriſtian parents) beeing by them that haue taken them vp, vp, brought to Constantinople, are taken view of by the Aga of the Ianizaries, who causeth to be registred the name of the youth, with the name of his father and the countrey wherein hee was born. Which done, part of them are sent into the lesser Asia (now called Natolia) and other prouinces; where learning the Turkish language and law, they are infected with the vices and manners of them with whom they liue, and so in short time become true Mahometans. Another part of them, and those of the most towardliest, is diuided into Cloisters which the grand Seigniour hath at Constantinople and Pera, of whom the faireſt and most handsome are appointed for the Seraglio of the great Sultan himselfe. All the time that these Youths thus sent abroad liue in the lesser Asia, or other the Turkes prouinces, they are not appointed to any certain exercise, but still kept busied, some at husbandry, some in gardening, some in building, some in other domestical seruices, neuer suffred to be idle, but alwaies occupied in painful labor: where after certain years they haue bin thus inured to labour and pains taking, they are called into the Cloisters of the Azamoglans (for so they are called all the time vntil they be inrolled into the number of the Ianizaries) and are there deliuered vnto certain speciall gouernors appointed to take charge of them; who keep them still exercised in painfull worke and labour, intreating them euill enough, as well in their dyet, as in their apparell and lodging: they sleep together in large roomes, like vnto the religious Dormitories, wherein are Lampes still burning, and Tutors attending, without whose leaue they may not stirre out of their places. There they learn to shoot both in the bow and piece, the vse of the Scimiter, with many feats of actiuitie; and beeing well trained in those exercises, are inrolled amongst the Ianizaries and Spahi; of whom the Ianizaries receiue no lesse than fiue aspers, nor more than eight for their daily pay, and the Spahi ten. Beeing recorded amongst the Ianizaries, they are either sent away into the wars, or into some Garrison, or else attend at the Court. These last haue for their dwelling three great places like vnto three Monasteries in the City of Constantinople. There they liue vnder their Gouernours to them deputed, the younger with great obedience and silence seruing the elder, in buying of things for them, in dressing their meat, and such like seruices. They that be of one seat or calling liue together at one table, and sleep in long walkes. If any of them vpon occasion chance to lie all night abroad without leaue, the next euening he is notably beaten, with such nurture and discipline, that after his beating he like an Ape kisseth the Gouernours hands that so corrected him. These Ianizaries haue many large priuiledges, are honoured, although they bee most insolent, and are feared of all men, yea euen of the grand Sultan himselfe, who is still glad to make faire weather with them. In their expeditions and trauels they rob the poore Christians cottages and houses, who must not say one word to the contrary. When they buy any thing, they giue for it but what they list themselues: they can be iudged by none but their Aga, neither can they be executed without danger of an insurrection; and therfore such execution is very seldom done, and that very secretly. They haue a thousand royalties: some of them are appointed to the keeping of Embassadours sent from forreine princes: other some of them are assigned to accompany Strangers Trauellers, especially them that be men of the better sort, to the intent they may safely passe in the Turks dominions; for which seruice they are commonly wel rewarded. They haue made choice of their prince, namely Selymus the first, his father Bajazet yet liuing. Neither can any the Turks Sultans account themselues fully inuested in the Imperiall dignitie, or assured of their estate, vntill they be by them approoued and proclaimed. Euerie one of their Sultans at his first comming to the Empire doth giue them some great largesse; and sometime the better to please them, increaseth also their pay. In euery great expedition some of them goe forth with their Aga or his Lieutenant, and are the last of all that fight. There is no office among the Turks that moe enuy at, than at the office of the Aga of the Ianizaries, for the greatnesse of his authoritie and command: onely he and the Beglerbeg of Grecia chuse not their owne lieurenant, but haue them nominated vnto them by the grand Signior. Vnto this great man the Aga of the Ianizaries nothing can portend a more certain destruction than to be of them beloued; for then is he of the great Sultan straitway feared or mistrusted, and so occasion sought to take him out of the way. The number of the court Ianizaries is betwixt ten and 14000. This warrelike Order of souldiers is in these our daies much imbased; for now naturall Turks are taken in for Ianizaries, as are also

The Ianizaries.

The Ianizaries great priuiledges.

A ſo the people of Aſia; whereas in former times none were admitted into that Order but the Chriſtians of Europe only: beſide that, they marry wiues alſo, contrary to their antient cuſtome, which is not now forbidden them. And becauſe of their long lying ſtill at Conſtantinople (a city abounding with all manner of pleaſure) they are become much more effeminate and ſloathfull, but withall moſt inſolent, or more truely to ſay, intollerable. It is commonly reported, the ſtrength of the Turkiſh Empire to conſiſt in this Order of the Ianizaries: which is not altogether ſo; for albeit that they be indeed the Turks beſt footmen, and ſureſt gard of the great Sultans perſon, yet vndoubtedly the greateſt ſtrength of his ſtate and empire reſteth nothing ſo much in them, as in the great multitude of his horſmen, eſpecially his Timariots. Beſide theſe Ianizaries, the Turkiſh Emperour hath a great number of baſe footmen, whom
B the Turks call Aſapi, better acquainted with the ſpade than with the ſword, ſeruing rather to the wearying of their enemies with their multitude, than the vanquiſhing of them with their valour: with whoſe dead bodies the Ianizaries vſe to fill vp the ditches of towns beſieged, or to ſerue them for ladders to clime ouer the enemies walls vpon. But as the Romans had both their old Legionary, and other vntrained ſouldiers which they called Tirones; of whom the firſt were the chiefe ſtrength of their wars, and the other but as it were an ayd and ſupply: euen ſo the Turke accounteth his Timariot horſemen the ſtrength of his army, and the Acanzij (which is another ſort of baſe and common horſemen) but as an acceſſory: and ſo amongſt his footmen he eſteemeth of his Ianizaries, as did the Romans of the Prætorian le-
C gions, but of his Aſapi as of ſhadows. The Ianizaries are by none to be commanded, more than by the great Sultan himſelfe, and their Aga: as for the Baſſaes, they much regard them not, but in their rage oftentimes ſoule entreat euen the greateſt of them. The Aſapi, as they are but baſe and common ſouldiers, ſo haue they alſo their ordinary captains and commanders, men of no great place or marke.

The great commanders of the Turkes Empire.

The whole ſtate of the great Empire of the Turks is commanded by the great Sultan, by the graue aduice and counſell of the Vizier Baſſaes, which were not wont to be in number aboue foure, ſo prouiding for the ſecrecy of his high deſignes or important reſolutions, hardly by a great multitude to be concealed: howbeit that the Sultans of later time haue had ſometimes moe, ſometimes fewer, as their pleaſure was. Theſe men are of all others in that Empire the greateſt, and for their high places moſt honoured: vnto them euen the greateſt
D Princes that haue any thing to do in the Turks court, ſue and ſend their honourable preſents. By their aduice the great Sultan taketh his war in hand, neither without them concludeth he any peace. They giue audience vnto the Embaſſadours of forreine Princes, who from them receiue their diſpatch. The greateſt honors and preferments (which are many in that ſo great and large an Empire) are all by their means to be obtained: which maketh them of all others to be ſought vnto. Some one or other of them are ſtill Generals ouer the great armies of the Turks, eſpecially in theſe their late wars, their three laſt Emperors neuer themſelues going forth into the field (excepting once that Mahomet the third for the maintenance of his credit with his men of war, came downe into Hungary, and there won the city of Agria:) which leading of ſuch mighty armies is ſtill with great emulation and ambition of the Viſier Baſ-
E ſaes amongſt themſelues ſought after, as well for the great profit thereby vnto them ariſing, as for the honour thereof, which is of all other the greateſt. But leauing theſe great ones, the chiefe counſellors for his ſtate; the whole body of his ſo large and mighty an Empire (all in the hands of martall men) is gouerned by other great Baſſaes, whom they by a moſt proud barbarous name call Beglerbegs, that is to ſay, Lords of Lords, euery one of them hauing vnder him certaine Begs or Sanzacks, who are lords and rulers alſo ouer ſome particular Cities and Countries, with the Timariots therein; yet all ſtill at the command and becke of their Beglerbeg. In antient time there was wont to be but two of theſe proud Beglerbegs in all the Turks Empire: the one commanding ouer all the Prouinces the Turke had in Europe; and the other ouer all that he had in the leſſer Aſia, now of the Turks called Natolia. But F the Turkiſh Empire greatly augmented in Aſia by Selymus the firſt, and alſo afterward much enlarged both in Europe and Aſia by Solyman his ſon, the number of the Beglerbegs were by him encreaſed, and in ſome ſort alſo changed: who although that they be all Beglerbegs, and that one of them (eſpecially in the time of peace) in the managing of his ſoldiers, and affaires of his country is not ſubject to any other, but is onely at the command of the Great Turke; yet notwithſtanding in the time of war, where the Beglerbeg of Romania is, all are obedient vnto him, as the chiefeſt of the reſt; inſomuch that none of them but only he and the Baſſa of Natolia are called by the ſtately name of Beglerbegs, the others being then only called the Baſſaes of ſuch and ſuch places, as of Buda, Aleppo, and ſuch like; although indeed they are in nature Beglerbegs, and ſo written in their Records. For the more manifeſting of which their gouernment, as alſo that they which come hereafter may by comparing of that which is here written, with the ſtate that then ſhall be, ſee how much this great Empire in the meane time encreaſeth or diminiſheth, I haue thought good here briefely to ſet downe all the ſaid Beglerbegs, with their Sanzacks and Timariots, and as neere as I could (either by reading, or the credible relation of others well trauelled in thoſe countries) together, and as it were at one ſhew, ſet forth the whole ſtrength and power of this ſo mighty an Empire, as alſo in what Countries and Prouinces the ſame is eſpecially placed.

The Beglerbeghs or great Commanders of the Turks Empire in EVROPE.

1 The Beglerbeg of Romania chiefe of the Beglerbegs of the Turks Empire in Europe.

The firſt and chiefeſt of all the Beglerbegs in the Turkiſh Empire, is the Beglerbeg of Romania or Grecia, called of the Turks Rum-Ili (as we ſay the Roman country) the principal reſidence of whoſe Beglerbegſhip is at Sophia, a city of Bulgaria, ſo appointed for the commodious ſcituation thereof, for the better command of the reſt of the prouinces of Europe; howbeit that he for the moſt part, or rather altogether abideth at the court: which the other Beglerbegs cannot do, for they are bound not to depart from the gouernment of their Prouinces: in which charge they ordinarily continue but three yeares only, the great Sultan ſtill changing and altering them at his pleaſure. This Beglerbeg hath vnder his own enſigne and command forty thouſand Timariots alwaies ready at his call, vnder the conduct of theſe and twenty Sanzacks following; namely, the

Sanzack of
1 Sophia in Bulgaria.
2 Nicopolis.
3 Cliſſe, or Quadraginta Eccleſia.
4 Vyza in Thracia.
5 Kirmen
6 Siliſtria — all in Macedonia.
7 Giuſtandil
8 Bender, neer vnto the Euxine.
9 Acherman, in the confines of Moldauia.
10 Vſcopia.
11 Priſrem
12 Salonichi — all in Theſſalia.
13 Trichala
14 Miſitra, of old called Sparta, in Morea.
15 Palæopatra, in the ſame Prouince.
16 Ioannina, in Ætolia.
17 Deluina — both in Achaia.
18 Elbaſſan
19 Auelona or Aulona in Albania.
20 Ducagin in Epirus.
21 Iſcodra, or Scobra, in Albania.

2 The Beglerbeg of Buda.

The Beglerbeg of Buda, who there reſideth in the frontiers of the Turkiſh Empire, hauing vnder his charge eight thouſand Timariots, beſide 12000 other ſoldiers, which in continuall pay lie ſtill ready in gariſon in the confines of Hungary, Croatia, Stiria, and other places bordering vpon the Chriſtians, but eſpecially the territories belonging to the Houſe of Auſtria. He had of late vnder his enſigne and command theſe fifteene Sanzackes, viz. the

Sanzack of
1 Nouegrade.
2 Filek.
3 Setſchen.
4 Zolnock.
5 Gran, or Strigonium.
6 Segedin.
7 Alba-Regalis.
8 Sexard.
9 Simonterna.
10 Copan.
11 Muhatz.
12 Zigeth, or Saſwar.
13 Petſchen, or Quinque-Eccleſia.
14 Sirmium.
15 Semendria.

Of which, Filek, Zetſchen, and Strigonium are in theſe late wars won from the Turks by the Imperials, and ſo yet by them holden; as was alſo Alba Regalis, which but of late was by the Turks againe recouered.

The

A The Beglerbegh of Temeſwar in Hungary, who there hath his abode, hauing vnder his command ſeuen thouſand Timariots, with theſe eight Sanzackes, the 3 The Beglerbeg of Temeſwar.

Sanzacke of 1 Temeſwar.
2 Mudaua.
3 Vilaoſwar.
4 Tſchinnad.
5 Wiſchitirni.
6 Iſwornick.
7 Vidin.
8 Lippa.

The Beglerbeg of Boſna, who lyeth at Bagnialuca, hath vnder him theſe Sanzackes, the 4 The Beglerbeg of Boſna.

Sanzacke of
1 Bagnialuca.
2 Poſchega.
3 Cliſſa.
4 Hertzegouina.
5 Lika.
6 Sazeſchna.
7 Giula.
8 Briſrem.
9 Alatſchia-chiſſar.

B The Beglerbeg of Coffe or Capha, who there reſideth in Taurica Cherſoneſus, and beſide the Countrey thereabout, commandeth ouer all the Sanzackes neer vnto the great Riuer Tanais, and the Fennes of Mœotis. It was at firſt but a Sanzackeſhip, ſubject to the Beglerbeg of Grecia; and is in truth rather a Beglerbegs place in name, than in ſtrength and power.

5 The Beglerbeg of Coffe or Capha.

The Beglerbeghs or great Commanders of the Turks Empire in Aſia.

C

The Beglerbegs of the Turkes empire in Aſia.

1 Anatolia, who hath his reſidence in Cutaie, the Metropoliticall city of the greater Phrygia (called in antient time Catyai) and hath vnder his enſigne and command thirty thouſand of the Timariot horſemen, with twelue Sanzackes.

2 Caramania, who hath his abode at Caiſaria (in antient time called Cæſaria) a City of Cilicia, and hath vnder him ſeuen Sanzackes, with twenty thouſand Timariots.

3 Siuas, who hath his abiding at Sebaſtia, a city of the leſſer Armenia, and hath vnder his gouernment ten thouſand Timariots.

D 4 Tocatun, who reſideth at Amaſia, the Metropolis of Capadocia, and hath vnder him fiue Sanzackes.

5 Dulgadir, ſometime part of the Kingdome of Aladeules, and commandeth ouer foure Sanzackes.

6 Halep, commonly called Aleppo, a City of Syria, and one of the moſt famous Marts of the Eaſt, who hath vnder his Regiment fiue and twenty thouſand Timariots.

7 Sham, otherwiſe called Damaſco, a moſt famous city of Syria, who commandeth ouer forty thouſand Timariots.

The Beglerbegh of

8 Tarapolis, or Trapolis, commonly called Tripolis, another famous city of Syria.

9 Maras, a city vpon the great riuer Euphrates, betwixt Aleppo and Meſopotamia, who hath vnder his command ten thouſand Timariots.

B 10 Diarbekir, otherwiſe called Meſopotamia, who making his abode at the city of Amida, or as the Turks call it, Cara hemid, who commandeth ouer twelue Sanzackes, and thirty thouſand Timariots.

11 Bagdat, or new Babylon, where he reſideth, not far from the ruines of old Babylon, who hath vnder him forty thouſand Timariots.

12 Balſara, not far from Bagdat, vpon the Perſian gulfe, who hath vnder his rule or gouernment fifteene thouſand Timariots.

13 Laxa, towards Ormus, and neere vnto the Perſian, hath vnder his regiment ten thouſand Timariots.

F 14 Gemen and Aden, two famous cities in Arabia Fœlix, vpon the coaſt of the Red-Sea, who hath vnder him thirty thouſand Timariots.

15 Chebetz, or Zebet, vpon the coaſt of the Arabian gulfe, neere vnto the Kingdome of the great Æthiopian King Prejanus, commonly (but corruptly) called Presbiter Iohn.

16 Cyprus, who lieth at Nicoſia or Famaguſta, commandeth ouer all that great Iſland, ſometime of it ſelfe a Kingdome. G

17 Scheheruzul in Aſſyria, bordering vpon the Perſian, who hath vnder his gouernment ten thouſand Timariots.

18 Wan, a city in the confines of the greater Armenia towards Media, who hath vnder him twelue thouſand Timariots.

19 Artzerum, or Erzerum in the borders of Armenia toward Capadocia, about foure daies journey from Trapezond, who commandeth ouer twenty thouſand Timariots.

20 Teflis, neere vnto the Georgians, erected by Muſtapha Baſſa, Generall of Amurath the third his army againſt the Perſian, in the yeare 1578. H

21 Siruan, or Media, erected by the ſame Muſtapha, and at the ſame time, commandeth ouer all that great country, ſometime a famous Kingdome.

22 Temir-Capi, or Derbent, neere vnto the Caſpian Sea, taken by Oſman Baſſa the ſame yeare 1578: who hauing ſlaine Schehemet Chan his father in law, reduced that country into the forme of a Beglerſhip.

The Beglerbegh of

23 Cars, a city of Armenia the greater, diſtant from Artzerum foure daies journy, by Muſtapha Baſſa made a Beglerbegſhip in the yeare 1578.

24 Tſchilder or Tzilder, in the confines of the Georgians, erected by the ſame Generall Muſtapha, in the yeare 1579.

25 Faſſa, or Phaſis, in Mengrelia, neere vnto the Georgians, erected by Vluzales, the Turks Admirall, the ſame yeare 1579. I

26 Sochum, in the borders of the Georgians, erected by the great Baſſa Sinan, in the yeare 1580.

27 Batin, there erected alſo by the ſame Sinan Baſſa.

28 Reiuan, erected by Ferat Baſſa, Generall of the Turks Army, taken from Tochomac Chan the Perſian in the yeare 1582, whereof Cicala Baſſa was the firſt Beglerbeg.

29 Sumachia, in the Countrey of Media, erected by Oſman Baſſa in the yeare 1583.

30 Tauris, a moſt famous city of Armenia the greater, ſometime the Regall ſeat of the Perſian Kings, but of late taken from them by Oſman Baſſa, and conuerted into a Beglerbegſhip in the ſame yeare 1583. K

But theſe late erected honours, namely the Beglerbegſhips of Teflis, Siruan, Temir-Capi, Cars, Tſchilder, Faſſa, and the reſt gained by Amurath from the Perſians and the Georgians, although they containe a great territory, are not of themſelues any of them worthy of thoſe proud titles, or yet able to maintaine the ſame (Siruan, Reiuan, and Tauris only excepted) but were by the great Baſſa's, Muſtapha, Sinan, Ferat, and Oſman, Amurath his Lieutenants, for their owne greater honour, and the encouraging of them which were to defend thoſe their new conqueſts, erected; being indeed nothing either in power or ſtrength comparable with the other more antient Beglerbegs either in Europe or Aſia. But hauing thus paſſed through the great Kingdomes and Prouinces by the Turks holden in Europe and Aſia, with their proud honours therein, let vs go forward toward the South, to ſee what great Kingdomes and territories they at this preſent hold in Africke alſo. L

The Beglerbeghs or great Commanders of the Turks Empire in AFRICKE.

The Beglerbegh of

1 Miſſar, who ſtill making his abode at the great city of Caire, hath vnder his command all the Kingdome of Ægypt, with ſixteene Sanzackes, and an hundred thouſand Timariots. M

2 Ceſair, in antient time called Iulia Cæſaria, but now commonly Algiers, where the Beglerbegh ſtill reſiding, commandeth ouer all that Kingdome, wherein are forty thouſand Timariots.

3 Tunis

A The Beglerbegh of
3 Tunis, where he ſtill remaining as a Viceroy, commandeth all that great and large Kingdome.
4 Tripolis, the ſeat of his Beglerbegſhip, by Sinan Baſſa taken from the Knights of Malta in the yeare 1551.

There are beſide theſe, two other Kingdomes in Africke inrolled in the Turks records as their owne, although they be not as yet by them brought into the forme of Beglerbegſhips, namely the Kindomes of Fez and Moroco, but are as yet holden by them as their tributaries and Vaſſals.

But hauing thus as it were taken view of the greatneſſe and forces of this ſo mighty a monarchs Empire by land, and ſo in ſome ſort bounded it out, let vs conſider alſo his power by
B ſea. With the great Ocean he much medleth not, more than a little in the gulfes of Perſia and Arabia, moſt of his territories lying vpon the Mediterranean and Euxine ſeas, or elſe more inwardly into the heart of Aſia neere to no ſea. Now for theſe ſeas, no Prince in the World hath greater or better meanes to ſet forth his fleets than hath he: for the ouergrowne woods of Epirus and Cilicia, and more than they, thoſe of Nicomedia and Trapezond, are ſo great and thicke, and ſo full of tall trees fit for the building of ſhips and gallies of all ſorts, as is almoſt incredible. Neither wanteth he ſtore of ſhipwrites & carpenters for the framing of that ſo great ſtore of timber, large pay drawing euen the Chriſtian skilfull carpenters and workmen into his Arſenals at Conſtantinople, Synope, Callipolis, and others. For proofe whereof it is worth the noting, that Selymus the ſecond in our freſh remembrance, the next yeare af-
C ter that notable ouerthrow by him receiued at the Echinades (commonly called the battell of Lepanto) rigged vp a fleet wherewith Vluzales his Admirall was not afraid to face the whole power of the confederate Chriſtian Princes at Cerigo. Neither hath the Turke euer wanted good ſtore of expert ſeamen after the manner of thoſe ſeas; for beſide thoſe he hath in ſtore at Callipolis and Sinope, out of his gallies which he hath alwaies in readineſſe at Lesbos, Chios, Rhodus, Cyprus, and Alexandria, and from the pyrats which he continually receiueth into the ports of Tunis, Bugia, Tripolis, and Algiers, he can and doth from them when need is, chuſe captaines, mariners, and rowers ſufficient for the manning and ſtoring of his fleet. What he is able to do in thoſe ſeas, was well ſeene in our time, by thoſe fleets which he had at Malta, Cyprus, the Echinades, and Guletta. He hath beſide of all neceſſary and war-D like prouiſion aboundant ſtore, and of great ordnance to furniſh himſelfe withall both by ſea and land an infinite quantity. Out of Hungary he hath cartied away aboue 5000 great pieces, out of Cyprus 500, and few leſſe from Guletta, not to ſpeake what he hath more got from the Chriſtians in diuers other places alſo. What ſtore he hath of ſhot and pouder he ſhewed at Malta, where hee diſcharged aboue 60000 great ſhot; at Famaguſta, where hee beſtowed, 118000; and at Guletta, where in the ſpace of 39 daies he by the fury of his great ordnance ouerthrew the fortifications which the Chriſtians had bin 40 yeares in building. So that to returne againe to our purpoſe, the great Turke ſo well prouided of men, mony, ſhipping, and great ordnance, and hauing done ſo great matters at ſea as is before rehearſed, is not in reaſon otherwiſe to be accounted of, than as of a moſt mighty and puiſſant Prince as well by ſea as B land: which to be ſo, the greatneſſe of his Denizi Beglerbeg or great Admirall (commonly called Capitan Baſſa, of whom we haue not yet ſpoken) well declareth. This great man hauing charge of all the grand Signiors ſtrength at ſea, is alway one of the Viſier Baſſaes, not bound ſtill to follow the court, as the other Viſiers be, but alwaies or for moſt part reſiant at Conſtantinople or Callipolis, ſo to be the neerer vnto his charge. He that now hath this honourable place is called of the Turks Cigala Baſſa, deſcended of an honorable family of that name in Genoa: who commonly reſiding at Conſtantinople or Callipolis, hath vnder him fourteen Sanzacks, all of them great commanders and men of great place: namely, the

The great power of the Turks in the Mediterranean and Euxine ſea.

From whence he hath his cheife ſeamen.

6 The Denizi Beglerbeg.

F Sanzack of 1 Gallipolis, or Callipolis.
2 Galata, or Pera.
3 Nicomedia.
4 Limnos, or Lemnus.
5 Mitylene, or Lesbos.
6 Chios, or Scio.
7 Nexia, or Naxus.
8 Negropont, or Eubœa.
9 Rhodus.
10 Cauala in the frontiers of Macedonia.
11 Napolidi Romania.
12 Lepanto, or Naupactus.
13 S. Maura.
14 Alexandria.

The Princes as well Mahometans as Christians, vpon whom the great Empire of the Turk confideth, and of what power they be in comparison of the Turks.

The greatneſſe, wealth, and ſtrength of this ſo mighty an Empire, as well by ſea as land, G thus in ſome ſort declared, let vs now ſee vpon what Princes it alſo confineth, and of what power euery one of them is in compariſon of it ſo great and ouergrown a State. The Turks toward the Eaſt border vpon the Perſians, according to a right line drawne by imagination from Tauris to Balſara: vpon the Portugals at the Perſian gulfe, and ſo there likewiſe toward the South: at the Red Sea, vpon the great Æthyopian King Prejanus, commonly called Preſter Iohn: towards the South, in Affricke vpon the King of Moroco; and in Europe, vp-on the Kingdome of Naples, with ſome part of the Venetian ſigniory: toward the North vp-on the Polonians, and the teiritories of the houſe of Auſtria. Now to begin with the Perſian, the great Turke no doubt is in field too ſtrong for him, as by proofe hath beene oftentimes ſeene; for Mahomet the Great, in plaine battell ouercame the valiant Vſun Caſſanes: Se- H lymus the firſt, and after, Solyman his ſon put to flight the noble Hyſmael and Tamas, the two great and famous Perſian Kings: and now of late in our time Amurath the third by his Lieutenants hath taken from the Perſians all Media, with the greater Armenia, both ſometimes famous Kingdomes, together with the regall city of Tauris. That the Turke ſo preuaileth, is by reaſon of his footmen, which the Perſian wanteth; and of his great ordnance, whereof the Perſian hath neither ſtore nor vſe: and although the Perſians by valour of their horſemen haue ſometime in open field foiled the Turk, yet haue they ſtill loſt ſome part of their country; Solyman taking from them Meſopotamia, and Amurath Media and Armenia. Neither did the Perſians alone feele that harme, and loſe their owne, but vndid their Confederates alſo; Selymus the firſt ſpoiling the Mamalukes of Ægypt and Syria, and vtterly rooting them I from off the face of the earth; and Amurath by his Lieutenants hauing brought to a low ebbe the warlike Georgians, both of them the Perſian Kings friends and confederats. Now is not the Turke ſo much too ſtrong at land for the Perſian, but that he is as much too weake at ſea for the Portugals; in thoſe ſeas I meane where their forces haue more than once to the Turks coſt met together in the Eaſt Indies: the Portugals hauing in thoſe rich but remote countries, many ſure harbours and ports, yea, faire countries and territories abounding with victuals and all prouiſion neceſſary for ſhipping, with ſome alſo of thoſe great Eaſterne princes their allies and confederats: wheras the Turke on the other ſide hath nothing in the Perſian gulfe ſtrong, beſide Balſara; the ſea coaſt of Arabia which might ſtand him in beſt ſtead, hauing no more but foure townes, and thoſe but weake and of ſmall worth. So that there, as alſo in the Red K ſea, it is a matter of exceeding charge and difficulty for him to ſet out any great fleet into thoſe ſeas, for that thoſe countries are vtterly deſtitute of wood fit to make ſhips of. For which cauſe, thoſe few times that hee prepared his fleets in the Red ſea (to haue cut off the Portugals trade into the Eaſt Indies) being not able to performe the ſame in the Perſian gulf, he was inforced to bring the timber for the building of his gallies out of the Port of Bithy-nia and Cilicia (out of another World as it were) vp the Nile vnto Caire, and from thence vpon camels by land to Sues, where he hath his Arſenall, a thing almoſt incredible. And yet hauing done what he could, as oft as he hath made any expedition againſt them, he neuer gained any thing but loſſe and diſhonor: as in the yeare 1538 at the city of Dium; and in the yeare 1552 at the Iſland of Armuz, and after that at Mombaza, where foure of the Turks L gallies, with one galliot, which by the fauour of the King of Mombaza had thought to haue ſtaied in thoſe ſeas, were by the Portugals taken: who ſtill haue a ſpeciall regard and care that the Turks ſettle not themſelues in thoſe ſeas; but as ſoone as they perceiue them to prepare any fleet, they forthwith ſet vpon them, and to that end oftentimes without reſiſtance enter into the Red ſeas. Preſter Iohn, of whom although men ſpeake much, yet is he nothing in ſtrength to be compared vnto the Turke, but far inferior vnto him both for Commanders and ſoldiers, as alſo for weapons and munition: for that great Prince hath a great kingdome without fortification, and a multitude of ſoldiers without armes: as appeared by the ouerthrow of Barnagaſſo his Lieutenant towards the Red Sea; who hauing loſt all that Sea coaſt vnto the Turks, was brought to that extremity, that to haue peace with them, he yeelded to pay vnto M them a yearely tribute of a thouſand ounces of gold. In Africke the Turke hath more Territories than hath the King of Moroco, otherwiſe called the Xerife; for he poſſeſſeth all that there lyeth betwixt the Red ſea and the kingdome of Fez: but the Xerife hath the better part, the richer, ſtronger, and more vnited: yet dare neither of them well make war vpon the other,

for

A for the neereneſſe of the King of Spaine, enemie vnto them both. Now then there remaineth the reſt of the Chriſtian Princes bordering vpon the Turke; and firſt the King of Polonia. What theſe two Princes can do the one againſt the other, hath beene ſeene in ſome former expeditions, wherein the Polonian had ſtill the worſe: yet it ſhould ſeeme, that of later time the Turke hath not bin greatly deſirous to moone the Polonian too farre, for that being prouoked by diuers occaſions (namely in the reigne of Henry the third, in the warres that Iohn the Vayuod of Valachia had with the Turkes, many Polonian horſemen ſerued the ſayd Vayuod, though not indeed ſent from the King: and in the time of Sigiſmund the Polonian Coſſacks haue with diuers incurſions not a little troubled them: beſide the late motions of Iohn Zamoſchy the great Chancellor, and Generall of the Polonian forces, for the ſtaying of B the Tartars by the Turks ſent for) he hath bin content to comport the ſame, and not with his wonted pride ſought to be thereof reuenged, as he hath for far leſſe vpon ſome other princes. And on the other ſide, the Polonians ſince the vnfortunat expedition of King Ladiſlaus, neuer tooke vpon them any warres againſt the Turkes, neither gaue ſuch aid as they ſhould, vnto the Valachians their Confederats, but ſuffered to be taken from themſelues whatſoeuer they had toward the Euxine or Blacke Sea: a thing imputed rather vnto the want of courage in their Kings, than in the Nobility of that Kingdome. Sigiſmund the firſt being by Pope Leo X. inuited to the war againſt the Turks, anſwered them in theſe few words: Set you the Chriſtian Princes at vnity amongſt themſelues, and I for my part will not be wanting. Sigiſmund the ſecond ſo abhorred the wars, that he not only declined the Turks, but prouoked by
C the Muſcouites, neuer ſought to reuenge the ſame. King Stephen (by the commendation of Amurath choſen King of Polonia) an indifferent eſteemer both of his enemies Forces and his owne, thought it a moſt dangerous thing to joyne battell with the Turke, and yet in priuate talke with his friends, would oftentimes ſay, That with thirty thouſand foot joyned vnto his Polonian horſemen, he durſt well to vndertake an expedition againſt the Turke: which he was ſuppoſed oftentimes to haue thought vpon. The Emperour, with the reſt of the Princes of the Houſe of Auſtria, are by a longer tract of ground joyned vnto this great empire of the Turks, than any one other Prince of the World, and beſtow in fortifications and maintenance of their garriſons, (wherein they haue continually aboue twenty thouſand horſe and foot) the greateſt part of their reuenues euen in the time of peace, much more in theſe
D their long wars: and with the German forces joyned vnto their owne, are more carefull how to defend that they haue yet left, than how to recouer that they haue already loſt, or to enlarge their Empire. The Emperor Ferdinand with greater force than ſucceſſe vndertooke the vnfortunate expedition of Buda and Poſſega: which ſo euill fell out, not for that his forces were not ſufficient or ſtrong enough, but for that they wanted agility and dexterity. The truth is, thoſe his armies were ſtrong enough, and ſufficiently furniſhed with all things neceſſary, but conſiſted for the moſt part of Germans and Bohemians, ſlow and heauy people, vnfit to encounter with the Turks, a more ready and nimble kinde of ſouldiers. The Venetians alſo confrontier the Turks by many hundred miles, both by ſea and land, and defend themſelues rather by peaceable policy than force of armes: notably fortifying their ſtrong
E Holds vpon their frontiers, declining by all meanes the dangers and charges of war, by Embaſſages and rich preſents, leauing nothing vnattempted (their liberty and ſtate preſerued) rather than to fall to wars. To ſay the truth of them, although they had both coyne and warlike prouiſion ſufficient, yet want they men and victuals anſwerable to ſo great a war againſt ſo puiſſant an Enemy. There remaineth onely the King of Spaine, of all other the great Princes either Chriſtians or Mahometans bordering vpon him, the beſt able to deale with him; his yearely reuenues ſo farre exceeding thoſe of the Turks, as that they are alſo probably thought to counteruaile the greateſt part of his Timariots: and his great Dominions in Spaine, Portugall, Naples, Sicilia, Millaine, Sardinia, and the Low Countries (if they were with him at vnity) able to affourd vnto him ſo great and powerfull a ſtrength both by F ſea and land, as might make him dreadfull euen vnto the Great Turke when hee ſwelleth in his greateſt pride: but conſidering how his Forces are diſtracted for the maintenance of his wars at once in diuers places; as alſo for the neceſſary defence and keeping of his ſo large and diſperſed territories, not all the beſt of themſelues affected to the Spaniſh gouern-

The King of Spaine, of all other Princes that border vpon the Turk, beſt able to wage war with him.

ment,

ment, he is not to be thought of himſelf ſtrong enough againſt the vnited forces of the great Turke, whenſoeuer they ſhall chance to be imployed vpon him. So that by this we haue already ſaid, is eaſie to be gathered, how much the Turke is too ſtrong for any one the neighbor Princes, either Mahometans or Chriſtians, bordering vpon him, and therefore to be of them the more feared. Yet leſt ſome miſtaking me, might thinke, What, is then the Turke inuincible? Farre be that thought from me, to thinke any enemy of Chriſt Ieſu (be his arme neuer ſo ſtrong) to be able to withſtand his power, either quite to deuoure his little flocke, rage he neuer ſo much about it. As for the Turke, the moſt dangerous and profeſſed enemy of the Chriſtiau Commonweale, be his ſtrength ſo great, yea, and haply greater too than is before declared (the greatneſſe of his Dominion and Empire conſidered) yet is he not to be thought therefore either inuincible, or his power indeed ſo great, as it in ſhew ſeemeth for to be: his Timariot horſmen (his greateſt ſtrength) diſperſed ouer his whole empire, being neuer poſſible the one halfe of them by him to be gathered into the body of one army: neither if they were ſo, poſſible in ſuch a multitude long to be kept together, liuing vpon no pay of his, but vpon ſuch ſtore and prouiſion only as they bring with them from their Timari, neuer ſufficient long to maintaine them. Beſides that, the policy of his ſtate hardly or neuer ſuffereth him to draw aboue a third part of his Timariots out of his countries where they dwell, for feare leſt the reſt of the people, by them ſtill kept vnder, ſhould in their abſence take vp arms againſt him in defence of themſelues and their antient liberty: whereafter the greateſt part of thoſe poore oppreſſed Soules, as well Mahometans as Chriſtians in euery Prouince of his Empire, awaiting but the opportunity, moſt deſirouſly longeth. So that more than two parts of them being alwaies to be left at home for the neceſſary defence of the ſpacious borders of his ſo large an Empire, as alſo for the keeping in obedience of ſo many diſcontented Nations; it is a great matter, if he euen in his greateſt warres draw together of theſe kinde of ſouldiers the full number of an hundred and fifty thouſand ſtrong, making vp the reſt of his huge multitude with his Acanzij, liuing of no pay of his, but vpon the ſpoile of the enemy onely, the fifth part whereof they pay vnto him alſo. All which put together, what manner of men they be, and of what valour, not onely the ſmall Armies of the Chriſtians vnder the leading of their worthy Chiefetaines, Huniades, Scanderbeg, King Matthias, and others, haue to their immortall glory in former times made good proofe: but euen in this our age, and that as it were but the other day, the Tranſyluanian Prince, with diuers other Captaines and Commanders yet liuing, haue done the like alſo, as well witneſſeth the late battell of Agria, wherein the Chriſtians, in number not halfe ſo many as the Turks, by plaine valour draue the great Sultan Mahomet himſelfe, (with Ibrahim Baſſa his Lieutenant Generall) out of the field, and had of him had the moſt notable victory that euer was got againſt that Enemy, had they not by too much careleſneſſe and vntimely deſire of ſpoyle, themſelues ſhamefully interrupted the ſame. But thus to let his horſemen paſſe, the chiefe ſtrength of his footmen are his Ianizaries, neuer in number exceeding twelue or foureteene thouſand, yet ſeldome times halfe ſo many euen in his greateſt armies, except he himſelfe be there in perſon preſent in the middeſt of them: who beſide the ſmall number of them, in the time of theſe their late voluptuous and effeminate Emperors, corrupted with the pleaſures of Conſtantinople, and for want of their wonted diſcipline, haue together with their antient obedience and patience, loſt alſo a great part of their former reputation and valour: all the reſt of his footmen filling vp the body of his populous Army, being his Aſapi, rather pioners than ſouldiers, men of ſmall worth, and ſo accounted of both by the Turks and their Enemies alſo. So that all things well conſidered, his beſt ſouldiers being the leaſt part of his greateſt armies, and they alſo farre vnlike their predeceſſours the ſterne followers of the former Othoman Kings and Emperours, but men now giuen to pleaſure and delight; it is not otherwiſe to be thought, but that he bringeth into the field farre moe men than good ſouldiers, more brauery than true valour, more ſhew than worth, his multitude being his chiefeſt ſtrength, his ſuppoſed greatneſſe the terrour of his neighbour Princes, and both together the very Majeſty of his Empire. Which although it be indeed very ſtrong, for the reaſons before alledged, yet is it by many probably thought to be now vpon the declining hand, their late Emperors in their owne perſons far degenerating from their warrelike progenitors, their ſouldiers generally

The ſignes of the declining of the Turks Empire.

giuing

A giuing themſelues to vnwonted pleaſures, their antient diſcipline of war neglected, their ſuperſtition not with ſo much zeale as of old regarded, and rebellions in diuers parts of his Empire of late ſtrangely raiſed, and mightily ſupported: all the ſignes of a declining State. Which were they not at all to be ſeene, as indeed they be very pregnant; yet the greatneſſe of the Empire being ſuch, as that it laboureth nothing more than with the weightineſſe of it ſelfe, it muſt needs (after the manner of worldly things) of it ſelfe fall, and againe come to nought, no man knowing when nor how ſo great a worke ſhould be brought to paſſe, but he in whoſe deepe counſels all theſe great reuolutions of Empires and Kingdomes are from eternity ſhut vp: who at his pleaſure ſhall in due time by ſuch meanes as he ſeeth beſt, accompliſh the ſame, to the vnſpeakeable comfort of his poore affiicted flocke, in one place or B other ſtill in danger to be by this roaring Lyon deuoured. Which worke of ſo great wonder, He for his ſonne our Sauior Chriſt his ſake, the glory of his name, and comfort of many thouſand oppreſſed Chriſtians, fed with the bread of carefulneſſe amidſt the furnace of tribulation, in mercy haſten, that we with them, and they with vs, all as members of one body, may continually ſing, Vnto him be all honour and praiſe World without end.

***

TO THE HONORABLE
Sr THOMAS ROWE.

Sir,

AS your Vertues haue made you eminent, ſo your Fortunes haue confirmed that eminence, not only with knowing diſcerners, but others the moſt ignorant, that informe themſelues from mens outſides, and the Gloſſe which ſucceſſe ſets vpon their actions. Amongſt thoſe vertues, your φιλανθρωπία with all it's ſignifications, hath not the leaſt place; being one free to cheriſh worthy endeauors in others, by condeſcending to their defects: And in this aſſurance, I (a ſtranger) am bold to preſent my following labors to be judged of by you; and to the ſentence you paſſe vpon them, all other cenſures ſhall ſubſcribe. I confeſſe I wiſh ſome of my few yeares had been ſpent abroad, where I might haue informed my ſelfe better from obſeruation, than from report: for my contemplatiue knowledge renders me more ſubject to errors, than a practiue would haue done. Yet if the enſuing hath an allowance from you, your known judgemnt will command in all men a good opinion of it, and my defects herein be made excuſeable, by the ſlenderneſſe of my intelligence. My deſire is to be reckoned amongſt the humbleſt of your Seruants,

THOMAS NABBES.

TO THE HONORABLE

SIR THOMAS ROWE.

SYour Vertues haue made you eminent, your Fortunes haue confirmed that eminence, not only with knowing obser-uers, but others the most ignorant, that informe themselues from meere outsides, and the Glosse which succeeds text vpon their actions. Amongst those vertues, your Valour hath with all it's significations, hath not the least place; being one free to cherish worthy endeauors in others, by condescending to their defects: And in this assurance, I (a stranger) am bold to present my following labors, to be iudged of by you; and to the sentence you passe vpon them, all other censures shall subscribe. I confesse I with some of my few yeares had been spent abroad, where I might haue informed my life better from obseruation, than from report: for my contemplative knowledge renders me more subject to errors, than a practique would haue done. Yet if the suffring backan allowance from you, your known iudgement will command in all men a good opinion of it, and my defects herein be made excusable, by the tenderneſſe of my intelligence. My duetie is to be reckoned amongst the humblest of your Seruants,

THOMAS NABBES.

1628.

A CONTINVATION OF THE TVRKISH HISTORIE, FROM THE YEARE OF OVR LORD 1628, TO THE END OF THE YEARE 1637.

Collected out of the Diſpatches of Sr PETER WYCHE Knight, Embaſſador at Conſtantinople, and others:

By THOMAS NABBES.

THAT I begin with a ſeeming impertinencie, if it appear an error, it is voluntarie and conſideratiue; and therfore let the following reaſons ſatisfie or excuſe it. Actions that may be preſidents to poſteritie, ought to haue their records, and merit a carefull preſeruation. This (if wee conſider the perſon, deſigne, or ſucceſſe) will be allowed both honorable and imitable, though ſubiect to diuerſitie of cenſures, till clear judgments confirm it from the circumſtances. Why it ſhould or may take place here, is, That the Scene of its execution was in places belonging to the Turkes, and by conſequence had, or at leaſtwiſe required a determination of juſtice by the grand Signior.

SIR Kenelme Digby (authoriſed by his Majeſtie of Great Britaines ſpecial Commiſſion vnder the great Seale of England, for a deſigne againſt the French, then his Majeſties enemies (the period of which deſigne pointed at thoſe parts) with ſix ſhips, of which his own went Admirall; after many encounters by the way, vpon the 10 of Iune 1628, came before cape Congure, where hee lay at Hull faire all that night. The Cape is about ten leagues from Scanderon; whence on the morrow in the afternoone he ſent his boat wel armed to deſcry the road, and to bring him ſome intelligence. Which they did the next morning, hauing met with ſome Venetian boats that were fiſhing, with which Venetians they paſſed for Maltæſes: for there were in Sr Kenelmes boat both Maltæſes and Greeks. They brought word that there were at anchor in the road two Venetian Galliaſſes, (which the Engliſh call Galligroſſes) two other Gallions, two Engliſh ſhips, and foure French Veſſels, one of which came in but the day before, being very rich, and hauing as yet vnladed nothing. Sir Kenelme

1628. ſpent all the night following in ouerſeeing the preparations for fight and firing in his ſeue- G
rall ſhips; for that hee expected a fierce onſet the next day from the Venetians, who had declared themſelues the garders of that Road, and were reported to haue giuen out, They would ſink all the Engliſh men of War they ſhould meet either in their own, or in the grand Signiors ſeas. Which peremptorineſſe, if true, including an intent of diſhonor to the nation, could not but exaſperat any true Engliſh ſpirit, eſpecially of the nobler difference. This mooued not yet Sr Kenelme to any violence of paſſion, but that with a carefull temper and diſcreet iudgement, he prepared himſelfe and fitted his ſhips at all points, for all occaſions.

And here though it be a digreſſion, (ſince it may be worth an obſeruation, eſpecially with the Curious) let me inſert a report of his own, with the preface of his proteſtation in the way of caution, That he was neither ſo ſimple or ſuperſtitious, as vainely to builde a faith vpon H any waies of diuination, ſuch as the Sortes Virgiliana, which the Antients much relied vpon, and of which the Romane hiſtories haue many ſtrange examples, that make them ſeeme no leſſe than Oracles: yet thus it hapned to Sr Kenelme, that being wearied with cares, and deſirous to ſleep vpon the poup, till the wind might ſerue to bring them in; amongſt other cogitations, the remembrance of theſe Sortes intermixt it ſelfe, and by accident one that was neere him was reading Virgil. Which Sr Kenelme taking, hauing firſt conceiued the chance of a number for the verſe which hee ſhould take; vpon that leafe where hee opened the booke, theſe two following preſented themſelues:

Æneas celſa in puppi jam certus eundi I Carpebat ſomnos, rebus jam ritè paratis.

In's lofty ſhip Æneas bent to goe,
Slept, at all points prepar'd to meet his Foe.

Which falling out ſo fit to the preſent circumſtances, and the relation they had to the Trojans inſuing fortunes, was receiued betwixt jeaſt and earneſt for a very good omen, and became the inſtrument of an encouragement, by being made the concluſion of a ſhort ſpeech to his men. For it ſeemed to confirm their reſolutions, and preuent the diſturbance of them, by any diſpute that might ariſe concerning the iuſtneſſe of Sir Kenelmes deſigne and pro- K ceeding.

But his iudgement took another courſe for the ſtrengthning of his cauſe; and that the iuſtneſſe of it might the better commaund the attendance of ſucceſſe (reſpecting notwithſtanding his Honour, before any politique ſafety which might tend to diſreputation) he ſent his Sattie in before to the Venetian General (the Galliaſſes hauing weighed anchor, and beeing come within halfe a league of his ſhips) with letters; which letters declared to the Venetians, That his voyage of warfare was by his Majeſties Commiſſion; and gaue them aſſurance of all reſpect and friendſhip, and that the French were the onely obiects of his attempts, for which he had ſufficient Warrant. To the two Engliſh ſhips he likewiſe ſent letters, to ſettle the diſquiet he conceiued their fears had put them in, and to giue them ſatisfaction, That his L buſineſſe was no way to diſturb their negotiations. But before the Satties boat could come aboord to deliuer the anſwer, the Admirall Galliaſſe of the Venetians diſcharged ſeuen or eight ſhots; the firſt of which lighting ſhort, was receiued as a ſalute, and returned with a piece from themwards: but ſome of the reſt hitting his ſhip, and one ſhot at his flag, together with the Satties ariuall and information, their intents were known; and Sr Kenelm to let them know, that his long forbearance was no apprehenſion of fear he had of their ſtrength and aduantage, but a ſtrengthning of his Cauſes juſtice, gaue them three or four broad ſides in a verie ſhort ſpace, which did ſo much ſpoyle both to the French and the Venetians, (who found pretence by this time, That their quarrell was the protection of the French, which they had vndertaken) that they were inforced to retyre, and fight at a more wary diſtance. In the mean M time Sr Kenelm playd ſo wel vpon their gallions, that the men ſtowed themſelues vnder hold, and left the Veſſels to their fortune without any guidance. The Galliaſſes then comming vp to their ſuccour, receiued ſuch a rude welcome, that they rowed away, to ſhelter themſelues vnder the Engliſh ſhips which lay in the road. Which policie was a ſure defence to them;

A them; for Sr Kenelme was ſo cautious, that he would rather loſe an opportunitie of offending his enemies, than take hold of it to his countrymens offence. The Galliaſſes thus leauing action, to be witneſſes of it only at that ſafe diſtance, the gallions were in great danger, their men being ſtowed vnder hatches; but that Sr Kenelme directing all his indeauors againſt the French (from whom hee had receiued the moſt dammage) gaue way to their quiet without much diſturbance, more than what proceeded from their owne feares; and perceiuing the French to come vp cloſe (their ſhips being luſty Veſſels, ſome hauing ſix and twenty pieces of ordnance) he firſt directed his two leſſer ſhips to deal with them: but quickly taking notice of the aduantage, ſent the rere-Admirall to their ſuccor; by which means the three ſhips boorded and took each of them a ſeuerall prize; the fourth French ſhip being run aground at
B the beginning of the fight: to which this ſucceſſe gaue an end after three houres. 1628.

It is remarkable, That in this fight not one of Sr Kenelmes men receiued a hurt to death, and of the Venetians and French there were ſlain ninety nine perſons: of whom one was commander of the Venetian land ſoldiers, a braue and generous man, whoſe loſſe was much lamented by them, and pittied by Sr Kenelme. The Admirall Galliaſſe of the Venetians was the onely one of thoſe four which the Venetians lent to the King of Spain, that returned from the battel of 88; where ſhe fought with Sr Martin Frobiſher in the Triumph of the Queen, whilſt the other three were ſunk or fired. Since when, ſhe hath been preſerued by putting in of new pieces where need required (as they ſay the Athenians did the gally of Salaminco) ſo that now nothing of her was remaining of thoſe times but the mould.

C This action and ſucceſſe of Sr Kenelme, though perhaps clear in it ſelfe, became queſtionable by the grand Signiors Miniſters, through the complaints of the French and Venetians; ſo that the Baſſa of Aleppo and the Cadi of Scanderon took hold of the occaſion, to practiſe & exact an Auanea vpon the Engliſh Merchants, taking from the Engliſh Conſul at Aleppo a large ſum, which he through fear of any ſhips retention deliuered without much reſiſtance, and ſo appeaſed and calmed that ruggedneſſe, which notwithſtanding proued afterwards an aggrauation in other cauſes.

For ſhortly after, William Bundock captain of an Engliſh ſhip called the Safe Bonaventure, hauing lien ſome time at Zant in harbor, went out to ſea for purchaſe, and fell vpon a ſhip trading betwixt Meſſina and Malta, that belonged to Haggi Caſſum, Coſmo Orlando, and others,
D ſubiects of the grand Signior, and had letters of ſafe conduct from the Imperiall Port. This ſhip Captain Bundock making prize of, the complaint arriued at the Port, to a ſudden diſturbance of Sr Peter Wyche the Engliſh Embaſſador there reſiding. Which complaint made the more noiſe, for that the Chimacham, Captaine Baſſa, and other principall miniſters pretended themſelues intereſſed therein, hauing committed monies to the charge of the Captain of the ſhip taken, for the redemption of Turkiſh captiues at Meſſina, Malta, and other places. Which particular pleading, with their aptneſſe to make any thing a cauſe for practiſes vpon ſtrangers, the Vizier ſent his expreſſe commaund for the detention of two Engliſh ſhips then in the Port, called the London and the William, ſo to compell a reſtitution. Vpon which the Embaſſador went to the grand Signiors Court, and after much arguing, and a
E ſecond repair to the principal Miniſters, making it appear what a diſreſpect it would bee to his Majeſty of England, and how vniuſt it would ſeem to the world, obtained a releaſe for the preſent, but without any final determination.

The Embaſſador in this buſineſſe made vſe of all faire endeauors and policies, for the gaining of time, til his delaies bringing him into ſome ſuſpition of a neglect, the Ianizaries anew inſenced the Vizier, by reuiuing it, with a pretence of loſſe which they receiued by Bundock; and procured a peremptory order, that all ſhould be made good preſently. Which Order being notified to the Embaſſador by a Chiaus, he replied, and ſent it by a Druggerman: which notwithſtanding gaue no ſatisfaction to the paſſion of the Vizier, who to inſinuate himſelfe with the Ianizaries, gaue way to moſt of their outrages. So that the Embaſſadour
F to preuent his houſe being aſſaulted, was inforced to giue 500 Dollars amongſt the Ianizaries, and ſo all was calmed again, till ſome following accidents of like nature reuiued the memorie of it.

G

The grand Signiors Letter to his Majesty of Great Britaine.

TO the glorious amongst the great Maiesties of the Christian Princes, and reuerenced of the great Potentates of the people of Messiah, Director of the eminent affaires of the Nation of Nazareth, true Lord of the Robe of Honor and Grace, and Patron of greatnesse and glory; CHARLES King of England, whose daies the Lord accomplish with happinesse. H

AT the arriuall of this our sublime and Imperiall Signet be it informed, That at the blessed Throne of our high Port, which at this present (by the mercy of the Diuine Majestie of the high and iust God, and the celestiall protection and care of our Prophet Mahomet Mustapha, the Sun of this and the other world) is the true sanctuarie of the Princes of the world, and the refuge of the Emperours of the present Age; there arriued your Maiesties Royall Letters, sent with your Embassadour, the honoured amongst the people of Messias, the esteemed and famous Lord, and your trusty Sir Peter Wyche, whose I end be happy. The intent whereof being by our honoured high Counsellors and Procurators declared and interpreted, and presented at our Imperiall Throne, wee haue entertained euerie particular affaire thereof into our perfect knowledge, and admitted the aforesaid Sir Peter Wyche, with your former Embassador Sir Thomas Rowe, to be conducted to our Imperiall Diuan, and with all acceptance, Royall curtesie, honour and gratitude, entertained and honoured; both of them being graced and renowned with hauing kissed our Imperiall Vest. The former we haue dispatched to your Maiestie with our Imperiall Letters, and his successor is setled in our blessed Port in charge of his Embassage; both of them be blessed, in regard they haue borne themselues loyally, and alwaies proceeded wisely, in all worthy and commendable K wise procuring the continuance of friendship, from both parts, and duely obseruing the Articles of our good Peace: The worthinesse of whom is deriued from your Maiesties most sincere affection; which is also the cause of the increase of our loue and respect. For as when the root of the tree is sound and nourishing, it bringeth forth good and perfect fruit, so the Seruants of gratious and wise Princes are alwaies discreet and prudent.

The grand Signior remits the custom of English cloath.

The chiefe particular in your Maiesties letters intimated (and of which also your Embassador Sir Peter Wych hath informed vs) is, That our Visier Bassa Mustapha being assigned to examine certaine grieuances in Natolia; ariuing in the parts of Smyrna, hath vniustly ta- L ken four thousand Dollars from your Consull. As soone as it arriued at our knowledge, That he had contrary to honourable Iustice, committed so vile an action, wee called him before our blessed throne, and to the example and discipline of others, chastised and gaue him his deserued punishment. For in this time of our blessed reign, it is not our Imperiall will that the least iniurie be committed, as in this particular it shall be manifested, and appear to reason.

He hath further solicited with vs, That the custome appointed to be imposed vpon cloath, which from your Realme of England is brought into our Dominions, might be disclaimed: which we haue also granted, and whatsoeuer else is due to loue and friendship, or answerable M to the termes of relation and commerce. From antient times to this we haue beene euer accustomed to obserue and honor those gratious Princes, that with sincere and loyall mindes haue shewn pure loue and affection to our renowned and Imperiall Throne; at whose requests wee

are

A are ready to imploy our ſublime care and attention, ſo that whilſt your Maieſtie ſhall continue in the direct way to be conſtant in loue and affection, our friendſhip ſhall certainly be, as it euer hath bin, firm and inviolable.

Your Majeſty ſhall vnderſtand, That Haggi Caſſum and Coſmo, Owners, inhabitants of our well fortified city of Conſtantinople (the Centre of our Empire) going in their Veſſell from Ligorne in Meßina, towards Malta, to redeeme certain Muſſulman Captiues, were incountred by an Engliſh Captain named William Bundocke, who boorded them, and tooke from them in mony, ſilkes, pieces of ordnance, with other goods and merchandiſes belonging to
B the ſhip, to the value of 34000 Dollars. Of which preſumptuous action (ſo contrary to our good peace and friendſhip) we being informed, haue thought it requiſite and neceſſary to acquaint your Maieſty, and haue therfore expreſſed it in theſe our Imperiall Letters, to the end that your Majeſty may cauſe the 34000 Dollars to be reſtored to the aforeſaid Haggi Caſſum and Coſmo the true Owners. Therefore it is neceſſary at the arriuall hereof, That in conformitie to the great loue and ſincere affection which your Majeſty beareth to our ſublime Port, your Majeſty cauſe the aforeſaid Captaine to reſtore the ſaid foure and thirty thouſand dollars to the iuſt owners, & that herafter the conditions and articles of peace and friendſhip
C betweene vs contracted and obſerued, may be eſtabliſhed and kept inviolable; as on our part the aforeſaid articles and agreements of peace and friendſhip haue bin, and ſhall euer be continued: whereupon peace and good correſpondence ſhal not only increaſe and flouriſh euery day, but produce more good and profitable effects.

To conclude, Your Maieſty knoweth that in no wiſe it is our conſent, That in the time of our Empire the leaſt iniury be done to any: and therfore if your Maieſty remain conſtant and firm in the friendſhip and ſinceritie profeſſed, and deſire we ſhould obſerue the good peace and correſpondence, your Majeſty will cauſe the ſaid Captaine to reſtore the full value of the money and goods to the wronged Owners; and puniſh the ſaid Captain, that hereafter none ſhal dare
D to commit the like hoſtile action, ſo contrary to our good peace and friendſhip.

Written in the middle of the moneth Rebiul Euel (which is November) in the yeare 1038; which is 1628.

Giuen in our well fortified and Imperiall City of Conſtantinople.

Vpon the receit of theſe Letters from the grand Signior, his majeſtie returned this anſwer E following.

CHARLES, by the grace of the moſt high God, King of Great Britain, France, and Ireland; the moſt puiſſant Defendor of the true Chriſtian Faith, &c.

F TO the moſt high and mighty Emperour, Sultan Morat Han, chiefe Lord and Commander of the Muſſulman Kingdome, ſole and ſupream Monarch of the Eaſtern Empire, &c. ſendeth Greeting.

Right

1628. G

Right high, right excellent, and right mighty Emperour: By your Princely letters, of the tenth of Nouember 1628, which came not to our hands vntill the month of June last, we haue vnderstood of the receipt of our Letters directed to your Majesty by our faithfull seruant Sir Peter Wyche, our Embassadour resident in your Imperiall Port at Constantinople, and with great and singular contentment haue taken notice of your Princely fauours, in the admittance of our said seruant and Embassador to your Imperiall presence, thereby expressing your firme and constant purpose to continue in strict amity with vs; which we do embrace with all Princely entertainement, and shall be ready H to performe all good offices which may conduce to the maintenance and preseruation of the same. In our said Letters we recommend vnto your royall Majesties iustice, That restitution and satisfaction might be made vnto our Merchants, trading in your Majesties Port at Constantinople, for Dollars, 4000, vnjustly, and with great oppression, extorted from our Consull resident in Smyrna, by Mustapha Bassa, vpon whom your Majesty writeth punishment hath been inflicted according to his deserts, but our Merchants haue receiued no satisfaction, as we expected out of your Princely justice they should haue had. And therefore they are againe become humble petitioners to our Majesty, to recommend their said complaint to your I Imperiall Majesty, desiring that justice may be done them accordingly. Whereof we shall not doubt, in as much as your Majesty maketh such royall expression of your desire and willingnesse to correspond in amity with vs. And whereas it hath pleased your Majesty, vpon the instance of our Embassador resident in your Imperiall Port, to take off the Narge vpon all such Cloath as shall be brought into your Dominions; therein your Majesty hath expressed your prudent respect to encourage our Merchants, for the inlargement of their trade into your Dominions, for the profit of both our Subjects, and the firme establishment of the loue, friendship, and good correspondency betweene our Kingdomes.

And to testifie with how great and intire affection we desire to entertaine, and continue K peace and friendship with your Imperiall Majesty, and as far as is possible and in our power to preuent occasions tending to the contrary, We haue caused that part of your highnesse Letter concerning the complaint made by Haggi Cassum and Cosmo Orlando, against William Bundocke our subject, That he should haue taken a ship belonging to the said Haggi Cassum and Cosmo, and taken out of her in mony, silks, artillery, and other goods belonging to the ship, to the value of 34000 Dollars, to be duely examined in our high Court of Admiralty, and by examination of the said Bundocke, and many others of his ships company, and some of the mariners belonging to the ship of Cosmo, taken vpon Oath: Thereby it appeareth, That he tooke not in mony and goods, aboue the value of 8500 Dollars, which we caused to be deposited immediately vpon the arriuall of the said Bundocke, in our Court of Admiralty, where there hath beene a Legall proceeding before our Judge. And for that our merchants trading in your majesties Dominions, vpon whose humble petition we caused the said mony and goods to be staied, had not receiued any authenticall Testimony, or Procura from the Proprietars of the said mony and goods; they wanted meanes to prosecute the suite, and in the meane time one Almarigo Saluettey, a subject of the Duke of Florence, hauing receiued a sufficient power and authenticke proofes from Cosmo Orlando, hath obtained sentence in our Court of Admiralty for all the said mony and goods, and is in possession of the same, M to the vse and behoofe of the said Cosmo Orlando; who being an inhabitant within your maiesties royall City of Constantinople, is subject by your majesties justice to be respondent to any others, which may pretend interest in the said mony and goods, and to that purpose our

Embassador

A Embaſſador is fully inſtructed, and ſhall receiue authenticall Coppies of the whole proceedings in our Court of Admiralty, to whom your maieſty may pleaſe to giue credit. And as it will plainely appeare vnto your Princely maieſty, with what affection and readineſſe we haue expreſſed our care and princely attention to do iuſtice to all your ſubiects, and to entertaine and cheriſh all occaſions to teſtifie our ſincere loue and friendſhip, and to maintaine the termes of our good neighbourhood and correſpondency betweene vs. So if your maieſty ſhall deſire to maintaine and continue the ſaid peace and friendſhip together with vs, we ſhall expect from your highneſſe the like correſpondency of iuſtice to our Subiects. Aſſuring your maieſty it B ſhall be much diſpleaſing vnto vs, when any occaſion ſhall be offered by any our Subiects, to call in queſtion the antient friendſhip inuiolably on our parts continued, betweene our royall Progenitors and the mighty Monarchs of the Othoman Empire. And although we cannot doubt but that your maieſty with like affection and ſincerity, doth embrace our Princely loue and friendſhip; yet our Subiects trading in your highneſſe Dominions, haue lately made humble Petition vnto vs, lamenting their wrongs, and vnſufferable iniuries and damages done vnto them by your Miniſters and Officers in Aleppo, by impriſoning their Conſull, ſealing vp their Warehouſe-dores, and extorting from them 50000 Dollars in mony at the leaſt, no cauſe at all being giuen by our ſaid merchants, or any of them, the particulars where- C of, our Embaſſador is able to informe your maieſty at large, praying your maieſty to take into your Princely conſideration, that ſatisfaction may be giuen for ſo great an oppreſſion, and the Offenders puniſhed, as in iuſtice their offence ſhould deſerue. Conſidering how much it doth import vs in our Princely honour, to take care that our Subiects may be righted in their iuſt grieuances, and that it is alſo neceſſary, in conformity to the loue, and ſincere affection that your maieſty beareth to vs and our friendſhip, that our Subiects may be maintained in their peaceable trade, within your Dominions, and freed from exactions, extortions, and oppreſſions. And that all ſuch as ſhall agrieue them therewith, may be held as contem- D ners and violaters of the ſincere Peace and Amity betweene vs, and receiue puniſhment according to the offence of ſo high a nature. We haue alſo thought good to ſignifie vnto your maieſty, That whereas of late yeares, diuers of our Subiects haue letten out to fraight vnto the Venetians ſome of their ſhipping, both aſwell to, as from your maieſties Ports, and doe therby beare the Colours of the State of Venice, to the great diſhonour of our Perſon and Soueraigntie, contrary to the expreſſe command by vs giuen vnto our Subiects, and do alſo deny to pay vnto our Conſull, ſuch antient duties as hath beene vſuall, and accuſtomed, and belonging vnto vs, by our Capitulations, and Commandements from your maieſtie in that be- E halfe, pretending that your maieſtie hath of late giuen your royall command vnto the Venetian Embaſſador reſident in Conſtantinople, That they ſhall neither pay thoſe antient duties, nor beare our Flags in our owne ſhipping, whileſt they remaine in their ſeruice. The particulars whereof we ſhall referre to our Embaſſador, expecting that your maieſtie, both herein, and in all other cauſes of our Subiects iuſt complaints, will do nothing contrary to the Law of Nations, the diſhonour of our ſelfe, and the preiudice of the amity and friendſhip betweene vs, which on our part ſhall be kept inuiolable. And ſo we wiſh you health and true felicity.

1629.

Giuen at our Royall Honour of Hampton Court, the ele- F uenth day of October, in the yeare of our Lord 1629, and of our reigne of Great Britain, France, and Ireland, the fifth.

The

1629. The grand Signior after much debating in counſell, made prouiſion to renew his War in Perſia, as the only deſigne of honor and conſequence. For though the Turkiſh Empire, ingaged in many troubles, required a judicious and more than common prouidence to keepe it vpright where ſo many dangers attempted it, and bearing more ſhew of declination now than euer; yet the diſgrace of Halil Baſſa's retyring from Arzirum, and the loſſe of the treaſure and munition there, ſo much inflamed the new choſen Vizier Huſſeruph Baſſa, that he minded nothing but a vindication vpon the Perſian. Neither did it want a ground of policie; for had he not declared himſelf ready to attempt ſomthing that way, there was appearance he might haue ſhared in Halil Baſſa's puniſhment, which was diſplacing from his great authority of Vizier: which notwithſtanding to Halil might not iuſtly be imputed a diſgrace, ſince the fault that drew on this puniſhment might not be want of vertue but fortune.

Huſſeruph Baſſa now great Vizier, hauing made prouiſion the year before, and all things being now in readineſſe, paſſed ouer with the army into the plains of Scutari on Aſia ſide, vpon the 27 of May, 1629; where he remained fourteene daies, and then proceeded in his march towards Babylon. In the mean time the Captaine Baſſa went forth with the gallies into the Mediterranian; where after many incounters by the way to Rhodes, whilſt he remained there in harbor, he ſent Huſſein the Sangerbegh of Lemnos with ſome veſſels to diſcouer the Enemies coaſts. Where Huſſein incountring with a veſſel of Genoa laden with ſpices, made prize of it, and hauing manned it with twelue Turks, ſent it toward the port. By the way a ſhip of London called the Golden Cocke, of which Iohn Barker was maſter, meeting with this Sattia, again repriſed her, and caried her away to Zant. Vpon which the Captaine Baſſa ſent his complaint to the Engliſh Embaſſador, to his great diſturbance, and almoſt a danger of deſtroying all Engliſh trade in the Leuant. For the Captain Baſſa preſently to reuenge & command reſtitution, cauſed an Engliſh ſhip called the Rainbow to be detained and carried into the Port of Scio. Which ſhip by the Embaſſadors endeauors, and the expence of ſome money, being releaſed, was vpon a new aggrauation of the former complaint againe detained: which drew new troubles vpon the Embaſſadour, that could not end in a ſucceſſe, vntill the grand Signior had diſpatched his letters of complaint to his Maieſty of England, drawne from the articles and capitulations of peace concluded vpon, and on the Engliſh part in this particular violated. Which letters had this form following.

The Grand Signiors Letter to his Majeſty of Great Britaine.

TO the glorious amongſt the greateſt Maieſties of Chriſtian Princes, and reuerenced amongſt the great Potentates of the people of the Meſſias, ſole Director of the eminent occurrences of the Nation of the Nazarits, and true Lord of the habit of Honour and Grace, and Patron of the appearances of Greatneſſe and Glory, CHARLES King of England; whoſe laſt days we pray almighty God may end in goodneſſe: Vnto whoſe Royal preſence ſhall be made known by our high and Imperiall Form,

WHereas from antient time vntill this preſent, the termes of good correſpondence haue alwaies bin obſerued with the happy Port and our Imperiall Houſe, and that the ſtipulated conditions of the Peace and amitie between vs, haue bin kept and obſerued, and that alwaies your Merchants that goe to trade by ſea, and your ſubiects ſhips which come to our bright Port, meeting at ſea with the Turkiſh ſhips and others, they haue not done them any moleſtation or damage; your ſaid ſhips comming and going alwaies in theſe parts with all friendly tearmes, and likewiſe there not being committed by our ſubiects any action or thing contrary to our Imperial Couenant giuen, nor proceeded againſt the conditions of our good Peace, which hath bin euer obſerued by vs in the year paſt: The Sanderbegh of Lemnos, the worſhipful among

A mong the noble Captaines, called Hussein Begh, he being charged by our Imperiall Command, to go and inquire news from the coast and enemies parts, and to get some knowledge of their fortunat actions; being ariued with his Galley neer vnto the said Enemies country, hee hath met with a pinnace of the Enemies which came from the parts of the Indies, laden with pepper, Cinnamon, Sugar, and other Indian commodities; and the men in the same seeing the said Captaine, and not being able to resist him, fled on shore and left the Pinnace empty. The said Captain took her, and made it his prize, and put twelue Turkish men of his into her, without taking any the least thing out of her, and so sent and directed her thus vntoyled, vnto our happy Port; and afterwards he returned to performe the seruice committed to his charge, to inquire after newes. Which twelue Turks conducting and bringing hither the said Prize, beeing arriued neer the Isle of Zant, subiect to the Venetians, an English ship called the Golden Cocke, of which Iohn B Barker was Master, incountred with her, and going vpon her, tooke all the Turks which were in the sayd Pinnace, into his ship, and examined them. They hauing told him the truth of the successe and case iust as it is before related, he permitted ten of them to go away, and with great vexation gaue the torture t o the two remaining; telling them, That they must say the said Pinnace was a prize taken from them of Algier, or otherwise he would cause them to be slain. Which vntruth the two men would not consent to say, but related the same to him in the manner aforesaid. Neuerthelesse he would not beleeue them, but tooke the said Pinnace vniustly out of their hands, and brought her to Zant, and caused to be emptied out of her into his own ship, all the wares and merchandises which were found in her, which goods amounted to 80000 Dollars. And after that, the said Captaine by his Letter to our high Port certified, That the said Master afterwards sold the said Pinnace in the said place of Zant. There came also one of those two that had been C tortured by him, and did tell and relate it all: and there being at that instant one of your Gallions detained here at our happy Port, and that on the behalfe our sea Generall, there were letters written and sent to the Gouernor of Zant, to the end that the said pinnace might be recouered out of his hand; there comming a letter and answer from the said Gouernor of Zant, That before the said letters were arriued, the said ship-master had already emptied all the goods of the said Pinnace into his owne ship, and had sold the said pinnace, and with great speed was departed for England. And this beeing intimated to our Imperiall presence, such deeds of the said ship-master being a thing proceeding much against the good peace and couenants, our Imperiall command was giuen, That your said Gallion should not be permitted to depart. But there being a new petition made to our Imperiall Throne by our aforesaid sea Generall, That your Embassador now here in our happy port prayed, that your aforesaid Gallion might be set at libertie, and that hee D would see the goods and merchandises recouered, that were vniustly taken out of the said Pinnace: We accepted of the petition and request of your said Embassador, and of the surety giuen to our sea Generall, That the ship-master who committed such an act so contrary to our good friendship, shall be punished and chastised, and that all the goods and merchandises which were taken out of the said Pinnace, shall be sent back to our high Port: We gaue our Imperiall command, That your said Gallion should be permitted to depart in manner. Because your Maiesty should be pleased not to consent, that any action be committed by any one, contrary to the same our good peace, we haue writ and sent vnto you this our present Imperial letter; at the arriuall whereof it is required, That according to the sincere friendship and louing affection which your Majesty beareth vnto vs, and vnto our happy House, you would vse your benigne care and fauour in this particular businesse, and to giue order that the said ship-master may be found, who hath violated the E couenants of the good peace contracted between vs; and to do so, that all the goods and merchandises may be wholly recouered, or the monies for the same, which were leuied and taken out of the said Pinnace, and that all of it may be consigned und sent hither to our high Port: and that such deserued punishment and chastisement may be inflicted vpon the said ship-master, who hath bin bold with such indignation to interrupt and cause the disturbance of the good friendship betweene vs, which now for so long time hath beene prosperously aduanced; that he may serue for an euident example, and a good lesson for after ages, that in time to come, not any one in the least maner whatsoeuer, may haue any more inclination, or bee disposed to preiudice our good peace. Finally, Since on our part and our Captains that go to sea, there is not any molestation or wrong done to any the ships or merchants your subiects, but that they go and come safely and securely into our Dominions, and the articles of the good peace and amitie between vs are punctually by vs obserued; it is euident and clear, that such vnreasonable and euill deeds committed by your subiects, shall F neuer be praised or admitted by wise persons. Therefore we remain confident, that your Maiesty will not only shew your loue herein, and not in any maner permit any conditions that shall tend to the preiudice of the good foundation of our said good peace and best correspondence, but also according to our Imperiall desire, will make, that all the aforesaid goods taken out of the said pinnace shall be wholly recouered from the 1629.

1629. ſaid Shipmaſter, and that the ſame be ſent with the firſt vnto our high Port, aſſuring your ſelfe that by giuing him his due puniſhment, your Majeſty will manifeſt and ſhew your ſincere loue and affection that you haue vnto our high Port. And ſo we reſt, expecting that you will aduiſe vs with the firſt to haue effected it all. G

Written in the Moneth of December 1629.

The Captaine Baſſa all this while practiſed according to his inclination, with Turkiſh violence and liberty in any vſe of occaſion, according to Menander (though I preſume the Captaines learning deriued it not thence) καιρος ισχυει των νομων μαλλον: Occaſion is more powerfull than Lawes. So that whatſoeuer he did, though vnjuſt, his pretences excuſed and gloſſed with a ſhew of lawfulneſſe; vntill his Majeſty of England returned a ſatisfaction to the Grand Signior by his Letters royall, wherein the puniſhment of Barker by impriſonment was notified, together with his Majeſties command for reſtitution (which was accordingly performed by the Embaſſador, notwithſtanding, ſome practiſes of the Venetian Baylo, who argued to deale vnderhand, and thereby obtaine ſome pretences of his owne, which the Embaſſador conceiued might be prejudiciall to his Majeſties juſtice) ſetled all theſe diſquiets by a releaſe from the Grand Signior. The forme of which releaſe, followeth his Majeſties Letter. H

I

CHARLES, by the grace of the moſt high God, King of Great Britain, France, and Ireland, the moſt puiſſant Defendor of the true Chriſtian Faith.

TO the moſt high and mighty Emperor, Sultan Morat Han, chiefe Lord and Commander of the Muſſulman Kingdome, ſole and ſupreme Monarch of the Eaſterne Empire, ſendeth Greeting. K

RIght high, right excellent, and right Mighty Emperor, There are now fifty yeares paſt, ſince a friendly correſpondency of peace and amity hath been contracted and continued betweene the Imperiall Othoman Family, and our Regall State, and is now without intermiſſion deſcended to the preſent time of your Imperiall Majeſty, and our Royall Selfe; which the eternall God continue with length of yeares and all other felicities.

Now foraſmuch as it is impoſsible that friendſhip betweene States ſo diſtant and remote, ſhould continue ſincere, without caſuall and vnpreuentable miſunderſtandings, vnleſſe there were vſed the interceſſion of interuenient Miniſters for negotiations; We for our parts in proſecution of the laudable proceedings of our Royall Progenitors haue continued our honourable Embaſſadors at your Royall Port, where at this preſent is reſiding for vs our noble Seruant Sir Peter Wyche, Knight, one of the Gentlemen of our priuy Chamber, being the eighth in number that hath ſucceſſiuely reſided for that purpoſe; whoſe mediations vpon all requiſite occaſions, as they haue beene heretofore, ſo wee haue expected, and do yet hope, that no occurrence, howſoeuer repreſented by ill affected Miniſters, ſhall diſappoint the expectation of ſucceſſefull iſſue of ſo neceſſary a meanes for continuance of peace and friendſhip. Yet we know not how it comes to paſſe, but of late time, wee finde that neither the preſence of our ſaid Embaſſador at your Port, nor other our publike Miniſters elſewhere reſiding in your Dominions, can preuaile to accommodate diſpatches for our honour, nor defend and keepe in ſafety the Perſons, and States of our Subjects the Merchants, from the injuſtice of your ſubordinate Gouernors, but that vpon euery falſe pretence and ſuggeſtion, they are ſo wrongfully troubled, and heauily oppreſſed, that beſides many great and important ſums of mony lately extorted from them, they haue beene generally expoſed to the fury of ſuch, as haue both diſturbed them in the proſecution of their trade, and endangered their liues and perſons. L M

And

A And whereas vpon former complaints of our said Subjects, we addressed our Princely Letters of the eleuenth of October last, to your Majesty, thereby representing sundry great and vnsufferable injuries and oppressions imposed vpon them by your Ministers, wherein we no way doubt, but vpon receit of our said Letters, your Majesty in your Princely justice will afford to our said Subjects such reliefe and reparation in their grieuances, as may stand with the league of amity and good correspondency so long and happily continued betweene vs, our kingdomes, and people, and we to settle some effectuall order for the peaceable and quiet trading of our subjects in your Dominions, as they may haue no further cause of lament vnto vs, nor we of representing the same vnto your Imperiall Majesty. 1629.

Since which time, vpon seuerall and great complaints of our Subjects, we could do no lesse out of the true sence of our owne honour, and justice to our Subjects, than to represent the same by these our second
B Letters to your Imperiall Majesty, thereby signifying the wrong and damage done them by your Captain Bassa in detayning one of their great Ships, bound for your Imperiall Port; vpon pretence that one Barker, a Subject of ours had taken a Sattie pretended to be formerly taken by Huzein Begh, Captaine of a Gally belonging to Corone: Herein as we are tender that our Subjects should not suffer vnjustly, so shall it alwaies be our Princely care that they neither offer nor doe wrong to the Subjects of any Prince in amity with vs. And therefore we haue giuen especiall order, That the said businesse be duly examined, and when the truth thereof shall be made manifest, then we shall proceed therein, as may be agreeable to justice, and the mutuall amity betweene your Majesty and Vs; meane while, we haue caused the said Barker to be imprisoned, and his person secured to answer the said fact. And because it cannot otherwise fall out during our warre with the King of Spaine, who is likewise in war with your Imperiall Ma-
C jesty, but that Ships of our Subjects which by vertue of our Commission, make prizes of such as assist that King with armes or any kinde of munition, or such Ships as are laden with Spanish goods, and for that purpose frequenting the Seas, as well within the Streits as without, may happily vnder that pretence commit some acts which may be offensiue to your Majesty. We in regard thereof, haue of late daies forbidden, and from henceforth do expressely forbid all our Subjects, (Merchants only excepted) to enter with their Shipping within the Steights: whereby may appeare our former intention, to liue in peace and good correspondency with your Majesty.

And further, we do likewise represent vnto your Majesty a great and insupportable injury of a high nature, done vnto our Merchants by your great Officers at Aleppo; who giuing eare to an vnjust complaint against our people, for a fact done by Sardinians, subjects to the King of Spaine, vpon your Ma-D jesties Subjects of Arsoes, and not admitting of any plea or proofe, produced on the behalfe of our Merchants to the contrary, did after many vnsufferable indignities, offered to the person of our publike Minister the Consull, to the great dishonour of Vs, and our Nation, most injuriously, and directly contrary to the Capitulations, imprison our said Subject in a loathsome dungeon for many daies, threatning to take away his life, with the liues of others of our People, to make slaues of the residue, and make seisure of their estates, caused his Druggerman in most bloudy manner to be murthered; and in conclusion, before he could be released, there was great sums of mony extorted from our said Subjects.

The former vnsufferable injuries (of which as yet we heare not of any satisfaction) and these last intollerable oppressions, all done vpon our Merchants and Subjects, are most displeasing vnto Vs, and we cannot in respect of our own honour, and care of the safety and protection of our said Subjects, passe them E ouer without due consideration, and representation to your Imperiall Majesty.

We do therefore hereby demand, and shall expect by your highnesse Princely order, such ample satisfaction in euery particular, as vnto justice appertaineth, to the end we may as our Predecessors haue formerly done, hold all good correspondency with your highnesse, in maintaining an Embassador our publike representant in your Port, and incouraging our Merchants to continue their trade into your Dominions; which otherwise, neither the respect of honour to our selfe, or profit to our Subjects, will suffer Vs to doe. And for the better satisfying of all complaints and setling of differences, We haue expressely imployed our trusty and welbeloued Seruant Iohn Wandesford Esquire, vnto your Princely Port vpon this occasion, whom we haue addressed to our Embassador Sir Peter Wyche there resident, to be presented to your Imperiall Majesty, with order and instructions to them both more amply, to acquaint your Majesty
F with all occasions of complaints and differences, praying your majesty to giue them audience and credence, and to establish some such effectuall order, for the behoofe of our Subjects in the quiet prosecution of their trade in your Dominions for the time to come, as may be agreeable to your high and Princely justice, and the good correspondency continued betweene vs. Giuen at our Royall Pallace of Whitehall, the 21 day of February. An. Dom. 1629, in the fifth yeare of our Reigne, of England, &c.

1629.

The grand Signiors Letter to his Majesty of Great Britaine.

TO the glorious amongst the famous Princes of IESVS, honoured among the great Potentates of the people of Messiah, Composer of the affaires of the Nazaren Nation, Lord of Honour and Grace, Possessor of Greatnesse and Glory; CHARLES King of England, whose end be in happinesse.

AT the report of this our sublime and noble Seale be it knowne, That heretofore the Vizier Hassan Bassa, when he was my Generall by sea, hauing declared to our happie Port, That sending the Begh of the Iland of Lemnos, called Hussein Begh, towards the Enemies coasts, to take information, and he with his Gally going in pursuit thereof, meeting with a Sattia of the Enemies, laden with Sugar, spicerie, and other Indian commodities, tooke her, and put into her some of his owne men, and sent her towards our most glorious Port: Which in the way comming neere vnto the Island of Zant, was met by Iohn Barker Master of the ship called the Golden Cocke, and by him taken, and the men that were therein put on land, and he lading the said goods and merchandises in his owne ship, hauing sold the Sattia in the said Island, sailed thence for England. Which act being altogether contrarie to the due termes of peace, friendship, and confederation made betweene vs, was then by vs aduised to your Maiestie by our Imperiall letters; requiring that the authors of such vnworthy action might be punished, and the goods of the said Sattia so taken, might bee recouered and sent to our Imperiall Port. Whereof notice beeing giuen to the most honourable amongst the Christian Lords, Sir Peter Wyche your Embassadour, President in our sublime Port, That when our Letter should come vnto you, and that you should vnderstand our Roiall meaning herein, your Majestie in contemplation of the great affection and loue which wee beare vnto you, when the said Master should arriue in your Dominions, would giue order that hee might presently be layd hold on, and for his transgression committed in an action so contrarie to our correspondence and friendship, be seuerely punished, and all diligence vsed for the recouerie of the said goods and merchandises so vniustly taken.

Now forasmuch as all the said goods and merchandises by the said Iohn Barker taken out of the said Sattia is recouered, as also the value of the said Sattia, and all intirely arriued at our Imperiall Port, and the same deliuered into our roiall Treasurie by the hands of the sayd Embassadour; and that of the particularities of the said goods and Sattia, there resteth no further pretence or demand against the said Barker, hauing receiued for the same an entire and full satisfaction; we haue written and sent you this our most affectionat Letter: The tenor whereof being declared vnto you, it is conuenient, that as your Majestie hath bin pleased to demonstrate in this particular your great loue and sinceritie which you beare vnto our happie Port; so in time to come, in all other our occasions, in contemplation of the good amitie and correspondence betweene vs, you will alwaies yeeld your most noble attention and fauour. For by the grace of the most high God, for our part, the most requisit tearms of our friendship shall be alwaies most readily obserued, and for whatsoeuer shall concern the conseruation of our sincere peace and correspondence, you shall alwaies see our exquisit diligence for the augmentation

A tation thereof; applying our desire and Imperiall deuotion to reserue a most affectionate regard to your Majestie. In this particular of the Prize, the Bailo of Venice hath made some small motion, pretending that the lading of the said Prize did belong to Venetian Merchants, and therefore demanded of vs authentique writing, that the goods be consigned vnto them: but in regard that his said pretence was vain and vniust, it was not regarded, neither was there giuen vnto him any such writing, neither were we pleased with his said vnreasonable demands. Therefore in conclusion, all the monie for the value of the said goods and merchandises, as also of the said Sattia, is by your Embassador Sir Peter Wyche fully and intirely de-
B liuered vnto vs, and all entred in our Imperiall Treasurie, and we rest fully satisfied. For which particular there remaines no further pretence against the said Iohn Barker: And so much be known vnto you.

Written the first day of the moneth called Ramazan, in the year 1041.

In the Imperiall city of Constantinople.

C The grand Vizier in October, following his first entrance on the design for Persia, after ma- 1630.
ny vsuall accidents of War, interruptions in his march, and so strong a resistance of his siege to the losse of the third part of his army, together with the approch of Winter (the common hinderer of the Turkes proceedings, as greatest enemy to their constitutions) hee withdrew his forces, and returning by the way of Aleppo, remained there some time to practise his tyrannies. Which had these grounds of policie: The Turks being men that conclude all actions from the successe, and thence allow them merit, grew into some suspition of the great Vizier; besides, their depredations being sometimes hindered by the enemies, other times recouered with the losse of some liues, most of their souldiers returned home poorer than they went forth; a strong motiue to a mutiny. To preuent which, and to keep his scattered troups
D in some order, as also to hinder the Persians further attempts, at Aleppo he vsed a tyranicall seueritie against all Nations during his stay there; the end of which was exaction onely of fines vpon his iudgements, which past vpon euery complaint, iust or vniust, which either malice or couetousnesse could beget vpon inuention; which soon became pregnant vpon obseruance of the grand Viziers disposition. With these exactions he inriched himself, appeased the muttering of his soldiers, and made himselfe popular: and the aspersion thrown vpon his valour, was presently lost in the opinion conceiued of his justice. The English Merchants felt more of this storme than any other nation; for the businesses before declared being reviued, pretences were soon found to imprison the English Consul there, and for the more terror to hang his Druggerman. An insolencie much distastefull to the Embassadour, who not-E withstanding as yet found not conueniencie for a complaint; the Viziers greatnes and fauor with the grand Signior bearing him out in all his actions.

The Captaine Bassa returning from the Blacke sea, after a dispute vpon his proceedings (some of which wanted a cleare iustification) was dismissed his place vpon the fourteenth of October; and another assigned to it, who was Master of the grand Signiors horse, a man of great esteeme, and reputed for a very good Turke, how rare soeuer it be. For Turkes (as Topographers obserued the Carthaginians to be perfidious Naturâ loci) are noted by Historians to be vitious for the most part, Naturâ populi.

The great Vizier could now no longer conceal his ill successe before Bagdat, but that it arriued at the Port, and caused the grand Signior to suspect him. For the Vizier had a long F time by his Instruments filled euery place (especially those remote) with reports of a prosperous proceeding; which multiplied at length to a rumour of certaine victorie. The contrarie of which appearing, his displacing was determined, and the aduancement of the new Captaine Bassa vnto it. Of which the Vizier receiuing a priuate information, strengthened himselfe in Mosul, and hauing won to him the hearts of the Ianizaries, resolued to refuse a surrender

1630. ſurrender of his authority. Whereupon a new Viſier Halis Achmat Baſſa was made; an old man of a pettiſh froward diſpoſition, and very couetous: who was commanded to prepare anew for the war of Perſia, and to be ſetting forward the next Spring. In the meane time, the old Captaine Baſſa was employed in Græcia to raiſe forces and ſend them away for Perſia: which proceeding, his death from ſickeneſſe hindred: an end vnuſuall for great perſons employed in that State, of whoſe leaſt action the State could be jealous. G

The French Embaſſador receiued this yeare a great afront, vpon occaſion of complaints by Turks that were taken by ſome French Ships, and carried to Malta. He appearing before the Chimacham to cleere the buſineſſe, was found ſo weake in his defences, that he was diſmiſſed without any reſpect, and his Druggerman impriſoned before his face in the Baſſa's houſe. On the laſt of September, a French ſhip from Marſeellis arriued at the Port, wherein came a new French Embaſſador, his inſtructions and buſineſſe of the ſame nature and conſequence as formerly were renewed. H

The new Captaine Baſſa made the entrance into his authority with an acceptable preſent; returning to the Port with foure ſhips taken in the Archipelago, three ſmall French ſhips, and one Sauoyard: hauing receiued vſuall coſtomes from all other ſhips he met, according to their ſeuerall values and conditions.

The old Viſier being diſplaced (who was yet abroad with the ſouldiers) there was publiſhed a ceſſation of the war with Perſia for two yeares. Which though really it proceeded from feare in the Grand Signior, yet was it interpreted, to ſaue his honour, a policy: for the ſouldiers by this ceſſation, hauing leaue and order to depart, and returne euery man to his owne home, and place of repoſe, they would be pacified from muttering, and be ſeuered the more eaſily from the late Viſier, if the diſgrace throwne vpon him ſhould exaſperate his high ſpirit to be obſtinate and factious. I

This politicke intention found a contrary end; for after the diſplacing of the great Viſier Huſſeruph Baſſa, (who had won the affection of the ſoldiery in generall) a diſcontent began to appeare and breake out amongſt them, and the more, in that they conceiued a diſtaſte againſt the placing of Haſſis Achmat Baſſa in that office; a man for his want of liberality towards them in great contempt and hatred. For though couetouſnes in Turks is a vice almoſt neceſſited, yet the ſouldiers finde the differences in their ſeuerall Generals, ſome being ſweet by diſpoſition, others for State ends. But this Haſſis Achmat Baſſa was the moſt noted with that marke of infamy, which (according to Sophocles) includes in it ſelfe all ſorts of barbariſme. K

This Viſier, endeauouring by many practiſes ſuting with his owne nature (which neither danger nor any thing elſe could alter) to pacifie the muttering of the ſouldiers conceiued, he had laboured effectually, and perfected the way of his owne quiet proceedings. But it hapned otherwiſe: for three daies after, as in this confidence he was riding to the Diuan, diuers Ianizaries and Spahies joyning themſelues ſuddenly together, tooke head towards the Seraglio, where they ſurpriſed him in the firſt yard, and ſtoned him from his horſe: which brunt for the preſent he eſcaped, by the help of ſome Miniſters getting into the Seraglio where the Grand Signior then was. Which notwithſtanding, proued no ſanctuary to the great Viſier, for the ſouldiers proſecuted their ſedition ſo violently, that the Grand Signior was compelled to appeare in perſon before the multitude, preſuming ſo, Regere dictis animos & pectora mulcere; queſtioning the cauſe of their inſurrection: which the ſouldiers would neither anſwer, nor receiue any other ſatisfaction from the Grand Segnior to pacifie them, but a deliuery of Haſſis Achmat Baſſa into their hands. Who being expoſed by the Grand Signior to their fury (which was the beſt ſecurity the Grand Signior himſelfe could at that ſuddaine make vſe of for his owne ſafety) was preſently by the ſouldiers, without any regard to his age or dignity, euen before the Grand Signiors face moſt barbarouſly torne in pieces. Which ſpectacle reuiued in the memory of the Grand Signior (who then likewiſe found himſelfe at the mercy of the tumult) the manner of the death of his brothe Oſman, no way differing from this but only in the difference of the perſon. L M

After their furies had thus ſacrificed the Viſier, the ſouldiers began for the preſent to be a little quiet: but the next morning the torrent of their violence increaſed, and rouled them headlong with more dangerous cateracts of inſolency; for entring the Seraglio in a diſordred

A dered tumult, they brought new feares vpon the Grand Signior, by demanding him in per- 1630.
son to deliuer them likewise the Mufty and the Tefterdar with many other persons in office:
but at the great instance of the Grand Signior, and in a manner submissiue intreaty made to them, the souldiers mitigated their intended punishment (for the multitude would haue all their acts called justice) which was death, and desired onely a displacing of those officers; which through feare of a worse progression in their vnruly course, was presently effected:
which together with putting into the office of great Visier the late Chimacham Regeb Bassa, againe quieted the storme for the present; the souldiers amongst themselues proposing a condition, That Regeb should hold the place of Visier no longer, but till the returne of Hus- reph Bassa, though himselfe and some others hoped it for longer continuance.

B These stormes had now a shew of being calmed, and gaue some liberty to the Grand Sig-nior for consideration: in which, his reuenge vpon such insolencies guided him to circumstances, that concluded Husreph Bassa to be the onely instigator of the souldiers to these attempts: the first was his disgrace by being displaced from his office of great Visier, which might exasperate him, and pricke forward his discontent to such actions, as might aduan-tage his desire of proceeding to a vindication of his lost honours: another was the opinion he had amongst the souldiers, to which he had won them by his liberality, and distribution of those exactions he had practised in Asia: a third was his keeping out vnder pretence of prouiding for the next Summers war; all which interpreted and wrested to the worst sence, confirmed the Grand Signior in a resolution for his death. For which Morteza Bassa had se-C cret instructions, that whereseuer he was found, he should be strangled, and his head sent with all priuacy to the Grand Signior. This command did not long want execution, but that within few daies after at a place called Tocat, in the Prouince of Amasia on the Asian side, Husreph Bassa yeelded to that fate, against which (though his policy and prouidence were great) he had not the power of preuention.

This act could not be so closely carried, but that the next day after his head was presented to the Grand Signior, the Spahies and Ianizaries arriuing from suspition to knowledge of it, suddenly made vp their many headed monster, full of resolues to take reuenge vpon eue-ry one that had beene directly or indirectly a mouer in this businesse of the death of their beloued Husreph. Their fury first guided them to the house of the present Visier Regeb Bassa, D where rudely entring, they demanded cause, why Husreph was put to death, and who were the Grand Signiors counsellors to such an worthy fact, towards a man that had so well deserued of the Grand Signior, and his State; that he had beene the protector of their liberties, and scourge of their enemies, as it were flattering his memory with many attributes of praise.
To which the Visier Regeb Bassa made answer with protestation, that he was wholly ignorant therof, it being contriued and resolued vpon at such time as he was out of place. Wherupon the souldiers compelled him to go with them to the Seraglio where the Grand Signior was that by him they might receiue some satisfying answer, & a grant of leaue to execute justice vpon the homicides. When they were entred into the first yard of the Seraglio, out of a respect to their King they staied there, sending in Regeb Bassa to expostulate the businesse with E him: who enforced through feare to be their vnwilling agent, did accordingly, and returning to them somwhat late in the euening, after declarations of the Grand Signiors promises to satisfie them in all that they demanded, his persuasiue Oratory preuailed for that time, and won them to withdraw themselues; till the next morning taking head againe, they compelled Regeb Bassa as before to be their speaker: who yeelding to necessity (which Valerius calls, humanæ imbecilitatis efficasissimum duramentum) seemed to the jealousie of the State, a ring-leader of this seditious faction.

By this time the multitude had fallen vpon new pretences, and from a grounded suspition of the Aga of the Ianizaries, (who at their first rising by conueying himselfe away had be-traied some guiltinesse) as also of the late Mufti and Tefterdar, together with an inward ser-F uant of the Grand Signiors, whose accusation was grounded only vpon the great grace and fauour he had with the Grand Signior (a misery that no court-minion could euer shun) they gaue instructions to Regeb, that their persons should be demanded of the Grand Signior, who fearing his own danger (that had now no preuention but the satisfying & appeasing of the tumultuant soldiers) answered the demand with protestation, that they were not in his custody.

Where-

1629. Whereupon a new and ſudden rumor paſt amongſt them, that the Grand Signior had murde- G red his three younger brothers: this kindled a new flame of rage that could not bee quenche but by preſenting the three brethren before them; which for that night quieted their diſorders.

The next morning they had an early conuention, before the houſe of the great Vizier Regeb Baſſa; where after he had a long time endeauoured to pacifie them by his eloquence (a gift he had) but whether he moſt vſed it ad hominum ſalutem & conſeruationem, or ad bonorum peſtem & perniciem (both which according to Cicero may be the vſe or abuſe of eloquence) is much to be doubted, their fury began to attempt farther; to preuent which he preſently deliuered into their hands the fauorite ſeruant, ſent to him the night before: Vpon him they acted a ſecond Scene of their Tragedie, tearing him in pieces as they had formerly the Great Vizier H Halis Achmat Baſſa. But the day being as yet not halfe ſpent, this was no abſolute pacification; neither had the Vizier or the Grand Signior a power ſufficient for their ſuppreſſion; but that in this height of rage, enforcing againe Regeb Baſſa to be their Oratour, they entred the Seraglio: where after ſome expectation they receiued by Regeb an anſwer like the former, and no more ſatisfying; notwithſtanding diuers the chiefe Officers endeauoured to appeaſe them, by taking their oathes vpon the Alchoran, That they ſaw the Grand Signior lay his hand vpon the Booke, ſwearing there ſhould be contentment giuen them in whatſoeuer they demanded. They were prompted now to a new ſuſpition, That the Grand Signior the night before had cauſed his three brethren to be made away, after they had been preſented to the ſoldiers. This emboldened them to an inſolence that had ſcarce an example: for no reſiſtance had power to I repell them from entring the Grand Signiors chamber: vpon which his feares expreſt themſelues, and as Virgill ſaid of Turnus when the fury appeared to him,

Illi membra nouus ſolvit formidine torpor.
Arrectæque horrore comæ & vox faucibus hæſit.

Which include this ſenſe:

A new amazement made his limbes to ſhake;
His haire ſtood vp, and words his mouth forſake. K

So this ſudden feare proceeding from the apprehenſion of an apparant danger, and preſenting to him anew the manner of his brother Oſmans death, expreſſed it ſelfe in a trembling and long ſilence. But as there is in Majeſtie a certaine ſecret vertue that commands ſubiects and awes their actions and attempts by a hidden working, ſo here it begot a rare effect. For no ſooner had the ſouldiers beheld their King; but his preſence woon them to the practiſe of their wonted reuerence, and ſuffered them only to lament the death of Huſſeruph Baſſa their loued Generall, finiſhing it with a complaint, That the King would ſo weakly yeeld to the counſels of them that contriued and perpetrated ſuch an euill as his death: deſiring withall, that they might again ſee the three brothers of the grand Signior: for that rumor, (on which the Vul- L gar feed eagerly, and

—— è minimo ſua per veſtigia creſcit)

had poſſeſt them with a ſuſpition they were made away. The grand Signior finding himſelf diſtreſſed, and in ſuch a ſtreit, ſuffered himſelfe to be humbled ſo farre by his fears, that hee gaue way to all their motions, and ſending for his three brethren preſented them to the ſouldiers. Who ſeeing them, bleſſed them with great acclamations, recommending them to the grand Signiors fauour: but with a peremptorie charge to the chiefe Officers and Miniſters about them (euen before the Kings face) to be carefull of the yong Princes ſafety; for if they M miſcarried, the ſoldiers threatned to require their liues from thoſe officers.

The ruggedneſſe of this ſtorm began now to be taken off, eſpecially by the grand Signiors command for finding out the Aga of the Ianizaries, and the Teſterdar; with rewards propoſed to the diligent executers of thoſe Commands. So that the next morning following, the

Aga

A Aga being discouered, was by order from the grand Signior deliuered into the hands of the Souldiers; who presently tore him in pieces, and hanged vp diuers parts of his limbs in seuerall places of the city. His death was the catastrophe of this tragedie, which had few spectators more than the actors themselues; for all men, especially strangers, were inforced to secure themselues as wel as they could within their own houses, till the violence of the storm being quite ouer, and a serene skie of peace and order appearing, they might without danger attend their seuerall occasions.

This mutinie left behind it the dregs of many euills, that poisoned the State, and made it breake out into many dangerous impostumes: which seueritie of reuenge on the grand Signiors part, for the losse of his officers and fauorit, durst not venture on to cure by violent in-
B cision, nor the policie of Counsellors practise vpon, by the digestion or purging of peccant humours. For if the grand Signior had anew prouoked the souldiers by punishment, hee had brought vpon himself and the Empire an ineuitable danger: for the soldiers were now grown perfect in the Tenent, Populus consentiens regnum dat & aufert; and if the counsell had preuailed, That Morteſa Baſſa (because the death of Huſſeruph Baſſa being the ground of the mutiny, there could be no perfecter quieting of the mutiniers, than the full reuenge of his death vpon the instruments of his death, the chiefe wherof was Morteſa Baſſa) should be deliuered vp to the souldiers; he being a gallant braue fellow, and in charge of General vpon the borders of Persia, would rather haue turned rebell to the grand Signior, and been a scourge to the souldiers, than yeelded vp himselfe a sacrifice to their fury; either of which would haue brought C the State into a new disorder, and consequently into a new danger of subuersion: For,

Ordine ſeruato, mundus ſeruatur, at illo
Neglecto peſum, totus & orbis abit.

Order being kept, the world is kept, but when
That is neglected, all the world's gone then.

The time now of the Turks Bayram was come, which helpt much to the setling of these disorders, which hauing found succesſe according to their vnruly wils of the souldiers, begot such insolence amongst the generalitie of common people, That all bad actions, thefts, 1632 and murders were coloured vnder the name of the souldiers, and executed many times euen in D the presence of the Magistrate. And of this danger the Dutch Embassadour very narrowly mist his share; for the souldiers hauing pretended their interest in certaine ships lading with corn (a trading there of the most dangerous consequence) taken in the Archipelago by Flemmings, and by them made prize of, assaulted the Embassadours house; who had no other rescue than to refer it to a tryall of iustice. Vpon which iudgement was giuen by the Captaine Bassa, that a present restitution should be made: but the Embassadour appealing to the great Vizier, it was ordred he should stand to a tryal before the Cadiliskars. The euent wherof, was that some formall restitution to the souldiers and many bribes to the officers (men seldome without that vice of which Diphilus saith; Niſi lucrum faceret, nemo quidem improbus foret: he purchased a costly peace, and remained for a time in some safety.

E The French Embassador likewise had trouble of the same nature, about a ship of Tripolis in Barbary bound for the Port. Which falling into the hands of some Maltæsi supposed to be French, a French ship that was bound out was detained for restitution; and after the like trouble and expense of mony, released to the Embassador.

Eleas Baſſa about this time, hauing for some time concealed his discontents (the grounds whereof were likewise vnknowne, vnlesse his Ambition, that whetted him to the desire of of honours, which either the grand Signiors jealousie, or the States, refused to bestow vpon him) declared himselfe in open rebellion, and hauing fortified in a towne called Magnesia, but two daies journey from Smyrna, hee much infested the Countrey round about with his outrages and depredations: insomuch that the Consull and merchants at Smyrna were inforF ced for their safety to transport themselues and goods to Scio.

The news of this rebellion no sooner arriued at the Port, but the grand Signior gaue order for the suppressing of it; and forthwith a sufficient strength was sent against the Rebel, vnder the conduct of seuerall Captaines: who falling vpon Eleas (being abroad in pursuit of prey) a fierce battel was fought, in which, victory fel to the grand Signiors party, most of the rebels being ſlain or taken, only Eleas Baſſa himſelf flying to Magneſia eſcaped, and hath euer ſince G kept himſelfe vndiſcouered.

This Victory was the induction to a new tragedy at the Port. For the Grand Signior amongſt other reuolutions, conſidering mens ſeuerall natures, and that ſome hauing ſcapt puniſhment, became the more confirmed in their euils, when contrariwiſe, quem pœnitet peccaſſe, penè eſt innocens; and that there were ſo many examples in his State, and amongſt his ſubjects, the memory of the ſouldiers late outrages reuiued, and preſented him Regeb Baſſa the great Viſier: who though in himſelfe innocent, yet was ſuſpected to be the firſt mouer in thoſe tumults, whithout whom, the other wheeles muſt of neceſſity haue ſtood ſtill. One argument to conuince him, was his not ſubmitting himſelfe, which had he done it, had beene a voluntary accuſation of himſelfe. But from theſe circumſtances he was condemned, the H
Grand Signior vſing Dantes diuiner ſentence, to this bad purpoſe, Abſoluer non ſi puo, chi non ſi pente.

Vpon this ſentence giuen before his arraignement, he was called to his execution into the Seraglio, vnder pretence of ſome ſerious affaires; where he was inſtantly ſtrangled vpon the ſeuenth day of May, and the ſame day another great Viſier made, named, Molamet Baſſa. This act of the Grand Signiors cauſed ſome feares, That the ſouldiers would againe mutiny, to reuenge his death that ſuffered it for their actions. But Morteſa Baſſa being abroad in Perſia with ſome part of them, and the rendeuous of the reſt, that went out againſt the Rebell Eleas Baſſa, I not yet fully diſſolued, the want of number to perfect ſuch riotous attempts, might be the occaſion of their quietneſſe; which ſcarce appeared diſturbed in any the leaſt murmuring.

1633. The Captaine Baſſa being a man inſinuated into the very boſome of the Grand Signior, became the chiefe mouer in many actions of this yeare: the firſt had relation to the Engliſh chiefely, and one the moſt lamented for the ill ſucceſſe, which cauſed a loſſe not to be repaired, the order of which followeth. The Captaine Baſſa beeing abroad with the ſquadron of gallies in the Bay of Caſſandra, there lay then at anchor in the ſame Bay two Engliſh ſhips, called the Hector, and the William and Raph, which ſhips were laden with corne. Vpon Whitſunday in the morning, by the breake of day, the ſhips diſcouered thirty ſayle of gal- K lies to come ſuddenly vpon them: whereupon they weighed anchor, got vp their yardes, and fitted their ſhips, and towed out; ſo that they were two miles from ſhore when the gallies came thwart them, and it being a flat calme went fairely by them; the ſhips ſaluting them peaceably, but receiuing no anſwer, till the Baſſa put forth his bloudy colours, and comming betwixt them and the ſhore, by thoſe ſignals declared his intention of fight, hauing put his gallies in forme of a halfe Moone. The William and Raph (of which one Maſter Harris was Maſter) being the neeremoſt, and diſtant but musket ſhot, the Baſſa diſcharged his prowes twice, the reſt doing ſo likewiſe: when preſently the Bey of Rhodes layd hard aboord with foure gallies that diſcharged their prowes at the boording: with which they did ſo much L ſpoil, that the Beyes men accounted the ſhip won, and poſſeſt themſelues of the cuddy round houſe, and great cabin, carrying away ſome of the men from the Captaines quarter into their owne gally. By this time the Captaine Baſſa, and the Chiahar, with three other prime gallies, did the like by the other ſhip the Hector; who at firſt encounter beat them off, euen from their owne ordnance; and enforced the Captaine Baſſa to leaue his owne gally, and betake him to the maine maſt; that, had there beene men enough in the ſhip, they might haue taken the Admirall gally eaſily. The ordnance of the other ſhip beginning to play againe, there was ſome hope of victory; but the maine ſtrength of the gallies comming vp and encompaſſing them, they were enforced to vſe all their guns at once, which for want of cooling fired their ſhips, the Admirall gally aduantaging it by being faſtned in one of their ports: ſo that ſeeing themſelues in flames (the quenching whereof was but a vaine endeauour) hol- M ding out to offend the gallies as long as they could, and plying their fireworkes, at length being no longer able to endure it, firing ſome barrels abaft the maſt, to make ſure that nothing ſhould be ſaued to aduantage the enemy, after foure times boording and cleering, all the men that remained aliue, forſooke the flaming veſſels, and yeelded to the mercy of the water or

the

A the enemy, refuſing in this deſperate ſtate, like good Chriſtians, to be their owne executio- 1633.
ners. Some of them were killed as they endeauoured to get to ſhore: The two Captaines, Maſter Harris and Maſter Wilde, with others to the number of threeſcore, were taken vp and put to the oare: ſo the ſhips (after their decks were burnt) ſinking, the fight ended, which had continued foure houres. There were ſlaine of Turks in this ſea fight, one thouſand and ſeuen hundred: amongſt whom were diuers Beghs of great note; the Captain Baſſa himſelfe eſcaping very narrowly, not without ſome hurts, and the Admirall gally with many others made vnſeruiceable.

The Captaine Baſſa returning to the Port, hauing inſinuated himſelfe into the fauour of the Grand Signior, preferred his complaint, which included a reſtitution from Engliſh Met-
B chants: howbeit the actors in this were largely puniſhed, for thus raſhly ſhewing their Engliſh valour, by the loſſe of their ſhips, and their miſerable captiuities: ſo that they might be conceiued capable of no more, but death: the execution whereof had beene next to liberty, a mercy. There was ſome pretence of plea againſt the Capitulations of Peace on the Engliſh part in this point broken, for that the voyage of the two ſhips was vnlawfull: but the Embaſſadours endeauors preuailed, to haue the ſeuerity of that opinion mitigated, and conſtrued otherwiſe, by declining it to the perſons; who notwithſtanding, had his compaſſion ſo farre, that he laboured earneſtly for their redemption, and procured Letters from his Majeſty of Great Britaine to the grand Signior in their behalfe. The forme whereof followeth.

C

CHARLES, by the grace of the moſt high God, King of Great Britain, France, and Ireland, the moſt puiſſant Defendor of the true Chriſtian Faith.

D TO the moſt high and mighty Emperor, Sultan Morat Han, chiefe Lord and Commander of the Muſſulman Kingdome, ſole and ſupreme Monarch of the Eaſterne Empire, ſendeth Greeting.

WE haue receiued aduertiſement from our Embaſſadour reſident at your glorious Port, That this Summer your Captaine Baſſa being at Sea, aſſaulted with his whole fleet, two of our Merchants ſhips, and forcing them to their defence, did with the ſpoile of many of his gallies, and with the deſtruction of many hundreds of his men, gaine nothing in the end, but the burning of both the ſhips, and the recouering from the Sea,
E of a few reſolute men, whom he hath vnworthily made his ſlaues. If they had committed Piracy, or done any violence or wrong to your Subjects, we would not protect or defend them in any ſuch offence, but would our ſelues haue executed ſeuere iuſtice vpon them, as heretofore vpon ſuch like complaints we haue done: But being now aſſured that theſe ſhips proceeded in a faire and peaceable manner, not for ſpoile or ſtealth, but for trade, as Merchants vſe in thoſe parts; and that ſo ſoone as the Baſſa came in ſight, the Sea-men did him honor and ſaluted him with the vſuall reſpect ſhewed to friends; & the Merchants in homage to your Imperiall power, offered him a preſent: We can no other wiſe eſteeme of the Baſſaes ho-
F ſtile incurſions, without ſummons, & in fury, but as a moſt vniuſt act, and moſt diſhonourable in a Commander, vnder ſo great a Monarch, whoſe power he diſparaged by ſo vnworthy and vnequall an engagement. That then we expect from your Majeſties Imperiall iuſtice, and whereof we aſſure our ſelues in regard of the antient amity betweene our Crownes, is, That

1633. you will make in this case a braue example, both of your clemencie and moderation, in setting free all our subiects; and of your Princely indignation against him, who to so great disparagement of your Magnificence and his owne Honour, committed so vnworthie and so foule an Act. G

This will assure and fortifie that correspondence which hath so long been profitable to the interests of both our States, and will encourage and encrease more and more the free commerce of our Subjects, to the great inriching of your Customes: And finally, will magnifie in your vertue the lustre of the Othoman greatnesse in the eyes of all the world. This Wee commend to your Imperiall wisdome, and expect the good successe. H

Giuen at our Royall Palace of White-Hall, in the yeare of our Lord 1633: being the ninth yeare of our reign of Great Britaine, France, and Ireland.

These Letters being deliuered by the Embassadour, preuailed but little to the end intended, which was redemption of the Captiues: but rather reuiued the memory of the losse suffred on the grand Signiors part by the action of the two ships, which on the sudden wrought him to a determination of putting them all to death. But the execution was preuented by the diligence of the Embassador, and some of them deliuered to him vpon securitie. In the meane time a Decree was made in his Majestie of great Britaines Court of Starre-Chamber, that prohibited all English from Corn trade in the Levant; thereby to giue the Grand Signior a fuller satisfaction, and to preserue the other Trade from an vtter dissolution. By this the Embassador conceiued new hopes to perfect his worke of Charitie toward the Captiues. But the two Captaines, before any thing could be brought to effect, were made vncapable of any benefit but buriall and memory; the one dying in the English Embassadours house, the other in the Baneo. I K

In this year a sudden fire breaking forth (the original whereof though diuersly suspected, could haue no clear discouerie) made such a gap in that part of the City of Constantinople, that it is left as it were of purpose vnbuilt, to confirme the report which the Turkes giue of it, that it consumed in a very short space seuenty thousand houses. A monument which may aptly authorise that nice Etymon of fire, quod nihil gignit:

Nataque de Flammâ corpora nulla vides.

The Persian War was this yeare renewed with much preparation and noise, but little successe: the Persians being so accustomed to victorie, that they seemed to command it, & euen in the beginning of an attempt concluded the euent of a conquest. In this confidence of their fortune (the attendant on Vertue) they besieged Van, a place of great consequence vpon the confines neer Diarbecker. The newes whereof arriuing suddenly at the Port, prouision was made for the succor thereof, as also for a farther progresse to action in Persia: Orders beeing sent to all the Beghs in Asia, that they should repaire to the succour; who should meet at a place appointed for the rendeuous, with eight thousand Ianizaries and Spahies to bee joined with them. L

This resolution of sending the souldiers forth from the Port (by reason of a declaration of the grand Signiors intent to go himselfe in person the next Spring) was not affected; and the keeping of some souldiers at home had another secret ground, of preuenting a danger, in respect that strangers were so much discontented, that their passions betrayed them to some suspition. The grand Signior notwithstanding, some few daies after sent the great Vizier forth with a part of the Militia: who after he had proceeded fourteene dayes march, meeting with the report of Vans being taken by the Persians (who were now increased likewise in M strength

A strength and numbet) his iudgement commanding his valour, hee withdrew himselfe by the way of Aleppo; where hee remained some time, vnder colour of staying the further proceeding of the Persians. And that hee might not returne without the doing of some thing that might render him honourable to opinion, he wrought so, that a notable fearefull iudgement was executed vpon the Cadee there, a man that was learned, and so had practised himselfe to sell justice honourably, to the best aduantage of the buyer, and somewhat cheaper than other Ministers had formerly done. This had so great a shew of an offence, that it caused him to be arrested by the grand Signior, and as he was found, so caried in fetters to be a slaue at Cyprus; his haire being first cut, and the great estate of which he was possessed, seised vpon and confiscate to the vse of the state: who rather complied with the seuere proceedings against this great Iudge for that end; and though his crime were not personall, it was a politique act of state, for the vse which the grand Signior had of his mony, to satisfie the soldiers and preuent a mutiny. 1633

B

The suspition had of strangers, began now to moue the wheeles of some practises vpon them. The first whereof was, the searching of all Christians houses in generall, as well subiects as strangers, that the intention of the State might not so easily be discouered; & the longer they were kept in suspense, the greater their fears would be, and work the more vpon them to the aduanrage of what was intended:

C —— Multos in summa pericula misit
Venturi timor ipse mali.

So the fears of all men, joined with their ignorance of what would be the euent, made counsell vseless to the preuention of what they most feared would follow. The officers imploied in this search of houses, sealed vp many, and after three or four dayes continuance of it, a new terror was added to the former, to increase the apprehension by an example. For they hauing taken one that being borne in that countrey, had for many yeares together passed for a Venetian merchant, and had married one of his daughters to a Druggetman of the Venetian Embassadors, (by which he had better conueniencie for his practise in the trade of merchandise)

D they caried him to prison, and on the day following, after some formal triall and a sentence of death were passed vpon him, they returned him home to his owne house, and there vpon a turret which he had made on his house, hanged him; putting forth a red flag for a signall, but of what, the amased beholders were stil ignorant: vntil at length it was vnderstood, that the flag was a signe only, whereby the grand Signior might discern, that the merchant was executed, and his house and goods confiscate, which the next day were seised vpon by the officers, and all things portable caried away.

This entrance being made, the same day they proceeded further, in apprehending all stranger merchants, in whose houses they had found a sword, a gunne, or pistoll, or any the least weapon whatsoeuer; making it so criminall, that judgement was presently giuen for their

E deaths, who would not yeeld to purchase their liues with mony; and but a very short time allowed for confideration. But this was condescended to, and the ransome of euery Merchant of the foure Nations, English, Venetian, French, and Dutch, set at 2000 dollars apiece. The fears still of what end these proceedings would haue, increased by new actions that seconded the former, and had shew of greater consequence; as if they had ordered the mischiefe intended, to haue its gradation, and so conclude. For now the Captaine Bassa sent to the foure Embassadours to conuent them into the Arsenall: Whither they being come, the Bassa appearing, desired their expectance of what he should say when hee returned from the Graund Signior to them. Their doubts questionlesse were great, and they had no time for any other resolution, than forthey were, where they were sure seueritie of justice would be vsed if they were delinquent; and libertie in outrages would find but little suppression by the honorable difference of their persons,

F —— Gaudet patientia duris.

1633. persons, or the not there much regarded Law of Nations. After they had some time expected the Captaine Bassa, returned, and declared, That the Grand Signior hauing had information of a new house with churches joyning thereto, built by one of the Embassadors, required a certaine acknowledgement, which of them was the offender in so high a nature, as to do such an act without a speciall leaue from the Grand Signior. To this the French Embassador after much pausing (thereby shewing his vnwillingnesse to confesse it) gaue answer that the building was his; and the other Embassadors so far as they might, spake in fauour of it. But the Captaine Bassa with much aggrauation of the fact, vrged into what wrath the Grand Signior was fallen, and that he could not be altered from his opinion conceiued of it, that it was a presumptuous contempt in the Embassador of the Grand Signiors authority: the Captaine Bassa declaring likewise that he had vsed many faire endeauors, almost to his owne danger, to pacifie his Master, and settle him in a better conceit, both of the fact, and the Embassador: after which, he dismissed them, and departed. But before the French Embassador could arriue at his house, the people that were appointed by the Grand Signior to pull downe the Chappell, had ouer-done their command, and began to pull downe the whole house: Vpon which the Embassador hastily returned with his complaint, that preuailed with the Captain Bassa, to send an officer for their restraint; but declaring withall, that the Grand Signior would not be satisfied any way, but by pulling downe the Chappell; which the Embassador did the next day by his owne seruants, and hired labourers, to preuent further trouble, and preserue (in what might be) the materials vsefull.

The minds of all men began now to be a little settled in a quiet; presuming, That this particular act of the French Embassador was the only ground of all these troubles: and this submission of his to the Grand Signiors order, would be an absolute pacification of his fury: since, pro peccato magno paululum supplicij satis est pati, a small punishment may satisfie a great offence: but the punishment here had the same proportion with the offence, and yet, not thought sufficient. For three daies after, the foure Embassadors were againe conuented by the Captaine Bassa at the Arsenall: whether being come, He shewed an order to them from the Grand Signior; whereby was required vpon paine of death, That the Embassadors should deliuer vp what armes they had in their houses, to an officer appointed for that purpose, which should be sent to them, without reseruing any. The order being peremptory, and the Captaine Bassa intreating them to comply for all good respects sake, it was performed accordingly; the officer receiuing what armes were deliuered to him, without any further search or questioning; only the French Embassadors house throughly examined: which he endeauoured to conceale for his honour. All this while the Merchants lay in prison, some only hauing liberty to prouide mony for their ransomes: which in two daies after was paied in, the proportion belonging to the English amounting to twenty thousand Dollars, by which, the generall may be guessed at. After the Merchants of each Nation were restored to their houses and encouraged againe to go on in their trade, the officers fell vpon all other sorts of people, exacting from them to the vtmost of their ability: so that the end of one misery was the beginning of another: the purchasing of their safeties an impouerishing of their estates. In which confusion many became voluntary sacrifices to preuent (as they conceiued) worse compulsions: neither needed they here to search for instruments;

Mori volenti deesse, nunquam mors potest.

They that were willing, found it readily presented in any forme; and the Grand Signiors inclination was long before discouered to be bloudy. The Ministers besides that serued in this execution, the Captaine Bassa generall of the Sea, the Bostangi Bassa chiefe officer of the Kings gardens, and an executioner of his immediate commands, the Capigi Bassa one of the chiefe Porters of his Seraglio, the Cadi of Gallata, the chiefe justice of that place, with others, were of like disposition; and flattered the Grand Signior in these tyrannicall practises. For

——e son tyranni,
Che dur el sangue & ellauer de piglio.

— they

A 1633.

—— they are tyrants, which
Kill and rob others themselues to enrich.

This being the present state of things in the Imperiall Port, the English Embassador in the behalfe of his King and Nation, did some offices to make knowne the resentment which his Majesty of Great Britain might haue; and that if two small ships had done so much mischiefe, more might be done with two hundred: declaring withall to the chiefe officers of the Port, the ridgednesse of the fact so fully, that not one would stand to the defence or justification of the same, but rather from their owne mouthes condemning it, in so much, that the
B course of the proceeding was knowne to be repented, and the deaths of them threatned that were the projectors of such a disturbance. This gaue some encouragement to the Embassadors to demand a satisfaction by restitution, as also security for future times. To the first, answer was made by the Captaine Bassa in the name of the Grand Signior, That whereas their weapons were brought before the face of the Grand Signior, they could not be with his honor returned againe; but they might haue others freely: and for restoring of the mony extorted from Merchants, the Grand Signior had such vrgent occasions for it, that at the present it could not be well done; but a large recompence should be made in due time. Thus did these Turkish policies when they had no other colour, plainly declare themselues violences; and the Embassadors were now sued to and intreated by the Captaine Bassa in the name
C of the Grand Signior, that they would speake no farther of the businesse, but that all might be forgotten, and no farther resentment had: and it should be confirmed for the future, that all due respect should be giuen to them, and especiall care had of the Merchants. In token whereof he presented them seuerally with vests in the name of the Grand Signior, according to the custome when he honoureth and admitteth any one. The French Embassador only shared not in these testimonies; for the small satisfaction he gaue, was pretended the chiefe cause that a suspition was begotten of others; and their weapons being taken away, was a preuention by disabling them from joyning in any attempts. For the Grand Signiors tyranny had caused all men to feare him; necesse est vt multos timeat, quem multi timent.
D But such were the distastes conceiued against the French Embassador by the Grand Signior, that his death was determined; the execution whereof was with much danger to the diswaders deferred, and afterwards vpon aduice changed to another punishment. Yet there was no other knowne reason for this hate of the new Embassador, but what hath formerly beene related; so that it seemed rather an antipathy in the Grand Signior, that would relish nothing of the Embassador Count de Marchenilles well, though he could or would answer nothing for his dislike, but like Catullus, Non amo te Volusi, &c.

I do not loue thee Volusius, but for what,
E Know not: I only know I loue thee not.

Some small time at length made a perfect discouery of the true foundation, on which these practises were built. Which was this; The former Embassador Mounsieur de Cesy had declared himselfe ready to comply with occasions, and serue necessity to best aduantage; in which he seemed to haue more regard of his Nations, than his owne particular estate: for during the time of his emploiment, more through the many offences committed by the French, (for which the Grand Signior would haue satisfaction) than through any personall profusenesse, he borrowed so much, that his debts were summed to three hundred thousand Dollars, of which a share belonging to the English was sixty thousand Dollars. This being signified,
F the French King sent his command in an expresse to the towne of Marseilles, that they should comply with this debt, and gaue the towne a priuiledge to leuy three per centum, vpon the trade for six yeares: which was accepted of, and to principall men (as Deputies of the towne) arriued soone after at the Port to take order in the businesse; bringing with them thirty six thousand Dollars to repart amongst the Creditors. Which mony the new Embassador, baſſador Count de Marcheuilles ſeized vpon, and conuerted to his owne vſe, without any regard to cleer the old Embaſſador away: ſome of which perhaps was emploied in his new buildings. Vpon this there began a difference betwixt the two Embaſſadors; and the Creditors finding no other reliefe, had recourſe to Turkiſh juſtice. Where hauing entred and proued their debts, the old Embaſſador to diſcharge himſelfe, made the two Deputies liable thereto; who were ſtreight committed to priſon, and the Embaſſador hard put to it, for the reſtitution of the mony. This was the certaine foundation of all the former miſchiefes, which for the preſent ceaſed, three French ſhips being ſtaied in the Port for ſatisfaction, and their goods imbarqued for the payment of theſe debts. G

1634. The Captaine Baſſa had now more and more inſinuated himſelfe into fauour with the Grand Signior, and the great Viſier being yet abroad with the army, the Captaine Baſſa was the only man to impart the ſecret counſels of the grand Signior. Among which, a fear of new inſurrection of the Ianizaries and Spahies, when the army ſhould returne mixing it ſelfe; all waies of preuention were ſcanned, and at length the following practiſed. It was remembred, that in their late rebellion they demanded the liues of the Aga, the fauourite, and the Mufti: the two former wherof they had, but the later being conueied away, was ſanctuaried, and preſerued himſelfe ſecretly, vnder the Grand Signiors protection. Which ſafety became his ruine: for in his confidence of the Kings fauour he was now eaſily taken, and by the command of the Grand Signior put to death. The report whereof arriuing in the campe, gaue ſuch ſatisfaction, that the ſouldiers declared themſelues appeaſed before they had begun any diſturbance. H I

By the prouocation of the Coſſackes and Polackes (who had committed ſome outrages vpon the confines, and in the Blacke Sea) the Grand Signior reſolued vpon a war with Poland; and ſent his Expreſſe to all the Baſſaes on the Europe ſide, to meet him with their forces at Adrianople, where he appointed the rendeuouz. After which, on the nine and twentieth of Aprill, the Grand Signior withdrew himſelfe to his tents, which were pitched two miles out of the towne; where he remained ten daies, and then ſet forward in his march towards Adrianople, where hee remained till all the forces of the Baſſaes were joyned to his army. The Captaine Baſſa in the meane time went forth with the gallies to repreſſe the farther attempts of the Coſſackes, and from thence he had inſtruction to come by land to the generall rendeuouz. The Baſſa of Boſna ſet forward with his troups, conſiſting of almoſt ſeuen thouſand, horſe and foot, and marched to Valliovah, and thence to Belgrade, where the Baſſa of Temeſwar, joyning his forces with thoſe of Belgrade and Boſna, they held themſelues encamped on the South ſide of the towne, giuing notwithſtanding, leaue to the Ianizaries, Spahies, and Venturiers, at their owne diſcretion to go before towards the generall rendeuous. Here they expected Murath Baſſa, who fiue daies after came in with a few foot, but foure thouſand horſe of the Spahi Timariots; the moſt braue horſes and dexterous men in the vſe of their armes that the Grand Signior hath. From thence they marched all together to Adrianople, where the Grand Signior hauing remained forty daies, whilſt a meſſenger was ſent into Poland with certaine articles and capitulations, he receiued an anſwer to his ſatisfaction. For conceiuing an honourable peace to be much better than a reuenge by an vncertaine war, the conditions which were ſent by the Grand Signior included ſo much for his owne honour, and ſo little for the King of Polands diſhonor, that they were ſoone agreed vpon on both ſides, with a mutuall liking. Vpon which agreement the army was diſmiſſed, and the Grand Signior returned to Conſtantinople. So the great preparation to a proceeding of a high nature burſt it ſelfe with ſome noyſe, ſcarce leauing behinde it the leaſt impreſſion of an action. K L

So ſoone as the Grand Signior was returned to Conſtantinople, vpon ſome new diſtaſtes conceiued againſt the French Embaſſador Count de Marcheuilles, the Captaine Baſſa gaue in an information; which ſo exaſperated the Grand Signior, that he commanded preſently the Embaſſador ſhould be ſent away into France. Whereupon the Captaine Baſſa conuenting him to the Arſenall vnder colour of buſineſſe, an expreſſe order was preſently giuen (without permitting him to ſpeake with the Baſſa) to conduct him into a boat and to carry him aboord one of the aforeſaid French ſhips that were arreſted; which ſhip was commanded M within

A within three houres after to set saile and depart, in a most confused and disorderly manner; not allowing the Embassador so much time as to dispose of any thing in his house: Neither were any suffered to be imbarqued with him more than two seruants. Yet his Secretary and the rest of his family were suffered to remaine free in the house, till they had accommodated all things to follow him with the stuffes, and to ouertake him at the Castles.

This dishonourable action stirred vp new feares in the other Embassadours, that the like would be practised vpon them. But those feares vanished quickely, by a declaration of the grand Signiors Order, That the Captaine Bassa should satisfie them all seuerally, of the good friendship and correspondence which he would preserue with their Masters, and the esteeme he had of their persons. Requesting them but to vnderstand it truly, that the French Embas-
B sadour onely offending, hee alone should bee punished; and that of the offence the French King should be thorowly informed. It was ordered likewise, that the old Embassador Monsieur de Cesye should execute the Charge; which hee condescended vnto, and all the former disturbances were setled in a second quiet. It was expected that this dishonour would cause a great resentment to be had abroad amongst the French, and produce some hostile effects: but it happened otherwise. For the French knowing of what great consequence their Trade in the Levant is, and that it cannot bee maintained but by a peaceable correspondence with the grand Signior, dissembled it so farre, that it scarse became questionable; and in stead of vindicating the Embassadours honour so much as with a complaint, prouided to accommodate the debts of the old Embassador Monsieur de Cesye, and then to send another.

C

The Captaine Bassa, who had long preserued himselfe in grace and fauour with his master, 1635 and mannaged the great employments of the State without suspition, ended his office vnusually, by being preferred and sent Bassa to Buda. For amongst Turkes the policie is frequent, to squeese the wealth gotten by any one in office, into the grand Signiors treasurie; & where pretences faile sufficiently to glosse the act, plaine tyrannie shall shew it selfe, rather than their wils want execution. With this Bassa it fell out otherwise; for though he had more inriched himselfe than any other, by his seuere justice, exactions, and interposing himselfe whereseeuer the businesse might assure his profit, yet did hee escape without beeing questioned. And though the grand Signior might know his faults, and conniue at them, yet his dis-
D mission, that should haue beene a punishment, was nothing but a translation vnto another Honour, and a reward for his vertue that found an Opinion; by this fortune as it were confirming,

——— Sors & virtus miscentur in vnum.

A resolution began now to settle it selfe in the grand Signiour, to make Persia the onely obiect of his attempts: for his Honour had suffered more by that Enemy than any other, and their succesSe had lessened him both in Fame and Empire. Now as great designes require their counsels, (without which the beginning cannot promise a faire euent) he began to lay
E a foundation for his proceedings, & to order them so, that euery particular should haue some relation to a policie. The ground of the Warre was the same inueterate one which could not yet be remooued, and had for many ages vpheld a quarrell. The Order was, that himselfe would go in person, presuming as Cæsar did, that Fortune was bound to attend him. Then his Ianizaries were all designed for the expedition, that in so dangerous an enterprise hee might destroy them politiquely, as men that he had great reason to be jealous of, for that they were almost grown to a militarie Anarchy, like the Prætorian bands of the Romans. Besides, their late vprores were yet vnpunished; for their disobedience would not submit to any justice, and when a sentence had past, their own strength would resist the execution: so that no practise but this, could expresse the grand Signior in his power ouer them. All things being now in F readinesse, he caused his Tents to be pitched in Scutari on the Asian side; whither after ten dayes he passed ouer himselfe, and thence marched forward to Arzirum, where he appointed the generall Rendevous to be kept. From thence he proceeded with his numerous army, and besieged Reivan, a place of great consequence; where for a time he found a strong resistance, but at length took it, and flushing his souldiers with some spoile, went forwards vp as farre as Tauris; where finding no resistance (for the Persians made no head against him, preserving their strength for some after-action, of more consequence than preventing the losse of a waste and barren country) he consumed all, pressing it with the vtmost calamities of War. So after he had made a circular progresse, finding the approch of Winter to bring on many inconueniences, and some infirmities growing amongst his souldiers, besides the store of prouision for beasts of cariage failing, and not possibly to be there supplied, he withdrew himself by the same way of Arzirum, returning with more triumph than conquest. G

The Captaine Bassa all this while was abroad in the Mediterranian with a very great fleet of Gallies; pretending that he had information of many English ships that came into the Arches to lade Corn, and carry it to the Enemies of the grand Signior. He imployed diuers in euery Port, with instructions to intrap such ships: and vnder colour of this justice many outrages were committed, many ships made prise of, & great occasion giuen for complaints. But the Captaine Bassa's Cause was alwaies right, and howsoeuer he was to himselfe in conscience, to others he appeared a iust man in opinion, and shunned punishment, his accusers likewise being lesse powerfull, than his judges were partiall. H

1636. The grand Signior was no sooner returned, and made his entrance into the Port, but the strength of the Persians (which during the time of his incursion into their country seemed as it were vtterly dissolued) began now to be sinuated and knit together, making vp the firm bodie of a most powerfull army. When all their forces were conuented and ordered, their hearts payd sacrifices of vowes to Nemesis; and confirmed in a resolution of reuenge, they marched I toward Reivan (which the grand Signior the year before had taken) against which they layd a strong siege. The Garrisons of the Turks which were left within by the grand Signior, to preuent their intrenching neer the towne made many excursions vpon them, where the losse was more on the Turkes part than the Persians: so that they were inforced to trust to their walls and victualling, till they had sent a messenger to the grand Signior, with a declaration of their distresse. Which the grand Signior vnderstanding, he dispatched Bassa's both into Asia and Grecia, to hasten and send away the souldiers to their reliefe. He appointed also the Ianizarie Aga to follow with the Ianizaries. But it was now the time of their Bayram, by reason of which their deuotions delayed them, to the Persians great aduantage. It was also resolued, that the grand Signior should himselfe go in person toward the later end of the year; K and if the successe were not answerable to their designes, he should Winter at Aleppo, and the Spring following fall againe into Persia. But the Persians taking hold of opportunitie, stayed not to expect famine for their instrument, or any trecherie to betray the town to them, but fiercely assaulted it, and with that violence of battery that they presently took it, putting all the Turks they found therin either to the sword or ransom.

The report of this losse ariuing before the soldiers could be gathered together at the rendeuous, the proceeding stopt, and the grand Signior full of discontent remained at home to consult his own safety, which was now threatned with a storm, that to shun was not thought a possibilitie in humane prouidence. For the souldiers that were abroad began to expresse much discontentment, refusing to receiue their pay, or to be commanded by the grand Vizier: for the Turkes war with the Persians very vnwillingly, there beeing no other cause for a war, but the emulation of greatnesse which hath successively possest the Lords of those two mighty Empires. Besides, they seldome meet in Persia with any plentifull spoiles: so that they are neither incited by their own freenesse, nor allured by the hopes of any large reward; the later of which is the onely whetstone of Endeauor and enterprises. But on the contrary, to the Wars of Hungary and Poland they runne as to some delightfull spectacle; prickt forward therto by zeal, as making Religion a ground for their attempts, and an assurance of large booty, where the countries glory in the fulnesse of many blessings. L

This danger of the Souldiers mutinies abroad reached not yet the Grand Signior, nor put him into any personall feare, till the Ianizaries at home, made him apprehend the immi- M nence of what they intended against him. For they had, either by the information of some treacherous Statesman, or their owne consideration of circumstances, discouered the Grand Signiors intention of compelling them to the war of Persia: which designe of his failing, first in the Persians not resistance, afterwards in dissoluing of the army before they could

A come to the reliefe of Reivan, they were not yet much weakened, and their knowledge of the Grand Signiors disaffection towards them, instructed their disloyall inclinations to all sorts of agreeable practises. Besides, they had now learned amongst other diuellish secrets since the fleshing of themselues in their Souereignes bloud, Sultan Osman, and in the deposing, restoring, and deposing againe of Mustapha, how to make and vnmake a King at their pleasure. So that the Grand Signior seemeth a Steward only intrusted with a gouernment, which his slaues exact account of, and transferre as their humours and affections sway them. Euery one amongst these rebellious tumultuants seemed very full of counsels; and none would allow a proceeding to action, till they had ordered the progresse by a rule: which was so diuersly proposed, that it could haue no positiue confirmation. For some aduised to the depo- 1636.
B sition of their Emperor, which others that were not so well affected to innouation opposed, with reasons of satisfaction: and that if the Grand Signior would make amends by some acknowledgement of his il intents towards them, and confirme their order and priuiledges, his gouernment (being one that by experience had made himselfe sensible of their power) might be more profitable to them than euer, whose disposition as yet vndiscouered, might make their courses and liues subject to incertainties. For the Grand Signior in the beginning of his reigne, by reason of his few yeares (which exceeded not fifteene) expresst a natu-
C rall inclination to action, which he hath since continually practised: and this had settled some good opinion of him in the inconstant souldiers, who liue by it; though many of late, (contrary to their first institution, and the long continued course which the former emperors had seuerely tied them to) applyed themselues to merchandise, and other enriching means, neglecting as it were the profession they were ordained to, but at the very instant of imploiment. A third sort whom the thought of reuenge had possest, (to which the worst spirits are most subject;

——Quippe minuti
Semper, & infirmi est animi exiguique voluptas Vltio) ——

proposed their Souereignes death, who had practised their subuersion. But this relisht not D so well generally; for their former outrage had made them the subjects of censure so farre, that all States condemned it, and themselues lamented. Many daies were wasted with these conuentions, that dissolued still with new doubts; so that the Grand Signior had time enough for preuention, which was ordered by the great Visiers, remaining at Arzirum with the army, where he wintered, that so the want of number might make their suppression the easier: For if the Spahies that were discontented abroad, had beene joyned to the Ianizaries mutining at home, their addition would haue beene oyle to a flame, and increased an incendium, till there had beene left no matter for their fury to feed on. The Grand Signior likewise distributed large sums amongst them, and purchased some part of his safety that way. The great Visier likewise being wanting, they had no object for their outrage: for he was E onely suspected to practise with the Grand Signior (as Delauir Bassa did formerly with Osman) to erect a new Militia, for the supplanting of the Ianizaries, that should be maintained with lesse charge and danger. In conclusion, there remained not the least vestigium of this confused building, but the feare that another might be raised, if the Ianizaries should haue any new prouocations to fall againe to worke. And though their idlenesse at home, might haue giuen occasion of disturbance from the vnsetlednesse of their thoughts, (for which would be staied if action diuerted them from other objects, there hath beene no de-F signe thought of since, but the regulating of these Ianizaries, and preseruing them from attempt, by a more free distribution of donatiues amongst them. Only the great Visier made some incursions into Persia, the successe whereof answered not the expectation of so great an vndertaking.

——Variam semper dant otia mentum)

This being the present state of the Otteman Emperors, conferred with some other late di-ſtant accidents, (which haue a relation to that State) and the precedent, giue occaſion to G theſe following conſiderations.

Firſt, the greatneſſe of the Turkiſh Empire, raiſed thereto by continuall action, and preſerued by fortune, more than by reaſon; yet crueltie (which hath beene alwayes obſerued to be an inſtrument, and is as it were hereditarie in their natures) hath a politique allowance. For they haue found it by experience, That mercy toward the Vanquiſhed prooueth many times a motiue to diſcontent; and reuiueth the memory of diſgrace, which often chalks out a way to reuenge. When contrariwiſe crueltie exerciſeth them ſo much in a ſubiection, that the remembrance of all former equalitie in greatneſſe loſeth it ſelfe by degrees, in an humble patience. Beſides, where there is bred a diſcontent from reflection to a high ſtate buried in neceſſities, that diſcontent becommeth the Parent of Curioſitie; as Plautus in Sticho ſaith, H

Curioſus nemo eſt qui non ſit malevolus.

This curioſitie now buſieth it ſelfe wholly in the diſquiſition of all ſorts of reuenge, and many times will not be ſatisfied but with practiſe. To preuent which, the Turkiſh cruelty ties the hands of all they conquer, that they are left without meanes for the execution of any deſigne that is hatcht by diſcontent. And this cruelty though tyrannical, is allowed of among them politicè, though all the world beſides muſt condemn it Ethicè: for it includeth an inſulting ouer miſerie, than which, nothing more cleerely expreſſeth a vulgar and an vnprincely nature. I

Corpora magnanimo ſatis eſt proſtraſſe Leoni;
Pugna ſuum finem, cum jacet hoſtis, habet.
At Lupus & turpes inſtant morientibus vrſi,
Et quæcunque minor nobilitate fera eſt.

Which haue this ſence:

The valiant Lion, when the Vanquiſhed
Lies at his feet, hath mercie in his eie.
But Wolues and Bears inſult ouer the Dead; K
And beaſts that are of leſſe Nobilitie.

How much this crueltie practiſed by the Turkes hath wrought vpon diuers Nations, the precedent is full of examples; and how far it may bee iuſtified by the effects, as conducing mightily to the preſeruation of that State, may be prooued by the contrary. For the mercie ſhewed by Achmat to his brother Muſtapha, ſo much differing from the Ottoman cuſtome, begot ſuch a diſorder, that it became pernicious, almoſt to the vtter diſſolution of that State.

But as in all actions the ſame thing may produce differing effects, by the diuers application; ſo this crueltie, as it is a meanes of ſecuritie when practiſed by the grand Signior vpon L thoſe whom Fortune hath made his ſubjects, ſo is it an occaſion for ſeuere cenſure when ſtrangers ſuffer vnder it, ſuch as for trade reſide in his dominions, and ought to haue all immunities and priuiledges, eſpecially of ſafety, according to the ſeuerall capitulations that preſerue their ſeueral correſpondence. Of this the later times produce diuers examples; and though the Turkes colour it with the name of ſeuere juſtice, yet is it in ſubſtance plain crueltie, and the moſt diſhonourable that may warrant a cauſe of reuenge, if Chriſtians would be ſo farre ſencible as to ſtrengthen it by an vnanimous vndertaking.

And here a ſecond conſideration offers it ſelfe, which is the ſhew of the Empires declining from it's priſtine greatneſſe; which may bee two wayes conjectured: By the Ottoman Line almoſt extinguiſhed, there remaining beſides the preſent Emperour, but three, and M thoſe ſubiect to his tyrannie, and cuſtome of the State; vpon the leaſt jealouſie to be made vncapable either of rule or diſturbance.

Secondly, by the ſucceſſe of the Perſian, who hath leſſened the grand Signior much, by contracting the bounds of his Empire in Aſia, and by enlarging his owne, with addition to

it

A it of that which hee hath ſubſtracted from the grand Seigniors. Neither can a ceſſation of ſtrife be euer hoped, where there is nothing but emulation, and two ſuch competitors in greatneſſe equally.

——miſerâ ambitione laborant.

There are yet other conſiderations which may inferre a doubt of the empires diſſolution, or at leaſtwiſe alteration, and to ſuch a form as will ſcarce preſerue any footſtep of the other. One of which is the Ianizaries diſloyall diſpoſition, that hath ſo dangerouſly declared it ſelfe of late. Inſomuch that if the diſcontented ſtrangers and Chriſtian ſubjects were but
B as able to doe miſchiefe, as the ſouldiers are to deſire it, queſtionleſſe ſome great euent would ſoone ſhew it ſelfe, and the deſire of libertie eſtabliſh perhaps ſome Ariſtocraſia or Democraſia, or what the giddineſſe of their humours ſhould fancie. For the Ottoman Line failing, the Empire deſcendeth to the Tartar, whom the Turkes ſo innately hate, that they would admit of any innovation, rather than his gouernment. There would be many by-aduancements of this progreſſe, if it were ſet on foot: for euery Baſſa ſubſtituted for his ſeuerall prouince, would with his owne power endeauor to make himſelfe abſolute. The Perſian would compaſſe his ends eaſily; The Egyptians caſt off their bondage, and all the Tributaries ſaue their expences.

Some aid it would receiue by the diuerſities of the many Nations, whoſe Kingdomes are
C ſubject to this Empire: for being many, doubtleſſe they cannot be all ſo regulated by one forme of gouernment, or made ſo abſolute Turkiſh, but that the Natiues of euery Countrey preſerue ſomething of their owne primitiue inſtitutions, which they likewiſe are better affected to, than what they haue learned by a new compulſion. And though it commeth not within an eaſie apprehenſion, how ſo many Kingdomes ſhould be gotten, and preſerued ſo long (which Auguſtus diſſuaded his Romanes from, as an apparant indangering of all) yet the preſent Emperor is obſerued to be more valiant than politique; which is dangerous according to Euripides,

Ασφαλὲς γὰρ ἐς δύναιτ', ἢ θρασὺς στρατηλάτης

D

Sir Thomas More hath theſe following, almoſt to the ſame purpoſe:

Regibus ex multis regnum cui ſufficit vnum,
Vix Rex vnus erit, ſi tamen vnus erit.
Regibus è multis regnum benè qui regat vnum,
Vix tamen vnus erit, ſi tamen vnus erit.

'Tis kingly to deſire many Kingdoms; but better to gouerne one well, than by addition of number make the rule dangerous.

E This might giue aduantage to the Baſſa's, if the graund Seignior ſhould exaſperate them, and by his cruelties (whether they be the effects of his tyrannie or his reaſon) to prouoke them to attempts. For there haue been many late examples of their aptneſſe to know their owne ſtrength, and application of it to any vſe in deſignes of reuenge or ambition. Abaſſa Baſſa after the murther of Oſman, and Huſſeruph Baſſa after his diſgrace, with others, haue ſufficiently teſtified it; the later of whoſe deaths could neuer haue been effected but by a ſecret policie. Yet there is a kinde of preuention, by making the gouernment ſo eaſie to Turkes themſelues, that they ſeeme all in ſeuerall degrees to bee but ſubſtituted Gouernors of the other Nations, which are chiefly the ſubjects of the grand Signiors tyranie; and to that end
F the Turks are mingled with all others that are ſubjected.

A conſideration may be had from another argument, of the declenſion of this great Empire, by its age, and the preſent inſtruments that are practiſed about the weakening of it. For a State is aptly compared to the little world of man, the infancie wherof is weak and ſimple,

the

the Youth increasing, the manhood for a time established and firme, but the old age diseased G and not able to hold out long, but must of necessitie yeeld to death, where it findes its termination. Now as this aged Empire hath many in-bred diseases, so is it threatned abroad by the Persian on one side, by feare of the Egyptians and Arabs getting head on another; by the Christians on a third, of which the Polander is of most danger, as beeing neereſt in place, and oftenest prouoked. Besides, his successe hath been some weakning to the grand Signior, insomuch that the free proposition of peace on his part, in the yeare 1634, argued a feare, and doubtlesse there is a secret reason that makes the Turke distrust his own state more now than euer.

The Pyrats and Renegadoes of Algier, Tunes, and Sally (whose actions the grand Signior protecteth, though not their persons, leauing them in that point of safety to themselues) H haue distasted the Christians of late very much, especially our English, by committing diuers outrages on the Westerne coasts of England, as also on the South South-West and West of Ireland, where they aduentured to make some inrodes, and haue carried away much cattel and people for slaues, burning diuers Villages.

Vpon the knowledge whereof, his Majestie of great Brittaine appointed a fleet to goe to the streights for their suppression, and the redemption of his subiects that were in those parts Captiues. Which Fleet returned towards the later end of the last yeare 1637, victorious, bringing along an honourable Embassadour from the Emperour of Moroco, with gratulations for the happy successe which he had against rebels there by this aid of the English. The particulars whereof are of more consequence, than to be made (as they are) the subiects of I ridiculous pamphlets, and otherwise should haue made a place in this History. For the Morocco being a Mahometan in Religion, is likewise a kinde of Tributarie to the grand Seignior, though perhaps he payeth it voluntarily, and vnder the colour and name of a Present, the which doth make it but a degree more honourable. This Prince, (who hath all the attributes of a good man, and is not so much affected to Turkish libertie) whether particularly obliged for this good seruice of the English, or generally desirous to publish his good inclination, hath from circumstance giuen hope to Christians of aid in any laudable designe, as this of suppressing Theeues and Rebels, and redeeming Captiues was. For the Trade of the Leuant hath not so much danger from the vices of Turkish Ministers, as from those former places, the receptacles of Pyrats, most of which are Renegadoes. K

Now if the grand Signior should haue any resentment of this, and that a Warre should follow betweene him and the Moroco (who is a powerfull Prince and actiue) he must of necessitie, by translating the seat of it so farre Westward, leaue Asia vndefenced against the Persian; and the Emperour of Germanie with the ayd of the Pole, might be able to do something prosperously in Hungary. Besides, the Maltæses and Sicilians, if but for neighbourhoods sake, must of necessitie stirre somewhat, and doe for the honour of the Order, which hath of late vpheld it selfe more by the meere ceremonies of it in Courts of peace, than by woonted action.

But these euents must be doubtfull, in that they are grounded vpon secret and vnreuealed intentions. Certaine it is, that the grand Signior is weakened in his power, by the corrupted L manners of his souldiers; and hauing so many enemies so diuersly planted on euery hand of him, he cannot at once deale with all throughly, neither can he offend any one much, but that he must leaue himselfe vnarmed, or but weakely defended against the other. For his Souldierie consists now of a far smaller number than it formerly did, and those likewise fallen from their first institution, marrying, and applying themselues to merchandise, more than the practise of their proper discipline; insomuch that his Army (which hertofore hath stupified the amased hearers with a number beyond conceit or almost probabilitie, such as that which was repulsed before Vienna) seldome exceeds eighty or a hundred thousand, though the report sounds it more, to the greater terror of the Enemy.

Some haue formerly thought, That a possible entrance might be made to the dissoluing M of this so mighty Enemy of the Christians, by making the Ianizaries sencible of their originall, and being the children of Christians. But now it is certaine, that the most of them are naturall Turkes borne, and purchased at easie rates by Christians, to supply the number

of

A of tributary children, by which their own are preſerued to pay the grand Signior tribute and cuſtomes; which if they had bin Ianizaries, ſhould haue bin diſtributed to their owne maintenance. The happineſſe in this great difference is, by making the leſſe part ſubiect to neceſſities, they preſerue the immortall one capable of glory. But thoſe that haue learned a Religion full of libertie, and the end (though vainely) promiſing eternitie, with full fruition of greater pleaſures, would hardly be withdrawn to embrace a ſtrict one, whoſe progreſſe is conſcience and auſteritie.

One thing is moſt remarkeable, and may include ſome apparancie of a change at leaſt in that gouernment; which is, That the Turks begin more and more to leaue their barbariſme, and fall to the ſtudy of Arts: inſomuch that diuers Baſſa's write the Annals of their ſeuerall
B Prouinces, in the Arabick, of which they labour alſo to attaine the elegance. Euery one beſides is inſtructed in the Italian, which is now grown the Court language. It is reported likewiſe by a Gentleman that hath publiſhed his journal, how he had obſerued ſome of them affected to Poetry, and that he had ſeen ſome Sonets of their compoſing: which without doubt wil cauſe ſome alteration in their maners; according to Ovid,

Adde, quod inſidiæ ſacris à vatibus abſunt,
Et facit ad mores ars quoque noſtra bonos.

From ſacred Poets fraud is abſent far,
C And manners by our Art much better'd ar'.

Yet perhaps the effects of eaſe and ſoftneſſe will ſhew themſelues, as they grow more Schollers, and leſſe martiall; which many times hapneth where men are beſt inſtructed: And heretofore the liues of the Turks hath bin more practiue than ſpeculatiue, and their actions ordered more from neceſſitie than conſideration.

But as a certain and conſtant fortune is an euill (according to Sophocles in Ajace;) ſo the long flouriſhing ſtate of this empire hath made it the obiect of greater danger, and the change and diſſolution is imminent; but to what aduantage of others, is in the prouidence onely of him that ordereth all, and hath long ſuffered this to continue a D ſcourge for Chriſtians, whoſe irreligious negligence of their principal duties, haue deſeruedly drawn down that puniſhment.

FINIS.

A of subiectry children, by which their own are preferred to pay the grand Signior tribute and customes; which if they had bin Iamizares, should haue bin distributed to their owne maintenance. The happinesse in this great difference is, by making the lesse part subiect to necessities, they preserue the immortall one capable of glory. But those that haue learned a Turkish full of liberty, and the sad (though vaine) promising eternitie, with full fruition of greater pleasures, would hardly be withdrawn to embrace a life, whose progresse is contrarie and auerse to it.

One thing is most remarkable, and may include some appearance of a change at least in that gouernment; which is, That the Turkes begin more and more to leaue their barbarisme, and fall to the study of Arts: insomuch that diuers Bassas write the Annals of their seuerall

B Prouinces, in the Arabick, of which they labour also to attaine the elegance. Lately one besides is spoken of in the Italian, which is now grown the Court language. It is reported likewise by a Gentleman that hath published his iournal, how he had obtained some of them affected to Poetry, and that he had seene some Sonets of their composing with by-rymes, and some obseruation in their measures, according to ours.

From sacred Poets fraud is ablest far,
And manners by our Arts much better'd are.

C Perhaps the effects of Arts and Science will shew themselues as they grow more Scholastick and lesse martiall; which many times hath put warre men are best in, to God: And therefore the lines of the Turkes hath on more practise than speculative, and their actions oderiue from vse rather than consideration.

But as a certain and constant fortune is an euill (according to Sophocles in Aiace;) To the long flourishing state of this empire hath made the odio of greater danger, and the change and dissolution is imminent; but to what aduantage of others, is in the prouidence only of him that ordereth all, and hath long suffered this to continue a

D scourge for Christians, which irreligious negligence of their principall Nations, haue doctrinally drawn down that punishment.

FINIS.

¶ A Table or Index, pointing vnto all the most notable things in the History of the Turks before written: wherein such directorie Letters as are set without numbers, are to be still referred to the next number of the Page precedent.

AAron Vayuod of Moldauia suspected by the Transyluanian Prince to haue intelligence with the Turke, with his wife and son sent prisoners vnto Prague, 1062,l.

Abas Mirise by the practise of Mirize Salmas brought into suspition with Mahomet his father the Persian King, 946,i. by his Embassadors purgeth himselfe of the supposed treason, 964,g.

Abdilcherai with his Tartars commeth into Struan, 838, k. taketh Ares Chan, 939, a. spoileth Genge, is himselfe ouerthrowne and taken prisoner by the Persian Prince, 940,g. beloued of the Persian Queene, k. slain in the Court, 941,a.

Abedin Bassa with a great army sent by Amurath to reuenge the death of Mesites, spoileth Valachia, and so entreth into Transyluania, 271,a. encourageth the Turks, 273,b. in a great and mortall battell ouerthrowne by Huniades at Vascape, 274,l.

Abraham, otherwise called Pyramet, last King of Caramania, slain by Baiazet, 447,b.

Abraham Bassa his description, 645,f. his bringing vp in Court, 646,g. his great credit with Solyman, i. he persuadeth him to make warre vpon the Persians, 647,e. maligned by Solymans mother and Roxolana, 649,b. sent before by Solyman with an army into Syria, c. hath the city of Tauris yeelded vnto him, d. in disgrace with Solyman, 653,f. shamefully murthered in the court by the commandment of Solyman, 654,b.

Abydus surprised by the Turks, 183,a.

Acanzij what they be 415,b

Achmetes Bassa Gouernour of Cyprus slaine by the Ianizaries, 979,b.

Achmetes the great Bassa his notable speech to Mahomet, to dissuade him from any more assaulting of Scodra, 423,f. landeth with his men in Apulia, 432,i. by Baiazet made Generall of his army against his brother Zemes, 438,l. his death contriued by Isaac Bassa, 443,b. in danger to haue been put to death, deliuered by the Ianizaries, 444,h. suddenly slaine, k.

Achmetes Bassa with his army ouerthrown by the Mamalukes, taken and sent prisoner vnto Caytbeius at Caire 448,i.

Achomates politique and valiant, but too much giuen to pleasure, 478,k. discontented, 487,e. threatneth the Cadelescher sent vnto him by his Father, 488,g. entreth with his sonnes into rebellion, h. killeth his Fathers Embassadour, proclaimed Traitor, 489,f. secretly fauoured by diuers great men in Selymus his army, 503, a. ouerthrowne in battell, taken, and by the commandement of his brother Selymus strangled, 504,i.

Achomates the great Bassa appeaseth the souldiers, vp in armes for the vnworthie death of Mustapha, 764,b. his miserable end, 765, c.

Agria in vaine besieged by the Turks, 756,k. yeelded vnto Mahomet the third, 1096,b.

Aladin the sonne of Kei-Husren of the Selzuccian family, driuen out of Persia, seiseth vpon Cilicia, 76,l.

Aladin his modestie about the diuision of his father Othomans inheritance and goods with his brother Orchanes, 179,d.

Aladin the Caramanian King hanged, 208,m.

Aladin, Amurath his eldest sonne, slaine with a fall from his horse, 289,d.

Alba Regalis yeelded to King Ferdinand, 700,l. besieged by Solyman, 740,i. the lake and ditches with incredible labor filled vp by the Turks, l. the suburbs won, 741,c. the miserable slaughter of the Christiãs in their flight, d. yeelded vnto Solyman, 742, g. besieged by Duke Mercurie, 1134,l. the suburbs of the city surprised by Lord Russworme, 1139,d. the city taken by the Christians, 1136,g. besieged by the Turks, 1144,l. terribly assaulted, 1145. woon by the Turks, d.

Aladules his kingdome, 519,a. the battell betwixt him and Selymus, e. he flyeth into the mountaines, 520,g. taken by Sinan Bassa, and brought to Selymus, is put to death, l. his head sent to Venice for a Present, and his Kingdome brought into the forme of a Prouince, m.

Albuchomar discouereth vnto Selymus the power of Tomombeius, and the treason intended by them of Caire, 547,e.

Aleppo in Syria betraid and taken from the Christians by Saladin Sultan of Damasco, 61,a. by the Tartars taken from the Turks, and by them sacked and rased, 113,d. by Cayerbeius the traitor deliuered to Selymus, 530,l.

Alessandre the Georgian submitteth himselfe vnto Mustapha, 933,e.

Alexius the great President of Constantinople committed to prison, 45,f. his eyes put out by the commandement of Andronicus. 46,h.

Alexius Comnenus, otherwise called Porphyrogenitus, succeedeth his Father Emanuel in the Empire, 43,b. by the practise of Andronicus is deprined of his Empire and strangled, 50,b.

Alexius the yong Prince craueth aid of Philip the Emperour and the Latine Princes against his vncle the Vsurper, 77,a. commeth to the army of the Christian Princes going towards the Holy Land, 78,g. arriueth with a great fleet of the Latines before Constantinople, l. taketh land, and after a hot skirmish, forceth the old tyrant Alexius to flie out of the City. 79,c. seeketh to bring the Latines againe into the city, 80,k. is betrayed and strangled by Murzusle, l.

Alexius Philanthropenus by Andronicus the Emperour made Gouernor of the frontiers of his Empire in Asia, against the Turks, 147,e. aspireth, 148,i. betrayed, hath his eies put out, 149,a.

Alexius Strategopulus with a small power sent into Grecia by the Emperor Michael Palæologus, by the treason of two Greekes taketh the city of Constantinople from the Latines, 115,d.

Algiers described,720,g. in vaine besieged by Charles the Emperour,h.

Aliculi Chan taken, 944,l. in hope of libertie conducteth Hassan Bassa through the streight passages of Georgia, 945,b. cast in prison at Erzirum,d. escapeth from Ferat, 972,m. by the Persian King (to the great discontentment of the Turcomans) made Gouernour of Tauris, 973,c. killeth the Bassa of Maras, doth the Turks great harme, and so flyeth from Tauris, 991,c. conspireth with Abas Mirize against the Persian Prince, 1000,h. being by the Prince sent against the Turks, performeth nothing, 1001,c.

Alis Bassa with a great army ouerthrowne by Scanderbeg, 288,k.

Alis Bassa sent by Baiazet with an army out of Europe against Techellis, slaine, 474,l.

Alis Beg and his foure sons trecherously slaine by Ferat Bassa, 600,l.

Alis Bassa of Buda by the commandement of Amurath strangled, 1003,d.

Alis Beg Gouernor of Strigonium comming downe into the lower Towne, is there stayed by the Ianizaries, 1066,k. his resolute answer vnto the message sent him from the Lord Palfi, 1069,e. slaine with a great shot, 1071,e.

Almericus earle of Ioppa after the death of his brother Baldwin chosen sixt K. of Ierusalem, 53,e. with a puissant army entreth Ægypt, and in plaine battell ouerthroweth Dargan the Sultan,e. aideth Sanar the Sultan against Saracon, Noradius Generall, whom he ouerthroweth in Ægypt, 56 i. taketh Alexandria,l. winneth Pelusium, 57, dieth, 58,k.

Aloysius Grittus the Duke of Venice his sonne sent by Solyman as his lieutenant into Hungary, to ouersee King Iohn, 631,f. contemned by Americus, causeth him to be murthred, 633,d. besieged by the Transyluanians, 634,h. taken and beheaded, l. the great riches found about him, 635,a.

Alphonsus King of Naples sendeth ayd vnto Scanderbeg, 369,f. with Alexander Bishop of Rome craueth ayd of Baiazet the Turke against Charles the French king, 451,a.

Alphonsus resigneth his kingdome of Naples vnto his sonne Ferdinand, 453,c.

Alphonsus Daualus Vastius Lieutenant Generall of the Emperors land forces in his expedition for Tunes, 655,b. his speech vnto the Spanish captains, 659,b. commandeth the Emperour, 665,d. with Hannbaldus sent Embassadors from the Emperour and the French king, to the State of Venice, for a confederation betwixt that State and them to be made against Solyman, 692,g. his Oration in the Venetian Senat,h. the answer of the Duke,m. the Senators diuersly affected towards the Confederation, 693,d.

Alteration of Religion in the Greeke Church the cause of great troubles, 144,m.

Amesa with his Turks ouerthrown and taken prisoner by Scanderbeg, 366,g.

Amesa imployed by his vncle Scanderbeg for the recouerie of Croia out of the hands of the Turks, 284,b. corrupted, flyeth to Mahomet the Turke, 373,b. his first speech to Mahomet, c. honourably entertained, 376,i. by Isaac Bassa created king of Epirus, 375,d. taken prisoner by Scanderbeg, 381,d. sent prisoner into Italy, 382,h. enlarged, returneth to Constantinople, and there dieth, 383,b.

Amurath the first succeedeth his father Orchanes in the Turkish kingdome, 189,c. inuadeth Europ,d. taketh Hadrianople,f. maketh his royall seat in Europe, 191,b. beginneth the order of the Ianizaries,e. returneth into Asia, 192,g. marrieth his sonne Baiazet vnto Hatune the daughter of the Prince Gyrmean, with a great dowry, 193,c. purchaseth the Principalitie of Amisum of Chusen Beg, d. inuadeth Seruia and taketh Nissa the Metropoliticall City thereof, e. imposeth a yearely tribute vpon the Countrey of Seruia,f. in a great battell ouerthroweth Aladin the king of Caramania his Sonne in law, with the other Mahometane Princes his Confederates, 196,g. by his Captains winneth and spoyleth a great part of Bulgaria, 199,a. in a great and mortall battell ouerthroweth Lazarus the Despot of Seruia with his Confederates in the plaines of Cossoua, 200,i. slaine, k. buried at Prusa, 201,b.

Amurath the second placed in his fathers seat, 255,c. afraid to go against the rebell Mustapha, 256,b. in vaine besieged Constantinople, 258, g. strangleth his brother Mustapha, l. winneth Thessalonica, 260,g. taketh vnto himselfe the greatest part of Ætolia, i. enforceth the Princes of Athens, Phocis, and Bœtia to become his tributaries, b. falsifieth his faith with Iohn Castriot Prince of Epirus, and poysoneth his three eldest sonnes his Hostages, l. oppresseth the Mahometan Princes in Asia, 261,c. spoyleth Hungary, d. contrary to his faith inuadeth Seruia and subdueth it, 262, g. putteth out the eies of the Despots sons his wiues brethren, g. besiegeth Belgrade, 263,c. dealeth subtilly with the Embassadors of king Uladissaus, 264, g. notably encourageth his souldiers to the assault of Belgrade, h. shamefully repulsed, 266, h. his sullen answer vnto the Embassadors of King Uladislaus, i. sendeth Mesites Bassa to inuade Transyluania, 276, f. grieued with the losse of Mesites and his Army, sendeth Abedin Bassa to reuenge his death, 270, l. in despaire, about to haue slaine himselfe, 289, a. by the mediation of the Despot of Seruia obtaineth peace of K. Uladislaus for ten yeares, b. inuadeth Caramania, d. wearie of the world, committeth the gouernment of his kingdome to his sonne Mahomet, and retyreth himselfe vnto a Monasticall life, e. At the report of those preparations of the Hungarians, and request of his Bassaes, forsaketh his solitarie life, and raiseth a great army in Asia, 296, k. by the Genowayes transported with his Army into Europe, l. ioyneth battell with King Uladislaus at Varna, 297, b. about to haue fled, reproued of cowardise by a common souldier, c. prayeth vnto Christ, e. in danger to haue been slaine, 298, h. wisheth not many times so to ouercome as he did at the battell of Varna, m. to perform his vow, resigneth his kingdome to his sonne Mahomet, which he shortly after resumeth againe, 299, b. his crafty Letters to Scanderbeg, 300, g. his passionate speech in his rage against Scanderbeg, 302, i. breaketh through the Hexamylum, and imposeth a yearely tribute vpon them of Peloponesus, 304, h. after three daies hard fight, with great slaughter of his men ouercommeth Huniades in the plaines of Cossoua, 309, b. inuadeth the Despot, 310, k. his graue Letters of aduice to Mustapha, concerning his inuading of Epirus, 311, e. commeth with a great army to Sfetigrade, 316, l. in vaine with great fury giueth many a desperat assault vnto the City, 319, b. in one assault loseth seuen thousand of his Turks,

Turks, 320, i. by great promises seeketh to corrupt the garrison of Sfetigrade, l. by the practice of one man hath the City of Sfetigrade yeelded vnto him, 321, e. hauing lost thirty thousand of his Turks at the siege of Sfetigrade, returneth to Hadrianople, 322, h. with a great army commeth again into Epirus and besiegeth Croia, 323, c. in two assaults loseth 8000 of his soldiers, 326, k. content to buy the life of one Christian with the losse of twenty of his Turks, 327, a. seeketh by great gifts to corrupt Vranacontes the Gouernour of Croia, 328, i. ouercome with melancholie, tormenteth himselfe, 330, g. by his Embassadours offereth Scanderbeg peace, h. his last speech vnto his sonne Mahomet concerning such things as at his death grieued him most, k. dieth, 331, b. buried at Prusa, 332, g.

Amurath the sonne of Achomates flieth vnto Hysmael the Persian king, 504, k. marrieth his daughter, 505, a. spoileth Capadocia, and for feare of his vncle Selymus retyreth, d.

Amurath the third taketh vpon him the Turkish Empire, 919, c. pacifieth the Ianizaries and augmenteth their priuiledges, d. strangleth his fiue brethren, e. His Letters vnto the Nobilitie of Polonia in the behalfe of Stephen Bathor Vaynod of Transyluania, 920, i. attentiue to the stirs in Persia, 923, f. informed thereof by Vstref Bassa of Van, 924, m. resolued to take the Persian warre in hand, 925, d. by Mustapha aduertised of the successe of the Persian warres, 938, g. consulteth of his proceeding therein, 941, e. dischargeth Mustapha of his Generalship, and calleth him home to Constantinople, 946, l. appointeth Sinan Generall for the Persian warres, 951, b. in despight of Sinan appointeth Mahamet Bassa Generall for those wars in his stead, 957, e. circumciseth his eldest sonne Mahomet, 957, a. displaceth Sinan Bassa, and casteth him into exile, 962, l. appointeth Ferat Generall for his warres in Persia, 965, d. sendeth for Osman Bassa into Siruan, 974, b. maketh him chief Visier, and Generall of his army into Persia, 976, k. in disporting with his Mutes taken with a fit of the falling sickenesse, 977, d. causeth great triumph to be made throughout his Empire for the winning of Tauris, 996, h. maketh choice againe of Ferat Bassa to succeed Osman Bassa dead in the Persian warres, 999, b. concludeth a peace with the Persian King, 1002, b. his answer to the Letters of Sigismund the third, King of Polonia, 1004, h. glad himselfe to yeeld to the insolencie of the Ianizaries, 1005, f. his letters to Elizabeth Queene of England, 1006, k. persuaded by his Visier Bassaes to take some new warre in hand, 1007, e. in doubt whom first to begin withall, 1008, k. resolueth to make war vpon the Emperour, with the reasons leading him thereunto, 1140, k. giueth leaue to Hassan Bassa of Bosna as it were without his knowledge to picke quarrels with the Emperour, and so to disturbe the peace, m. sendeth home the body of the Persian Hostage dead in his Court, 1015, c. proclaimeth warre against the Emperour, 1023, f. the proud and blasphemous manner of his denuntiation of warre, 1024, h. he dreameth, 1028, l. sicke of the falling sickenesse, 1048, h. dieth, 1053, d.

Andrew King of Hungary maketh an expedition into the Holy Land, 88, k. bathing himselfe in the riuer of Iordan, returneth with his power, l.

Andronicus aspireth to the empire, 43 d. ouerthroweth Angelus sent against him with a great power by Alexius the great President, 44, l. encampeth ouer against Constantinople, 45, a. taketh vpon him the gouernment and tyrannyseth, 47, b. causeth Mary the daughter of Emanuel the Emperour, with her husband Cæsar to bee poysoned, c. causeth Xene the faire Empresse to be vniustly condemned and strangled, 49, k. by his fauorites and flatterers ioyned in the fellowship of the Empire with Alexius the young Emperour, 46, c. depriueth Alexius of the Empire, and causeth him to be strangled, 50, b. destroyeth the Nobilitie to establish his estate, i. seeketh in vaine to appease the people in a tumult risen vp against him, 52, b. forsaken of his flattering fauorits, flyeth, is taken and brought backe in chaines to Angelus, 53, c. committed to the fury of the people, who with extreame cruelty put him to most shamefull death, 54.

Andronicus Palæologus the younger exceedingly beloued by old Andronicus his grandfather, 158, b. by the persuasion of Syrgiannes conspireth against his aged Grandfather, 159, f. being sent for, commeth vnto him secretly armed, with purpose to haue slaine him, 160, k. secretly flieth out of Constantinople, 161, b. proclaimed traitour, and proscribed, c. stirreth vp the people of Thracia to rebellion, d. reconciled to his Grandfather, 164, i. crowned fellow in the Empire with his Grandfather, m. againe conspireth against his Grandfather, 165, b. his crafty speech vnto his Grandfathers Embassadours, 167, c. seeketh in vaine by night to haue been receiued into Constantinople, 169, c. is receiued into Thessalonica, 170, g. taketh in the greatest part of Macedonia and Thracia, m. by treason entreth into the City of Constantinople, 171, e. forbiddeth his Captaines and souldiers to violate the Maiestie of the old Emperour or any about him, 172, i. humbleth himselfe vnto his Grandfather, 173, a. euill persuaded, committeth him to streight keeping, 174, g. wounded in the battell with Orchanes at Philocrene, 180, m. by his owne departure from his Campe, discomfiteth his whole Army, 181, a.

Andronicus Palæologus the old Emperour in restoring againe the Greeke Ceremonies, by his father before altered, falleth into great troubles, 146, h. sparing to maintaine his Nauy, weakeneth his Empire, k. suspitious of his brother Constantine, l. by taking him away, leaueth the East side of his Empire to be spoyled by the Turks, 147, e. reposing more trust in forreine ayd than in his owne Subiects, greatly hurteth his State, 149, b. immoderately fauoureth his Nephew Andronicus, 158, b. setteth Syrgiannes to obserue his doings, 159, a. sendeth Embassadours vnto him, 161, d. in this trouble, as of an heauenly Oracle asketh counsell of the Psalter, and so maketh peace with his nephew, 164, b. informed of the euill meaning of his Nephew, forbiddeth him to come into the City, 166, g. his notable speech vnto the Patriarch and the rest of the Bishops and Nobilitie concerning the young Emperour his Nephew, 168, k. forsaken of the Patriarch and some others of the Bishops, 169, b. reposeth his whole trust in God, 172, i. his pitifull request vnto the young Emperour his Nephew, l. by him deprined of his Imperiall Dignitie, 174, g. falleth blind, h. against his will made a Monke, and called Anthonie, k. his notable answer vnto the catching question of the proud Patriarch, l. inforced to sweare, Neuer againe to resume vnto himselfe the Empire, 175, d. dieth, 176, g. his death by many prodigies digies foreshowne,h.

Antioch described, 18,h. by the Patriarch betraid to Saladin, 65,a.
Apulia spoiled by the Turks, 671,f.
Ares Chan hanged, 939,a.
Artillerie of exceeding greatnesse made by Mahomet at the siege of Scodra, 418,g.
Asam-Beg with his army ouerthrowne, and taken prisoner by Scanderbeg, 383,f.
Asmehemed iustly rewarded for his trecherie, 178,k.
Assan Aga derideth the messengers sent vnto him from Charles the Emperor, 719,b. taketh the Spaniards to mercy, 724,k.
Auria with his fleet doth the Turks great harme in Peloponesus, 626,h. besiegeth Corone, and hath it yeelded vnto him, 627,a. taketh and ransacketh Patras with the Castles of Rhium and Molycreum, c. returneth to Genua, e. troubleth the Turks fleet, and taketh twelue of their gallies full of Ianizaries & Solymans other best souldiers, 672,l. braueth Barbarussa in the bay of Ambracia, 688,g. shamefully flyeth with his Fleet, 689,e. dyeth, 787,c.
Austria spoyled by the Turks, 616,i. Altenburg taken,k.
Austria sore wasted by Cason, 621,
Axalla a Christian in great fauor with Tamerlane, and his lieutenant Generall in his warres against the Turke, 214,b. takes Bajazet the great Turke prisoner, 219,d. without resistance taketh Prusa, 221,b. ouerthroweth one of the Turks Bassaes with the slaughter of thirty thousand Turkes, 235,d.

B

Babylon taken and sacked by the Tartars, 113,b. with the countries of Mesopotamia and Assyria yeelded to Solyman, 651,a.
Baiazet the first why syrnamed Gyldenrun or Lightening, 195,f. succeedeth his father Amurath in the Turkish Kingdome, 203,b. inuadeth Sernia, c. by Ferises his Lieutenant spoyleth Valachia, f. oppresseth most of the Mahometane Princes the Successors of Sultan Saladin in the lesser Asia, 204,k. inuadeth Valachia, ouerthroweth the Vayuod, and causeth him to become his Tributarie, 205, a. besiegeth Constantinople eight yeares, c. In a great battell at Nicopolis ouerthroweth Sigismund King of Hungarie with his Confederates, 206,g. returneth againe to the siege of Constantinople, k. marrieth Despina the faire daughter of Lazarus the Despot, 207,a. pretily reproued by his Ieaster, d. in battell ouercommeth Aladin the Caramanian king, and deliuereth him prisoner to Temurtases his Lieutenant, 208,m. subdueth the Caramanian Kingdome, 209,a. hath the great cities of Amasia and Sebastia yeelded vnto him, a. oppresseth the Mahometane Princes of the lesser Asia, d. vnciuilly entertaineth the Embassadours of the Mighty Tamerlane sent vnto him in the behalfe of the poore princes by him oppressed, 211. accounteth a shepheard more happy than himselfe, 216,k. ioineth a great and mortall battel with Tamerlane, 219,b. forsaken of his owne souldiors, c. ouerthrowne and taken prisoner by Axalla, d. brought to Tamerlane, 220. shut vp in a iron cage like a beast, m. dieth miserably, 227,b. his issue, as also his immediate Successor vncertaine, 231,c. his true posterity, 232,g.
Baiazet the second exclued from the succession in the Turkish Empire by his sonne Corcutus, commeth to Constantinople, 437,e. by the mediation of the great Bassa's, obtaineth the Kingdome of Corcutus, 438,g. goeth against his brother Zemes vp in rebellion against him, i. in doubt to haue been betrayed by his souldiers, 441,c. reuiled by the Ianizaries, 444,h. putteth some of them to death, 445, a. purposeth their vtter destruction, b. glad to dissemble his purpose, and to reconcile himself vnto them, f. sendeth Dantius his Embassadour to Alexander Bishop of Rome, 451,d. glad to heare that diuers of the Christian Princes had combined themselues against the French king, 456,i. in danger to haue been slaine by a Dernistar or Turkish Monke, 463,c. Baiazet by nature peaceable, d. his children, 467,k. sendeth Embassadours with presents vnto his sonne Selymus, 480,i. seeking to preferre Achomates his eldest sonne to the Empire, himselfe yet liuing, is mightily withstood by the souldiers of the Court before corrupted by Selymus, 481,b. hee forbiddeth Selymus to come vnto him and threatneth him, 482,h. fearing to lose Constantinople, departeth from Hadrianople, i. his resolute speech vnto the Ianizaries and other souldiers of the Court, 484,l. in plaine battell ouercommeth his sonne Selymus at Tzurulum, 485,d. willing the second time to haue resigned his Empire to Achomates, is againe withstood by his men of warre, 487,b. his resolute answer vnto Mustapha and the other traiterous Bassaes after that Selymus was by their practise, by the souldiers of the Court saluted Emperour, 494,k. poysoned by Hamon his Physitian a Iew, 495,f. dieth 496,g.
Baiazet, Solyman his yonger sonne seeketh to aspire vnto the Empire, his father yet liuing, 768,b. setteth vp a counterfeit Mustapha to make an head to his intended rebellion, k. the subtill and crafty dealing of the supposed Mustapha to deceiue the people, l. forsaken of his followers, is taken and brought to Solyman at Constantinople, 770,g. secretly with his complices drowned, h. Baiazet sent for by his father, goeth vnto him in fear, l. in few words comforted by his mother, 771,a. sharply for his disloyaltie reproued by his father, and so by him pardoned, b. returneth againe to his charge, d. after the death of Roxolana his mother raiseth new stirres, e. admonished of his duty by his father, 772,h. vnwilling to go to Amasia the Prouince appointed him by his father, seeketh delayes, 773,k. by a Chiaus requesteth his father not to intermeddle betwixt his brother and him, 774, h. making shew as if he would go to Amasia, stayeth at Ancyra, and there raiseth his forces, l. his quarrell generally fauoured of the souldiers, 775,b. his purpose, d. hee goeth against his brother towards Iconium, e. fighteth a bloudy battell with his brother Selymus, wherein were forty thousand Turks slaine, 776,g. put to the worse retyreth, and so goeth to Amasia, h. more commended by the Souldiers in his ouerthrow, than was his brother in his victory, i. seeketh againe for his fathers fauour, 777,f. despairing thereof flyeth into Persia, deceiuing by the way the Bassaes of Sebastia and Erzirum, 778,k. at the first well entertained by the Persian King, 779,e. his followers by the cunning of the fearefull Persian dispersed and slaine, 780,k. he himselfe with his sonnes imprisoned, l. his miserable estate in prison, 780,f. with his foure sonnes at the instance of his father by the Persian strangled, 782,b.
Baiazet Bassa sent by Amurath against Mustapha the Rebell, forsaken of his Souldiers, yeeldeth, 255,e. vpon a false surmise executed, f.

Baldwin County of Edessa, and Brother to Godfrey, second King of Ierusalem, 25, a. winneth Cæsarea from the Infidels, b. ouerthroweth the Turks hard by Rama, c. besiegeth Ptolemais, and in retyring thence is mortally wounded, e. besiegeth it again, and hath it by composition yeelded vnto him, e. after many sharp assaults winneth Berythus, 26, h. taketh Sidon by composition, and in vaine besiegeth Tyre, i. maketh an expedition into Ægypt, and neere vnto Laris dieth, m.

Baldwin syrnamed Brugensis, County of Edessa, besiegeth Carras, and there taken prisoner, after fiue yeares captiuitie redeemeth himselfe, 25, d. after the death of Baldwin the first, chosen King of Ierusalem, and called Baldwin the second, 27, a. ouerthroweth the Turks, and ioyneth the Principalitie of Antioch to his owne Kingdome, d. by Balac the Persian Sultan ouerthrowne and taken prisoner; after eighteene moneths captiuitie, for the ransome of 100000 Duckets set at libertie, 28, l. in three notable battels ouerthroweth the King of Damasco, 29, a. dieth, b.

Baldwin the third of that name crowned King of Ierusalem, 31, a. hardly distressed by Noradin the Turke, b. he fortifieth Gaza, and taketh Ascalon by composition, 34, i. in a set battell ouerthroweth Noradin the King of Damasco at the Castle of Sueta, 35, f. falleth sicke and dieth, 36, h.

Baldwin the fourth of that name seuenth King of Ierusalem, 58, l. with a great slaughter ouerthroweth Saladin inuading his Kingdome, 59, d. putteth him with his great Army againe to flight, 60, k. resigneth the gouernment of his Kingdome to Guy Lusignan County of Ioppa and Ascalon, 61, b. sendeth Embassadours vnto the Christian Princes of the West, and immediately after dieth, 62, i.

Baldwin the fifth of that name, yet but boy, was crowned eighth King of Ierusalem, and within seuen months after dieth, 62, i.

Baldwin County of Flaunders and Henault chosen by the Latines Emperor of Constantinople, and so solemnely crowned, 83, c. subdueth Thracia and besiegeth Hadrianople, 85, a. ouerthrowne in a battell by the Scythians and taken prisoner, is by the commandement of the barbarous King most cruelly put to death, d.

Baldwin the second of that name fift and last Emperour of the Latines in Constantinople, 79, a. pawneth his sonne vnto the Bruges Merchants for money, 112, m. flyeth out of the City of Constantinople, being surprised by Alexius Strategopulus sent from Michael Palæologus the Greeke Emperour, 124, m.

Balabanus sent by Mahomet against Scanderbeg, 393, b. put to flight, taketh diuers of Scanderbegs best Captaines prisoners at Alchria, 396, g. with his army ouerthrowne at Oronicheum, l. the third time ouerthrown in the battell at Sfetigrade, 397, b. Ouerthrowne by Scanderbeg the fourth time in the battell at Valcha, 398, a. left by Mahomet to continue the siege of Croia, 400, l. slaine, c.

Barbarussa succeedeth his brother Horruccius in the Kingdome of Algiers, 636, i. his wonderfull successe, k. sent for by Solyman, l. enuied in the Turks Court, 637, b. by Solyman himselfe reiected to Abraham the great Bassa, d. trauelleth by land vnto him into Syria, and by him commended to Solyman, e. his speech to Solyman to perswade him to inuade the kingdome of Tunes, 638, g. he is made Solymans great Admirall, 639, d. spoyleth the coasts of Italy, 640, m. passeth ouer into Africke, and hath Bisserta yeelded vnto him, 643, b. commeth to Guletta, deceiueth the Citisens, and is receiued into Tunes, f. discomfiteth the Citisens risen vp against him, b. hath the city of Tunes yeelded vnto him, 645, e. is much discouraged with the comming of Charles the Emperour into Africke, 656, h. in his rage executeth Aloysius Presenda, i. encourageth his souldiers, l. his chiefe Captaines, 657, b. the County of Sarne his head and right hand by Salec sent vnto him for a present, 658, l. his fleet taken by Charles the Emperour at Guletta, 661, a. he rageth, b. calmed by Sinan the Iew, c. in field with his army against Charles the Emperor, 665, e. flyeth to Tunes, 666, g. dissuaded by Sinan the Iew from killing the Christian captiues; who shortly after breaking prison, driue the Turks out of the Castle of Tunes, 666, l. flyeth to Hippona, and there comforteth his souldiers, 668, k. escapeth to Algiers, 669, b. sent by Solyman against the Venetians, 687, a. repulsed in Crete, b. reproued of cowardise by one of the Turks Eunuchs, 688, h. ieasteth at the flight of Auria, 689, e. braueth the Christians at Corcyra, 690, g. suffereth shipwrecke vpon the Acroceraunian Rocks, k. with a great fleet sent by Solyman to aid the French King against Charles the Emperour, 735, a. burneth Rhegium, and taketh the Castle, b. becommeth amorous of the Captaine of Rhegium his daughter, c. maketh them afraid in Rome, d. commeth to Marseilles, f. for lacke of imployment groweth discontented, 742, l. with the French besiegeth Nice in Prouence, 743, c. rageth against the French, & threatneth Polinus, 744, h. Gineth ouer the siege of the Castle of Nice, and setteth fire on the City, i. derided by the Turks Captaines, sharply answereth their taunts, 748, l. rewarded and discharged by the French King, departeth out of Prouence, 749, d. requesteth of Appianus Gouernour of Elba, to haue a sonne of Sinan the Iewes there prisoner, deliuered vnto him, e. spoyleth the Iland, and hath the young man deliuered vnto him, 750, g. in his returne to Constantinople doth much harme vpon the coast of Italie, m. dieth, 751, c

Barbadicus the Venetian Proueditour a notable man, 874, l. slaine in the battell of Lepanto, 880, g.

Barbarous cruelty, 909, e.

the Barbarous manner of the Turkish Sultans to murther their brethren in the beginning of their reigne, when & by whom first begun, 201, a.

Bare shift for money, 345, e.

the Bassa of Bosna and his brother slain, 1002, i.

the Bassa of Temeswar ouerthrowne by the Rascians and slaine, 1138, k.

the Bassa of Buda taken prisoner, 1110, i.

the Bassa of Bosna slaine, 1110, k.

the Bassa of Natolia taken prisoner by the Prince of Sarcan, 217, c. his stout answer to Tamerlane, d. by Tamerlane set at libertie and rewarded, e.

the Bassa of Buda slaine, 1136, l.

the Bassa of Agria with 1000 Turks ouerthrowne by Ferrant Gonzaga, and chased to the gates of the City, 1141, g.

Basilicus a faithful man vnto his prince, 170, b.

Battels.

A cruell battell fought betwixt Solyman the Turke and the Christian Princes going towards the Holy land, 16, l. an hundred thousand Turks slaine in the battell neere vnto Antioch, betwixt Corbanas the Persian Sultans Lieutenant, and the Christian an Princes, 20, b. 100000 Turks and Sarasins slain in the great battel not far from Ascalon, fought betwixt Godfrey of Buillon and the Turks and Sarasins, 24, l. the great battell betwixt Amurath the first, and Lazarus the Despot, fought in the plaines of Cossouia, 200, i. The battell of Nicopolis betwixt Baiazet the first and Sigismund king of Hungarie, 206, g. The great and mortall battell betwixt Baiazet and the great Tamerlane, 219, b. the battell of Vascape betwixt Huniades and Abedin Bassa, 273, c. the wofull battell of Varna betwixt King Vladislaus and Amurath the second, 297, b. the great battell of Cossouia, fought three daies together betwixt Amurath and Huniades, 307, d. the battell betwixt Vsun-Cassanes the Persian King and Mahomet the Great, 410, f. the battell of Tzurulum betwixt Baiazet and his sonne Selymus, 485, d. the great battell betweene Selymus and Hysmael, 510, m. the battell of Singa betwixt Selymus and Campson, 529, e the battell betwixt Sinan Bassa and Gazelles, 535, c. The great battell of Rhodonia betwixt Selymus and Tomombeius, 539, c. The great and dreadfull battell of Caire, fought two dayes together betwixt the Mamalukes and the Turks, 545, c. the battell of Mohatczh betwixt Solyman and King Lewis, 602, k. the battell of Tockaie betwixt the armies of King Iohn and King Ferdinand, 606 b. the memorable battell of Lepanto betwixt Haly Bassa and Don Iohn, 878, b. the battell of Suncazen betwixt the Persian Prince and the Turks, Osman their Generall then lying sicke, 994, m. the battell of Alba-Regalis betwixt the Imperialls & the Turks, 1026, b. the battell of Strigonium, 1068, b. the battell of Agria, betwixt Mahomet the third and Maximilian the Archduke the Emperors brother, 1097, d.

Bedredin the counterfeit Prophet hanged, 251, d.

Begum the Persian Queene made away, 941, a.

Belgrade besieged by Amurath the second, 263, c. notably defended by the Christians, 266, g. againe besieged by Mahomet the Great, 357, b. woon by Solyman, 569, b.

Belgrade in the confines of Epirus besieged by Scanderbeg, 370, h.

Bloudy precepts left by Selymus vnto his sonne Solyman, 563, b.

Bodo constant to King Iohn, 606, k.

Bosna of a kingdome converted to a prouince of the Turks Empire, 365, b.

Bosna with some part of Sernia taken from the Turks by Mathias King of Hungarie, 404, k.

Bragadinus Gouernour of Famagusta encourageth his souldiers, 864, i. yeeldeth vnto the request of the Citizens of Famagusta, in time to deliuer vp the City, not now longer to be defended, 866, k. entreth into parley with the Turks, l. comming to the false Bassa Mustapha vpon his faith, for his safety before giuen, is by him most shamefully and horribly murthered, 867, a.

Buda besieged by the Lord Rogendorff King Ferdinand his lieutenant, 702, i. surprised by Solyman, 710, k. besieged, and the lower city taken by the Lord Palsi, 1105, c. the castle by him battered, undermined, and in vain assaulted, 1105 c. the lower city of Buda againe taken by the Christians, 1146, i. the vpper City and Castle besieged, 1174, b. in vaine assaulted, f. the siege for feare of the Tartars giuen ouer by the Christians, 1149, c.

C

Caffa with the countrey of Taurica Chersonesus subdued by the Turks, 412, l.

Caire described, 542, m. taken by Selymus, 545, i.

Calo Ioannes after the death of Alexius his father succeedeth him in the Empire, 27, c. he taketh Tarsus in Cilicia, besiegeth Antioch, and vpon composition raiseth his siege. 30, g. wounded with a poysoned arrow, dyeth, k.

Calcis the chiefe City of Eubœa besieged by the Turks, 405, d. taken by the Turks, 406, h.

Callipolis taken by the Turks, 186, g.

Caly Bassa dissuadeth Mahomet from the siege of Constantinople, 344, l. Caly Bassa cruelly executed, 350, g.

Calybeius Bassa and Cherseogles after a long and mortall battell taken by Vsbeg, and sent prisoners to Caytbeius, 450, b.

Campson Gaurus with what causes moued to fall out with Selymus, 522, g. his moderate and happy gouernment, 524, l. his answer vnto the Embassadours of Selymus, 525, a. perplexed, 527, b. slaine, 530, i. his dead body layd out to be seene of all men, 531, a.

Canalis the Venetian Admirall doth the Turks great harme, 405, a. with his whole family exiled, 406, l.

Canisa besieged by the Turks, 1131, e. cowardly yeelded, 1132, b. besieged by Ferdinand the Archduke, 1137, b. the siege by reason of tempest and extremitie of weather giuen ouer, 1138, k.

Capcapus Gouernour of Damasco reuolteth from the Tartars to the Turks, 126, i.

Carasina yeelded vnto Orchanes, 184, b.

Caraguza a Turke offereth a challenge vnto any of the souldiers in Scanderbegs army, 312, b.

Caragoses Bassa Beglerbeg of Asia, in a great battell ouerthrowne by Techellis, 472, b. taken prisoner, 473, a. horribly empaled by the high-wayes side, 474, g.

Caramania by Baiazet vnited to the Ottoman Empire, 447, c.

Caracoza the famous pyrat slaine, 881, e.

Carazies Bassa slaine, 357, d.

Cardinall Bathor taketh vpon him the principalitie of Transyluania, 1109, f. in a great battell ouerthrowne by Michael the Vayuod, 1113, c. his head sent for a Present vnto the Emperour, e.

Cassan Bassa slaine, 510, m.

the Castle of Buda by the garrison souldiers without the consent of their captaine yeelded to Solyman, 610, g.

Cassanes the Tartar inuadeth Syria, 125, c. in a great battell ouerthroweth Melcenasey the Ægyptian Sultans Lieutenant, d. repaireth Ierusalem, and giueth it to the Christians, hath Damasco yeelded vnto him, e.

Castronouum taken from the Turks, and by the Imperials vniustly detained from the Venetians, 690, g. recouered againe by Barbarussa, 691, d.

the Catalonians entertained by Andronicus the Emperour, for want of pay spoile his Subiects, 151, a. take the spoile of Calipolis, and there fortifying themselues, do great harme both by sea and land, d. aided by the Turks, ouerthroweth Michael the Emperour in plaine battell, 152, k. spoile a great part of Thracia, 153, a. seat themselues in the Cities of Athens and Thebes, 154, i.

Caytbeius the Ægyptian Sultan sendeth Embassadors to Baiazet in the behalf of Zemes, 440, l. dieth, 450, i.

Cayerbeius Gouernour of Comagena, bearing a grudge to Campson, hath intelligẽce with Selymus, 528, k. plaieth the cunning traitor, 529, d. by Selymus made Gouernour of Cayre and Ægypt, 554, h.

Cazia-

Cazianer Generall of King Ferdinands army against the Turks, 677, e. besiegeth Execke, 680, i. toretyre with more haste, would haue broken his great ordnance, 681, c. a generall fear in his camp, 682, i. his dishonourable flight, 683, e. generally hated, 685, f. breaketh prison, 686, h. shamefully murthered, and his head sent to King Ferdinand, i.

Cephalenia taken from the Turks by the Venetians, 460, k.

Chamuzes Bassa and Catobolinus the Turks Secretarie hanged by Wladus, 361, d.

Charles the French King inuadeth the Kingdome of Naples, 453, d. receiued into the city of Naples, 455, d.

Charles the Emperor his great preparation against Solyman, 616, b. his power at Vienna, 622, l. after the departure of Solyman returneth into Italy, 626, g. his great preparation for the inuasion of Tunes, 654, m. he passeth ouer into Africke, 656, g. landeth his army at Gulletta, 657, e. deserueth the Oken Garland, 663, c. he marcheth towards Tunes, 664, l. content to be commanded by his Lieutenant, 665, d. putteth Barbarussa to flight, f. hath Tunes yeelded vnto him, 667, c restoreth it to Muleasses, now become his tributarie, 669, d. returneth into Italy, e. with the Venetians and the Bishop of Rome entreth into a confederation against Solyman, 686, l. inuadeth Algiers, 718, i. sendeth a messenger to Assan Aga Gouernor of Algiers for Barbarussa, m. his messenger and message scorned by Assan Aga the Eunuch, 719, b. his notable courage in staying the flight of his army, 721, e. most part of his Fleet lost by tempest, 722, h. the miserie of his army, 723, a. horses good meat in his camp, c. raiseth his siege and departeth from Algiers, d. drowneth his horses of great price, to make roome for his common souldiers, 724, b. after many troubles, arriueth at length at new Carthage in Spaine, 725, a. resigneth his Empire vnto his brother Ferdinand, and shortly after dieth, 783, a.

Charles County Mansfelt sent by the King of Spaine out of the Low-countries with 2000 horse and 6000 foot to aid the Emperour in his wars against the Turke, 1061, d. by the Emperour appointed Lieutenant Generall of his army in the lower Hungary vnder Mathias the Archduke, and created one of the Princes of the Empire, 1061, e. with seuerity appeaseth the mutinous Germanes, 1064, g. remoueth suddenly with his army from Doris to Strigonium, 1065, b. in a great battell ouerthroweth the Bassa of Buda comming to the reliefe of Strigonium, 1068, i. dieth at Comara, 1070, k.

Chars in three and twenty dayes fortified by the Turks, 943, f.

Chasan Chelife and Schach-Culi two hypocriticall Persians, authors of the sect of the Cusel-Bassa's or Red-heads among the Turks, 495, e. stir vp a great rebellion, 469, e. Chasan Chelife slaine, 474, i.

Chendemus Bassa by many graue reasons dissuadeth Selymus from inuading the Persians, 506, h. he is by the commandement of Selymus vnworthily slaine, 507, b.

Cherseogles Bassa what he was, and why he turned Turke, 484, g. a fauourer of learning, i. the onely of great men faithfull to Baiazet, perswadeth him to giue battell vnto his rebellious son Selymus, 483, d.

Chios taken by the Turks, 819, c.

Chiroche dissuadeth the Bassaes Partan and Haly from giuing battell vnto the Christians at Lepanto, 875, b. encountreth with Contarenus, 800, i. slaine, and his galley taken, l.

Christians fight against Christians, to the confusion of themselues and benefit of the Turke, 340, k. in seeking too greedily after the spoile, ouerthrowne and discomfited in the battell at Karesta, 1089. g.

Cicala Bassa by the appointment of Osman the Visier Bassa commands the Turks great Army after his death, in the returne thereof from Tauris, 995, c. dischargeth the Army at Van, 996, h. afraid to giue aid to Giaffer Bassa at Tauris, 998, l. restoreth the battel before lost at Karesta, 1098. with a great fleet commeth to see his Mother the Lady Lucretia at Messina, 1107, b.

Columnius the Popes Admirall interposeth himselfe as a mediatour betwixt Don Iohn and Venerius the Venetian Admirall, and so wel appeaseth the matter, 874, g.

Comparison betwixt Baiazet and Tamerlane, 227, c.

Confederation hard to trust vpon, 840, h.

Conrade Marquesse of Montferat slain, by two desperat russians, 17, d.

Conrade the third, Emperour of Germanie taketh vpon him an expedition into the Holy land, 31, c. cannot be suffered to enter into Constantinople, but is treacherously dealt withall by the Greeke Emperour, 32. with a notable speech encourageth his Souldiours to aduenture the riuer Meander, 33, a. with a great slaughter ouerthroweth the Turks, 34, g. besiegeth Iconium, and so returneth, h.

Constantins prince of Bulgaria, with the Tartars inuade the territories of Palæologus the Greeke Emperour, and spoileth Thracia, 117, b.

Constantine the Despot sent by the old Emperour Andronicus his Brother, against young Andronicus his Nephew, 163, a. taken prisoner at Thessalonica, and miserably vsed, f.

Constantine the Greeke Emperor in vain craueth aid of the other Christian Princes, 340, h. at the winning of Constantinople by the Turks troden to death, 347, b.

Constantinople built by Pausanias, destroyed by Seuerus, re-edified by Constantine the Great, 342, a. how seated, 340, k. taken and spoiled by the Latines, 83, a. recouered from the Latines by Alexius Strategopulus, 115, d. betraid vnto the young Emperour Andronicus, 171, d. in vaine besieged by Amurath the second, 257, f. againe besieged by Mahomet the Great, 340, k. assaulted by the Turks, 346, k. woon, 347, c.

Contarenus the Venetian Admiral slain 413, c.

Corcutus saluted Emperour before his father Baiazet, 437, d. kindly resigneth the Empire to his father, 438, g. giuen to the study of Philosophie, and therefore not beloued of the Ianizaries, 478, k. commeth to Constantinople, 491, d. his notable speech vnto his father to perswade him to resigne vnto him the Empire before the comming of his brother Selymus, 491, e. comforted by his father, and put in hope of the Empire, 492, m. flieth to Magnesia, 495, a. sought after by Selymus, hideth himselfe in a caue, 501, f. is found and taken, 522, g. by the commandement of Selymus strangled, h.

Corcug-Ogli the pyrat perswadeth Solyman to besiege the Rhodes, 570, g.

Corone, Pylus, and Crisseum Cities of Peloponesus belonging to the Venetians, yeelded vnto the Turks, 460, b.

Corone besieged by the Turks, 627, f. relieued by Auria, 629, d. abandoned and forsaken by the Spaniards, 631, c.

Cornea and Serbellio two antient Spanish Captaines perswade the giuing of battell vnto the Turks at Lepanto, 872, i.

Costly dishes, 745, d.

Cowardise punished, 1093,c.
Crete described, 868,h.
Croia besieged by Amurath the second, 323,b. in vaine assaulted, 324,k. besieged by Mahomet the Great, 400,i. relieued, 401,c. againe besieged by Mahomet, 402,k. the third time besieged, 413,d. yeelded to the Turks, 417,a.
Cubates Selymus his Embassadour commeth to Venice, 839,f. but homely entertained there, 840,f. his speech in the Senat of Venice, k. for feare of the people secretly conueied away, 842,g.
Curzola forsaken by the men, defended by women. 869,c.
Cusabin Bassa of Caramania riseth vp in rebellion against Mahomet the third, 1114, k. ouerthroweth the Sanzacks sent to haue oppressed him, l. at the comming of Mehemet the Visier Bassa sent against him, flieth, 1115,b. forsaken of his followers, is taken and tortured to death at Constantinople,d.
the Cuselbassaes when and how they begun amongst the Turks. 465,f.
Cyprus described, 843,b. how that kingdome came to the Venetians,c. taken from them by Selymus the second, 867,f.
Cyrene yeelded to the Turks, 852,i.
Czarnieuiche corrupted, giueth the Turks passage ouer the Danubius, into Valachia, 911, d. reuolteth vnto the Turks, 912,k.

D

Damasco betrayed to Saladin Sultan of Ægypt, 58,m. taken and sacked by the Tartars, 1133,e. yeelded to Selymus, 532,m.
Damiata and the description thereof, 89,a. taken by the Christians, being before vnpeopled by the Plague, 92, m.
Dandalus Admirall of the Venetian fleet, 85,a.
Dauid and Alexius Comneni, Nephews to Andronicus the Emperor, erect vnto themselues a new empire in Trapezond, 84,l.
Dauid the last Emperour of Trapezond put to death by Mahomet the Great, and that Empire subuerted, 336,m.
Daut Chan for his good seruice rewarded by Amurath the third, 996,i.
Dearth in the Turks army at Triala, 970,b.
Debreus slain, and his army ouerthrown by Scanderbeg, 367,e.
Dedesmet the Georgian widow, with her son Alexander submit themselues to Mustapha the great Bassa, 937,e.
Delimenthes with fiue thousand Persians pursueth the Turks army, 652, k. assaileth their campe by night and maketh of them a great slaughter, m Demetrius submitteth himselfe vnto Mahomet the Great, 355,b.
Demetrius the Rhodian Traitor slaine, 239,a.
Desdrot Gouernor of Stellusa, to the terror of the Turks in Sfetigrade, before their faces executed, 287,a.
Didymotichum yeelded vnto the Turks, 189,e.
Diogenes the Emperour discomfiteth the Turks, 8,h. himselfe by the treason of Iohn Ducas by them againe ouerthrowne, 9,e. taken prisoner, 10,g. honourably vsed by the Turks Sultan, h. ouerthrowne and taken prisoner by Andronicus, hath his eies put out, whereof he dieth, m.
Dissention among the Turks, about the succession, after the death of Mahomet the Great, 437, b.
Dissention betwixt Don Iohn and Venerius the Venetian Admirall, 873, c.
Diuum a castle of the Venetians in the East Indies in vaine assaulted by the Turks, 670,l.
Doganes Aga of the Ianizaries whipt and displaced, 339,b.
Dotis taken by the Turks, 1099,c.
Dragut a most famous Pyrat of the Turks, by Auria driuen out of the City of Africa in the Kingdome of Tunes, 752,i. commeth to the siege of Malta, 797,d. his souldiers inforced shamefully to retyre, 799. slaine, 801,b.
Dracula Vayuod of Valachia dissuadeth King Vladislaus from farther proceeding in his warres against Amurath, 205,e. aideth him with his sonne and 400 horse, 296, b. his last farwell vnto the King, i.
the Drusian people what they are, 982,i.
Dulcigno, Antiuari, and Budua, strong townes of the Venetians vpon the coasts of Epirus and Dalmatia, yeelded to the Turke, 869,a.
the Duke of Muscouie his Letters and Presents sent vnto the Emperour, 1071,a.
Duke Mercury Generall of the Emperours forces in the lower Hungary, commeth in vaine to relieue Canisia, 1131,e. in retyring loseth three thousand of his men with certain pieces of great ordnance and his baggage, 1132 g. besiegeth Alba-Regalis, 1134,m. winneth it, 1135,f. inforceth Hassan the Turks Generall with the losse of 6000 of his Turks to retyre, 1139,l.
Dyrrachium, now called Durazo, taken by the Turks, 461,c.

E

Earthquake most terrible in Constantinople, 476,h.
Edward eldest sonne to Henry the third, King of England, taketh vpon him an expedition into the Holy Land, and arriueth at Tunes, 119,c. arriueth at Ptolemais, 120,g. taketh Nazareth and putteth the Turks to flight, h. by a desperat Sarasin dangerously wounded with an enuenomed knife, k. cured of his wound, maketh peace with the Sultan, and returneth into England, 121,a.
the Egyptians diuersly affected towards the Mamalukes, 542,i.
Einases Bassa hath his eies burnt out, 238,m.
Elpis the Ægyptian Sultan besiegeth Tripolis, and taketh it by force, 122, l. winneth Sidon and Berythus, and raseth them, taketh Tyre by composition, and winneth all the strong Holds in Syria and Palestine from the Christians, except onely the strong city of Ptolemais, 122, m. maketh peace with the remainder of the Christians, m.
Emanuel the Greeke Emperour with a great power inuadeth the Dominions of the Sultan of Iconium, 38, h. loseth a great part of his Army, 39,c. in danger to haue been taken, notably defendeth himselfe, 40,l. in his greatest distresse hath peace offered him by the Sultan, which he gladly accepteth, 42, i. he vanquisheth Atapacke the Sultans Generall, m. falleth sicke and dieth, 43,e.
Emanuel the Greeke Emperour vpon hard conditions obtaines peace of Baiazet the Great Turke, and becommeth his tributary, 206,l. by his Embassadours offereth his Empire vnto Tamerlane, and so to become his vassall, 221, d. commeth himselfe vnto him at Prusa, 222, h. honourably entertaineth him, comming in priuat ouer to Constantinople, i.
Embassadors sent from Tamas the Persian King to Selymus, 836, b. honorably entertained by the Turks at Hadrianople, 837, b. the Persian Embassador in going to visit Muhamet the Visier Bassa, in danger to haue been slaine, d. the rich Presents by him giuen to Selymus, 838,g.
Emir-Hamze the Persian Prince commeth into Siruan, 939, c, killeth Caitas Bassa, and recouereth Eres, d. ouerthroweth the Tartars, and taketh taketh Abdilcheray, 940,g. recouereth Sumachia,i. returneth to Casbin, k. ouerthroweth the vauward of the Turks army, 990,l. in a great battell ouerthroweth Cicala Bassa and the Bassa of Caraemit, 993,b. dareth Osman the Turks Generall to battell, c. with his owne hand killeth the Bassa of Caraemit,f. killeth also the Bassa of Trapezond with twenty thousand Turks moe. 994,g. ouerthroweth 20000 of the Turks at the battell of Sancazan, 995,b. ouercommeth the rebellious Turcomans, and executeth their Leaders, 998, h. sacketh Salmas, 1000,k. putteth the Bassa of Reiuan to flight, l. slaine by one of his Eunuches, 1002,h.

Emir Chan hauing his eies put out, dyeth miserably in prison, 973,c.

the Emperour, the French King, and the King of Polonia intangled in their Leagues with the Turke, refuse to giue aid vnto the Venetians against him, 842,k.

the Empire of Trapezond ouerthrowne and subuerted by Mahomet the Great, 361,a.

Ertogrul with his brother Dunder and foure hundred families of the Turks stay in their returne towards Persia, 133, f. by his good seruice obtaineth of Sultan Aladin a place at Suguta for himselfe, and his Turks to dwell in, 134, k. taketh the Castle of Cara-Chisar from the Christians, 135,a.

Eubœa taken from the Venetians by Mahomet the Great, 406,k.

Eurenoses his rich Present vnto Amurath at the mariage of his sonne Baiazet, 193,b.

Eudocia the Empresse contrary to her oath, desirous to marry, dealeth cuntingly with the Patriarch to dispense with her oath, 7, d. marrieth Diogenes Romanus a prisoner condemned to die, and maketh him Emperour, f. she is deposed by the traiterous Iohn Ducas, Psellus, and others, and thrust into a Monasterie, 10, i.

Eustace gouernor of the Kingdome of Ierusalem discomfiteth the Sarasins in a great battell, neere vnto Ascalon, and not long after dieth, 28,i.

F

Famagusta besieged by the Turks, 852, k. hath a new supply put into it by Quirinus, 855,e. described, 863, b. the number of the defendants in it, c. twice assaulted and notably defended by the Christians, d,e. vndermined, 865, a. furiously by the Turks assaulted, and valiantly by the Christians defended, b. a great part of the wall blowne vp, and the City againe assaulted, 866, g. yeelded vp to the Turks, m.

Famine in Scodra, 426.g.

Faulconers and huntsmen in great number in the Turks Court, 338, k.

Ferat Bassa sent by Solyman against Alis-Beg the mountaine Prince, 600, i. trecherously murthereth him and his foure sonnes, l.

Ferat Bassa by Amurath chosen General of his Army against the Persians in stead of Sinan, 965, d. in the space of fifteene daies buildeth a Fort at Reiuan, as he was by Amurath commanded, 966, i. breaketh vp his army at Erzirum, 967, d. raiseth a new army, f. fortifieth Lori, 968, k. buildeth a Fort vpon the streit of Tomanis, 969, a. reproueth Veis Bassa of Aleppo, 970, k. is himselfe reuiled by the Ianizaries and Spahi, l. by them disobeyed and threatned, 971, d. his stout answer to his mutinous soldiers, f. his Tents ouerthrowne and he againe threatned, 972, g. disgraced, breaketh vp his army at Ardachan, k. grieuously complained of to Amurath, 973, e. by Amurath againe made Generall against the Persians, 999, b. commeth to Van, 1000, g. putteth succors into Tauris, 1001, d. taketh Genge, 1004, m. sent by Mahomet Generall of his Army into Hungary, 1060, l. disgraced at his first comming to the Army, m. ouerthrowne in Valachia, 1062, h. sent for to Constantinople, and there strangled, 1073, b.

Ferdinand King of Bohemia layeth claime to the Kingdome of Hungarie, 605, b. taketh Buda, c. crowned King of Hungarie, 606, k. seeketh for the fauor of Solyman, 608, is by him reiected and threatned, k. perswaded by the Hungarian fugitiues to inuade Hungarie, 698, g. dissuaded by Lascus, k. sendeth Lascus to Solyman, and other Embassadors to the Queen of Hungarie to demand of her that Kingdome, 699, b. hee inuadeth Hungarie, 700, g. taketh Pesth and Vacia, and besiegeth Buda, h. dieth, 791, d.

Fileck taken by the Christians, 1027, c.

Foscarus a graue Senatour, 693, f. vnworthily disgraced by the multitude, 694, g.

Fourteen waggons loaded with the heads of the slaine Christians, 1017, c.

Francis the French King the more to trouble the Emperour, soliciteth Solyman to inuade his territories, 725, c.

Francis Acciauol Duke of Thebes by the commandment of Mahomet murthered, 354, l.

Frederick the Emperor taketh vpon him an expedition into the Holy Land, 66, h.

Fredericke Duke of Sueuia the Emperours sonne in his fathers stead chosen Generall of the Christians Army, 66, m. hath Antioch deliuered vnto him, 67, d. dieth of the Plague, and is buried by his father in the Cathedrall Church at Tyre, 68, g.

Frederick the Germane Emperor vndertaketh an expedition into the Holy Land, 98, l. crowned King of Ierusalem, which is by him repaired, 99, e.

the Frenchmen and Wallons in mutiny at Pappa, 1116, k. compact with the Turks to deliuer to them the towne, 1117, a. seeking secretly to haue fled, are most of them slaine, and the rest that were taken put to most horrible tortures, 1119, b.

Friuli part of the Venetian Territorie miserably spoyled by the Turks, 414, l. againe spoyled by Scander Bassa and the Turks, 458, b.

the frontiers of the Emperors territories grieuously spoyled by the Turkes, 1150, k.

the frugalitie of the Turks, 713, f.

Fulke County of Turin, Maine, and Anion taketh vpon him an expedition into the Holy Land, 29, b. dieth of a fall off his horse in hunting, and is buried at Ierusalem, 30, m, Fuscarinus in his absence, by the generall consent of the Venetian State chosen Admirall, 887, f. encourageth the Confederates to giue the Turks battel, 890, l. in vaine perswadeth the Confederates to take the aduantage of the Turks dispersed Fleet, 893, a. earnestly dissuadeth Don Iohn and the Spaniards from returning without giuing the Turks battell, 899, a.

G

Galile spoyled, and the castle of Burie taken by the Turks, 60, i.

Garzias of Toledo Viceroy of Sicilia after long delay at last setteth forward with his fleet to relieue the besieged at Malta, 814, k. by tempest driuen into the Island of Ægusa, 815, e. arriueth at Malta and landeth his men, 816, i.

Gazelles his wholesome counsell vnto Campson, for protracting the warre against Selymus, 527, e. comming to haue oppressed Sinan Bassa at Gaza, is by him himselfe ouerthrowne, 534, i. his notable speech in submitting himselfe to Selymus, 546, m. by Selymus made gouernor of Siria, 560 l. rebelleth against Solyman, 568, h. slaine, l.

Gaza yeelded vnto Sinan Bassa, 534, g.

George the Despot of Sernia a man of no Religion, 256, i. driuen out of his Kingdome by Amurath, 262, g. restored by King Uladislaus, 289, b. denieth passage vnto Scanderbeg through his country, 295, b. glad to craue aid of Huniades, whom he had before euil intreated, 310, his death, 356, i.

George Bishop of Veradium a notable man, 697, c. murthered in his owne house, 756, i.

Geordiron the phylitian notably deludeth the Ianizaries & Spahi of the court, 252, k.

George Basta by the Emperour appointed Lieutenant Generall for his wars, in the vpper Hungarie, 1104, m. commanded by Matthias the Archduke to giue aid vnto Michael the Vaynod against the Transyluanians, aideth them against him, 1124, h. in a great battell ouerthroweth the Vaynod, 1126, h. his stout speech to the Chiaks and the rest of the Nobilitie of Transyluania, 1129, b. his errour, 1130, g. receiued by the Transyluanians as the Emperours Lieutenant, vntill further order were by him taken for the gouernment of that Prouince, l. suddenly taken prisoner by the Transyluanians, 1139, c. set at libertie, and aided by Michael the Vaynod, ouerthroweth Sigismund the Transyluanian Prince with a great slaughter, and driueth him out of his countrey, 1140, i. conspireth the death of Michael the Vaynod, 1141, a. taketh in most part of the countrey of Transyluania for the Emperour, c. for feare of Sigismund and the Transyluanians, flieth, f. in battell ouerthroweth Zachel Moyses the Transyluanian Princes Lieutenant, and bringeth that country againe vnder the Emperors obeisance, 1143, c.

Geruaise Rogers an English man commended for his good seruice at the siege of the Rhodes, 430, k.

Gerasimus the Patriarch dealeth vnfaithfully with the old Emperor Andronicus, 161, b.

Giaffer Captain of the Ianizaries slaine, 659, f.

Giaffer the Eunuch Bassa of Tripolis by Osman Bassa with a garrison of twelue thousand soldiers left Gouernour of Tauris, 994, i. besieged by the Persian Prince, 997, e. prayeth aid of Cicala Bassa, 998, k. put to flight, 1007, a.

Godfrey Duke of Lorrain with other the Christian Princes with an Army of 300000 fighting men vndertaketh the first expedition into the Holy land 14, i. concludeth a league with Alexius the Greeke Emperour, 15, a. besiegeth Nice and taketh it, 16, g. in a great battel ouerthroweth Sultan Solyman with his Turks, taketh Antiochia in Pisidia, Iconium and Heraclea, winneth Cilicia, Armenia, and Capadocia, 17, a, c. putteth the Turks to flight at the riuer Orantes, 18, g. after long siege taketh Antioch in Syria, 20, m. winneth Ierusalem by assault, 22, d. is chosen King of Ierusalem, 23. his Letters to Bohemund King of Antioch, 24, i. in a great and mortall battell ouerthroweth the Turks at Ascalon, 24, l. Crowned King of Ierusalem, and dieth of the plague, m.

the Gouernour of Alba-Regalis taken, 824, k. his sharp answer vnto a Spaniard, l.

Great treasure found by the Turks at the winning of Constantinople, 347, e.

a Greeke Priest his notable speech perswading the great Master of the Rhodes to yeeld vp the City, 594, b. with the most resolute answer of a common soldier to the contrary, 595, a. and that his speech notably refelled by a Greeke, and the yeelding of the city vrged, c.

the Greeke Church by Michael Palæologus the Greeke Emperor subiected to the Church of Rome, and why, 114, l.

the Greeks carelesse of the Turks first small footing in Chersonesus, least thereat, 185, f.

the Guise Lord Grand Prior of the Knights of S. Iohns in France, Admirall of Malta taketh certaine of the Turks gallies, 767, d.

Guletta how scituated, 657, c. besieged by Charles the Emperour, 658, g. furiously battered, 660, k. assaulted and woon, 661, a. besieged by the Turks, 914, l. taken from the Christians, 915, a.

Guy County of Ioppa and Ascalon the ninth and last King of Iernsalem, 62, l. in battell ouerthrown and taken prisoner by Saladin, 63, e. set at libertie besiegeth Ptolemais, and fighteth a great battell with Saladin, 65, f.

H

HAalon brother to Mango the Great Cham of Tartaria, with a great army inuades the Turks, 113, a. his great victories gainst the Turkes, c, d.

Hadrianople yeelded vnto the Turkes, 189, f. by Amurath the first made the royall seat of his Kingdome in Europe, 191, b.

Haider marrieth Martha the daughter of the great King Vsun-Cassanes by Despina, and hath by her Hysmael afterwards King of Persia, 464, l.

Haider murthered by Iacup the Persian King, 484, a.

Haly Bassa slaine, 881, c. his two sons taken in the battell of Lepanto, f. the Greeke that slew him honourably rewarded, 884, g.

Hamon the Iew for his treachery iustly rewarded by Selymus, 496, i.

Hardecke Gouernour of Rab corrupted, yeeldeth the city to the Turks, 1044, l. executed at Vienna, 1046, h.

Hassan Bassa releiueth the distressed Turks in garrison at Teflis, 944, l. breaketh promise with Aliculi Chan, 945, c. rewarded for his good seruice, 946, g. sent by Ferat Bassa to the reliefe of Teflis, 967, a. againe rewarded by Amurath, b. left by Ferat with a garrison of 8000 souldiers in the new fort at Tomanis, 970, h. Generall of Sultan Mahomets army in Hungary, commeth out of season to reliene Alba-Regalis, 1136, i.

Hassan Bassa the Queenes Eunuch sent Gouernour to Caire, 980, h. cast in prison at Constantinople, and his euill gotten goods confiscated, 981, d. his life spared at the intercession of the Queene, and he himselfe set at libertie, e.

Hassan Bassa of Bosna inciteth Amurath to make war vpon the Emperor, 1014, l. taketh Wihitz the metropolitical city of Croatia, 1015. loadeth six wagons with the heads of the slaine Christians, 1016. g. spoyleth Turopolis, l. deceiued by the Abbot of Siseg, 1021, c. his threatning letters vnto the Abbot, d. besiegeth Siseg, 1022, g. in a great battell ouerthrowne, 1023, a. drowned, b.

Hatwan besieged by the Christians, 1093, d. taken by assault, 1094, g. againe forsaken by the Christians, i.

Henry brother to Baldwin chosen second Emperor of the Latines in Constantinople, 58, f.

Henry Duke of Saxony with a great army sent into the Holy Land by Henry the sixt, Emperor of Germany, goeth accompanied with many great Princes, 73, e. falling sicke of a feuer, dieth, 74, h.

Henry the French King by his Embassadour sadour soliciteth Solyman to inuade the King of Spaine his territories, 767,c.

Heraclius the Greeke Emperour by the helpe of the Arabians recouereth Siria and the Holy City from Chosroë the Persian king, 22,g.
Hoccata the Tartar by his Captaines subdueth Armenia the greater, Cholchis and Iberia, 76,i. succeeding his father Zingis, inuadeth the East and West parts of Asia. subdueth the East Indies, and buildeth Cambalu, 75,e. driueth the Turks out of Persia, and subdueth many countries, 76,g.
Horruccius and Hariadenus how they of base pyrats aspired to the kingdome of Algiers, 635,c. Horruccius his successe, f. slaine, and his head in triumph carried about in Spaine, 636,b.
Hungary diuided into two factions vpon the choice of Vladislaus King of Polonia, 163,a. againe diuided vpon the dissention betwixt King Ferdinand and king Iohn, 605, c. becommeth a prey vnto Solyman, and by him conuerted into the forme of a Prouince of the Turkish Empire, 713,a.
Huniades by king Vladislaus made Vayuod of Transyluania, 266,l. In a great battell ouerthroweth Isa-Beg Amurath his Lieutenant in Seruia, 267, d. ouerthroweth Mesites Bassa and killeth him with twenty thousand Turks moe, 269, e. of the spoile of the Turks sendeth a Present vnto king Vladislaus and the Despot of Seruia, 270, g. his most Christian speech to encourage his souldiers against the Turks, 271, d. in a great and mortall battell ouerthroweth Abedin Bassa with his Army at Vascape, 274, l. with ten thousand horsemen ouerthroweth a great Army of the Turks by night, 277, f. eight times repulseth the Turkes pursuing him in his retreat downe the mountaine Hemus, 279, d. with a great slaughter discomfiteth Carambey the Bassa of Romania, and takes him prisoner, 280, k. flying out of the battell of Varna, taken prisoner by Dracula Vayuod of Valachia, 298, i. by generall consent choseu Gouernor of Hungary in the minoritie of king Ladislaus, 304, l. goeth against the Turks, 305, b. with a notable speech encourageth his soldiers against the Turks, 306, i. fighteth three daies together with Amurath in the Plaines of Cossoua, 307, d. ouercome, flyeth, 309, b. falleth into the hands of two notable theeues, c. in doubt of a sheepheard, is by him relieued, 310, g. taken prisoner by the false Despot, g. set at libertie, reuengeth himselfe vpon him, i. requested, giueth him aid against the Turks, 311, a. his most Christian-like death, 358, l.
Hysmael after the death of his father Haider flyeth to his Fathers friend Pyrchales, 465, b. his behauiour in the time of his exile, 466, g. recouereth his Inheritance, k. taketh Sumachia, l. obtaineth Tauris, 467, b. ouercommeth Eluan the Persian king, and killeth him, 468, g. peaceably receiued into Scyras, h. preacheth his fathers doctrine, i. putteth Moratchamus to flight, and obtaineth the Persian kingdome, 469, b. the inscription of his coyne, d. commeth to his Army at Coy, 508, m. sendeth an Herauld vnto Selymus, 509, b. with 30000 Persians giueth battell to Selymus with 300000 Turks, 510, i. wounded, retyres, 512, g. the cause why he came with so small an Army against Selymus, 517, d. his large territories, 518, h. the reason why he inuaded not Selymus wholly busied in the Æeyptian wars, 560, h.

I

Iacup Arnaut slaine, and his army discomfited by Scanderbeg, 399, d.
the Ianizaries first institutid by Amurath the first. 191, e. stand vpon their gard, and reuiling Bajazet their Emperor, refuse to receiue him among them, 445, f. in mutinie against Selymus, 512, m. vp in armes against Solyman for the vnworthy death of the noble Mustapha, 764, i. vnwilling to go in the quarrell of Selymus against his brother Bajazet, 773, f. their insolent and threatning speech vnto Ferat Bassa their General, 970, l. in a tumult at Constantinople, 1005, d. in an vprore with the Spahi, 1104, b. threaten the deposing of their Emperour, 1115, c. in mutinie at Constantinople, 1142, k.
Iathatines Sultan of Iconium succeedeth his Father Aladin, 86, i. besieging Antiochia, is slaine by Theodorus Lascaris the Greeke Emperour, 87, c.
Iathatines the second of that name Sultan of Iconium, maketh great preparation against the Tartars, 109, b. ouerthrown, flyeth to the Greeke Emperour Theodorus for aid, c. maketh peace with the Tartars, and yeeldeth them a yearely tribute, 109, f. againe by them oppressed, flyeth to Palæologus the Emperour at Nice, 114, l. dyeth in exile, 117, c.
Ibrahim Bassa by Amurath made Gouernour of Caire, 980, l. oppresseth the People, and enricheth himselfe, 981, e. goeth against the Drusians, 982, g. spoyleth the countrey of Man-Ogli the Drusian Lord, 986, h. with fire and sword destroyeth the countrey of Seraphadin, 987, a. createth Aly-Ebne-Carfus Bassa of the Drusians, b. the rich Presents by him giuen to Amurath, and the Ladies of the Court, 988, h. in danger to haue been taken, 1095, d. flieth out of the battell of Agria, 1097, e. sent againe Generall into Hungary, 1104, l. commeth to Buda, 1112, h. purposing warre, entreateth of peace, i. with a great army besiegeth Canisia, 1131, b. hath the towne yeelded vnto him, 1132, h. his letters vnto County Serinus, 1133, b. returneth with his army to Belgrade, c, dieth, 1134, l.
Imailer what men they be amongst the Turks, 477, b.
Imirza stirreth vp Solyman against his brother Tamas the Persian king, 751, d. betrayd to his brother Tamas and by him murthered in prison, 752, g.
Innocencie of great force, 782, i.
Iohn Batazes made Emperour of the Greekes in Asia, 97, d. taketh in many Islands of the Ægaum, and forrageth the countrey of Thracia euen to the gates of Constantinople, being very aged dyeth, 108, g.
Iohn County de Brenne by Innocentius the Pope appointed King of Ierusalem, 87, e. in derision called Roy sans ville, 88, g.
Iohn Castriot Prince of Epirus for feare giueth his foure sonnes in hostage vnto Amurath, 260, l.
Iohn Sepusius Vayuod of Transyluania chosen and crowned King of Hungarie, 605, a. after the battell of Tocay flyeth into Polonia, 606, i. by Lascus his Embassador craueth aid of Solyman, 607. c. commeth to Solyman at Belgrade, 609, b. by him restored to the Kingdome of Hungary, 614, l. in his old yeares marrieth Isabella the daughter of King Sigismund, 695, d. dyeth, 696, k.
*Don Iohn of Austria General of the confederat Princes forces, 860, k. in a terrible fight encountreth with Haly Bassa in the battell of Lepanto, 881, b. killeth him, c. delayeth the Venetians, 889, d. in doubt whether to send them ayd or not, 890, k. sendeth word vnto the Confederats to meet him at Zacynthus, 893, f. faileth them, 894, i. meeteth them at Corcyra, 895, a. offe-offereth the Turks battell, d. refuseth to follow the counsell of the Venetian Admirall, 896,k. breaketh promise with him, and returneth to Messana, 901,a.

Iohn the Vayuod of Moldauia falleth into suspition with the Turks, 906,g. his notable speech vnto his Nobilitie and subiects, concerning the Turks demand, 907,a. in vaine craueth aid of the King of Polonia, 908,g. with a great slaughter ouerthroweth the Palatine and the Turks, 909,a. giueth the Turks a second ouerthrow, 910 b. betrayed by Czarnieuich, 911. ouerthrown by the Turks, 912,m. shamefully and perfidiously by them murthered, 913,e.

Ionima Ballabanus his brother, & Hedar his son taken prisoners by Scanderbeg, 401,b.

Ionuses Bassa sent against Techillis, putteth him to flight, 475,e. hurt at the winning of Caire, 545,f. enuieth at the vnworthie preferment of Cayerbeius, 554,l. is himself secretly hated of Selymus, 555,b. put to death, 556,i.

Irene the faire Greeke beheaded by Mahomet the Great, 353,d.

Isa after the captiuity of his father Bajazet seiseth vpon the Citie of Prusa, 232,b. ouerthrowne in battell by his brother Mahomet, 238, i. with a great army sent by his brother Solyman against Mahomet, 240, i. burneth Prusa, l. dyeth in obscuritie, 241,c.

Ismael last of the Isfendiars yeeldeth his principalitie of Castamona & Sinope to Mahomet the Great, 359,f.

Ishender Bassa ouerthrown by Aladules, taken and sent prisoner to Caytbeius to Caire, 383,f.

Islan of a prisoner made a King, 975,e

Ismael the son of King Tæmas saluted King of Persia, 922, l. murthereth eight of his younger brethren, altreth the Persian Religion, and tyrannizeth, m. by the deuice of his Sister Periasoneona himselfe murthered, 922,b.

The Italians left by the emperor for the aid of King Ferdinand in his wars in Hungarie, arise in mutinie, 623,f. eight thousand of them forsake their Captaines and returne into Italie, 625,d.

Iulia Gonzaga a faire Lady of Italy put in great feate by Barbarussa, 641,c.

Iulian the Cardinall sent by Pope Vrban to appease the dissention in Hungary, and to stir vp the Hungarians against the Turks, 275, d. his effectuall speech in Parliament to persuade the war, e. cunningly persuadeth King Vladislaus to breake the honourable and solemne League he had before made with Amurath, 290,k. disanulleth the league, absoluing the king and the rest from their oth before giuen to Amurath, 291,i. himself slain, 298,k.

K

the KIngdome of Hungary by Solyman conuerted into a Prouince of the Turkish Empire, 713,a.

the knights of Malta craue aid of Garzias the Viceroy of Sicilia, 805,a. his cold answer, b.

Kemara besieged by Sinan Bassa, 1045,b.

Koppan surprised by the Christians, 1002,l.

L

LAdislaus a childe crowned King of Hungarie at Alba Regalis, 236,a.

Lazarus Despot of Seruia becommeth tributarie vnto Amurath the first, 193,e. purposing to make war against Amurath, craueth aid of the King of Bosna, 197,c. in a mortall battel ouerthrowne in the plaines of Cossoua and slaine, 200,i.

Lepanto yeelded to the Turks, 459,c.

Lewis the eight of that name, the Frēch King, making an expedition into the Holy Land, is by the malice of Emanuel the Greek Emperor, therin much hindered, 34 m. he besiegeth Damasco, where by the enuy of the other Christian Princes he was inforced to raise his siege, and so to returne home into his countrey, 35,b.

Lewis the ninth the French King making an expedition towards the Holy Land, arriueth at Damieta, 102,m. taketh the city forsaken by the Turks, 113,b. with his whole army ouerthrowne, and himselfe taken prisoner, 115, e. vndertaketh a second expedition toward the Holy Land, with his sons and most of his Nobilitie, 118,k. ouerthroweth the Moors, and besiegeth Tunes, 119,a. falleth sicke of the bloudy flix and dieth, b.

Lewis the eleuenth the French king giueth aid vnto the Venetians against the Turks, 461,c.

Lewis King of Hungarie with an army of fiue and twenty thousand fondly goeth against Solyman, being two hundred and sixty thousand strong, 602, b. ouerthrowne, in his flight drowned in a ditch, 603,a.

Liscanus the couetous Spaniard dealeth vncourteously with Perenus, 732,k. is himself in like sort serued, and merrily stripped of his wealth by Halis captaine of the Ianizaries, 738,l.

Lissa taken by the Turks, and the bones of Scanderbeg digged vp, and by them worne for Iewels, 425,e.

Lodronius encourageth his soldiers, 685 h. iested at by an old souldier, k. slain, and his head with the heads of two other Captains in a siluer bason presented to Solyman at Constantinople, 685,e.

M

MAhomet the first sendeth spies into Tamerlane his Campe, 232,l. becommeth famous in Tamerlanes Court, 234,i. in battell ouerthroweth his brother Isa, 238,i. honourably burieth the body of his father Bajazet at Prusa, l. againe ouerthroweth his brother Isa, supported by his brother Solyman, 240,m. giueth him a third ouerthrow, together with the other Mahometan Princes his Confederates, 241,c. besieged by his brother Solyman in Amasia, 242,i. vpon report of his brother Musa his euill gouernment, goeth against him into Europe, 246,k. ouerthrowne, flyeth backe againe into Asia, 247,a. commeth againe into Europe, 248,g. besiegeth Hadrianople, h. ouerthroweth his brother Musa in battel, and causeth him being taken prisoner, to be strangled, 249,c. wholly possesseth the Othoman Kingdome, both in Europe and Asia, d. oppresseth Orchanes his brother Solymans Sonne, and putteth out his eies, 250, h. taketh the Caramanian King and his sonne prisoners, k. inforceth the Valachian Prince to become his Tributarie, l. dyeth at Hadrianople, 251,f. his death cunningly concealed by the three great Bassa's, 252 g. he worthily accounted the restorer of the Othoman Kingdome, almost quite ouerthrowne by Tamerlane, l.

Mahomet the second, syrnamed the Great, An Atheist, of no Religion, 337, d. murthereth his brethren, 338, g. reformeth the Turks Commonwealth, i. subdueth Mentesia, 339,b. winneth Constantinople, 347, b. solemniseth his feasts in Constantinople with the bloud of the Grecian Nobilitie, 348, k. notably dissembleth his hatred against Caly Bassa, 349,d. first Emperour of the Turks, 350,i. amorous of the faire Greeke Irene, l.

Irene, l. with his owne hand striketh off her head,, 353, d. besiegeth Belgrade, 357, b. wounded and carried away for dead, 358, i. falsifieth his faith with Dauid the Emperour of Trapezond, 360, i. seeketh to intrap Wladus Prince of Valachia, 361, b. in danger to haue been slaine by Wladus Dracula his Ganymede, 363, b. his Letters to Scanderbeg, 384, k. sueth to Scanderbeg to haue the League renewed betwixt them, 390, h. commeth himselfe in person to the siege of Croia, 400, i. forsaketh the siege of Croia, 402, i. breaketh his faith with Paulus Ericus Gouernour of Chalcis, 406, i. he is no lesse troublesome vnto the Mahometane Princes than to the Christians, 408, i. commeth himselfe to the siege of Scodra, 417, c. notably encourageth his Captaines and souldiers to a generall assault, 418, m. melancholy for the repulse of his men, 420, l. blasphemeth, 423, d. curseth Epirus, and so returneth to Constantinople, 425, e. by Mesites Palæologus one of his great Bassaes besiegeth the Rhodes, 429, b. inuadeth Italie, and by Achmetes his great Captaine taketh Otranto, 432, i. going against the Caramanian King, dieth by the way at Giniſen, in Bythinia, not without suspition of poyson, and lyeth buried at Constantinople, 433, a.

Mahometes one of the Visier Bassaes by the mutinous Ianizaries slaine, 437, c.

Mahometes the son of Caytbeius, with foure Sultans moe, one after another slaine by the Mamalukes, 450, l.

Mahometes Solymans son disguised goeth to see his brother Achomates, 477, c. as a sea-faring man commeth disguised to Constantinople, and so into his fathers court, e. by the commandement of his suspitious father poysoned, dieth, 478, i.

Mahometes Gouernour of Belgade ayded by the other Sanzackes, maketh head against Cazzianer Generall of King Ferdinands Army, 677, f. wisely refuseth battell offered by Cazzianer, and by temporizing distresseth the army of the Christians, 680, k. troubleth the Christians in their retreat, 682, g. giueth them a great ouerthrow, 684, l. commeth to the reliefe of Belgrade, 705, e. his vehement Oration vnto Solyman to persuade him to take the Kingdome of Hungary into his owne hands, and so to vnite it vnto his owne Empire, 711, c.

Mahomet the Tartar King with his two sons strangled by Osman Bassa, 975, f.

Mahomet Bassa in despight of Sinan sent Generall of his army for the relief of his garrisons in Chars and Teflis, 957, c. discomfited by the Georgians, and his prouision of money and victuals taken from him, 959, a. with his discomfited army arriueth at Teflis, b. his heauy Oration in the castle of Teflis, c. maketh a purse for the relieſe of the distressed garrison, 960. plotteth the death of Manucchiar the Georgian, m. himselfe in danger to haue been by the Georgian slaine, 961, d.

Mahomet the third saluted Emperor of the Turks, 1056, i. murthereth his brethren, and causeth certaine of his fathers wiues and concubines to be drowned, k. with much ado appeaseth the mutinous Ianizaries, l. sendeth Embassadours vnto the Transylnanian Prince, 1062. carefull of Strigonium besieged by the Christians, 1066, h. perplexed, 1087, c. causeth the continuation of his warres against the Emperor and the Transylnanian to be proclaimed at Constantinople, 1089, a. commeth to Buda with an Army of two hundred thousand men, 1094, b. besiegeth Agria, furiously assaulteth it, 1095, a. hath it yeelded vnto him, 1096, h. with Ibrahim the great Bassa flyeth out of the battell of Karesta, 1097, c. by the Transylnanians and Valachians troubled in his returne to Constantinople, 1098, m. his Embassadour euill intreated by the Persian King, 1134, b.

the Mahometane Princes of the lesser Asia oppressed by Baiazet, disguised flie vnto Tamerlane for reliefe, 210, h

Malta described, 795, b. inuaded by the Turks, 796, k.

Mamalukes, the beginning of their Kingdome in Ægypt, 524, g. their Imperious gouernment in Ægypt, Iudæa, and Syria, 523, c. their Kingdome vtterly subuerted by Selymus, 554, b. the Mamalukes in prison at Alexandria, by the commandement of Selymus murthered, 555, f.

Manto cruelly slain by her iealous husband Ionuses, 557, d.

Man Ogli his Letters to Ibrahim Bassa, 983, f. sendeth him Presents, 985, b.

Manucchiar his speech to Mustapha the Visier Bassa, 931, f. with his Brother Alexander by Mustapha sent to Amurath, 938, b. turneth Turke, and hath his elder Brothers Principalitie giuen him, 941, l. in danger to haue been betrayed by Mahomet Bassa, 960, l. notably reuengeth himselfe of the treacherie by the Bassa intended against him, 961, c. reuolteth from the Turks, and doth them great harme, 967, a.

Marquis S. Crucis taketh one of the Turks gallies in sight of their whole fleet, 1877, d.

the Messagets entertained by Andronicus against the Turks, spoyle his Countries in Asia, 149, e. in their returne homeward, themselues spoiled by the Catalonians and Turcopuli, 152, l.

Masut the Sultan of Iconium diuideth his kingdom among his three Sonnes 36, k.

Matthias the Archduke the Emperours Lieutenant taketh Nouigrade from the Turks, 1030, l. besiegeth Strigonium, 1033, c. raises his siege, 1037 d. shamefully put to flight by the Turks 1043, b.

Matthias Coruinus of a prisoner chosen King of Hungary, 394, k. at the request of the Senat, taketh a great part of the Venetian Territorie into his protection against the Turks, 364, m. relieueth the Vayuod of Transylnania, 426, m. no lesse dreadfull vnto the Turks than was his father Huniades, 404, l.

Maximilian chosen King of the Romanes, and after crowned King of Hungarie, 789, a. he and Solyman both desirous of peace, 829, a. he sendeth Embassadors to Solyman, f. Presents giuen by the Embassadours vnto the Bassa of Buda, 830, k. his Embassadours honorably receiued by the Turks at Constantinople, 831, c. Presents giuen by the Embassadours vnto the great Bassa's, e. Presents sent to Selymus, 832, i. a homely feast giuen to the Embassadors followers in the Turks Court, 833, c. the Embassadours brought in vnto Selymus, with the manner of the entertainment of them and their Followers, 834, g. a Peace concluded betwixt Maximilian and Selymus, 835, e.

Maximilian the Archduke by the Emperour his Brother appointed Generall of his Army in Hungarie, 1093, c. marcheth but slowly to the reliefe of Agria, 1095, c. flyeth out of the battell of Karesta, 1098, i.

Maylat treacherously taken prisoner by Peter the Moldauian, 716, i.

Meligalus a notable traitor persuadeth Mahomet to besiege the Rhodes, 427, c.

327,c. his worthy death,e.
Meladin Sultan of Ægypt, and Corradin Sultan of Damasco, send Embassadors for peace to the Christian princes at the siege of Damiata, 90, m. recouereth Damiata, before taken by the Christians, 95, e. ouerthroweth the Christians, and raseth Ierusalem, 101, dieth, 103, c.
Melechsala Sultan of Ægypt ouerthroweth Robert Earle of Arthois the French Kings brother, 104, l. taketh Lewis the French King prisoner and ouerthroweth his Army, 105, e. maketh peace with the French King and is suddenly slain by two Mamalukes, 106, Melech the Ægyptian Sultan inuadeth Syria, and winneth Damasco from the Tartars, 114.
Melechsares the Ægyptian Sultan determining to root out all the Christians in Syria and the land of Palestine, is by sudden death taken away, 122, k.
Melechsala Sultan of Damasco by the treason of his Nobilitie dispossessed of his Kingdome, 58, m.
Mesites Bassa sent by Amurath to inuade Transyluania, 267, f. hee with 20000 Turks moe slain by Huniades, 269, e.
Michael Ducas the Greeke Emperour by Nicephorus Botoniates deposed of his Empire, after he had reigned six yeares and six moneths, 11, c.
Michael Palæologus flieth to the Sultan of Iconium, 109, a. called home again by the Emperor Theodorus, and made Great Constable, f. aspireth, and by common consent made Tutor vnto the young Emperour, 111, e. himselfe proclaimed Emperour and crowned, 112, h. by Alexius Cæsar his Lieutenant surpriseth Constantinople, 115, e. repayreth the decayed City, 116, h. causeth the young Emperors eyes to be put out, 117, a. his Army ouerthrowne by the Turks in Paphlagonia, 118, g. submitteth the Greeke Church vnto the Latine, and for what cause, 144, l. perswadeth his Subiects to accept of the alteration of their Religion and Ceremonies, 145, a. raiseth persecution in the Greeke Church, c. hindred by domesticall trouble, hath no leisure to attend vnto the danger arising from the Turks in Asia, d. obscurely buried, e.
Michael Cossi by Othoman taken prisoner, by him againe set at libertie, 136, m. father of the honoroble Familie of the Michael-Oglies among the Turks, 137, a. discouereth vnto Osman the treason intended against him, 140, l. inforced rather than perswaded by Othoman, turneth Turke, 144, h.
Michael the young Emperor ouerthrown by the Catalonians and Turks, in danger to haue been taken, 152, k. again ouerthrowne by the Turks at Chersonesus, 155, e.
Michael Horwat by Amurath created Vaynod of Valachia, 1051, a. perswaded by the Transyluanian Prince, reuolteth from the Turks, and killeth all the Turks and Iewes in his Countrey, 1052, b. killeth one of the Turks proud Emirs with all his followers, 1053, b. doth the Turks great harm, c. suffereth the Turks Embassadours vnto the King of Polonia by his Subiects to be slaine, 1060, k. spoyleth the Turks frontiers, 1061, a. yeeldeth his obeysance againe vnto the Turke, yet refuseth to ayd him against the Christians, 1099, d. weary of the Turke, submitteth himselfe with his people to the Emperours protection, 1100, l. sacketh Nicopolis, 1107, d. with a great army entreth into Transyluania, 1112, l. in a great battell ouerthroweth the Cardinall Bathor, 1113, c. sendeth his head for a Present to the Emperour, f. hath the gouernment of Transyluania by the Emperour confirmed vnto him, 1120, i. receiueth Presents from the Turke, l. in a great battell ouerthroweth Sigismund the late Transyluanian Prince, with the Vayuod of Moldauia, 1122, i. tyrranniseth in Transyluania, 1123, a. inforced by the Transyluanians to flie, craueth aid of George Basta the Emperours Lieutenant in the vpper Hungarie, b. by Basta and the Transyluanians in a great battell ouerthrowne at Merislo, 1226, h. reconcileth himselfe to Basta, 1127, a. for feare of being betrayed vnto the Polonians, taketh his flight into the mountaines, d. by Zamoschie the great Chancellor driuen out of Valachia, and another Vayuod there placed in his stead, 1128, h. submitteth himselfe vnto the Emperour, 1139, b. returning into Valachia, giueth ayd vnto Basta against Sigismund the Transyluanian, 1140, g. hauing with Basta driuen the Prince out of Transyluania, with great insolencie vseth his victory, k. his presumptuous speech to Basta, l. suddenly slaine in his own tent, 1141, a.
the Misery of the captiue Constantinopolitanes, 348, h.
Mitylene yeelded vnto the Turk, 364, g.
Modon taken by the Turks, 460, g.
Moyses Golemus corrupted, reuolteth vnto the Turke, 372, h. with an army of the Turks by Mahomet sent into Epyrus against Scanderbeg, k. ouercome and put to flight by Scanderbeg, 374, g. contemned of the Turks, flyeth from Constantinople, and againe submitteth himselfe to Scanderbeg, m. he with diuers others of Scanderbegs best Captaines by Balabanus taken prisoners, and by Mahomet slain quicke, 396, i.
Muhamet and Partau two of the Visier Bassaes, by the insolent Ianizaries foulely intreated, 823, f. Muhamet for feare of them for a time refraineth to come into the Diuano, 824, g. dissuadeth Selymus from the inuading of Cyprus, 839, b. as a secret friend vnto the Venetians, putteth them in hope of peace, 857, b. cunningly dissuadeth Selymus from the massacring of the Christians, by filling his head with more necessary considerations, 886, h. strangely murthered, 950, l.
Muleasses King of Tunes cruell and vnthankefull, 642, g. for feare of Barbarussa flyeth out of Tunes, 643, e. sumptuous in his fare, 645, d. commeth to Charles the Emperor, 661, d. his speech vnto the Emperour, e. his behauiour, 662, h. his opinion concerning the present war, l. three things by him especially lamented in the spoile made by the Christians in the Castle of Tunes, 668, h. fearing the comming of Barbarussa, departeth from Tunes into Italie, to craue aid of Charles the Emperour, 745, c. shut out of his Kingdome in the meantime by his sonne Amida, e. returneth into Africke to Guletta, 746, g. going to Tunes, is by the way ouerthrowne, taken prisoner, and hath his eyes put out by his vnnaturall sonne, 747, d. at the request of Touares is sent to Guletta, 748, l. by Charles the Emperour sent to Sicilie, there to be kept of the common charge, 749, b. refuseth to kisse the Popes foot, c.
Murzufle by the tumultuous people created Emperour, attempteth to burne the Venetian Fleet, 81, b. with his owne hands strangleth the young Prince Alexis, d. encourageth his souldiers, e. being in despaire flyeth, 82, i.
Musa sonne to Baiazet the first, his speech vnto his brother Mahomet, 243, c. marrieth the Prince of Valachia his daughter, e. in the absence of his brother Solyman receiued at Hadrianople as King, f. goeth against his brother Solyman, 244, i. fighteth with with his brother Mahomet,246,l. his chiefe Captaines reuolt to Mahomet,248,l. taken and strangled,249, b,c.

Muſachius a Christian Captain contendeth with a Turke his priſoner for his ranſome,367,d. is afterward ſlaine, 370,m.

Muſtapha the ſuppoſed ſonne of Baiazet raiſeth rebellion againſt Amurath, 255,c. being in feare, flyeth,256,m. is ſhamefully hanged, 257,c.

Muſtapha the younger ſonne of Mahomet raiſeth new troubles againſt Amurath,258,k. is betrayed and ſtrangled,l.

Muſtapha Baſſa ſent by Amurath againſt Scanderbeg,302,m. being aſſaulted in his Camp, flyeth, 303,d. deſirous to redeeme his former diſgrace, craueth leaue of Amurath to enter into Epirus, and obtaineth it, 311, d. Amuraths letters of aduertiſement to Muſtapha,e. fighteth with Scanderbeg the ſecond time,313,a. is ouerthrown and taken priſoner,b. and afterwards ranſomed,c.

Muſtapha Baſſa perſuadeth Solyman to the beſieging of the Rhodes,569,e. vpon the euill ſucceſſe of the ſiege falleth into diſgrace with Solyman, 585,c. in danger with Pyrrhus Baſſa to haue been executed, 588,k. made Gouernor of Caire,589,d. by Solyman ſent as Generall of his Army to Malta,794,l. landeth at the Port Marza-Siroc in the Iſle of Malta,796,k. beſiegeth the Caſtle Saint Elmo, 797,a. aſſaulteth the Caſtle, e. in vaine giueth a ſecond aſſault, 798,g. with loſſe aſſaulteth it the third time, m. in moſt furious manner batereth it by the ſpace of eighteen dayes, and aſſaulteth it the fourth time, 799,c. with great fury giueth the fift and moſt terrible aſſault vnto the Caſtle, 801, a. with all his army giueth the ſixt and laſt aſſault, 802, i. winneth the Caſtle,803,a. exerciſeth moſt barbarous crueltie vpon the bodies of the ſlain Knights,b. in vaine aſſaulteth the Caſtle Saint Michael, 809,e. at one time aſſaulteth the new City and the Caſtle Saint Michael, 810,i. he by meſſengers certifieth Solyman of the ſucceſſe of the ſiege,811 a. leaueth nothing vnattempted,812, i. at once aſſaulteth the townes Saint Angelo and Saint Michael, and in both places notably repulſed, 813,a. giueth a freſh aſſault and entreth the new City,814,g. with a great ſlaughter driuen out againe, i. deſperately aſſaulteth the towne of Saint Michael,815,c. repulſed, raiſeth his ſiege,817,a. put to flight by the Chriſtians,c. hauing loſt about foure and twenty thouſand of his Turks at the ſiege, departed from Malta,d. he with Piall Baſſa impugneth the counſell of Muhamet the chiefe of the Viſier Baſſaes, and perſuadeth Selymus to inuade Cyprus, 839,c. for his hatred againſt the Chriſtians made Generall of his Army for the inuaſion of Cyprus,846,g. his Letters vnto the Venetians in the Iſle of Cyprus, i. he landeth his Army in Cyprus, m. beſiegeth Nicoſia, 848,c. in vaine perſuadeth them of Nicoſia to yeeld, 850,k. he encourageth his ſouldiers, and giueth a moſt terrible aſſault, 851,a. winneth the City, e. beſiegeth Famaguſta, 852, raiſeth his ſiege, b. returneth againe to the ſiege,862, m. after many aſſaults hath the City by compoſition yeelded vnto him,866, m. ſhamefully and contrary to his faith before giuen, murthereth the valiant Gouernor Bragadinus, 867, b. tyranniſeth vpon his dead body, d. by Amurath made Generall of his Army againſt the Perſians, 929,d. commeth to Erzirum, e. muſtereth his Army in number an hundred and ten thouſand ſtrong, 930,g. relieueth his ſouldiers diſtreſſed by the Perſians, 931,c. maketh a bulwarke of the heads of the ſlaine Perſians, d. he ſurueyeth his Army at Archichelecke, and lacketh forty thouſand of his men, 932, k. fortifieth Teflis, 933,a. loſeth ten thouſand of his forragers, 934,b. reuengeth their death, l. his notable anſwer vnto his mutinous ſouldiers, 935,b. loſeth eight thouſand of his men in paſſing the riuer Canac, c. famine in his hoſt, e. he fortifieth Eres,936,g. ſendeth Oſman Baſſa to take in Sumachia and Derbent, h. relieueth his diſtreſſed garriſon at Teflis, m. his Army in great miſerie in paſſing the ſtreits of Georgia,937,c. commeth to Erzirum, and diſchargeth his Army, 938,g. maketh preparation for the next yeares warres,942, k. aſſembleth his army at Erzirum,943,d. in three and twentie daies fortifieth Chars, f. ſendeth ſuccours to Teflis, 944,c. returneth to Erzirum and there diſchargeth his Army, 945,d. diſcharged of his Generalſhip and called home to Conſtantinople, 946, l. maligned by Sinan, 949,a. dealeth warily with the Meſſengers ſent of purpoſe to haue ſtrangled him, d. appeaſeth the diſpleaſure of Amurath, e. dyeth ſuddenly, 952,k.

Muſtapha Solyman his eldeſt Sonne in great eſtimation with the people, 757,b. ſent Gouernour into Caramania, d. maligned by Roxolana, e. in danger to haue been poyſoned,760, k. ſent for by his father, and warned of his preſent danger, e. conferreth with his Doctor, 762,g. troubled with his melancholy dreame, k. commeth to his fathers tent,763,a. in the ſight of his father moſt cruelly ſtrangled, c. his ſonne Mahomet ſtrangled alſo, d. a prouerbe taken from his death, 765,c.

Mutius Tortona a Spaniſh Captain raiſeth a mutinie in the Chriſtian fleet at Paxo,873,c. Tortona and his Antient hanged,d.

Muzalo by Theodorus the Emperor appointed Gouernor to his yong ſon Iohn, 100,g. ennied by the nobility, is traiterouſly murdred in the church,111,c

N

Naupactum, otherwiſe called Lepanto, in vaine beſieged by the Turks, 413,b. yeelded to Baiazet, 459,c.

Neapolis the firſt Regall ſeat of the Othoman Kings, 143,b.

Negligence ſeuerely puniſhed, 856,g.

Neocaſtrum built by Mahomet the Great, 339,d.

Neritos, now called S. Maura, taken by the Venetians, 462,k.

Nice taken by the Turks, 142, k. recouered againe by the Chriſtians,180,g againe ſurpriſed by the Turks,181,f. by Orchanes made the regall ſeat of his Kingdome, 183,e.

Nicholaus Cataluſius Prince of Mytileue turneth Turke and is executed, 364,k.

Nicholas Karetſchen corrupted, betrayeth Giula to the Turks,824,i. the traitor iuſtly rewarded k.

Nicephorus Botoneatus diſplaceth his maſter the Emperor Michael Ducas, and taketh vpon him the empire,11,e.

Nicomedia yeelded vnto the Turks, 183,c.

Nouigrade yeelded vnto the Chriſtians, 1030,l.

O

Otheman of greater courage and ſpirit than his other brethren and ſonnes of old Ertogrul, 135,d. amorous of Malhatun a countrey Maid, f. in danger for his loue, 136,k. by generall conſent choſen Gouernour of the Oguzian Turks, 137, d. ſurpriſeth the Caſtle of Caloe, 138, h. fighteth a battell with the Chriſtians at Opsicum, k. winneth the Castle of Cara-Chisar, and killeth the Captain, m. setteth in order his little common-wealth, 139, c. killeth the Captain of Cupri-Chisar, e. his death contriued by the Captaine of Bilezuga, 140, i. turneth the trechery deuised against him, vpon the head of the Captaine that deuised it, whom he killeth, and surpriseth his Castle, 141, e. surpriseth the castle of Iar-Chisar, e. taketh the castle of Einegioll, and cruelly executeth the Captaine, 142, g. by his good administration of Iustice strengtheneth his gouernment, h. taketh the City of Nice, k. taketh vpon him the honour of a King or Sultan, 143, a. maketh Neapolis his regall seat, b. in a great battell ouerthroweth the Christians, 143, c. besiegeth Prusa, d. whilest the Greekes are at discord among themselues, layeth the foundation of the great Othoman Empire that now is, 162, g. 166, k. dieth, and lyeth buried at Prusa, 177, a. the wealth he left vnto his sonnes Orchanes and Aladin, 179, c.

Orchanes, his father Othoman yet liuing, mannageth the Turks kingdom, 179, c. surpriseth the Castle of Tzupri-Chisar, 180, g. fighteth a doubtfull battell with Andronicus the Greeke Emperour at Phylocrene, m. surpriseth Nice, 181, e. hath Nicomedia yeelded vnto him, 183, c. committeth the gouernment thereof vnto his son Solyman, c. first of the Turks that built Monasteries, e. subdueth the Countrey of Carasina, 148, b. dieth, 187, b.

Orchanes and Mahometes two of Baiazet his Nephewes ouerthrowne by Chelife & Techellis the rebels, 471, c.

Osman Bassa by Mustapha made gouernor of Siruan, taketh Sumachia, 936, b. hath Derbent yeelded vnto him, i. by the Persian Prince driuen out of Sumachia, flyeth to Derbent, 940, b. kils Sahamal his wiues father, 941, d. is by Amurath sent for into Siruan, 974, b. laid in wait for by Mahomet the Tartar King, 975, b. ouercommeth the Tartars lying in wait for him, e. by Amurath made chiefe Visier, and General for his wars against the Persians, 976, k. raiseth a great Army, 989, c. wisely appeaseth his mutinous souldiers vnwilling to go for Tauris, 990, g. commeth to Tauris, 991, b. taketh the City, c. in thirty dayes buildeth there a strong Castle, 992, i. giueth the City to be spoyled by his souldiers, k. leaueth Giaffer the Eunuch Bassa of Tripolis with a garrison of 12000 souldiers Gouernour of Tauris, 994, i. dieth, 995, c. much lamented for at Constantinople, 996, b.

P

Paleopolis by Sultan Aladin giuen to Othoman, 138, l.

Palotta yeelded to the Turks, 1025, d.

Pantogles with the Turks fleet commeth to the siege of Constantinople, 342, l. displaced, 344, k.

Paphlagonia and Pontus, with a great part of Cappadocia woon by Mahomet the Great, 360, l.

Partan the Visier Bassa sent by Solyman against nhe supposed Mustapha, brought him to Constantinople, 769, e. sent by Solyman to haue brought Baiazet to Amasia, is by him with good words sent backe againe, 773, e. standeth indifferent for giuing or not giuing of battell vnto the Christians at Lepanto, 875, e. encourageth his souldiers, 876, i. flyeth himselfe out of the battell, 879, e.

Paradiser executed for yeelding vp of Canisa vnto the Turks, 1133, e.

Peace concluded betwixt King Uladislaus and Amurath the second, 289, b. by the persuasion of Iulian the Cardinall vnfortunately broken by Uladislaus, 295, d.

Peace concluded betwixt Mahomet and Scanderbeg, 386, i. betwixt Baiazet and Caytbeius, 450, i. betwixt Baiazet and the Venetians, 463, a. betwixt the Venetians and Solyman, 694, l. betwixt the Venetians and Selymus the second, 904, k. betwixt Amurath the third and Mahomet the Persian King, 1005, b.

Peloponesus described, 353, e. made tributarie to the Turke, 354, b. subdued by the Turks, 355, e.

Pera yeelded vnto the Turks, 349, c.

Perenus the noble Hungarian, vpon the suspition of aspiring, apprehended, 732, k. matters surmised against him, 733, a. He, Valentinus, and Maylat, three of the chiefe of the Hungarian Nobilitie, vnworthily kept in perpetuall prison, 734, b.

Persecution in the Greeke Church for matters of Religion, 145, e.

Persians better horsmen than the Turks, 517, b.

Pesth taken by Cason Admirall of the Turks fleet vpon the Danubius, 709, a. besieged by the Marquis of Brandenbourg, 729, e. in vaine assaulted, 731, c. the siege giuen ouer, 732, b. taken by the Christians, 1146, e.

Peter a French Hermit going on pilgrimage to Ierusalem, obserueth the miseries of the Christians vnder the Turks and Sarasins, 12, l. in the Councell of Claremont deliuereth his message in the behalfe of the poore distressed Christians, 14, g. he with Gualter Sensauer the first that set forward in the great expedition of the Christians into the Holy Land, 14, k. loseth greatest part of his army, 15, d. discouraged, about to haue stolne home, brought backe, and inforced to take a new oath for his fidelitie and perseuerance in that warre, 18, k.

Peter Damboyse Grand Master of the Rhodes, a cheerfull Gouerner, 427, e. his cheerfull speech vnto the rest of his Knights and souldiers, 22b, b.

Peter Emius for his barbarous cruelty beheaded at Uenice, 978, l.

Petralba yeelded to Scanderbeg, 285, d.

Petrella yeelded, 285, e.

Petrinia taken by the Christians, 1074, k.

Philaretus the Greeke Emperours Lieutenant put to flight by the Turks, 8, l.

Philadelphia taken by Baiazet, 204, b.

Philes a deuout man, but no souldier vndertaketh the defence of the Greeke Empire against the Turks, 156, i. in plaine battell ouerthroweth them, 157, e.

Philip the second of that name, the French King, in going towards the Holy Land, suffereth shipwrecke vpon the coast of Sicilia, 68, i. arriueth at Ptolemais, m. his speech vnto Richard King of England, and the other Christian Princes, in his sickneſſe, 70, i. hee sweareth vnto King Richard, not to inuade his territories in France, and so returneth home, k.

Phocas by killing of Mauritius the Emperor with his children, possesseth himselfe of the Greeke Empire, 22, g. slaine afterwards by them of his owne guard, g.

Piall Bassa Solymans Admirall sent to remoone the Christians out of Zerbi, 784, b. in disgrace with Solyman, shunneth to come to Constantinople, 787, a. by Selymus the second sent against the Venetians, 845, e. in vaine attempteth the Island of Tenos, 846 g,.

Pisaurius the Venetian Admirall doth very great harme vnto the Turks, 460, l.

Plague and famine among the Turks, 1060, m.

Plague in the Venetian fleet, 849, a.

Polinus the French embassador with presents from Francis the French King, meemeeteth Solyman comming from Buda, 725, d. his request to Solyman, e. returneth into France, 726, g. sent backe againe to Solyman, by the way solliciteth the Venetians to take vp armes against Charles the Emperor, h. grieued not to finde the Turke so ready to send his fleet in the aid of the King his Master, as he had before hoped, m. is sharply taken vp by Solyman Bassa, 727, c. brought to the speech of Solyman himselfe, 728, i. by him reiected vntill the next Spring, k. setteth forward with Barbarussa and the Turks fleet, 735, a. by his Letters from Ostia comforteth the Popes Legat in Rome, d.

Podolia & Rassia inuaded by the Turks, 457, a.

the Pope and the King of Spaine fearing lest the Venetians should make peace with the Turke, hasten their confederation with that State, long before by them delayed, 859, a. a perpetuall League concluded betwixt the Pope, the King of Spain, and the Venetians, 860, h. the League proclained, m.

the Popes Letters vnto the King of Polonia, to dissuade him from inuading of Moldauia, to the trouble of the Transylvanian Prince, 1081, b.

Preianes commeth to the Rhodes, 581, c.

Presents of great value sent by the Persian King vnto Selymus, 837, f.

Prince Ciarcan slaine, 219, b.

Princes of Germanie ioyne their forces with K. Ferdinand against the Turke in Hungarie, 728, l.

Prusa yeelded vnto the Turks, 176, l. burnt by Isa, 240, l. repaired by Mahomet, 241, a. againe burnt by the Caramanian King, 249, f.

Q

Queene Isabella with child, 695, e. deliuered of a sonne, 696, i. that son by the name of Stephen crowned king of Hungarie, 697, a. her answer vnto the Embassadour of king Ferdinand, demanding of her the kingdome of Hungarie, 699, d. inuaded by king Ferdinand, craueth ayd of Solyman, 701, b. by the commandement of Solyman departeth with her young sonne out of Buda, 713, e. yeeldeth vp to king Ferdinand all the right shee had in Transyluania and Hungarie, 756, h.

Quinque Ecclesiæ yeelded to the Turks, 736, h.

Quinsay in the Prouince of Mangi, of all the cities of the world the greatest, 753, f.

R

Rab besieged by Sinan Bassa, 1041. b. battered and assaulted, 1044, b. by treason yeelded vnto the Bassa, l. notably againe surprised by the Christians, 1103, b.

Rama forsaken by the Turks, 21, l.

Ramadan Bassa slain by the insolent Ianizaries, 978, m.

Rayschachius for sorrow of his sonne slaine by the Turks, suddenly dieth, 760, k.

Rhodes by the Knights Hospitalers recouered from the Turks in the yeare 1308, 162, h. besieged by Mesites Palæologus, 428, l. for feare of the Turks the Rhodians destroy their Snburbes and places of pleasure without the City, 578, l. the Rhodes described, 581, d. besieged by Solyman, 584, g. in fiue places at once by the Turks assaulted, 587, b. the distressed estate of the Rhodians, and their resolution therein, 592. g. the Rhodes yeelded vnto Solyman, 600, i.

Richard the first, king of England, setteth forward toward the Holy Land, 68, h. reuengeth the iniuries done to him by the Cypriots, and taketh prisoner Isaac Comnenus their king, 69, a. arriueth at Ptolemais, c. causeth all the Turks his prisoners in the sight of Saladins Army to be executed, 71, a. giueth Cyprus to Guy in exchange for the titular kingdome of Ierusalem, f. with great slaughter ouerthroweth Saladin in plaine battell, 72, h. returning homeward, taken prisoner by Leopold Duke of Austria, 73, b.

Rodolph the Emperour prayeth aid of the Germane Princes against the Turke, 1017, e. his Embassadour shut vp in close in his house at Constantinople, 1018, l. his Letters to Amurath, 1019, a. his Letters to Sinan Bassa, d. presented with the spoyle of the Turks ouerthrow at Alba-Regalis, 1029, b. requesteth ayd of the great Duke of Muscouia, the king of Polonia, and of the Prince of Transyluania, 1031, h. holdeth a Diet of the Empire at Ratisbone for the withstanding of the Turks, 1038, m. receiueth ayd from the Pope, the king of Spaine, and the Princes of Italy, 1134, k.

Robert Duke of Normandie by generall consent chosen K. of Ierusalem, which honour he refuseth, 22, f.

Robert Sonn to Peter, fourth Emperour of the Latines in Constantinople, 96, l. goeth to Rome, and in his returne dyeth in Achaia, 97, a.

Rogendorff his name terrible vnto the Turks, 613, e. with king Ferdinands army entreth into Hungarie, and besiegeth Buda, 702, i. threatneth the Queene, k. derided by the Bishop, l. in vaine assaulteth Buda, 703, d. in raising of his siege by night, receiueth a great ouerthrow, 708, k. conueyed vp the Riuer to Comara, there dieth, 709, b.

Ronzerius, sometime a notable Pyrat, entertained by Andronicus the Emperour against the Turks, 150, k. relieueth Philadelphia, l. for lacke of pay spoyleth the Emperours territories in Asia, 151, a. suddenly slaine, c.

Roscetes riseth against his brother Muleasses king of Tunes, 642, l. flyeth to Barbarussa, and by him caried to Constantinople, 643, a.

Rouerius robbeth Dantius, Baiazet the Great Turks Embassador to Pope Alexander, 451, c.

Roxolana conspireth with Rustan Bassa against the noble Mustapha, and faineth her selfe religious, 758. g sent for by Solyman, refuseth to come, i. plotteth the confusion of Mustapha, 759, f. bringeth him into suspition with his father, 760, g. she with Rustan put Solyman in feare of his life and Empire by his Sonne Mustapha, 761, a. loueth her younger Sonne Baiazet better than her eldest Son Selymus, 768, g. intreateth Solyman for Baiazet, and obtaineth his pardon, 770, i. comforteth him, going in feare vnto his father, 771, a.

Rustan Bassa a man of a mischieuous nature, 757, e. furthereth the deuices of Roxolana for the destruction of the noble Mustapha, 760, g. sent by Solyman with an Army into Asia, to haue taken or slaine Mustapha, 761, c. returneth in haste, and with false suggestions stirreth vp Solyman himselfe against his sonne, d. his exceeding treacherie at the comming of Mustapha to his fathers Camp, 762, i. disgraced by Solyman flyeth to Roxolana at Constantinople, 765, a. by her meanes restored againe vnto his former honours, dyeth afterwards of a dropsey, 765, e.

S

Sahib after the death of Sultan Saladin his Master, taking vpon him the gouernment, is by the Nobilitie thrust out, and the Turks kingdome in Asia rent in sunder amongst them, 127, c.

Sahamal the Georgian cutteth off the head of Aider, 922, i. submitteth himself to Mustapha the great Bassa, 936, k. slaine by Osman Bassa his son in law, 941, d.
Saladin the Turke chosen Sultan of Ægypt, killeth the Calyph and all his posteritie, 57, e. inuadeth the kingdome of Ierusalem, and by Baldwin suddenly sallying out of Ascalon, ouerthrowne, 59, d. besiegeth Berythus both by sea and land, taketh Edessa and Carras, 60, l. spoyleth the Holy Land, 61, c. in vaine besiegeth Ptolemais, 63, b. besiegeth Tiberias, and by the treason of the County of Tripolis ouerthroweth Guy the King, comming to the reliefe thereof, and taketh him prisoner, 63, e. winneth Ierusalem, with all the other Cities and Townes in the Holy land, except Tripolis, Tyre, and Antioch, 64, g. besiegeth Tyre, and with the losse of his best soldiers and of his Tents retyreth, l. taketh Antioch with all the prouinces and townes thereunto belonging, 65, a. putteth to death the Christian captiues, 71, a. dieth, and forbiddeth any funerall pomp to be vsed at his buriall, 73, c.
Saluagus a worthy Knight, 797, c.
Salazar a Spanish Captaine, goeth as a spie into the Turks campe at the siege of Malta, 811, d.
Sanguin the Turke ouerthroweth King Fulke, comming to the reliefe of the castle of Mont-ferand, and hath the castle yeelded vnto him, 30, b. taketh Edessa, and there vseth all manner of crueltie against the Christians, 31, a. besieging Cologenbar, is there stabbed by one of his owne friends, and slaine, b.
Sarmentus slaine, 691, d.
Sarugatin, Osmans Brother, slaine, and accounted of the Turks for a Saint, 138, k.
Scanderbeg with his brethren by their father Iohn Castriot giuen in hostage to Amurath, 260, l. wisely dissembleth his desire for the deliuerie of himselfe and his countrey, 283, d. by great policie recouereth the City of Croia out of the hands of the Turks, 284, i. hath the strong cities of Epirus yeelded vnto him, 285, c. spoyleth Macedonia, 287, c. in a great battell ouerthroweth Alis Bassa with two and twenty thousand of his Turks, 288, l. going to the ayd of King Vladislaus is by the faithlesse Despot denied passage through Seruia, 295, b. spoyleth the Despots countrey, and so returneth into Epirus, 299, c. his resolute answer vnto Amurath his melancholie Letters, 301, d. putteth Ferisesco flight, 302, l. ouerthroweth Mustapha the second time, and taketh him prisoner, 313, b. carefully setteth all things in order against the comming of Amurath, 314, g. his effectuall speech vnto the soldiers and Citisens of Sfetigrade, to encourage them against the comming of the Turks, 315, b. cunningly entrappeth some of the forerunners of Amuraths Army, 316, l. troubleth his great Army, 319, a. with his owne hand killeth Feri Bassa, 320, g. troubles Amurath his great Army at the siege of Croia, 324, l. in danger to haue been slaine or taken, m. deceiueth Mahomet the young Prince in his own deuice, 326, h. flieth by night into Epirus, 371, c. his answer by letters vnto the letters of Mahomet, 385, c. his answer vnto Mahomets letters concerning the renuing of the league, 391 a. in danger, 398, h. Scanderbeg dieth, 402, m. buried at Lissa, 403, a. his bones digged vp by the Turks, and of them greatly honoured, 404, h.
Scodra besieged by Solyman Bassa, 411, e. relieued by Mathias King of Hungarie, 412, h. a yearely fee appointed by Mahomet to one to put him dayly in mind of the siege of Scodra, i. Scodra the second time besieged by Mahomet the Great, 415, e. sore battered, 418, i. the fourth time assaulted, 419, e. twelue thousand Turks slain in this last assault, 420, m. most furiously the fifth time assaulted by the Turks, 421 by composition yeelded vnto the Turks, 426, k.
the Scriuano rebelleth against the Turke in Caramania, and giueth Mehemet Bassa a notable ouerthrow, 1134, g. in a great battell ouerthroweth him againe the next yeare with an Army of fifty thousand Turks, 1142, h. hauing ouer-run a great part of the Turks dominions in Asia, dieth, 1150 g. his younger brother steppeth vp in his stead, and in a great battell ouerthroweth Hassan Bassa and killeth him, 1150, h.
Selymus ambitious, and of a turbulent spirit, and therefore of the Ianizaries and men of warre better beloued than his other brother, 488, l. ayded by Mahometes the Tartar King, riseth against his aged father, 479, b. coloureth his rebellious purpose with the inuasion of Hungarie, 480, g. marcheth with his Army towards Hadrianople, 482, e. in a great battell ouerthrowne and put to flight by his father Baiazet at Tzurulum, 486, h. by the persuasion of the Bassaes, by his father sent for home, 491, c. chosen Generall by his father, to goe against his rebellious brother Achomates, is by and by after by the Ianizaries saluted Emperour, 494, g. causeth his father to be poysoned, 495 d. putteth three of his fathers pages to death for mourning for their Master, 496, h. bountifully rewardeth the souldiers of the Court, 499, c. murthereth fiue of his brothers sons, 500, g. causeth Corcutus his brother to be strangled, 502, h. treason intended against him, discouered, 503, a. craueth ayd of Aladeules and the other mountaine Princes against the Persians, 507, c. Selymus perplexed, 508, i. receiueth great losse in passing the riuer Euphrates, 513, c. he and Hysmael compared together, 515, d. Selymus with a great Army entreth into Armenia, and taketh Ciamassum a City of the Persian Kings, 518, k. vanquisheth Aladeules the mountaine King, putteth him to death, and conuerteth his kingdome into the forme of a Prouince, 520, l. inuadeth Hungarie, 521, b. sendeth his Embassadours with Presents to Campson the Ægyptian Sultan, 525, f. encourageth his souldiers to go against the Mamalukes, 526, h. passeth the mountaine Amanus, and commeth into Comagena, l. in the battell of Singa ouerthroweth the Mamalukes, 530, g. in doubt lest Sinan Bassa had been lost, becommeth exceeding melancholie, 536, k. meeteth with Sinan Bassa at Gaza, 537, c. passeth the sandy Desarts, and meeteth with Tomombeius at Rhodanus, 538, e. giueth him battell, and putteth him to flight, 540, m. encourageth his souldiers to the winning of Caire, 544, l. fighteth a great and mortall battell with the Mamalukes in the City of Caire, 445, b. causeth the City to be set on fire, e. putteth Tomombeius and the Mamalukes to flight, and so taketh the City, 546, i. his Embassadors sent to Tomombeius slain by the Mamalukes, 548, k. ouerthroweth Tomombeius againe at the riuer Nilus, 550, h. causeth him being taken, to be tortured and put to death, l. cunningly reduceth the Arabians to his obedience, 553, b. purposing to turne his forces vpon the Christians, is drucke in the backe with a canker, 561, a. his death concealed by Ferat Bassa, 567, c.
Selymus the second by the Ianizaries saluted Emperour, 827, c. appeaseth the tumultuous Ianizaries, 828, g. sendeth Cubates his Embassadour to Venice

Venice, to demand Cyprus of the Senat, 841, c. rageth to haue it denied him, 842, m. he inuadeth the Venetians, 843, e. in his rage about to haue put to death all the Christians in his dominions, 885, f. sendeth out Vluzales his Admirall with 200 gallies against the Christians, 888, l. desirous of peace, concludeth the same with the Venetians, 904, k. by his Bassaes taketh Guletta from the Spaniards, and the City of Tunes, 915, d. dieth, e.

Serinus Gouernour of Sigeth, 821, e. his comfortable and resolute speech vnto his souldiers, 822, g. burneth the new towne, not now to be longer defended, and retyreth into the old, i. his last speech vnto his souldiers, 823, d. slaine, and his head sent to County Salma, f.

the Seruians in mutinie amongst themselues, are with a great slaughter ouerthrowne by the Turks, 192, i.

Sernia becommeth tributarie vnto the Turks, 192. wholly yeelded vnto the Turks, 356.

Sfetigrade besieged by Amurath, 316, l. in vaine diuers times by the Turks assaulted, 319, b. by the working of a Traitor, Amurath had the strong City yeelded vp vnto him, 321, f.

Sigismund King of Hungarie, with the Christian princes his confederats, with a great army inuadeth the Turks dominions, 205, b. his proud speech vpon the greatnesse of his army, d. in a great battell ouerthrowne by Baiazet at Nicopolis, 206, h. hardly escapeth himselfe by flight, i.

Sigismund Prince of Transyluania in danger by his owne subiects to haue bin betrayed vnto the Tartars, 1046, l. the conspirators apprehended and executed, 1047, d. giueth his subiects leaue to spoyle the Turks, e. entreth into a confederation with the Emperour, 1048, k. persuadeth Michael the Vayuod of Valachia, and Aaron the Palatine of Moldauia, to reuolt from the Turke, 1049, e. sendeth Aaron the Palatine with his wife and sonne prisoners to Prague, 1062, l. marrieth Maria Christiana the late Archduke Charls his daughter, 1072, k. ouerthroweth thirty thousand Turks comming as vnbidden guests to his marriage, l. in a great battell ouerthroweth Sinan Bassa with his Turks, 1073, e. receiueth the Zaculians into his protection, and hath from them great ayd, 1074, m. putteth Sinan Bassa to flight, 1075, d. by force taketh Tergouista from the Turks, f. taketh also Bucaresta, 1076, i. goeth vnto the Emperour at Prague, 1088, g. besiegeth Temeswar, 1092, g. with 18000 men commeth to the ayd of Maximilian the Archduke going to haue relieued Agria, 1096, l. doubting the power of the Turke, resigneth his principalitie of Transyluania vnto the Emperour, 1100, k. repenting himselfe, returneth againe into Transyluania, and taketh vpon him the gouernment, 1106, g. by his Embassadors offereth againe his principalitie vnto the Emperour, 1109, d. in a great battell ouerthrowne, together with the Moldauian, by Michael the Vayuod of Valachia, 1122, h. by the fauor of the Nobilitie recouereth his state againe in Transyluania, 1139, d. in battell ouerthrowne by Basta and Michael the Vayuod, flyeth out of Transyluania, 1140, i. by the fauour of his subiects, and countenance of the Polonians, recouereth again his state, 1142 g. doubting him to be able to hold it against the Imperials, yeeldeth it by composition vnto Basta the Emperors Lieutenant, and goeth himselfe vnto the Emperor, 1143, c.

Sigismund King of Polonia his Letters vnto Amurath, 1003, e.

Simon County of Montford sent by Philip the French King into the Holy land, represseth the iury of the Turks, and so concludeth a peace with them for ten yeares, 74, k.

Sinan Bassa the Eunuch ouerthrowne by Achomates, 503, c. restoreth Selymus his battell against Campson, before almost lost, 530, g. by Selymus sent before into Iudea, 533, c. hath Gaza yeelded vnto him, 534. g. discomfiteth Gazelles, comming to haue oppressed him at Gaza, 535, c. slaine in the battell at Rhodania, 540. g.

Sinan the Iew his short answer to Barbarussa, 661, b.

Sinan Bassa by Amurath chosen Generall for the Persian wars, 951, b. relieueth Teflis, 954, l. loseth seuen thō sand of his soldiers, 955. b. derided of his owne souldiers, 956, g. his proud answer to Amurath, 962, h. displaced and cast into exile, l. againe receiued into fauour, 1003, d. ouerthrowne in the vpper Hungary, 1006, h. his Letters vnto the Emperor, 1020 g. sent Generall of the Turks Army against the Emperour, 1023, f. taketh Vesprinium, 1025, c. hath Palotta yeelded vnto him, d. with an Army of 150000 men commeth againe into Hungarie, 1040, i. taketh Dotis and S. Martins, l. besiegeth Rab, 1041, b. in assaulting thereof loseth 12000 of his men, 1044, h. by corrupting of the Gouernor, hath the City yeelded vnto him, l. besiegeth Comara, 1045, b. raiseth his siege, and breaketh vp his army, d. craftily seeketh to trie the Emperors mind concerning peace, 1058, l. sent for home to the Court, 1060, l. by Sultan Mahomet appointed Generall of the warres against the Emperour, 1073, b. inuadeth Valachia, d. in a great battell ouerthrowne by the Prince of Transyluania, e. in flying in danger to haue bin drowned, f. with a great Army commeth againe into Valachia, 1075, b. seeing the generall feare of his Army vpon the comming of the Transyluanians, flyeth, d. for feare delayeth his comming to Constantinople, vntil his peace were made, and there shortly after dieth, 1087, d.

Siseg by the Turks besieged, 1022, g. notably relieued, 1023, a. againe besieged and taken by the Turks, 1024, l.

Solyman, Orchanes his sonne, by his father made Gouernour of Nicomedia, 183, c. taketh the Castle of Rembenie in Europe, 185, b. he the first that brought the Turks ouer into Europe, with purpose there to conquer and inhabit, d. taketh the castle of Maditus, e. winneth Calypolis, 186, g. dyeth, 187, a.

Solyman the Vnfortunate, Baiazet his eldest sonne, by the great Bassa's set vp in his fathers stead at Hadrianople, 221, b. goeth ouer with a great army against his brother Mahomet, 241, e. by policie taketh the castle of Prusa, 242, i. besiegeth his brother in Amasia, i. returneth into Europe, to appease the stirres there raised by his brother Musa, and recouereth Hadrianople, 244, h. in his excesse regardeth not the approach of his brother Musa, k. forsaken of his souldiers, flyeth, l. taken prisoner, is by the commandment of his brother Musa strangled, 245, a.

Solyman the Eunuch Bassa dealeth treacherously with the Kings of Arabia, 670, m.

Solyman hardly persuaded that his father was dead, 567, d. saluted Emperour by the Ianizaries, f. his Letters to Villerius Great Master of the Rhodes, 571, b. his Oration to his men of war, declaring his purpose for the besieging of the Rhodes, e. he maketh great preparation for the siege, 573, a. his threatning Letters vnto them of the Rhodes, 578, h. commeth himselfe in person to the siege, 783, b. his cholericke Oration to his souldiers, d. displaceth his Admirall, and puniſheth him like a ſlaue, 589, a. about to haue forſaken the ſiege, b. comforteth his diſcouraged ſouldiers, perſuading them with patience to continue the ſiege, f. his Letters to the Great Maſter and the Rhodians, ſent by their owne Embaſſadours, 593, d. his ſpeech vnto the great Maſter, at his comming to yeeld vp the City, 598, l. hee entreth into the Rhodes vpon Chriſtmaſſe day, in the yeare 1522, 600, i. Solyman vpon the diſcord of the Chriſtian Princes, and diſordered State of Hungarie, taketh occaſion to inuade that Kingdome, 601, b. commeth into Hungarie againſt King Lewis with an Army of two hundred thouſand men, c. ouerthroweth him in battell at Mohatz, 602, k. commeth to Buda, 603, a. Solyman in the quarrel of King Iohn, againſt King Ferdinand commeth into Hungarie with an Army of 150000 men, 609, a. without reſiſtance entreth into Buda, and beſiegeth the Caſtle, 609, d. layeth ſiege to Vienna, 610, k. without ranſome releaſeth certaine Chriſtian priſoners, 612, g. loſeth his great ordnance vpon the Danubius, k. burieth 8000 of his Turks in the Mines, l. hauing loſt 80000 of his Turks, raiſeth his ſiege, and returneth to Buda, 614, i. he reſtoreth the Kingdome of Hungarie vnto King Iohn, k. returneth himſelf to Conſtantinople, 615, a. maketh great preparation for the ſubduing of the territories belonging to the Houſe of Auſtria, as alſo for the conqueſt of Germanie, with the ſhort time he prefined vnto himſelfe for the performance thereof, 615, c. Solyman with a mighty army commeth againe into Hungarie, 618, e. beſiegeth Gunza, i. his proud letters to Charles the Emperor, m. ſhunneth to meet him at Vienna, and ſo turneth out of the way into Corinthia, 621, a. the cauſes mouing him ſo to do. b. returneth towards Conſtantinople, 623, d. Solyman perſuaded by Abraham Baſſa, reſolueth to goe againſt the Perſians, 649, a. commeth with his army to Tauris, f. followeth Tamas the Perſian King into Sultania, 650, g. his army ſtrangely diſtreſſed by tempeſt, k. hath Babylon with the Countries of Meſopotamia and Aſſyria yeelded vnto him, 651. a. he ranſacketh Tauris, f. diſcouraged by the harme done him by Delymenthes, giueth ouer his warres in Perſia, and returneth to Conſtantinople, 653, c. hee with a wonderfull charge prepareth a great Fleet at Cuetia againſt the Portugals in the East-Indies, 670, h. Solyman by the French Embaſſador incited to inuade Italy with an Army of two hundred thouſand men, commeth to Aulona, 671, c. ſendeth Luizis Baſſa & Barbaruſſa with his Fleet before him into Italy, d. conuerteth his forces prepared for Italy, againſt the Venetians, 673, b. in danger to haue been ſlaine in his tent in the middeſt of his army, 673, b. inuadeth Corcyra, e. carryeth away aboue ſixteene hundred priſoners, and doth good Iuſtice vpon ſuch Turks as had violated their faith at Caſtrum, 674, k. Solyman angry with the ſecret Confederation betweene King Ferdinand and King Iohn, 695, c. promiſeth to protect the Queene and her ſonne, 701, c. with a great army commeth to Buda, 709, b. ſendeth for the young King into his Camp, c. courteouſly receiueth him, 710, h. craftily ſurpriſeth the City of Buda, i. detaineth the Nobilitie of Hungarie, l. diuerſly perſuaded by his Baſſaes for the diſpoſing of that Kingdome, 711, b. hee ſacrificeth after the Mahometane manner in Buda, 712, m. pronounceth the doome of Hungarie, and conuerteth it from a Kingdome, into a Prouince of his Empire, 713, a. his proud anſwer vnto King Ferdinand his Embaſſadors, 714, k. he returneth to Conſtantinople, 715, b. ſendeth his Fleet to Barbaruſſa his Admirall, to ayd the French King againſt the Emperour, 734, k. Solyman with a great Army commeth againe into Hungarie, 736, g. taketh Strigonium. 738. entereth into the City, and there ſetteth vp the Mahometane Superſtition, m. winneth Alba-Regalis, 742, h. returneth to Conſtantinople, k. by the inſtigation of Dragut the Pyrat, ſendeth out Sinan Baſſa with a great Fleet, to reuenge the wrong done vnto him by Auria, 752, l. Solyman amorous of Roxolana, 757, c. manumiſeth her, 758, h. marrieth her, l. by her perſuaded, reſolueth to put to death his eldeſt Sonne the noble Muſtapha, 761, d. goeth himſelfe with a great Army into Aſia to kill his ſonne, e. ſendeth for Muſtapha, who comming, is cruelly ſtrangled in his ſight, 763, c. his ſtout ſpeech vnto the Ianizaries vp in armes for the vnworthy death of Muſtapha, 764, k. hee glad to yeeld vnto the Ianizaries, m. Solyman deſirous with as little ſtirre as might be, to appeaſe the grudges betwixt his two ſonnes Selymus and Baiazet, ſendeth Partau and Mahomet two of his Viſier Baſſaes to bring them to the Prouinces by him appointed for them, 773, d. maketh preparation againſt Baiazet, and ſendeth ayd to Selymus, e. for countenancing of Selymus, goeth himſelfe in perſon with his Army ouer into Aſia, 776, l. diſſembleth with Baiazet, 778, g. ſeeketh to ſtop his flight into Perſia, deceiued of his purpoſe, procureth to haue him and his foure ſonnes ſtrangled in priſon, in Perſia, 791, d. Solyman by his Embaſſadour Abraham Strotza confirmeth his league with Ferdinand the Emperour for eight yeares, 789, b. his proud Letters vnto the Emperour Ferdinand, c. his Preſents ſent vnto the Emperour, 791, d. he maketh preparation againſt the Knights of Malta, 793, a. his Oration vnto his Captaines for the inuaſion of Malta, b. his fleet arriueth at Malta, 795, a. with ſhame returneth, 817, c. Solyman purpoſing now the ſeuenth time himſelfe in perſon to inuade Hungarie, cauſeth a bridge of a mile long with incredible labour to be made ouer the great Riner Sauus and the deepe fennes toward Sigeth, 821. beſiegeth Sigeth, e. commeth himſelfe with a great power into the Camp, 822, b. winneth the old Towne, l. falleth ſicke and dieth of the bloudy flx at Quinque Eccleſiæ, 882, m. his death by Muhamet the Viſier Baſſa concealed, and the ſiege continued, 813, a. his body with great ſolemnity by his ſon Selymus buried at Conſtantinople, 828, b. the Spaniards reioycing at the ouerthrow of the Italians by Salec, are themſelues foyled by Tabacces, 658, m.

Stelloſa with Deſdrot the gouernor thereof deliuered to Scanderbeg, 285, f.

Stephen Rozwan in ſtead of Aaron by the Tranſyluanian prince placed Vayuod of Moldauia, 1062, l. thruſt out by Zamoſchie Chancellor of Polonia, 1080, g. taken priſoner and put to death, 1081, a.

Stephen Vayuod of Tranſyluania vpon the commendation of Amurath choſen king of Polonia, 921, a.

Styria forraged by the Turks, 1132.

Strigonium in vaine beſieged by king Iohn, 616, k. beſieged by Solyman, 736, a. diuers times by the Turks in vaine aſſaulted, c. the ſtrength thereof by a fugitiue Chriſtian diſcouered, d. yeelded vnto the Turke, 738, h. beſieged by the Chriſtians, 1033, c. fiue times in vaine aſſaulted with the loſſe of fiue thouſand men, 1034, l. the ſiege by Matthias the Archduke giuen ouer, 1037, d. beſieged by County Manſ-

Mansfelt, 1065, b. twice in vaine assaulted, c. the lower towne taken, 1070 g. yeelded vnto the Archduke Matthias, 1072, h.

Sugusta by Sultan Aladin giuen to Ertogrul, 134, k.

Sumachia taken by Osman Bassa, 936, h. recouered by the Persian Prince, 940, i.

Swartzenbourg by two Italian prisoners flying out of Rab, informed of the state of the towne, 1102, g. consulteth with the Lord Palsi, h. surpriseth that strong towne, 1103, b. in vain attempteth to haue surprised Buda, 1110, h. commeth to Pappa to appease the French and Wallons there in mutinie, 1117, a. besiegeth the towne, 1118. slaine, i.

Syrgiannes appointed by Andronicus the Emperor, to obserue the doings of yong Andronicus his Nephew, trecherously discouereth the same vnto him, 159, c. cunningly coloureth his treason, 160, h. contemned of the younger Andronicus, reuolteth again vnto his Grandfather, 162, l. apprehended, imprisoned, and his house raced, 164, l.

T

TAmas the Persian King hearing of the comming of Solyman to Tauris flyeth into Hircania, 651, d. in feare of Baiazet, killeth his followers, and imprisoneth him with his sonnes, 780, l. sendeth Embassadours with Presents to Solyman, 781, a. the cause why he would not by any means let Baiazet go out of his hands, d. his answer vnto the Venetian Embassador, persuading him to take vp armes against the Turks, 862, k.

Tamerlane his reasonable and modest answer vnto the other Mahometane Princes craning aid against Baiazet, 210, k. in their behalfe sendeth Embassadours with Presents to Baiazet, l. prouoked by the proud answer of Baiazet, the solicitation of the oppressed Princes, and the persuasion of Axalla, resolueth to make warre vpon him, 211, b. his honourable Parentage and Auncestors, 212, i. the causes why some report him to haue been a Sheepheard or Heardsman, k. he himselfe not delighted in bloud, m. marrieth the daughter and heire of the Great Cham of Tartarie, the ground of his greatnesse, 213, a. setteth forward against Baiazet, 214, k. his great Camp still like vnto a well gouerned City, 215, b. the number of his great Army, c. he taketh Sebastia, and burieth all the people quicke 216, h. stayeth the comming of Baiazet, 217, a. disposeth of the order of his battell, 218, k. fighteth a great and mortall battell with Baiazet, 219 b. taking him prisoner, causeth him like a wild beast to bee shut vp in an yron cage, 220, m. refuseth the Empire of Constantinople, offered him by Emanuel the Emperours Embassadours, 221, e. goeth priuatly himselfe to Constantinople, 222, i. much delighted with the scituation and pleasures of that City, k. spoyleth the Turks dominions in Asia, l. restoreth vnto the poore Mahometane Princes oppressed by Baiazet, all their antient inheritãces, 223, b. in a great battell ouerthroweth the Sultan of Ægypt neere vnto Aleppo, c. winneth Damasco, d. commeth to Ierusalem, f. taketh Damiata, 224, h. assaulteth Caire, 225, a, driueth the Sultan out of Caire, d. pursueth him to Alexandria, 226, g. chaseth him into Lybia, h. leaueth Calibes to gouern the countries of Ægypt and Syria, l. conquereth Mesopotamia and Babylon with the kingdome of Persia, 227, a. returneth to Samarcand, b. the great power he continually kept, 235, c. his death, e.

Tangrolipix the Turke sent to aid the Persian Sultan, 4, g. by consent of the souldiers chosen Sultan of Persia, l. first Sultan of the Turks, m. hauing slaine Pisasiris Calyph of Babylon, in battell, toyneth his dominions vnto his owne, 5, b. inuadeth the Greek Emperours dominions, f. putteth to death his brother Habramie, 6, i.

Tancred created Prince of Galliley, winneth Apamea and Laodicea, 25, c. after the death of yong Bohemund created King of Antioch, 26, i.

Tarsus in Cilicia yeelded vnto Baiazet, 446, m.

Tartar Han his letters vnto the King of Polonia, 1083, c.

Tauris yeelded to Selymus, 512, c. who contrarie to his promise, exacteth a great summe of money from the Taurisians, and so departeth, 513, a. sacked by Solyman, 651, f. taken by the Turks, 991, d. hath a new castle therein built by the Turks in six and thirty daies, 992, i. miserably spoyled, l.

Taurica Chersonesus with the Tartars Præsopenses and Desienses subdued by the Turks, 412, m.

Techellis inuadeth the Turks Dominions, 469, e. ouerthroweth Orchanes and Mahometes, Baiazet his Nephewes, 471. discomfiteth Caragoses the Viceroy of Natolia, 472, i. killeth Alis Bassa, 474, l. flyeth into Armenia, 475, c. robbeth a Caruan of Merchants, and therefore burnt at Tauris, 476, b.

Temeswar taken by the Turks, 756, g.

Temurtases Baiazet his Lieutenant in Asia, taken prisoner by Aladin the young King of Caramania, 208, k. againe set at liberty, hangeth the Caramanian King, m.

Teuffenbach taketh Sabatska, 1026, k. winneth Filecke, 1027, c. besiegeth Hatwan, 1032, g. ouerthroweth the Bassa of Buda, h. giueth the same Bassa a second ouerthrow, 1037, f.

Theobald King of Nauarre maketh an vnfortunate expedition into the Holy Land, 99, f. with Lewis the French King goeth against the Moores, 118, k. in his return dieth of the plague in Sicilia, l.

Theodorus Lascaris flyeth into Bythinia, and possessing himselfe of many countries, taketh vpon him the name of the Greeke Emperour at Nice, 84, l. he killeth Iathatines the Turkish Sultan 87, c.

Theodorus Lascaris sonne to Iohn Batases, chosen Emperour, 108, m. aideth the Sultan of Iconium, 109, e. falleth sicke and dieth, 110, g.

Theupulus Earle of Paphos vnworthily hanged by the faithlesse Bassa Mustapha, 867, d.

Thracia spoyled by the Turks, 256, g.

Tomombeius by the generall consent of the Mamalukes chosen Sultan of Ægypt, 533, d maketh great preparation against the Turks, and seeketh to entrap them, 538, g. his deuices discouered, i. he fighteth a great battell with Selymus, and is put to the worse, 540, m. raiseth new forces at Caire, 541, c. fortifieth Caire, 542, k. fighteth a great battell in the City, 545, b. ouercome, flyeth, 546, h. driuen out of Cayre, raiseth new forces in Segesta, 547, d. distresseth the Turks in passing the bridge made ouer Nilus, 549, b. giueth a notable attempt to haue gained the bridge, f. repulsed and put to flight, 550, i. taken and brought to Selymus, l. tortured and shamefully put to death, m.

Trapezond yeelded to Mahomet the Great, 360, k.

Transyluania giuen by Solyman to the childe King Iohn his sonne, 716, k.

Tripolis in Barbarie besieged by Sinan Bassa, 753, a. battered, b. the weakest places thereof, and fittest to be battered, by a fugitiue Christian discouered to the Turks, d. vpon hard conditions yeelded to the proud and faithlesse Bassa, 755, d.

Tunes beſieged by Lewis the French King, 119, a. yeelded to Charles the Emperour, 667, e. by him vpon an eaſie tribute againe reſtored to Muleaſſes, 669, d. again yeelded to the Turks, 915, d.

Turks, their originall beginning diuerſly reported, 1, c. deſcended from the Scythians, 2, b. the cauſes why they left their antient and naturall ſeats in Scythia, to ſeeke for other in countries more Southerly, 2, l. where they firſt ſeated themſelues in Aſia after their departure out of Scythia, 3, b. their firſt kingdome erected in Perſia by Tangrolipix their firſt Sultan, 4, l. the Turks firſt called into Europe by the Catalonians, 152, g. they differ not from the Perſians about the interpretation of their law, but about the true ſucceſſor of their falſe Prophet Mahomet only, 462, i.

Tarqueminus choſen Sultan of Ægypt, 160, b.

Tzihanger refuſeth the noble Muſtapha his brothers wealth and treaſure offered him by his father Solyman, and for ſorrow killeth himſelfe, 763, e.

V

Valachia when firſt ſpoyled by the Turks, 204, g. inuaded by Mahomet the Great, 362, g. oppreſſed by the Turks, 1050, h. in great troubles, 1143, d.

Valmes fortified by Mahomet the great, 402, g.

Valetta the Grand Maſter of Malta aduertiſed of Solymans purpoſe for the inuaſion of him and his Knights, 793, f. his effectuall ſpeech vnto his Knights, 794, g. his great preparation againſt the Turks comming, k. his whole ſtrength, 796, g. he certifieth Garzias of Toledo, Viceroy of Sicilia, of his eſtate, l. ſendeth a new ſupplie into the Caſtle of S. Elmo, twice before aſſaulted by the Turks, 798, g. diſappointed of a ſupply to haue been brought him by his owne gallies, h. his Letters to Garzias the Viceroy of Sicilia, 800, g. he ſendeth three of his Knights to know the ſtate of them in the Caſtle S. Elmo, 801, e. encourageth his ſouldiers after the loſſe of the Caſtle, 803, c. his Chriſtianlike Letters to the Gouernour of the city of Melita, e. his reſolute anſwer to the Meſſengers ſent vnto him from the Great Baſſa, 804, i. he receiueth a ſmall ſupply from Sicilia, 805, f. maketh hard ſhift to ſend news of his diſtreſſe to the Viceroy of Sicilia, 808, l. his comfortable ſpeech vnto his ſouldiers at ſuch time as the Turks were entred the new City, 814, h. his great carefulneſſe, 817, e. his letters to the Grand Prior of Almaine, concerning the manner of the Turks proceedings in the ſiege of Malta, 818, g.

Venerius the Venetian Admirall, and Barbadicus their Proueditour perſuade the reſt of the Chriſtian Confederates to giue battell vnto the Turks at Lepanto, 871, d. comming to the reliefe of Don Iohn, is encountred by Partau Baſſa, 879, a. in danger, b. at the requeſt of the Spaniards diſplaced, but not diſgraced, 887, e.

the Venetians with a great fleet ſpoyle the Coaſts of Lycia, Pamphylia, and Cilicia, 19, a. in the diuiſion of the Greeke Empire amongſt the Latines, had for their ſhare all the rich Iſlands of the Ægeum and Ionian, with the famous Iſland of Candie or Crete, 84, h. enter into confederation with other Chriſtian Princes againſt the Turke, 389, e. they with their Confederates do the Turks great harme, 407, d. receiue a great ouerthrow from the Turks at the riuer of Sontium, 414, k. their Merchants in Syria impriſoned by Campſon Gaurus the Ægyptian Sultan, 471, b. their Senatours diuerſly affected towards the confederation with the Emperour and the French King againſt Solyman, 693, d. they refuſe to yeeld vp Cyprus vnto Selymus demanding the ſame, 841, e. make great preparation for their owne defence, and craue aid of the other Chriſtian Princes, 842, k. what Princes promiſed them aid, l. weary of the delayes and croſſe dealings of the Spaniards their Confederates, conclude a Peace with Selymus without their knowledge, 904, k.

Veradinum beſieged by the Turks, 1106, h. relieued by the Lord Baſta, l.

Veſprinium taken by the Turks, 1025, c

Vſegi Baſſa taken priſoner, 500, l. put to death, 501, b.

Vicegrade taken by the Chriſtians, 1072, i.

Victor Capella with a notable ſpeech perſuadeth the Venetians to take vp Armes againſt Mahomet the Great, 387, a.

Vienna by Solyman beſieged, 610, k. badly fortified, 611, a. the wals blown vp, 612, m. thrice aſſaulted, f. worthily defended, 614, g. Solyman glad to forſake the ſiege, i.

Villerius choſen Great Maſter of the Rhodes, 569, d. his letters to Solyman 571, d. his carefull prouiſion for defence of his City, 573, b. 575, e. his notable ſpeech vnto the Rhodians, 576, g. his worthy commendation, 581. in vaine craueth aid of the Chriſtian Princes, b. recouereth the Spaniſh bulwarke from the Turks, 588, g. his reſolute opinion concerning Solymans demand for the yeelding vp of the Rhodes, 594, g. his anſwer vnto Solyman, offering vnto him moſt honourable entertainment, 599, b. he departeth from the Rhodes with his Knights vpon New-yeares day, 600, g.

Vladiſlaus King of Polonia choſen alſo King of Hungary, 262, i. ſendeth embaſſadors vnto Amurath lying at the ſiege of Belgrade, 263, e. goeth himſelfe in perſon againſt the Turks, 277, b. taketh Sophia, c. ſpoyleth Bulgaria, d. highly commendeth Huniades for his good ſeruice, 278, i. enforced with the difficultie of the paſſage of the mountaine Hemus, retyreth with his Army, 279, b. by the perſuaſion of Huniades and others retyreth, and in vaine ſeeketh to haue opened the mountaine paſſage, 281, d. in his retreat much troubled with the Turks, 282, h. in great triumph returneth to Buda, m. vpon moſt honourable conditions concludeth a peace with Amurath for ten yeares, 289, b. by ſolemne oath confirmeth the League he had made with Amurath, c. abſolued of that his oath by Iulian the Cardinall of S. Angel, reſolueth for the proſecution of his wars againſt the Turks, 292, i. by his Embaſſadours and letters craueth aid of Scanderbeg, 293, a. ſetteth forward againſt the Turks, 295, e. fighteth the great and vnfortunate battel at Varna, 297, b. is there himſelfe ſlaine, 298, h.

Vluſales in the battell of Lepanto taketh twelue of the Venetian gallies, 882, i. ſeeing the reſt of the Turks fleet diſcomfited, flyeth himſelfe, m. is by Selymus the next yere ſent out with two hundred gallies againſt the Venetiãs and their Confederates, 888 l. meaning nothing leſſe, maketh ſhew of battell, 892, b. cunningly retyreth, i. flyeth from Nauarinum, into the Bay of Modon, 895. returneth with his weake fleet to Conſtantinople, 902, m.

Vranacontes by Scanderbeg appointed Gouernour of Croia againſt the comming of Amurath, 322, l. with cheerfull ſpeech encourageth his ſoldiers, e. reiecteth Amurath his Preſents, and threatneth the Baſſa by whom they were ſent, 329, d.

Vstref Bassa of Van inciteth Amurath to make war against the Persians,925 a. by Amurath commanded to begin the war, which he readily performeth, 926,b.

Vsun-Cassanes the Persian King sendeth Embassadors with Presents to Mahomet the Great,359,b. marrieth Despina the daughter of Calo Ioannes Emperour in Trapezond, 409,b. in a great battel ouerthroweth Zenza the Persian King,& killeth Cariasuphus his son, the last of the posterity of the mighty Tamerlane, 409,g. in a great battell ouerthrowne by Mahomet the Great, 410,l. his death, 411,a.

W

WAlpo trecherously yeelded vnto the Turks, and the traitours iustly rewarded, 736,b.

Warres by Amurath the third proclaimed against the Emperour Rodolph, 1023,f.

Waswood an old Ianizarie his presumptuous speech vnto Mahomet the Great Sultan, 1063, h. taken out of prison by the rest of the Ianizaries, e.

Water deare sold, 665,b.

Wihitz the metropoliticall city of Croatia taken by the Turks, 1015,e.

William king of Sicilia inuadeth the Tirant Andronicus his Dominions, taketh the City of Dyrrhachium, passeth through Macedonia and spoileth the country, meeteth with his fleet at Thessalonica, which he also taketh by force and spoyleth, 51,b.

William Long-Espie Earle of Sarisbury with a band of tall soldiers goeth into the Holy land, 102,l. his stout answer vnto Earle Robert the French Kings brother, 104,k. valiantly fighting is slaine, 105,a.

Wladus Prince of Valachia putteth Mahomet the Great in feare, 362,k. Wladu cruell, m. dieth in battell against the Turks, 363,e.

Wine for a space running downe the streets of Constantinople as if it had been water after a showre of raine, 1142,l.

Wolfgangus Hoder vpon the Danubius doth good seruice against the Turks, 612,k.

X

XAycus pay-master of the Rhodes intrapped by the Turks, and sent prisoner to be tortured at Constantinople, 575,c.

Xene the faire Empresse, the yong Emperour Alexius his mother, malitiously accused of treason, and so wrongfully condemned, 47, f. by the commandement of Andronicus strangled in prison, and so poorely buried, 48,k.

Xiphilinus by Alexius sent ouer to Andronicus, dealeth vnfaithfully in his message, 45,c.

Y

YOland daughter to king Iohn crowned Queene of Ierusalem, and after by her father giuen in marriage to Fredericke the Emperor, 96,g.

Z

ZAcharias Groppa fighteth a combat with Alhemaze a Turke, 373,a.

Zachel Moyses the Transyluanian princes Lieutenant in battell ouerthrown by Basta, 1143,c. flyeth vnto the Turks, 1145,e.

Zacynthus, Neritus, and Cephalenia, taken by Achmetes Bassa, 426,l.

Zamoschie the great Chancellor of Polonia, stayeth the Tartars from the inuading of Moldauia, 1079,c. inuades Moldauia himselfe, 1080,g. his letters vnto Clement the Pope in defence of himselfe and of that he had don in Moldauia, 1084,k. drieueth Michael the Vayuod out of Valachia, and placeth another in his stead, 1128,h.

Zanius the Venetian Admirall with a fleet of 117 saile commeth to Corcyra, 849,b. he with the Confederats setteth forwards towards Cyprus,d. vpon the foule disagreement of the great Commanders returneth,853,e. discharged of his office, and sent in bonds to Venice, 854,b.

Zembenic Castle the place where the Turks began first to settle themselues in Europe, 185,b.

Zemes riseth in rebellion against his elder brother Baiazet, 438,h. ouerthrown in battell by his brother, flyeth to Caytbeius the Sultan of Ægypt, 439,b. he with the Caramanian king goeth against his brother Baiazet, 441,b. flyeth to sea, 442,g. deliuered vnto Pope Innocent the eighth, 446,h. by Pope Alexander deliuered to Charles the French King, 452,h. dyeth within three daies after, being before by the Pope poysoned, as is supposed, e. his dead body sent to Constantinople, and honorably afterwards buried at Prusa, 452,k.

Zenza the Persian King in a great battell ouerthrowne and slaine by Vsun-Cassanes, 409,e.

Zerbe Island inuaded by the Christian Fleet, set forth for the recouery of the City of Tripolis in Barbarie, 783,e. the Castle of Zerbi yeelded vnto the Spaniards, f. a great part of the Christian fleet oppressed at Zerbi, by the sudden comming of Pial Bassa the Turks Admirall, 784,m. the castle of Zerbe besieged by the Turks, 785,b. yeelded vnto the Turks, d. the Turks in triumph returne with victorie to Constantinople, 786,g.

Zingis passing ouer the mountaines Caucasus and Taurus, conquereth the Turks dominions, 75,e.

Zoganes Bassa by the deuice of a wicked Christian bringeth seuenty of the Turks gallies eight miles ouer land into the Hauen of Constantinople, 343,f persuadeth Mahomet to continue his siege, 345,a.

Zolnoc a strong fortresse of the Christians in the vpper Hungarie taken by the Turks, 756,g.

FINIS.

The Table.

V

VV ho preceded the third Prelate into the Temple, and the manner of it. 230 b.

VVarwick overthrown by Edward the Fourth. 410 b.

VVarwick the Duke of Burgundy's Herald, sent to the Duke of Lancaster. 1053 c

Another Table of the principall matters contained in the three laſt Continuations of this Hiſtory, from the yeare of our Lord 1603, vnto the yeare 1629.

A Baſſa Baſſa of Arzirum aſſaults and takes the Caſtle of Tocat, 1429 d. outwardly reconciled to the Grand Signior, 1450 b. killeth Colophon Baſſa, 1450. his baſe treachery, 1451 e.

Achmat the Great Sultan crowned 1205 d. his diſpoſition, 1209 a. ſicke of the ſmall pox, 1217 d. contemneth good counſell, 1218 g. his firſt ſonne borne, 1236 l. ſeeketh in vaine to make peace with the Perſian, 1273 b. makes Gambolat Generall of his army in Aſia, and ſuddenly commandeth him to be ſlaine, 1297 c. his extreme ſeuerity, 1309 f. beats his Sultana, 1313 b. in danger to be ſlaine by a Dernice, d. commeth in ſtate to Conſtantinople, 1319. admoniſheth the Tranſyluanians to obey Gabor, 1333 a. commands all the Chriſtians to be ſlain, 1352 l. entertaines foure armies, 1367 a. his death and diſpoſition, 1368 i.

Adorne caſtle abandoned by the Haiducks, 1177 c.

Alba Regalis, the ſuburbs by the Chriſtians ſacked and burnt, 1177 a.

Alexander proclaimed Prince of Moldauia, 1347 c. ſendeth Embaſſadors to Sultan Achmat, d. another to Prince Michna, 1349 c. a third to Bethlem Gabor, e. 800 of his ſouldiers ſlain by their hoſts for their inſolency, 1351 d. he receiueth new aids, ſome whereof are defeated, 1352 a. treacherouſly forſaken by his Generall, 1358 g. he and his confederats inuironed by the Turks army, 1359 d. taken priſoner and carried to Conſtantinople, 1360 i.

Ali Baſſa great Vizier beheaded, 1455 d.

Althems regiment in mutiny, 1211 d.

Altenſol yeelded to the Hungarian rebels, 1260 g.

Amurath Rais his gallies fighteth with a Flemiſh ſhip, 1249.

Articles, by Botſcay propounded to the Emperors Commiſſioners, 1249 d. of the Emperor to be conſidered in the Dyet of Ratisbone, 1276, &c. of pacification betwixt the Emperor and his brother Matthias, 1284. by the Hungarians preferred vnto King Matthias at Presburg, 1287 c. of the pacification in Auſtria, 1290 k. touching the differences of peace betwixt the Grand Signior and the Emperor, 1362, &c. propounded by the Engliſh Embaſſador to the Grand Signior, 1402, &c. of peace betweene the Grand Signior and the King of Poland, 1420, &c. betweene the Engliſh nation and the inhabitants of Tunes and Algier, 1437. &c. betweene the Emperor Ferdinand and Bethlem Gabor Prince of Tranſylwania, 1479, &c. betwixt the Grand Signior and the Emperor, 1481, &c.

B

Baſſa's.

the Baſſa of Trebezond with his army diſcomfited by the Perſian King, 1257 f. of Damaſco, Tripolis, and Gazare ouerthrowne by the Baſſa of Aleppo, 1258 l. of Tripolis againe ouerthrowne by the Baſſa of Aleppo, and the City of Damaſco taken and rifled by him, m. who after three notable encounters with the Vizier, flieth, 1272 k. by the great Sultan pardoned, and againe receiued into fauour, m. the Baſſa's reward that brought the Egyptian Carauan ſafe to Conſtantinople, 1308 h. of Arzirum in rebellion, 1429 d. the Captaine Baſſa diſpatched with an Army into the Blacke ſea, 1475 k.

Baſta the Emperors Lieutenant in Tranſyluania) beſiegeth the caſtle of Solomoſe, 1170 k. which is yeelded to him, 1171 a. his admonition to the States of Tranſyluania, b. their anſwer, d. beſieged in the caſtle of Somaſinnar, 1172 l. ſendeth Preſents to the Emperour, 1175 d. purſueth the Turks army departing from the ſiege of Strigonium, 1230 g. goeth againſt Botſcay, 1232 k. diſcomfiteth certaine companies of the Rebels, 1233 c. and putteth to death one of their Captains, d. diſtreſſed by the Rebels, and yet ouerthroweth them, e. contemned by the Citiſens of Caſſouia, 1234 g. recouereth Eperia, h. taketh one of Botſca's ſpies, 1236 f. being in a ſtreight, publiſheth a generall pardon for all the Rebels, 1239 c. his proclamation, d. his ſouldiers mutine for their pay, 1241 b. and ſpoyle all the country betwixt Eperia and Presburg, 1244 i. his notable exploit, 1245 b.

Battels.

a great Battel in Tartary, 1302 h. another between Alexander and the Vayuod Stephano, 1346 l. between the Turks and Persians 1378 l.

Battori his practises, 1304 k. demands succors of the Turke, and is betrayed, 1315 a. killeth Nage, 1317 a. is envied by his owne people d. sendeth an Embassadour to the Emperour Mathias e. his crueltie, 1318 i. slain by his owne soldiers, l.

Beged Bassa thinking to surprise Basta, is himselfe ouerthrown, 1193 b. slain 1245 c.

Belgiosa goeth against the Rebells in Transylvania, 1231 a. in a great battell ouerthrowne by Botscay, b. besieged by the Rebels in the castle of Zipze 1232

Beliojosa author of the great rebellion in Hungary 1236 m.

Bethlin Habor, chiefe of the Rebels in Transylvania, surprised and ouerthrowne by the Count of Tambier, 1227 a. againe defeated by the sayd Count, b.

Biram Bassa dispatched Generall against the Cossacks 1445 e.

Botscay raiseth rebellion in Transyluania, 1230 l. dealeth treacherously, 1231 c. countenanced by the grand Signior, and stiled Prince of Transylvania, d. his Lieutenants policie, f. Cassovia yeelded vnto him, 1232 h. his vnreasonable demands for peace, 1237 b. refuseth to receiue the Emperors Embassadours, 1242 m. sendeth Embassadours into Polonia, and is there denied aid, 1250 i. causeth his Chancellor to bee beheaded, 1267 d. dieth 1270 h.

Buda distressed for want of victuals, 1154 i. victualled, 1156 h. a breach made in the walls by the negligence of the Cannoniers, k.

C

Capi Aga with some others executed, 1162 i. Cassovia in danger to haue bin burnt by the Turks 1213 d.

Causes of the troubles in Bohemia 1298 h.

Ceremonies of the Turks at the first audience of embassadors 1303 c a notable exploit don by a Christian fugitiue, 1166 l. the Christians great Army, 1176 h. a rich booty lost through the negligence of certaine Christians, 1181 a. the Christian Generall layeth a great Ambush to intercept the Turks, 1182, m. which ambush ouerthroweth them, 1183 c. they pursue the Turkes flying Army, 1185 e. resolue to giue the Turkes battell, 1186 h. they offer the Turks battell, 1188 l. who shun it, 1189 a. take some booties from them, 1210 k.

Christians.

a Chiaus sent from Constantinople to Paris, and the cause why 1365

Cicala Bassa with his army ouerthrown by the rebels in Asia, 1216 k. discomfited the second time, 1217 a. again made General of the Turkes army in Asia, 1219 b. his euill successe against the Persian, 1238 g. ouerthrown by the Persian 1257 d

Colonitz a valiant Captaine in armes against the Turks, 1153 b. lieth in ambush for them, f. in vaine besiegeth Babotz, 1158 i. retyreth to Comara, 1159 a. his noble resolution d. he opposeth the Tartars, 1166 g. defeateth two thousand Turks, 1167 e. besiegeth the castle of Lequa, 1168 h. and taketh it, 1169 a. his notable enterprise vpon the avantgard of the Turks army, 1179 f. seeking to surprise the Turkes, is himselfe indangered, 1187 d. wisely appeaseth his discontented souldiers, 1235 a. craueth aid from Vienna, 1235 d. ouerthroweth the Haiducks 1252 g a Combat fought betwixt the Lord Tischevich and the Turks Generall 1358 c.

a Comet seen ouer Constantinople 1378, &c.

Commands sent from the grand Signior, and other the great Vizier Bassa's of the Port, to the Bassa's and other Gouernors of Tunes and Algier, to maintaine peace and good correspondence with all the English Nation negotiating thither, 1436, &c. other commands sent to the same purpose, 1441, &c.

Commissioners of the Turke, the Emperor, and the Hungarians meet together to treat a peace, 1267 e.

Commissioners appointed to appease the new troubles in Hungary 1279 b

Constantinople. a great tumult and fire there, 1224 g. again fired, 1266 k. fired the third time, 1275 c. violent rain in the city, 1308 b. afflicted with grashoppers, 1316 k. the people much wasted by the plague, 1332 g. all the dogs sent from thence i. the situation therof described, 1388

Constantine the son of Ieremy enters the gouernement of Moldauia, 1315 d. his answer vnto the Turks Aga, 1316 g. he and Potosky taken prisoners by the Turks, i.

Coresky a Prince of Polonia marrieth the Princesse Alexandrina, 1354 m. a Challenge sent vnto him by the Turkes Generall, 1358 m. taken prisoner by the Turks, 1360 l. his wife carried prisoner into Tartaria, 1364 i. his generous resolution, solution, 1373 b. he escapes out of prison, 1374. and also out of Constantinople, 1375 c. strangled in prison, 1413 c.

Corinth taken and spoiled by the Knights of Malta, 1310 k.
Cossackes. They mutine and leaue Prince Alexander, 1347 d. enter the Bosphorus with a fleet of boats, 1448 k. againe returne thither, 1449 e. sacke the suburbs of Trapezond, 1452 g. the third time enter the Bosphorus, 1453 f.
Count Solmes surprising Wiscenbourg is taken prisoner, 1175 f.
Cydan King of Fez with his army ouerthrowne, 1324 k.

D

DAmpiere a valiant Commander, 1255 a.
Daout Bassa his death conspired by the great Visier, 1417 f.
Death of the French Embassador at Constantinople, 1303 a. of Amurath Seider, 1309 d. of Sultan Achmats daughter, 1313 a. of Sigismund, sometime the warlike Prince of Transyluania, 1331 d. of Count Mansfelt and Duke Erneſt, 1471 d.
Defterder Bassa strangled and throwne into the street, 1454 l.
Description of the towne of Arrache or Allarche, 1301. of the Grand Signiors Chamber. 1303 e.
Discourse of the magnificence of the Turks Court and Empire, 1380, &c. touching the affaires of Tunes and Algier, 1434, &c. a Drunkard seuerely punished, 1332 l. a Dutch Gentleman dispeeded to the Port by the Emperor, disguised in French attyre, 1473 d.

E

EMbassadors. From the Emperor to the Archduke Matthias at Zname, 1282 i. from the Electors of Saxony and Brandenburg, for appeasing the troubles betwixt the Emperour and Matthias his brother, 1282 m. from Matthias to the Emperor, 1284 i. from the Elector of Saxony, in behalfe of the Protestant states of Bohemia, 1293 c. from the Persian to the German Emperor, 1297 d. to the Grand Signior, 1309 a. another, 1314 k. the Polish Embassador arrested at Constantinople, 1319 b. an Embassador from the Turke to his Majesty of Great Britain, and his speech vnto him, 1379. from Bethlem Gabor arriueth at the Port, 1414 b. from the King of Poland to the Turke, l. his Oration to the Grand Signior, 1415, &c. his Remonstrance to the great Visier, 1418 k. from the Duke of Muscouie to the Turke, 1417 b. from the Prince of Transyluania to the great Sultan, 1423 d. from the Persian arriueth at Aleppo, 1475 c. the English Embassador arriueth at the Port, 1401 b. his Oration to the Grand Signior, c. deliuereth his letters of credence, e. his aduice to Delauir Bassa, and the Bassaes reply, 1411 d, e.
the Emperor makes faire weather with the Protestant States of Bohemia, 1292. prepares for a war in Hungary, 1444 l.
the Emir of Sidon in rebellion, 1432 k.
the English Embassador Sir Tho. Glouer makes intercession at the Port, for the restoring of a deposed Prince of Moldauia, 1305 c. an Enterprise of the Christians vpon Albania, discouered by the Turks, 1306 g.
a notable Enterprise of foure Christian Slaues, 1326.
Eperia by the Rebels distressed, 1263 e.

F

FAcardin, Emir of Sidon abandons his charge, and retyres to Florence, 1333 d. is receiued courteously of the Duke, e.
Falshood of a Turke justly punished, 1310 h.
Fight at sea betwixt foure gallies of Malta and one English ship, called the Sampson, 1508, &c.
Filek yeelded vnto the Haiducks, 1241 e.
the Florentines take the castle of Lango, 1314 g.
Folly of the Turks, 1302 m.
Fortgatsie, Lieutenant to King Matthias entreth Transyluania with an army, 1304 i. expelled by Battori, l. his miserable retreit, ibid.
the Fort of Cochina yeelded to Prince Alexander, 1344 l. a French Embassador feasted by the Turks, 1303 d.
the French embassadors men tortured by the Turks, 1374 k. he himselfe imprisoned, m. set at liberty, 1375 b.
Funerall of the Lady Glouer the English Embassadors wife, 1313.

G

GAbor and the Turke oppresse Battori, 1318 i. Gabor made Prince of Transyluania by the Turke, 1318 m. his design vpon diuers places, 1338 k. receiueth aid from the Turke, and besiegeth Lippa, l. vndertakes to succour the Bohemian Protestants, 1382, g. taketh many townes

in Hungary, k. makes a league with the Bohemians and Hungarians, 1383 i. proclaimed King of Hungary, 1384 g. summoneth the towne of Tyrnavia, 1431 c. his wife elected to succeed him in the principalitie, 1468 m. defeateth the army of the Imperials 1471 b.

the Gallions of Malta defeated by the Turks, 1298 i. they set vpon the Turks Caravan, l. go to surprise them of Biserta, 1299 a. sinke a Gallion of Tunes, b.

the Gallies of Florence take a Turkish ship, 1299 b. winne the towne of Bisquerre, c. take diuers Turkish Vessels, d. make a second voyage against the Turkes, 1305 e. meet with the Turkes fleet, 1306 h. assailed by the Turkes, i. sink fiue Turkish gallies, k. put their fleet to flight, and take a rich ship from them, m. make an enterprise vpon the towne and castle of Agliman, 1328. after a bloudy fight take the place and raze it, 1330 l.

the Gallies of Malta and Naples their exploits, 1307 a. take a Venetian ship, b. force the Island of Langa, c.

the Gallies of Sicily saile into the Leuant, 1331 a. assail the Turks gallies, b.

certain Gallies of the Turks taken by them of Florence 1391 c

the Turks Gallies surprise Manfredonia a Towne in Naples, 1386 i.

Georgians, their maner of salutation 1340 h.

the Germans of Tyrna forced to weare Hungarian garments 1246 g.

Gokara surprised by the Haiducks 1237 e.

Grashoppers spoil the country about Constantinople 1308 k

H

the Haiducks surprise the Turks, 1221 a. what maner of soldiers they are, b. take the Castle of Reovin, 1222 g. and diuers other places, 1235 b, slay Copel and Pettinger two of the Emperours Captaines, and spoyle their Companies, 1235 e. ransacke the Isle of Strigonium, 1250 e do great harme in the vpper Hungary, 1262 l. insenced against the Turkes and Tartars, trust neither of them, 1264 l. raise new stirs in Hungary, 1269 d. conspire against the Germanes, 1274 m. six hundred intercepted by Humanoius 1275 b. refuse to allow of the Pacification made at Vienna 1280 l.

Halil Bassa riseth from the siege of Arzirum, 1483 f.

Hassan Bassa honourably receiued at Constantinople after the winning of Alba Regalis 1160 h. in great danger of his life, k. persuadeth the grand Signior to humour the mutined souldiers, 1161 a. his excuse to the mutiniers, 1162 g. appointed Generall of the Turks wars in Hungary, 1218 i. sent for to Constantinople, l. continued Generall, and commeth into Hungary, 1224 m.

Hatwan taken and dismantled by Maximilian the Archduke, 1189 e. again fortified by the Turks 1190 g. besieged by the Christians, h. yeelded vnto them, m. abandoned by the Christian Garrison 1226 b.

Hungary. the Hungarians misery, 1211 c. vpper Hungary by the Turkes and Tartars spoyled and burnt, 1230 i. great towns taken and rifled by the Rebels 1246 g.

Husseruph Bassa declared great Vizier 1484 i.

the Hussars most traiterously spoyle their friends, 1234 i.

Huzein Bassa strangled in the Court 1448 h.

I

Iacaia supposed brother to Sultan Achmat, 1341 a. becommeth a Christian, f. ioyns with the Rebels of Asia, 1342 h. is defeated and wounded i. sendeth to Constantinople and corrupteth the Vizier, ibidem. his life in danger at Cracouia, k. retyreth to Prague to the Emperor, l. comes to Florence, and is honorably entertained, 1343 a. goeth to Naples and Millaine, b. commeth to Rome, d.

Iagenrenter his cowardise 1224 g.

Ianet Ogli comes in a rebellious maner to Smyrna, 1452 m. taken and slain 1465 e.

Ianizaries. they murther Mahomet Bassa, 1163 a. mutine against the Vizier, and the cause why 1228 i. again in mutiny, 1258 h. mutine against the Bassa of Buda, 1271 e. against the Grand Seignior, and the great Vizier slaine by them, 1407, a. b. they demaund Mustapha, d. assault the houses of the Christians, 1416 k. mutine against the Bostangi Bassa, 1455 f. petition the grand Signior against their fellow mutiniers 1458, &c.

Ierome Vayuod of Valachia dies 1280 i.

Iesuits, certain of them go to Mengrelia, 1339 c. shipwreckt, f. entertained by a prince in Asia, 1340 h. Iesuits accused at Constantinople, 1352 h. imprisoned, i. set at liberty 1353 c.

Illishaschius abused by the Hungarians, 1264 i. chosen Palatine of Hungary, 1288 k. dyeth, 1291 d.

K

the King of Spaines Edict for the banishment of the Morisques or new Christians, 1300. the King of Fez besiegeth Moroco, and is defeated, 1323, b.

L

League betwixt the Turkes and Hollanders, 1327, a.

Leopold the Archduke his proceedings in Bohemia, 1298, g.

Letters of Achmet Bassa to Collonitz concerning a Peace, 1178, l. of the Bassa of Buda to Colonell Althem, 1198, m. another, 1215, d. of Hassan the Vizier, and of Begedes Bassa, to the German souldiers besieged in the Castle of Vicegrade, 1238, h. of Collonitz to a certaine Nobleman, concerning the troubles in Hungary, 1242, b. of Botscay to the Nobilitie and States of Hungarie, 1243. from a Citizen of Vienna, declaring the miseries of Hungary, 1247. of the Germane Emperor to the Persian King, 1260. from the Persian to the Spaniard, 1273, b. of confederation betwixt the States of Austria and Hungary, 1279, e. of the Emperour to the Reformed States of Bohemia, for freee exercise of their Religion, 1293, l. from Sultan Achmat to the Emperour, and his answer thereunto, 1337. from Sultan Osman to the French King, 1377, &c. to the King of Great Britaine, 1380. from Halil Bassa to the English Embassador, 1381. from the King of Great Britaine to Sultan Osman, 1401. from the Grand Signior to the king of Great Britain, 1404, from the Grand Signior to the Christian princes united for defence of the libertie of Germanie, 1459, &c. from the King of Great Britaine to the Grand Signior, 1461, &c. the Grand Signiors answer, 1462, from the English Embassadour to his Maiesties Subiects trading in the Red Sea, 1472. another to the same effect, 1477. from the Emperor to the Grand Signior, 1480. from Constantinople to a Senatour of Venice, declaring the troubles raised in the Greeke Church by the Iesuites and See of Rome, with all their practises to subuert the same, 1486, &c.

Losses of the Turkish and Polish armies in Sultan Osmans expedition against them, 1397, f.

Lugaze a strong place deliuered vnto Basta, 1188, k.

M

Mahomet the Grand Signior sheweth himself to the mutinous soldiers, 1161, c. with milde words seekes to appease them. f. his cruelty, 1162, k, l. in danger of being deposed, 1164, i. causeth his eldest son with diuers others to be strangled, 1167, a. seeketh to pacifie the Rebels in Asia, but cannot, 1177, f. and therefore offers peace to the Christians, 1178, i. troubled in his affairs, 1183, e. dieth, 1198, h. reasons why hee was not regarded of his men of warre, 1199, e. his issue, f. the maner of his monument at Constantinople, 1200, h.

Mariage rites with great pompe solemnised by the Turks, 1312, &c.

Mathias the Archduke comes to Presburg, 1278, l. prepareth for an expedition into Morouia, 1281, e. commeth to Zname, 1282, h. hath the Crown of Hungary deliuered vnto him, 1285, d. departeth with his Army out of Bohemia, e. royally receiued at Vienna, 1286, g. crowned at Presburg, 1288, k. sends an Embassador to Constantinople, 1321, c.

Maximilian the Archduke sent to the Pope to craue aid against the Turks, 1219, e.

Meysbergs Regiment in mutinie, 1212, g.

Michna's souldiers defeated by Prince Alexanders troupes, 1355, b. flieth, c. sends an Embassadour to Prince Alexander, f. proclaimed Prince of Moldauia, 1357, e.

the Mingrelians manner of feasting, 1340,

Moldauia inuaded by the Turkes and Tartars, 1314, m.

Monsieur Laual slaine, 1252, b.

Morat, who now reigneth, by the Vizier attempted to be made Sultan, and Mustapha againe deposed, 1413. seated in the royall Throne, 1427, &c. his disposition, 1430, i. sends to the rebell Abassa Bassa a Vest, a Sword, and a Letter, 1435, i. his Army besieged before Babylon, 1456, i. and distressed, 1459, c. flieth, 1469, d.

Morauia spoyled by the rebellious Haiduckes, 1244, m.

the Morisques chase the Iewes out of Pera, 1327, b. practise against the Christians c.

Moyses the Transyluanian Rebell ouerthrowne by Basta, flies with his wife and all his Family to the Turks, 1170, h. entreth Transyluania with an army, 1171, f. besiegeth the towne of Wisceburg, and taketh it, 1172, h. winneth Claudinople, 1174, g. deceiued by the Turks, h. putteth to flight the Valachians, l. by them ouerthrowne and slaine, 1175, a.

N

Lord NAdasti his great vertues, 1197 b. his death, d.

Nassuf (great Vizier) his fall foreshewed, 1334 m. the whole course of his life and fortune described, 1335. his throat cut, 1336 h. his great treasure, i. another discourse of the maner of his death, k.

Neuhuse hardly assaulted, and valiantly defended, 1248 l. distressed, 1249 a. yeelded to the rebels 1259 e. restored to the Emperor, 1271 d.

Neusol surprised by & recouered from the Haiduks 1241 c. by them again taken, 1244 k.

O

O*Denburg besieged by the Rebels, and by Basta relieued* 1247 f.

Osman proclaimed Sultan, 1377 c. his Oath vnto Bethlem Gabor, 1383. greatly enraged at the Emperor, 1400 g. taketh a wife contrarie to the will of his Councell, 1401 a. desirous of peace with the Polacks, 1406 h. strangled by Daout Bassa, 1408 k. discourse of his life and actions, 1409, &c.

P

PAllas Lippa beheaded by Botscay his Master, 1140 b.

the Patriarch of Greece fleyed aliue 1308 h.

Peace concluded betwixt the Emperor and his discontented subiects in the vpper Hungary, 1265. betwixt him and the Turks, 1268. betwixt the Georgians and Turks, 1340 g. betweene the Persians and Turks 1378 l.

the Persian Kings successe, 1217 a. hee enters into the prouince of Babylon, 1297 b. offers the Turk faire conditions of peace, and a tribute g. his cruelitie against the Armenians, 1334 i. he inuades the prouince of Babylon, 1434 i. part of his forces ouerthrown by the Georgians, 1454 m. besiegeth Achisca 1478 g.

Pesth distressed for want of victuals, 1156 g. victualled, 1176 l. againe victualled, 1177 b. shamefully abandoned by the Christians, 1224 g. taken by the Turks, i.

Petrinia in danger to haue bin betrayed to the Turks 1222 b.

great Plague in Constantinople 1302 l.

the Pirats of Tunes and Algier rebell against the grand Signior 1446 i.

a Practise to murther the brethren of Sultan Osman 1412 i.

Predictions of a great insuing plague at Constantinople 1464 h

Presents giuen by the Turks to the Emperors Commissioners, 1196 m. sent to the grand Signiour by King Mathias, 1287 a. from the Persian to the Emperor, 1297 d. from the Persian to the Turk, 1320. from the vnited States to the Turks 1326 l.

Processions of the Turks 1325 a.

the Protestant States of Austria take Armes in defence of their religion, 1589 d. swear obedience vnto King Matthias 1291 a.

the Protestant states of Bohemia assemble in the new court at Prague, 1291 f. raise their forces in defence of their Religion 1293 d.

R

R*Ab attempted by the Turks* 1263 d.

Radul the Valachian aideth Basta against the Turks 1173 c.

the Rebels of Asia appeased by the Vizier, 1272 k. new Rebels in Asia 1282 l.

Lord Russworm beheaded 1250 l.

the Rassians and Tartars make incursions vpon the Turks 1314 h.

S

S*Acmar yeelded to the Haiducks* 1240 l.

Sigismund Ragotsie chosen Prince of Transylvania, and resigneth it to the Emperor 1271 b

Silistra spoiled by the Valachians 1157 a

Skinder Bassa inuades prince Alexander, 1350 l. his kinsman taken prisoner 1351 b.

Soldiers insolencie iustly punished 1191 d.

the Spahies and Ianizaries mutine, 1160 h. their proud speech to Sultan Mahomet, 1161 d. their insolencie iustly punished, 1263 c. cause the Chimacham to be strangled 1456

the States of Bohemia their request to the Emperor, 1283

Strigonium besieged by the Turks, 1225 b. shamefull treason of the Haiduckes there in garrison, 1229 a. the siege giuen ouer, e. again attempted to be surprised, 1238 i. again besieged, 1251 c. the insolent soldiers inforce the gouernor to yeeld the town 1256 i.

Stephen made Vayuod of Moldauia, 1315 f. his tyrannie and troublesome gouernment, 1343, &c. turneth Turk 1357 a

Styria and Austria spoiled 1246 l.

T

TArtar Cham, why so ready to serue the Turk in his wars, 1219 d. dieth, 1282 k.
the Tartars spoile many places in Hungary, 1165 f. represſed by Count Serine, 1166 i. defeated by the Huſſars, 1167 c. defeated by the Coſſackes, 1344 m. defeated by Troianosky, 1356 h. ouerthrow the Turks army, 1449 b. make an incurſion into Poland, 1451 b.
Tauris taken from the Turk by the Perſian, 1184 k.
Tockay taken by the Rebels, 1263 f.
Totiſa yeelded to the Turks, 1248 k.
Tranſyluania miſerably diſtreſſed, 1209 d. the troubles ſecretly maintained by the nobles, 1210 h. new troubles, 1214 k. the Rebels ſurpriſed and ſlaine, l. the miſerable ſtate of that Prouince, m. new troubles raiſed, 1304 g.
Treachery of the Polonian Generall, 1357 e.
Troubles in Moldauia, 1305 a. new troubles, 1314 i. in Tranſyluania, 1316. in Tartary, 1445 b.
Truce betwixt the Emperor and Gabor, 1433 e.
Tumult at Pera, 1353 b.

Turks.

They raiſe an army, 1153 b. cowardly retyre for feare of the Chriſtians, d. carrying a conuoy of victuals to Buda, ouerthrown by the Chriſtians, 1154 k. the conuoy recouered by the Turks, 1155 a. againe taken from them by the Chriſtians, c. ouerthrow the garriſon of Peſth, d. bathing themſelues at Buda, by them of Peſth ſurpriſed and ſlaine, e. ſeeking to ſurpriſe Palotta, are ouerthrowne, 1156 i. three of their ſpies taken, 1157 c. ouerthrowne by Collonitz, f. together by the eares among themſelues, 1163 d. defeated by Colonell Sultze, 1182 h. againe ouerthrowne, 1185 b. their army ſtealeth by night out of Hungary, 1189 c. ouerthrowne by the Vayuod of Valachia, 1198 g. the maner of their burials, 1200 l. trecherouſly ſeeke to ſurpriſe Peſth, 1206 l. ſeeke in vaine to ſurpriſe Lippa, 1213 a. ouerthrowne by them of Peſth, 1214 h. their vnreaſonable demands for peace, 1222 l. troubled with ciuill wars. 1236 k. betrayed by the Haiducks, 1248 i. thinking to ſurpriſe others, are themſelues ſurpriſed, 1266 l. repaire to Buda in multitudes, 1274 g. their army for Tranſyluania, 1327 c. threaten war in Hungary, 1331 e. their courſes there, 1337. defeated at Vaſſalley, 1350 m. the greatneſſe of their Empire, and their beginning, 1386, &c.

V

VAcia ſhamefully betraied by the Haiduckes, 2238 g.
Valachia ſpoiled by the Tartars, 1220 l. the Vayuod expelled his country by Battori, 1304 h.
Veſprinium yeelded to the Rebels, 1246 k.
Vicegrade yeelded to the Turks by the Haiduckes. 1238 l.
at Vienna a ſtrange action of two Citiſens, 1212 l.
Viſnouisky a valiant Prince poyſoned by a Prieſt, 1350 k.
a Viſion in the aire at Medina Talnabi, 1384, &c.
the Vſcoques what manner of people they be, 1367.
the Viſier ſends to borrow mony of the foure Chriſtian Embaſſadors at the Port, 1429 b.

W

the WAllons auerthrow the Turks and Haiducks at Presburg, 1246 i.
War betwixt the Grand Signior and the King of Poland, and the cauſe why, 1397 c.
War in Barbary, 1301 c.
the Wife of Prince Coresky being priſoner in Tartary, ſendeth a meſſenger to ſeeke her husband, 1364. who brings her tidings of him, 1365 f. and ranſomes her, 1366 i.
Wiglaſe in vain attempted by the Haiducks, 1242 l.

X

XErif troubleth the kingdoms of Fez and Moroco, 1322 i. his beginning, k. his children grow potent, l. they kill the King of Moroco, m. feared by the King of Fez, 1323 a. diſſention betwene the brethren, and the eldeſt taken priſoner by the younger, b.
Xerif Mahomet aſſaults the king of Fez, 1323 c.

Z

ZEffer Baſſa recouereth the gouernment of Boſna from Zellaly, and ſhortly after dieth, 1211 a.
Zellali, formerly a Rebell in Aſia, reconciled to the Grand Signior, commeth into Boſna, 1194 i. defeateth Zeffer Baſſa the Gouernor of that prouince, and ſeateth himſelfe therein, l. by the Grand Signior ſent for to the Port, 1195 b. refuſeth to come, c. made gouernour of Temeſwar, 1211 b.

FINIS.

T

TArtar Champions ready to oppose the Turk in Hungary, 1219 &c. death, 1282 &c.
the Tartars Posterity plant in Hungary, 1164 &c. tyrannized by Count Segin, 1166. defeated by the Huns, 1167 &c. defeated by the Cadeli, 1244 &c. defeated by Tamerlan, 1365. overthrow the Turks army, 1444 &c. marches into Hungary, 1451 &c.
Turin taken from the Turk by the French, 1184 &c.
Turky taken by the Rebels, 1632.
Turks prevailed to the Turks, 1484.
Tranquillania miserably distressed, 1209 &c. the trouble severely maintained by Jeremiah, 1210 &c. more troubles, 1214 &c. the Rebels suppressed and slain, &c. the miserable State of that Province, more troubles raised, 1304 &c.
Treachery of the Polonian General, 1372.
Troubles in Catalonia, 1395 &c. new troubles, 1414 &c. in Tranquillania, 1516. in Tartary,
1447 &c.
Treaty between the Emperor and Gabor, 1433 &c.
Tumult at Prag, 1353 &c.

TURKS.

Their prosperity, 1153 &c. conquer Syria, Persia, the Christians, &c. carrying a country of victories to Rome overthrown by the Christians, 1154 &c. the country recover'd by the Turks,
1172 &c. Egypt taken from them by the Christians, &c. overthrown the garrison of Prolemaïs, &c.
taking the Castles at Paula by them of Pegna possessed and slain &c. seeking to surprise Pisaura, &c. overthrown, 1156 &c. driven out of Pisaura, 1172 &c. encounter with Christians, 1183 &c. defended by the city among themselves, 1183 &c. destroyed by Colopeli Sultan, 1183 &c. receive overthrows, 1185 &c. their army destroyed by plague out of Hungary, 1189 &c. overthrown by the Tartars of Malacca, 1198 &c. their power, slavish bondage, 1200 &c. treacherously stole to Europe &
Pisaura, 1200 &c. destroyed by the Christians, 1211 &c. overthrown by them of Pisaura, 1214 &c.
their wars and cruelties, 1232 &c. destroyed by treachery with civil wars, 1236 &c. destroyed by the Hungarians, 1248. planting to surprise Cathay, overthrown, 1268 &c. returns to Europe, to Buda in Hungaria, 1274 &c. their army for Vienna, 1276 &c. their power in Hungary, 1277 &c. their power destroyed, 1320 &c. the Emperor, 1338 &c.

V

Valia flourishly governed by the Nobility,
1388 &c.
Valachia spoiled by the Tartars, 1220 &c. wasted,
1284 &c.
subdued his country by Bathori, 1304 &c.
Velisimius wedded to Isabella, 1246 &c.
Vespasian subdued the Jews by the Romans,
1381 &c.
Vienna a strong garrison of true Christians 1214 &c.
Vladuskyan Prince poisoned by a Friar,
1350 &c.
Volgan invaded &c. Medina Talandis, 1384 &c.
the Villagers with many cruelties practised by the,
1387 &c.
Vlan Emperor of the Turks, 1249 &c.

W

William murthered his Uncle and Mother,
1284 &c.
Winchester Bishop, 1284 &c.
Wolves numerous in Poland, 1297 &c.
Warra Duke, 1301 &c.
the Wife of Peter Cruel being prisoner in Tar-tary, sends a Letter to take her husband, 1365 &c. make him by persuading of them and slaughters her, 1366 &c.
Wife in vain attempted by Nicholas, 1421.

X

XEnil troubleth the Kingdoms of Fez and Morocco, 1232 &c. his dividing from Peter, they kill the King of Morocco &c.
Xenil slain by the King of Fez, 1232 &c. deflection from the Christian, and the cruelty taken by proper the province.
Xenil dismounted all Castles the King of Fez, 1232 &c.

Z

ZEbir Bey procureth the government of Peloponnesus, and liberty after death,
1311 &c.
Zelah formerly a Rebel in Asia, reconciled to the Grand Signior comes into Persia, 1104 &c. declared Zelah Bey the Governor of Ephesus, mirs, and favoreth himself &c. by the Grand Signior favor for the Port, 1105 &c. to the Grand Signior &c. made Governor of Thessaly, 1106 &c.

FINIS.